The Chicago City Missionary Society held a meeting last week to consider a proposed revision of the constitution of the organization. Hitherto each church in the city has been represented by its pastor and two lay delegates — the smaller churches having thus equal representation with the larger. The change now proposed is that each church paying a minimum sum of $50 per year to the work of the Society shall be entitled to representation in proportion to its membership—one delegate, besides the pastor, for each one hundred members. It was also proposed to reconstitute the board of trustees on a basis of proportional representation. The proposed change was suggested by the delegates from Englewood Church in the hope of reconciling their pastor, C. G. Kindred, and the pastor of Sheffield Avenue Church, W. F. Shaw, to the work of the society. These two pastors were threatening to withdraw their co-operation from the society, it was said, on account of their opposition to the principle of co-operation with other Christian bodies in the matter of establishing new churches. The Chicago Society has a representative on the local Federation Council and is pledged to submit to this Council any proposal to establish a new church in the city, it being understood that the judgment of the Federation Council is not mandatory, but advisory only. Some agitation was caused several months ago by the refusal of Mr. Kindred to take counsel with the Federation on the matter of establishing a new church in Morgan Park. Both the Federation and the Chicago Missionary Society felt that this course was not exemplary of the spirit of Christian unity. The Englewood Church, it is understood, earnestly desires to avoid any rupture with her sister churches in Chicago, and the proposal to revise the constitution of the Chicago Missionary Society arose from this desire. No vote was taken at the meeting last week, but the discussion seemed to express the unanimous feeling that while there were certain objections to the proposed plan, if such a revision would conciliate Mr. Kindred and Mr. Shaw, all would agree to its acceptance. The Society will meet soon at the president's call to take action. It was reported at a previous meeting that the American Society in Cincinnati had given assurances that it would continue its appropriation to the Chicago Society as formerly if the threatened disaffection was averted.

Another Missionary Society Organized.

Since the above was put in type a rather ambitiously-worded announcement has been received setting forth the organization of a "Chicago-Calumet Evangelistic Association," together with the constitution and by-laws of the same. The announcement opens with a quotation of several lengthy paragraphs from Thomas Campbell's "Declaration and Address," and asserts that "our brethren ought to be free to preach the gospel and establish churches wherever possible, and that they should do this with entire freedom and unhampered or unembarrassed by any source." The document recites that the members of the new organization have viewed "with deepest concern the abandonment and death of many churches of Christ and the decline of others in the city of Chicago and surrounding territory; with sorrow we have seen preachers of the word devitalized of their own power by the modern so-called scholasticism, carrying down with them the churches which they serve to a state of inefficiency and wandering faith; with pain have we seen money contributed to preach the gospel used to support men rather than to promote the work of planting and fostering New Testament churches; with misgivings have we seen our own brethren combine their influence with others to criticise, hamper and embarrass the free preaching of the gospel.

"Having been impressed by these things, having suffered from them and believing the cause of New Testament Christianity to be suffering from them; believing in the freedom wherewith Christ has set us free and feeling duty bond to do with all our might the work he has commissioned us to do, we have therefore resolved" to "form ourselves into an association to be known as the Chicago-Calumet Evangelistic Association for the sole purpose of promoting New Testament Christianity, free from all mixtures of human opinions and inventions of men, free from any authority or council other than that of Christ and the New Testament; and to assist in protecting the brethren of our weaker and new churches against the plans of men who would divert their original purpose as churches of Christ."

The name of S. W. Nay, pastor at Gary, Ind., appears as president, with C. G. Kindred, of Chicago, vice-president, and A. I. Zeller, of Chicago Heights, secretary and treasurer. The Chicago Heights church is a mission supported by Englewood church. The Calumet district is the large and growing district of the northwest corner of Indiana, bordering on Lake Michigan, the seat of the vast manufacturing, shipping and iron industries, including cities like Hammond, Indiana Harbor, Gary, Chicago Heights, etc. We give the above extracts from the announcement of the new association for whatever value they may possess, reserving comment on the same until the purposes of the organization are more clearly manifested.

—The congregation of First Church, Long Beach, Cal., built a brick annex to their house of worship in six days, to accommodate a Sunday school class that had outgrown its quarters. Geo. B. Taubmann is pastor.

—Michigan Disciples are having their state convention at Kokosing, July 7-14.

—W. D. Bartle, of Indianapolis, has removed to Salem, Ind., where he has taken the pastorate of the church. Salem is the county seat of the county in which Mr. Bartle was born and reared, and he is consequently beginning his new work with peculiarly happy sentiments.

—W. G. Eldred, of Eminence, Ky., who began an evangelistic meeting at Pleasureville, Ky., July 4, writes a heartly word of praise for the meeting held at Eminence, by Prof. A. W. Fortune, of the College of the Bible, Lexington. Prof. Fortune's strong, broad-visioned preaching did the church much good besides adding to the fellowship twenty-eight new members.

—J. H. Craig, minister, at River Street Church, Troy, N. Y., reports that their children's day offering for foreign missions was $537.

—Sunday, June 13, was pre-convention Sunday in all Southern California churches. Sermons were preached on the distinctive ideals of the Disciples of Christ, and announcements were made of the convention programs.

—Mrs. E. M. Bowman, of Chicago, was chairman of the young people's department of the Summer School of Missions, at Winona Lake, this summer. The season's retreat closed July 2.

—Frank L. Van Voorhis, pastor at Billings, Mont., made an address at the state Christian Endeavor convention in Helena.

—A group of members of Fourth Avenue Church, Columbus, O., gave the play "In His Steps" at the Indianola Church in that city recently.

—The men of the Cameron, Mo., church recently prepared, cooked and served a dinner and realized $100 to apply on the church debt. J. W. Kilborn is the pastor.

—When the congregation of Broadway Church, Louisville, Ky., realized that it had made a cash offering of $2,224.98 with which to pay a $2,000 debt, it voted in its joy and in appreciation of the leadership of its pastor, W. N. Briney, to send him to the General Convention in Los Angeles and to the Panama Exposition.

—B. S. Ferrall, pastor Central Church, Buffalo, N. Y., preached recently on "The Cause of So Many Business Failures." A large number of his congregation were business men.

News of the Foreign Society

The Children's Day offerings for June, have increased steadily over those of last year, so that the gain will be between four and five thousand dollars. This is most hopeful. The response from the schools and the friends of the work in the emergency has been most encouraging.

The Independence Boulevard Church, in Kansas City, Mo., held a special rally day on Sunday, June 27, in which a self-denial offering was taken to help in the emergency which the Foreign Society is facing now. R. A. Long, J. W. Perry, together with the pastor, George H. Combs, were leaders in this special campaign. The plan was to average $1.00 each, for the whole membership.

A friend writes in and offers to pay the $600 necessary to send a new missionary out this year to fill a special emergency call.

At the present time Secretary F. M. Rains, is in the sanitarium at Boulder, Colo. He has greatly improved in health since he left Cincinnati, in March. He will not be at the Los Angeles Convention, because he feels that it will be more profitable for the work for him to remain in the sanitarium and recruit his health than to go to the convention.

The church at Uhrichsville, Ohio, has 150 subscriptions to the Missionary Intelligencer, and the secretary writes that they will soon have fifty more. This church has increased its missionary contributions about 400 per cent in the last two years, and it is the conviction of the pastor that the missionary magazine has had a large part in this rapid growth. The Foreign Society offers premiums in missionary libraries for clubs of twenty-five and more subscriptions, at 25 cents each.

I chatter, chatter, as I flow,
To join the brimming river;
For men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever.

LET THIS BOOK SPEAK FOR ITSELF

COMMENTS OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

St. Louis Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents.

The Christian Intelligencer (Reformed)
The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal.

Zion's Herald (Methodist, Boston)
Dr. Morrison who is editor of The Christian Century, a national organ of the Disciples of Christ—a denomination which believes in immersion—handles with utmost frankness the position of his own denomination relative to baptism. The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of this leading publication in that denomination. Dr. Morrison's work is frankly done, and while arousing, doubtless, some criticism among those of his own denomination and the close communion remnant still to be found in certain localities, will be heartily received as a genuine contribution toward Christian unity.

The Advance (Congregationalist)
We commend this book to pastors who find the baptismal question up for discussion in the parishes. It is a strong contribution to the literature of the subject and we believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt. We do not think it possible for them permanently to hold to close baptism without going the whole length of the Baptists and join close communion to it.

The Epworth Herald (Methodist)
While not agreeing with all the statements made it is about the most interesting book on the subject I have seen. The author is master of good, clear English and knows how to express himself.

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination)
He presents his thought from a new and interesting standpoint. We wish it might be read by all Disciples, all Christians, all Baptists, and in fact by all denominations—it will have a moulding effect as to one's opinions of baptism. The Disciples' themselves will likely get the most good from the book. Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God.

The Continent (Presbyterian)
It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity for immersion, and he writes that "the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever, stands behind the practice of immersion." Instead, in the New Testament, baptism simply means the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian. He is strongly against demanding the rebaptism of Christian believers who apply to Baptist or Disciples churches for membership having been accepted in other churches by any mode of baptism whatever. Equally he opposes infant baptism, because the subject of baptism must be voluntary. At the root of his argument lies a sound desire for Christian unity.

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren)
The author is clear and candid, brave and kind in performing the task to which he assigned himself. . . . As we view the real meaning of this new interpretation of baptism it involves a complete abandonment of the dogma of immersion, and may lead to a new adjustment of attitude on that subject on the part of other immersionist bodies. At any rate, the significance of the work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement.

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Dr. Morrison belongs to what might be called the younger school of Disciples who have the discretion and the will to approach the members of other churches, not with the club of intolerance and pseudo-omniscience, but with the open hand of intellectual catholicity and good will. . . . The propaganda could not wish for a leader more truly representative. A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few. This book gives one evidence. The significant fact is that the author is a member of an immersion church, once commonly called "Campbellites," and while he holds to immersion as the correct mode of baptizing, yet he declares, "It would be too much to say, dogmatically, that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." The book is well worth reading, not only for its scholarly treatment of the question of baptism, which is satisfactory, but as an example of true liberality in modern church life, a liberality which is not degrading and flat, but catholic, appreciative and noble.

The Christian Endeavor World.
A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view but building a bridge toward the affusionist view.

The Congregationalist
A daring and splendidly Christian piece of work is "The Meaning of Baptism," by Charles Clayton Morrison, in which the author frankly asserts that Jesus "had no intention of fixing a physical act upon his followers. He did not have in mind the form of baptism but the meaning of it." Nevertheless, for historic reasons he recommends retaining the form of immersion.

The Baptist Banner
A new book of more than ordinary interest. It is learned, and, is written in excellent spirit and fine style. It is eminently suggestive and well worth the price and a careful reading.

The Christian Observer (Presbyterian)
It is a courageous man who will undertake to write a book on the subject of baptism in this age of the world . . . This book has stirred up considerable controversy in the writer's church. By many he is regarded as a heretic and is abused accordingly. However, in other respects the author is true to Disciples' sentiments. The chief value of the book lies in the author's contention that New Testament baptism is not tied to any physical act, but is "the spiritual, social act of self-commitment and self-consecration by the individual and his induction into the church." This idea, by the way, is very forcefully expressed in an old document that was formulated by the Westminster Assembly more than two centuries and a half ago when they said, "Baptism is a sacrament. . . whereby the parties baptized are solemnly admitted into the visible church and enter into an open and professed engagement to be wholly and only the Lord's."

The Standard (Baptist)
The argument throughout is good and there are conclusions that are worthy of careful consideration.

The Christian Union Quarterly (Disciple)
The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines. . . However one may differ from the author there is much in this book to be commended from both the Baptist and paedo-baptist sides of the house.

The Churchman (Episcopal)
Under the title "The Meaning of Baptism," Mr. C. C. Morrison has given an interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism. The Disciples, to whose fellowship Mr. Morrison belongs, practice rebaptizing for those who have not been immersed. Mr. Morrison is not in sympathy with this position. He shows that baptism by immersion has figured little in the divisions of the church and will doubtless likewise figure little in its unity.

Baptist Standard (Dallas, Tex.)
This is a very interesting work, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this summer!

The Homiletic Review
A volume on this subject with an irenic purpose by the editor of The Christian Century is welcome. The position taken is that while immersion is the valid mode of baptism the doctrine or dogma "eclipses the great objective task of the church for large majorities of Disciples and Baptists." Baptism has its essence not in the mode of administration, but in that it means "the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian" (p. 193). While, then, the volume is a plea for the adoption of immersion as a mode universally recognized as regular, the practice of rebaptism with its implication that Presbyterians, Methodists and others are not Christians is to be reprobated. Members should pass freely from these other churches to those of Baptists and Disciples without calling into question or ignoring their status as already members of the Church of Christ.
The spirit of the book is delightful and raises new hopes where none had seemed possible.

The Presbyterian Advance
The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which often has been asked of him by correspondents and readers—"What is the best book on baptism?" . . . Against all who insist that immersion and immersion only is baptism this book provides an unanswerable argument.

The United Presbyterian
An unusual book. Written by a Disciple and the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion. He says the use of the word "baptizo," in its New Testament usage, refers primarily to the function of initiation and only incidentally to the particular [physical] act.

The Meaning of Baptism

By Charles Clayton Morrison.

Regarded by both friends and critics as the most significant contribution made to the baptism problem since the debate between Alexander Campbell and N. L. Rice. Do not let your opinion of this book be formed at second hand. It deserves your own careful reading.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Spiritual Words

RUSKIN has beautifully taught us to think of great books as spiritual in their nature, preserving and passing on the feelings and aspirations of the men who wrote them. A book has the same function as the spoken word. In a friendship the spoken word is the symbol, the mere sign, of the mood of our friends. We do not take our friends literally, holding their exact words before us in close scrutiny; our friendship gives us an insight into their hearts so that their words act as mere cues, so to speak, for our guidance in apprehending their meaning.

With a stranger it is not so. We have to weigh his words, question his tone of voice, study his manner. Just what his meaning may be we are not so sure because we do not know him. From the stranger we get only what meaning he is able to put into his words. His words mean what they say and nothing else. Both he and we are literalists.

But from our friend we get more than he is able to put into words; his meaning overflows the narrow vessels of language. We interpret his words in the light of that basic understanding or sympathy that is implicit in all our conversations. This appreciation is intuitive, not literal.

In friendship spirit meets directly with spirit, and the words that pass are mere symbols of an understanding which they can only suggest, but cannot convey. Thus conversation rises from the level of mere communication to the level of real spiritual communion.

This fact of our common human intercourse has a significance for religion which should aid us in reading God's word aright. With many of us the attempt to sanctify the Bible, to set it apart from other books as unique in its verbal characteristics has often had the effect of degrading it and robbing it of its spiritual power.

The letter has been idolized.

It is assumed that the word of Scripture exhausts revelation, whereas the words of Paul and John and Hosea and the Psalmists and of Jesus are but pale symbols of the throbbing life they are striving to utter.

Something like this Jesus had in mind when he explained why the scribes and pharisees did not understand him. His words to them were just words. But he said his words were spirit and life, because his purpose in uttering them was to communicate his spirit and his life by means of them. If his hearers fastened upon his mere words and left his spirit undiscerned, it showed that they had not heard at all.

The scribes cavilled at his words. They measured them against other words that they had heard—against Moses' word and Hillel's word. They had no dream of what the words represented of the inner life of Jesus who uttered them. Christ's word was not to these men a means of spiritual communion.

Real communion with Jesus they could not have, because their hearts had waxed gross. Every utterance of our Lord arose from a wish to share his soul, his experience of God, with the hearer. Of this the scribes were incapable without repentance. They listened as one listens to a stranger, not as one listens to his friend. They seized upon his utterances as words merely, to be tallied up with great pattern words which they so well knew. They found much fault with his words because they were literalists.

Scribism is equally repugnant to Christ whether the scribe is for him or against him. Some of Christ's followers are scribes. The Christian scribe knows the words of Scripture never so precisely as words, but the Scripture fails to perform the function of language in his soul because it is not spiritually discerned. Christ's message can be understood only by one who meets Christ's spirit with a free spiritual imagination and with a heart that eagerly desires to understand him.

If we could form the habit of carrying our opinions back to the mind of Christ, to be judged by his mind, his spirit, instead of stopping at his words, most of the divisive differences among Christians would fall away.

This is not to suggest that we can get along without the Scripture text. We must have the words of Christ in order to become acquainted with his mind. But our acquaintance with his mind and our spiritual fellowship with him in turn reinterpret the words of the Scripture.

The literalist is like one who is content to wait at the door and discuss matters with the servants when he might go in and meet the master of the house face to face.

The words of Christ are Christ's servants, his messengers. What they say to us will not be fully or adequately understood until we come to know the Master himself. And his words will be forevermore taking on new meanings to our believing hearts as we come increasingly into an understanding of his spirit.

Let no one, then, be a slave to the letter of the Scripture. Indispensable as the Scripture is, we need to be reminded that proficiency in "comparing Scripture with Scripture" is not a guarantee of religious knowledge. Its result may be only scribal literalism. Our essential task as students of the divine word is to gain proficiency in comparing the Scripture with the mind and character of the Author of the Scripture.

Just because the word of God is so important, just because it deals with the eternal issues of the soul, it should be read not with the literal restrictions with which we read mathematical or scientific statements but with that freedom of soul which we carry into the reading of a great poem.

In commonplace matters of fact we may be literalists, but in the things of the soul the letter killeth: it is the spirit that giveth life.

Congregationalists and Disciples Should Unite!

BY FRANK E. BOREN

One of the most insistent demands of modern Christian work arises from the situation where several small churches are struggling for their existence in a community that should not be asked to support more than one church. The struggling bands are competitive, more or less jealous of one another, inefficient and therefore lacking in the dignity and command that ought to inhere in any church of Christ. The modern Christian mind is at the point of losing patience with that sort of thing and is demanding that such churches merge their interests and exemplify the principle of unity and Christian fraternity. The author of this article has succeeded in federating two such congregations in the little town of Hydesville, Cal.,—a Congregational and a Disciples church. The united organization is called "The Community Church." Mr. Boren believes that in effecting such federations the line of greatest attraction for both Congregationalists and Disciples is toward each other. He tells why in this article.

THE TIME IS RIPE, in my opinion, for the actual union of local churches in many communities, or at least for some kind of federation by which two or more churches can work together as one body locally. It has been a growing conviction for a number of years that the logical first step in such union was the merging of Congregational and Disciple churches. Both bodies are committed to union ideals. They are nearer together in spirit and ideals than any other two bodies.

Much has been said about the union of Baptists and Disciples. I should be glad to see such union consummated wherever it is possible, but I do not believe that this constitutes the most hopeful situation.—The Baptists and Disciples are superficially alike. The Congregationalists and Disciples are superficially different. The common practice of immersion is the main point of likeness between Baptists and Disciples, while in spirit and ideals they are as dissimilar as any two denominations. This main point of contact between Baptists and Disciples is the one barrier between Congregationalists and Disciples.

BAPTISTS AND DISCIPLES.

Wherever there is a genuine desire for union among either Baptists or Disciples it represents a drift away from their close immersion policy. At the Baptist congress, in 1911, this very question was discussed. Dr. Peter Ainslie, speaking for the Disciples, read a paper pleading for the union of the two bodies, pointing especially to our agreement as regards immersion. The Baptist speaker who reviewed his paper said that our agreement on this point was a stumbling block rather than a help to such union. We would both have to rid ourselves of the legalism involved in our exclusiveness before any union was possible. On the same occasion the subject of immersion and church union was discussed, and the speakers were of one accord in their view that the voluntary principle must prevail in a united church. They could justify their close immersion policy only by justifying their denominationalism.

I believe in the voluntary principle as regards baptism. I believe that we can justify our exclusiveness only as we admit the desirability of perpetuating our denominationalism. For this reason I am strengthened in my conviction that in the union of Congregational and Disciples churches we have the most hopeful situation possible.

NO WHOLESALE UNITY.

Christian union will not come in any wholesale fashion. It will not come as the result of ecclesiastical decrees. It is a local problem. The Congregationalists and Disciples, and for that matter the Baptists, are so organized that the union of two churches in any community does not need to wait for combersome denominational machinery to be put in motion.

The two bodies would wonderfully supplement each other's life, in that each has something that the other needs, and which rightfully belongs to the other. It would require expansion rather than readjustment to make the two bodies one. The deep, sane and wholesome spirituality of the Congregationalists would be a boon to the Disciples. Each has something to impart to the other in evangelistic methods. The Disciples are strong in the middle west where the Congregationalists are weak. The latter are strong in the east and in the cities where the former are weak. The differences between the two bodies are due, I think, very largely to the fact that the one is an eastern, the other a western movement; the one a city, the other a rural movement. These differences are superficial, and make each body all the more needful to the other.

WISE LEADERSHIP NEEDED.

Wherever and whenever two of these churches are ready for union all they need to do is to unite. In many communities a little wise leadership is all that is needed to consummate such unions. A little exploitation of the movement by the press would prepare the way in many places.

Another step in such union would be in the merging of our educational interests. On the Coast here, we already have the Pacific Theological Seminary, which is a union institution, though formerly Congregational. The Disciples on the Coast could do no better than to merge their theological seminary interests with this great institution. With a chair of Christian union in such schools, preachers would go forth with union ideals of a practical and definite kind, prepared to become pastors of union churches.

Another step would be in the merging of our home missionary interests. The time is past for the establishment of denominational churches by our home missionary societies. In state organizations, especially, there is no reason why there should not be an actual merging of the missionary machinery of both bodies. At least they could, though separately organized, work together and contribute missionary funds for the establishment and support of union churches. The evils of denominationalism could be greatly diminished by such co-operation. The actual union of the two bodies where they exist in the same communities, and the establishment of union churches in unchurched communities, by the joint effort of the two missionary societies, would be a splendid achievement.

ENCOURAGE EXCHANGE OF PASTORS.

Very effective also would be the interchange of pastors. I have always felt that it was unfortunate that such men as Harry F. Burns should become pastors of Congregational churches, with the feeling that they had broken with the Disciples. Why should not Congregational churches call Disciple ministers, and vice versa? Why should there not be such a sense of unity between the two bodies that this calling of ministers from one to the other should become the normal thing. It would be a fine thing if all of our preachers could hold at least one pastorate in a Congregational church. It would enrich the life of many of our churches to have a Congregationalist pastor for a season. This would lead to a better understanding and good results.

In many communities these two communions do not exist together. There is no reason why the union of churches should be limited to these two. Let Congregational and Methodist churches unite whenever they are ready to do so, or Baptist and Disciples. But the most hopeful situation is to be found where these two bodies do exist side by side, and it would give a definiteness to the plea for union if these two could get together in the championship of it. It would furnish an example which others would take seriously, and its influence would have more power than any general plea. Instead of glittering generalities about union, let us have a passionate plea for the union of these two bodies. Will The Christian Century and some Congregational paper accept the challenge?

Soul Liberty in the Church

BY ALFRED W. ANTHONY.

From the Standard (Baptist).

Two men stand at the door of the church; one is a Baptist; the other is not. The Baptist makes honest stipulations concerning the terms and conditions of membership. The other, with equal honesty, sets some of these stipuations aside. May the Baptist refuse admission to the other man? Certainly he may, if the church is his. But if the church is not his, simply his, he has no right to bar the entrance, or exclude the other. He has a right to say, "This I believe, therefore this I teach, and therefore this I practice." He has no right to say, "This I believe, and therefore this you must believe," or "This you must teach," or "This you must practice." He may organize a little company of believers, who are so like himself as to have no variation in terms or in forms, and he may call his little organization a church, but it is not a church in the sense that it includes worthy members of the household of faith, varying as they may and unlike as they are. His church is but a piece of the church—by no means all of the church. The man on the outside of the door of his church may be as truly within the fold of the true church as is he.

CHURCHES IN DWINDLING TOWNS.

The town of X in 1850, had a population of over 1,300 people. That population has moved into the cities and has been gathered unto the fathers. The population today is less than 500. In 1850 there were five churches in the town—too many then; and still the five churches struggled for a meager existence. One is a Baptist church, and this is the strongest of the five. The other four are not Baptist churches. What should be the attitude of that Baptist church toward the Christians who still survive in the town as members of the other dwindling communions? Shall it consistently allow the exercise of soul liberty to the persevering saints who are its neighbors, who need its help and should be its helpers? Or shall it hold its door pinched to, and with insistence say, "Ye must, ye must conform or else remain without"? Is "federation" a meaningless term to Baptists? Is it taboo? Is it anathema?

Two people become united in matrimony, a man and woman; and the minister who officiates at the ceremony pronounces them man and wife, adding, in the words of Christ, "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder." But they were members of different churches; one a Baptist and the other not. At the door of the Baptist church the very clergyman who said, "Let not man put asunder," admits one to the privileges of the church and to fellowship at the Lord's Table, and holds the other off.

CAN THE TRUTH BE TRUSTED?

Will not the truth take care of itself? Must men so seek to safeguard it as to make it appear coercive, compulsory? If those who believe in immersion proclaim, "I believe it, I teach it, I practice it"; if they teach it, and preach it, and practice it, what more need they do? Need they compel others? If others permit them to believe, teach and practice, would they be hurt or hindered by fellowshipwith others? Cannot conviction and conscience have their own place in each individual's soul? Must conviction and conscience be imposed upon others? Surely such imposition, or attempts at imposition, are practiced nowhere, save in the church.

Soul liberty, while unyielding in conviction, recognizes great fellowship in varied experiences.

A Baptist church had in its membership four unimmersed Christians. The association to which this church belonged served notice that these unimmersed members must either be immersed or debarred from full membership in the church. What right has an association, under this fundamental principle of soul liberty, to issue such an edict, such a "ukase"? Is uniformity better than liberty? Are "logic" and "consistency" preferable to variation and independency? Is a church independent when the price of fellowship is associational subserviency?

"UNTO THE UTTERMOST"

By Ruth G. Winant.

From the Continent

IT was a midsummer night three years ago when in one of the tents of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City we found Frank. And, by the way, Frank is not his real name. It serves here to spoil the scent for some who might pursue him. But he's a real boy, all right; it wouldn't be necessary otherwise to take this precaution. Frank had been eating cocaine, and had been arrested for selling it to the little boys in the neighborhood. He was thin, ragged, helpless and hopeless, and living in abject fear of the bluecoat who, as he expressed it, "had his number," and was "lookin' fer trouble."

In the tent two strong Christian young men made friends with this boy, himself perhaps 19 years of age, and soon he ceased his nefarious business, and himself stopped taking the drug. Slowly but very surely the gospel of Christ which can make a boy "straight" and keep him so, worked its way into this boy's heart, and the next summer he was one of the helpers in the tent—not regularly in the employ of the committee, but a real helper when anyone was a bit disorderly.

He had been a thief—had, indeed, made his living helping a gang of thieves connected with one of the most outrageous robberies perpetrated in New York in the past five years. He knew how to run a motor car, and had always been counted upon by the "gang" to take the loot to a safe hiding place, or quickly to whisk the actors in the game away from some pursuing officer. He had merely picked up his knowledge of running a car, however, and when he became interested in good things, and realized that he could no longer make his money by sharing the "swag" of some night's "haul," he entered a chauffeur's school, and soon was graduated.

The war and the hard times immediately following the closing of the Stock Exchange made it impossible for Frank to keep a position, and for nearly six months he wandered about trying to get work. One day he borrowed a quarter from one of the members of the office staff, who protested that he need not return it. The first work he got, however—the job of driving a wagon to early market—netted him $1, and at half past 7 that same morning he went to call upon his creditor to pay his debt.

This winter this young man has secured a permanent position, and along with this has become engaged to a young woman who is employed in a milliner's. She is a saleswoman and commands a fair salary, but in the same shop is a little helper who makes very little. Only two days before Easter this child had expressed her disgust with the season because she had no new clothes to wear. She was utterly shabby, and her crowning grief lay in this, that she had no Easter hat, and no hope of getting one.

On Saturday before Easter Frank came in to tell me a wonderful thing that he and his fiancee were to do. I cannot improve upon his way of telling it:

"Say, what do you think me and Jule's goin' to do? You know, Jule's fouud a little girl down at the store what ain't got no fixin's for Easter—you know, new clothes, and a new hat—and say, she was just awful cut up, and she was for cryin' and wishin' Easter wasn't comin', and me and Jule's goin' to fix her up."

He put his hand into his pocket and drew out several time checks for his week's work. He waved them before me, his eyes shining, joy vibrating in every tone of his voice.

"Say, I'm goin' to turn these in this afternoon and cash 'em, and then me and Jule—Jule's off this afternoon—we're goin' and buy the poor kid a hat. You know, it's awful for a girl not to have a new hat for Easter."

In that same conversation, Frank fell to talking of the old days of thievery. He told me, with a realism that made one shiver, of dropping two stories from one roof to another as he heard a woman call to another, "There's one of them young thieves what's been a-botherin' the neighborhood." He told of hiding under a sofa—a sofa shorter than he—as the officer ransacked the house, but failed to find him. Then he pulled himself up straight and said:

"Say, Miss Winant, I'd like to work in the tent this summer if I don't have to teach nights [he is an instructor with an automobile company] and, say, I wouldn't say 'God' to the fellows first off. I'd say this: 'Fellows, it doesn't pay to be bad. I know it.'"

His face lighted up as he added: "And say, I'd tell them that Christ can make a fellow straight and keep him straight, too—keep him from taking the dope, and all such things."

I looked into his face, lighted with the joy that his new life was bringing him, and felt that nothing was impossible to God.

And this was our gangster, our one-time cocaine eater and seller; this was a man who had been a thief; this was one who had found the Christ and who can save "unto the uttermost."

None Liveth to Himself.

Say not, "It matters not to me:
My brother's weal is HIS behoof!"
For, in this wondrous human web,
If your life's warp, his life is woof.
Woven all together are the threads,
And you and he are in one loom:
For good or ill, for glad or sad,
Your lives must share one common doom.

Then let the daily shuttle glide,
Wound full with threads of kindly care,
That life's increasing length may be
Not only strongly wrought, but fair,
So, from the stuff of each new day,
The loving hand of Time shall make
Garments of joy and peace for all;
And human hearts shall cease to ache.

The Unique Master

Why We Bow Before Him Whose Name is Above Every Name.

BY JOSEPH FORT NEWTON

MUCH if not most of what is written about Christ in our day leaves me unmoved. As George Fox would say, it does not "speak to my condition." Perhaps it is my fault, but it may also be a sign that the great insights of Christian faith have grown dim in the minds of men. Never once did Francis or Wesley pause to debate the absolute and immeasurable supremacy of Christ. They knew whom they followed, and their lives were a perpetual disclosure of the treasures of grace in his fellowship. Yet today we have men who glibly assume that they have complete ability to comprehend measure and estimate Christianity and its Founder. It would never occur to me to approach Shakespeare in that manner. Before the miracle of Hamlet and Macbeth even common intellectual decency must uncover. How much more before him to whom Hamlet paid homage! Whoso imagines that he can measure Christ betrays his own measure, and makes a melancholy revelation of incurable vanity.

JESUS IS DIFFERENT.

Socrates, said Matthew Arnold, inspired boundless friendship and esteem, "but a penetrating enthusiasm of love does not belong to Socrates; with Jesus it is different." Yes, it is different, and the more closely we inquire the more sundering the difference is seen to be. It is world-wide and heaven-high. No other of the great masters and interpreters of humanity has ever had anything resembling the permanent and persistent power over humanity that belongs to Christ. It has worked wonders, often by itself alone. At the worst times, when faith had run low and a mist lay on the mind of mankind, the power of the living Christ has wrought a resurrection of righteousness. The marvel of that time-defeating presence, the power that can bridge the ages and live new-born and radiant in new and changed times, is past all understanding. No other life has ever become a theology, a revelation of what God is, of what the ideal life of man is, of what the meaning of the world is.

OTHER GREAT MEN.

Let no one think to exalt Jesus by belittling any of the mighty way-showers of humanity. Far from it. Socrates was a great and good man, Moses was majestic and noble, Plato was lofty and pure, Plutarch was a saint of the Most High. It were impious to deny their greatness, and as foolish as impious. Men built the pyramids on the flat sands of Egypt, where alone their greatness would be impressive. Amid the Alps a pyramid would be a tiny thing, so utterly would the mountains of God dwarf the masonry of man. Just so, Jesus towers above the loftiest of the sons of men to a supremacy incomparable and ineffaceable, as the Alps out-top the Sphinx. Take the life of Prince Buddha, who has been called the Light of Asia. He was exalted. He was gracious. He was wise. He was full of an all-embracing pity for all who walk the human way. None the less, he was the victim of a profound and awful error. He taught that life is desire, that desire is egoism, that egoism is misery, and that the highest hope of man is the hope of extinction. The moral discipline which became the only path of the peace of nothingness was noble, but its ideal was wrong, and it ended in a benumbing quietism. Ended, that is, in the paralysis of pessimism.

JESUS' VIEW OF LIFE.

With Jesus it was different, as different as day is from night, as sunburst hope from great depair. Jesus too, saw that life is desire, but that desire is ordained of God to become love; that love is power for life here and prophetic of life hereafter; and that its mission is to bring life and immortality to light, filling these brief and broken days with the spendor of a life that shall endless be. Measure, if you can, the measureless distance between these two ideals. One trudges along a weary way, not hopeless but unhopeful, in a universe which makes extinction the highest human beatitude. The other unveils the glow and color of life, its radiance and reason for being, lights up the world like a sunrise, and sets the heart singing. Yes, with Jesus it is always different—always it is a deeper vision, a higher hope, and a more challenging demand.

Historically, we find that men came to know the uniqueness of Jesus because of the effect which he produced upon them. They found that as they lived with him, power came into their lives; evil habits that had been irresistible disappeared; the sense of aloofness from God vanished; death seemed less terrible and final. When he went away and they looked back at the time they had spent in his company, the Figure seemed perpetually vaster and more august. His words were the same, but their meaning grew until they shone like stars. His acts remained the same in their simplicity and beauty, but they were charged with new potency and prophecy. His death was the same dark, inscrutable tragedy of love crucified by hate, but it detached itself from its place in history and became something eternal — something enacted from the foundation of the world, as if the whole meaning and purpose of the Infinite had been packed into one black event. What is more wonderful, his tomb became a throne from which he ruled men by a living presence, visible or invisible, and from that day to this those who have walked in his way have been aware of the fellowship of one whom they knew to be the Eternal Christ.

COMPARED WITH MOSES.

Consider the moral supremacy of Christ. Think of him alongside that grand, solitary, shining figure towering aloft in the morning of the world. The world in which Moses lived was a world of imperial moral values, of solemn sanctions, of binding obligations, where right and wrong were as day and night, and dignity and shame were infinite. With an insight wedded to the eternal order of moral verities, his sense of duty was central, transcendent, all-commanding—so austere, so august, so exalted was the moral life of Moses. With him the moral sense was no mere whisper of nature, no inheritance of social custom, but the voice of an awful, cloud-robed Jehovah who spoke amid fire and rolling thunder. How different, how much deeper and sweeter was the moral life of Jesus, in whom love had cast out fear, and whose white purity remains the sovereign wonder of our mortal world. Not only pure but purifying, its austerity was lost in an eager, joyous fellowship with God his father, to do whose will was the one aim of his life, the open secret of his peace, and the sum of all his joy. Stainless and just, strong and gentle, his clear-eyed obedience was glad, free, and grateful. Of all the leaders of the moral life, the purest soul this earth has known was the least relentless and stern, willing to forgive all, despairing of none. There was tenderness in his morality, and pity, and a nameless beauty which haunts even those who deny him. When one thinks of him the words of Aristotle come to mind, when he said in describing the perfect life:

"Such a life is more than human; for it is not by human powers that a man will live thus, but in virtue of the divine within him. We ought not to listen to those who bid us, being mortal, to content ourselves with what is human and mortal, but we should to the uttermost live the immortal life."

HIS INTELLECTUAL MASTERSHIP.

Somehow, by virtue of a certain fine instinct, men feel that there was that in Jesus above and apart from what we mean by the term intellect. For that reason the intellect of the Master has failed of appreciation, and the failure is not entirely to the discredit of humanity. Instinctively we know that character is the most significant wisdom and that goodness is the only ultimate cleverness. Yet since the world pays tribute to power of intellect, it ought to realize the amazing reach and grasp and radiance of the basic ideas and plans of Jesus. When we think of him along with Socrates, Plato and Kant or beside Shakespeare or Darwin, we are aware of a wide difference, like the difference between Hamlet and the parables by the sea. As Pascal said, "Jesus does not come in the glory of the scientific or intellectual order, any more than he comes in the order of military or kingly glory; he comes in his own order of holiness." Yet when we think of the holiest minds we know, they seem but simple reflections of a splendor ever on before. What is it in the intellect of Jesus that makes it unique? There is a center of light from which all truth is visible, and Jesus lived at that center. Therefore, he throws light on everything, and everthing has new meaning in his light. Others go in quest of truth; he comes bringing the truth to us, even the truth that sets us free. Others ask questions, he answers them. Others lead men to God, he reveals God with us, working in us and through us to will and to do his will, redeeming us unto himself by the discipline of life.

HIS LIFE STIRS US DEEPLY.

Why is it that the life of Jesus stirs us so strangely, and his words, always wonderful in their beauty and surprise, unlock in us chambers accessible to no other speech—almost as if he were speaking them to us for the first time on some green hillside in Galilee? For answer let me hint to you the deepest and most revealing fact of which any man ever dreamed. Unless there be something eternally human in God, something eternally divine in man, religion is a romance, faith a fiction, philosophy a foolishness, and science a guess at a hopeless riddle. If this be not so, revelation is impossible, and prayer is the vainest of all things. Because there is something in God akin to us, something in us akin to God, religion is the one master reality of human life. Of that reality Jesus is the supreme revelation, showing us what God is and what man is, what he ought to be, what he can be. It is therefore that he haunts us, because what is highest in us is one with himself, and there is no rest of heart, no real joy for us until we follow and obey the man we ought to be.

FELLOWSHIP WITH HIM.

That is why, when we live our lives for the new ends which he taught us to love and seek, we seem to be living the Gospel story over again, every crisis familiar, every temptation understood. Even in this far off age we are living with him in that radiant past, just because he is living with us in this wonderful present. And the more intimately we live with him, the more we understand, and the more the wonder gathers and grows. Somehow, when we talk about him to one another, as we are doing now, we seem to be talking to him. When we come to him with deep questions about the ways of God, the life of man, and what may lie beyond the dim gates of the tomb—aye, and sad questions about sin and sorrow and the great griefs that overtake us—we learn not only that he answers them, but that he is himself the answer. Then it is that our hearts burn within us, the world is different, and life is dearer, deeper, and more wonderful than any poet has ever dared to dream.

Therefore, why stand ye gazing into heaven? Of a truth, he ascended far above heavens, but only that he might fill all things with his light and power, even these restless, aspiring hearts of ours, drawing us upward out of animalism into the life eternal, out of a dim groping doubt into a triumphant faith. Stand not forever gazing in wonder and amazement at the ascended Christ—the hour has struck when we must translate our vision into a high, heroic character, by the grace and in the presence of the Eternal Christ!

Is Billy Sunday A Menace?

By GEORGE CREEL

From Harper's Weekly.

"Billy" Sunday has carried a child's point of view over into his maturity, and it is this that makes the man such a wonderful tool for labor-crushing employers.

He feels rather than reasons, and it is the lurid and the obvious that attract him, rather than the drab and underlying. He attacks symptomatic evils because they stand so plain, and are understood of the child mind. He turns away from causal evils because they have as many filaments as a cancer, and are evasive except when subjected to painstaking study and observation.

To attack "Billy" Sunday as insincere and hypocritical is as false as it is unfair. The man has made too many sacrifices. He was offered $500 a month to remain in baseball, and yet he put the offer aside and accepted a Y. M. C. A. position that earned him $83 a month. There followed years of patient drudgery in which he was nothing more than a general roustabout for religious organizations and evangelists, accepting the hardest toil and lowest pay without a murmur.

Criticism of him on the score of cupidity is likewise without fair foundation. He has made money, to be sure, but not one-tenth of the money that he could make were he greedy and self-seeking. And there is little doubt that the man tithes his income, giving a tenth of all he receives to the form of charity that most attracts him at the moment.

His vulgarities, when all is said and done, are the vulgarities of the child. When he compares the ballroom to the brothel, branding every woman who dances as a probable or potential courtesan; when he tells of the Vermont youth who was tempted by the Alabama siren, coming at last to a linen duster and delirium tremens; when he declaims awful tales of the terror that flows from casino and pinochle, "Billy" Sunday is playing a child's game as much as though he were still in pinafores.

His theology is a child's mythology. There isn't a single one of the old Bible stories that he does not believe implicitly. For him there is a personal God and a personal Devil, and hell is a very definite place of fire and brimstone where lost souls toss in torment, begging for water. The whale swallowed Jonah, the sun stood still for Joshua, and evolution is a damnable heresy whose supporters should be hung, drawn and quartered.

This man with the child's mind and the child's faith fits the present needs of Big Business as skin fits the hand. It is a day when the oppressed and disinherited are no longer servile, but dare to stand erect and to ask questions and make demands. Not all the despotism of courts and the machine guns of mercenaries are able to beat them down.

Since they may not be defeated, then let them be distracted and diverted! Send for "Billy" Sunday! He will pack people into a great amphitheater, set their emotions to boiling with music and passionate oratory, and convince them that all poverty, all injustice, all starvation, is due to drinking, dancing, card playing and a refusal to say, "I am for Christ."

With his revivals "Billy" Sunday has dealt the social sense a body blow. The spirit of service, that was beginning to be a significant feature of modern life, has been turned into its ancient channels of emotionalism. Altruism is being frittered away in "experience meetings" and "hitting the sawdust trail."

DEATH-RATE OF NEGROES.

From The New Republic.

Why is the death-rate among negroes, in Northern cities and Southern cities alike, almost twice as great as among the whites? At the last census the average death-rate in the 57 registration cities was 15.9 per thousand among whites, while among negroes it was 27.8. In the North the ratio was roughly 15 to 25, in the South 16 to 29. Taking those degeneracies that have a nervous origin or that come from high living, the ratio among whites was greater, but in tuberculosis and pneumonia, the plague of both races, the havoc among negroes preponderates enormously.

What are the reasons for this hideous disparity? The reason, as everyone may guess, is the poverty of the negro. The death-rate stands in almost fixed relation to housing conditions, and it is clearly proved that as home-ownership increases, the death-rate diminishes. In the degree that negroes remain economically inferior, their portion will not merely be social hardship, but a vastly greater share of physical suffering and mortal disease.

It is these hard facts that make race prejudice so base. The only prejudice that figures like these should induce is prejudice against a poverty which is literally more pestilential than war.

Friends.

The world without friends is a desert,
Desolate, lonely and bare,
With forsaken sands far-stretching—
No oasis of love anywhere.

Friends in God's scale outweigh money,
And laughterless lives are all wrong;
For joy is a jewel worth having,
And life would be death without song.

If you're tired of frowns, be friendly,
And you will find friends everywhere;
The garden of friendship is open,
Enter in and find happiness there.

EDITORIAL

A STATESMANLY SUGGESTION.

SECTIONAL conventions to be held annually with a General Convention to be held once in four years—this is the change suggested by a resolution unanimously passed in the Inland Empire convention of Disciples held at Spokane in June.

The suggestion is statesmanly.

For a long time the impossibility of having adequate General Conventions every year has been growing clearer. Our annual gatherings are sectional in reality now, drawing relatively few from the remoter places and depending for their large numbers upon local interest. This is true even when the conventions are held in central portions of the country.

The churches generally are not represented. The delegate feature which is now being added to these conventions will remedy the situation only in part. The brotherhood of Disciples is too far-spreading to be able to manage its problems with a single annual gathering. The state conventions cannot hope to deal with the more general problems. But four or five sectional conventions, covering the whole of the United States and Canada, would have practically the same vision and scope as now characterize the General Convention.

And the General Convention, coming once in four years—or, perhaps, preferably once in three years—would draw to itself a truly representative attendance and assume a dignity which its present frequency does not admit of.

In addition, the problems of the brotherhood would be defined more clearly by the sectional conventions, and this fact would give more purpose and substance to the deliberations of the General Convention.

HISTORICALLY IMMORAL.

THE essential baseness of the wonderful moving picture "The Birth of a Nation," inheres not in its appeal to race prejudice but in its historical wantonness.

By a deft use of quotations from Woodrow Wilson's history of the United States, it purports to justify on historical grounds its presentation of conditions in the South during the reconstruction period. It sets up an absolutely non-historical character who is assumed to manipulate the government at Washington after Lincoln's death, and it glorifies the Ku Klux Klan.

But the historical reality is that the Ku Klux Klan's activities did more to alienate the South and to postpone the day of reconciliation than did the Civil War itself. It must be admitted that the period of reconstruction is more nearly an unexplored field than any other portion of our American history. A great call there is to scholarship to go into this field and thoroughly interpret the harsh conditions under which the South was compelled to regain her feet after the prostration wrought by the war.

But that this melodrama, conceived in the brain of a man of Thomas Dixon's yellow and unrestrained imagination should be presented as historical, is vicious.

So far as the race prejudice argument against the play is concerned, any person with a grain of intelligence in watching the play will feel that if the play is not historical in its fundamental facts, it, of course, need not reflect on the negro as we know him, or as he was fifty years ago. But if the play is essentially true to history, it does no discredit to the negro, because it was obviously the fault of the white man that the negroes were compelled to assume a responsibility which they were as yet far from ready to undertake.

While the deep wounds made by our Civil War are in process of healing, it is a base immorality to deal with the conditions of that unhappy time in any spirit save that of the sincere and faithful historian.

GETTING PARTICULAR.

NEGOTIATIONS between "Billy" Sunday and the program committee of the Christian Endeavor convention to bring the famous evangelist to Chicago, last week, were abruptly terminated, so it is announced, because Mr. Sunday set down as an absolute condition that he must be transported from his ranch in Oregon in a private car.

The committee had neither the money to do this nor the disposition, and so turned, with unconcealed resentment, to find another speaker.

It is pretty hard for a man to keep on being a democrat when fame touches its cap to him and his income reaches close to $200,000 a year.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

IT is manifest that Christian Endeavor is in the process of renewing its vitality. Thirty years ago it promised to solve many of the church's problems. But in the last decade it has seemed to be itself one of the church's most troublous problems.

Many a pastor has lain awake of nights wondering what he could do with his Endeavor Society. Many pastors decided that the best thing they could do with it was to let it die.

But somehow it wouldn't die.

It might stop breathing for a few weeks or months, but it had a way of "coming to" again and again.

There have been several church activities that have drained off some of the vitality of Christian Endeavor. Chief among these has been the extraordinary development of the Sunday school, especially in the adult Bible class section.

But the feeling is growing more and more defined that the Sunday school class for young people cannot take the place of the Christian Endeavor Society. The class concentrates responsibility in its leaders. The Society divides that responsibility to all the members.

Theoretically Christian Endeavor is the kind of organization that young Christians need for their growth in spiritual culture and service. And in the end the thing that is theoretically right is sure to be a practical success.

Christian Endeavor has apparently overcome the handicap that hindered it in the second and third decade of its life: the continuance in its membership of those who had passed beyond the Christian Endeavor age.

"Once an Endeavorer, always an Endeavorer," is a sentiment that is now acknowledged to be true only in spirit but not in practical active membership. The time comes after five or ten years of Endeavor service that the maturer Endeavorer should regard himself as a graduate and should quietly slip out into other church responsibilities, leaving the society to the younger set.

One is impressed with the preponderance of youth of the real Endeavor age at the Chicago convention.

Happy that church and pastor whose Christian Endeavor Society has kept alive and active through all the years. They have now a long start ahead of those churches in which the organization will have to be revived.

In the great renewal of religion toward which the nation is moving, the renewed Christian Endeavor Society will have its appropriate and fruitful share.

SPORT OR RELIGION.

REV. JOHN E. POUNDS, speaking at the Disciples rally at the Christian Endeavor convention in Chicago, last week, brought down the house when he characterized a religious paper that carries on a religious debate as "a sporting paper."

"I greatly enjoy these modern games of football and baseball," this college pastor confessed, "but when the sporting passion is strong within me I wish for a return of the old days when they had religious debates. I can imagine no more exciting sport. It was a game, a great game, of wits and eloquence and appeal. Each debater was intent on victory. It was not a simple search for truth, it was a heroic contest for supremacy. A debate was great sport.

"And every church newspaper that carries on a religious debate in its pages is a sporting paper," he continued, amid laughter, "and its readers are out-and-out sports."

We little realize how persuasive is this sporting habit in our modern religion as well as in the debates of the earlier days to which Mr. Pounds referred.

It is mainly the sporting instinct that keeps denominationalism alive. The denominations hate to give up. They cannot give a good reason for continuing to exist, but traditions and ancestry and pride of past achievement have bred a vigorous sporting disposition in them all, and they dislike to be "quitters."

Much local church activity is sport rather than religion. Many a local church is thriving in numbers and in institutional prosperity through the skillful exploitation of the game instinct. A church likes to excel its neighbor. It likes to be the strongest church in town. It is quite possible for a leader deficient if not wholly lacking in a religious message to manipulate the sporting impulses of his people so as to build up a flourishing institution in the name of religion. It is an intensely interesting game.

Of course every one knows that modern revivalism is distinguished from simple Christian propaganda by its clever utilization of the sporting principle. And equally clear is it that the chief problem of modern religious education is to eradicate from the Sunday schools a type of activity and a set of motives which belong altogether to the realm of sport.

All of this is no reflection on the legitimacy of sport. Sport has its place, an important and proper place in human life.

But religion has its own motives and its own methods. And when religion exchanges its motives and methods for the motives and methods of the game, it ceases to be religion.

And when our modern highly institutionalized church exchanges its sporting motives and methods for the simple and sincere motives and methods that belong to true religion, there will be worked a more far-reaching revolution than any of us believe is possible.

UNION CHURCHES.

EVERY church that consciously purposes to practice Christian union is a Disciples' church. It may not be called by that name. It may go locally by the title "Federated Church," or "Community Church," or simply "Union Church." But whatever its local designation, it is in principle a Disciples' church.

It may not be definitely associated with the Disciples' movement. But if it is not it ought to be, and the Disciples' movement ought so to be interpreted to such a church that it will enter with joy into the fellowship of this league of churches whose sole distinctive bond is the purpose to practice Christian unity.

The more catholic and adequate is a given church's practice of Christian unity, the more truly is it a church of the Disciples.

There are churches that practice more of unity, others that practice less. There are union churches that provide for the fellowship of, perhaps, two or three kinds of Christians, for example, Baptist Christians and "Disciple" Christians, or Congregational Christians, Presbyterian Christians and Methodist Christians. Such churches, insofar as they break away from denominational limitations and hold before themselves an undenominational ideal, are churches of Disciples.

Other churches there are which provide for the fellowship of all Christians. They declare that if any person has been received by Christ into His church they have no right to bar him from their church. They not only ought to belong to the Disciples movement but to be regarded as the typical churches of the movement. They do what the movement under Thomas Campbell started out to do, namely, "to make the door into the Church as wide as the gate into heaven."

It is a sorry fact that there should be in our land at this time many hundreds of churches, perhaps several thousands of them, striving to practice Christian unity, and none of them connected with that league of similar churches known as the Disciples of Christ. These isolated churches do not so much as know that there is in existence a movement of this sort for which they have affinity and with which they could find fellowship.

It is the duty of the Disciples of Christ to claim these churches wherever they may be found. It is not our duty to denominationalize them, or to persuade them to practice less Christian unity than they are now practicing. But it is our duty to show them that we are their kind of churches, that they are farther along toward catholicity and unity in some points than are we, perhaps, but that they need our fellowship and may be helped by our experience.

A true union church is a Disciples' church, and a Disciples church is a union church in purpose if not already in perfect attainment.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

State University Religious Center.

The University of Illinois is rapidly becoming a great religious center under the wholesome leadership of President James, former president of Northwestern University, the great Methodist school. Recognizing the movement for the granting of public school credits for Sunday school work done according to certain standards, there has been organized at the twin cities a Community Training School for Bible School Teachers. This institution has for its leader Doctor Phelps of the university, and university professors and local ministers are the instructors. The University Y. M. C. A. has made the preachers of the community a Board of Religious Direction. Advanced steps have been taken by two denominations in caring for the religious interests of students for the coming year. The Presbyterians plan to employ a lady assistant to Mr. Reed, and the Congregationalists furnish Doctor Holmes with eight student assistants for his growing university work. The Presbyterian Church is a strictly student institution, while the Congregational is a town church a mile and a half from the campus, but psychologically very near to the university, as indicated by the fact that its pastor has received ten faculty families into his church membership this year, together with forty-eight students.

The Life Eldership.

It has been the custom in Presbyterian churches to elect elders for life. For a long time this was regarded as an essential feature of Presbyterianism. This practice has led to embarassments in many churches where the elder has ceased to be a worthy leader without becoming a proper subject for church discipline. A leading journal of Presbyterianism, the Continent, has opened a symposium in its columns, on the wisdom of continuing this practice. The advocates of life eldership insist that regularly recurring elections make the eldership the object of a political scramble in the local church.

Defend the Lord's Day.

An international Lord's Day Congress will be held at Oakland, Cal., July 27 to Aug. 1. Alton B. Parker, of New York, will preside and a number of eminent men will speak. Among them are: Abraham Kuyper, late prime minister of Holland; Senator Enrico Soulier, of Italy; Dr. Andrew Murray, of Africa; Dr. Homer C. Stuntz, of Argentina; Canon Henson and Sir Robertson Nicoll, of England; Dr. B. B. Warfield, Secretary Josephus Daniels, of the navy department; President Thwing, of Cleveland; Sir Andrew Fraser, of Scotland, and Dr. F. E. Clark, of Boston. All persons interested in Sabbath observance are invited to apply for information to the executive committee, 31 Bible House, New York.

Arouse Ministers in Their Own Behalf.

Dr. J. B. Hingeley is the tireless exponent of pensions for Methodist ministers, and he has recently published a book in their behalf. His appeals in Methodist journals are sensational but effective. He finds the ministers themselves lethargic in many cases with regard to this philanthropy which affects them so vitally. His message in the Methodist papers last week was headed "The cow will need her tail in fly-time." The point of this for the young minister reckless with regard to his future is obvious.

Ban on the Automobile.

Preachers with depleted congregations have often cherished resentful thoughts toward the automobile, no doubt, but it has remained for the Dunkards to erect this prejudice into an ecclesiastical law. At the national gathering of this sect held at Dayton, Ohio, recently, a statute was passed forbidding the members from owning an automobile. Typewriters and electric lights had been put under the ban in previous gatherings, but these enactments did not disturb the farmer members. These rural people are prosperous, however, and have been riding in cars, hence there is a strong protest against this encroachment on personal liberty. The denomination, like the Rechabites of old, have a great skepticism about the value of modern civilization, which is also shared by such literary gentlemen as Jack London and others.

Chicago Laymen's Convention to Set Pace for Eighty Other Cities.

Chicago intends to accept its responsibility as the central and chief city of the nation, and hold the first of a series of eighty conventions in as many cities under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. This keynote convention will be held in October. Large plans are being laid, and large men are being secured to administer them. At a banquet of laymen, held at the La Salle Hotel, last week, Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, vice-president of the Union Trust Co., and president of the National Association of Commerce, gave his conset to accept the chairmanship of the Chicago convention. In a happy and thoughtful address he interpreted the work of foreign missions in its relation to other world enterprises, such as international peace and international commerce. Mr. F. J. Mickel is the executive secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement for the Chicago district.

The Christian Endeavor Convention

Fifteen thousand people assembled day after day last week, at the Coliseum, in Chicago, for the World's Christian Endeavor Convention. The impression on the part of some that the organization is on the wane was entirely dispelled by the numbers and the spirit of this great gathering. There was enthusiasm a plenty, perhaps more than the older and more conservative Christians would like. There were the crowds applauding the battle cries of evangelical Christianity.

The meeting was full of good cheer, in spite of its disappointments. "Father Endeavor" Clark was sick in the East with typhoid fever, and is not yet out of danger. His familiar face was missed for the first time since the Endeavor Movement began. President Wilson could not come, on account of urgent affairs of state which are well known to the American public. Even William Jennings Bryan was not here. But there was no lack of good speakers, and the presence of such a man as Dr. J. A. MacDonald, of the Toronto Globe, was compensation for many of the disappointments of the program.

There seemed to be three popular notes struck in these meetings. One of these was Christian Union. The Christian Endeavor movement has always stood for closer fellowship among Christians of different names. It was because of this that the movement early fell into disfavor with sectarians. Convention speakers called the religious free-lance "an ecclesiastical Ishmaelite." Committee in mission work was urged, especially in home missions where there are still ardent sectarians who think that every village and every city neighborhood must have their little ism.

STRONG PEACE PLEA.

The convention also made a strong plea for world peace. Resolutions were sent to President Wilson commending his attitude in favor of peace. This was a World Convention, and there were both German and English sympathizers on the program. Neutrality was preserved and a deeper kinship than that of country was felt.

Perhaps it would not be too much to say that the most dominant note of the convention was that in favor of abolishing the liquor traffic from America. It was the Christian Endeavor movement that first raised the slogan, "A saloonless nation in 1920." The cry seemed chimerical enough when it was first uttered. But we have travelled far since those days. Any speaker could turn the convention into wild applause by shouting "The saloon must go!"

In the denominational rallies that were held, it was revealed that some of the leading pastors of the country in each denomination were present. Christian Endeavor is still a matter of deep moment in the parish program of these aggressive ministers.

Most ambitious slogans were placed before the young people. It was proposed that the movement shall strive during the coming year to secure a million new members and win a million new converts to the church. The young people are to be recruited for the Quiet Hour, and for the new peace society which is a branch of Christian Endeavor work.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR GROWING.

The report of General Secretary William Shaw, of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, shows an enrollment of 77,766 societies, with an estimated membership of nearly 4,000,000. To this should be added more than 20,000 societies and 1,000,000 members in kindred organizations using Christian Endeavor methods under different names, making a grand total of 100,000 societies and 5,000,000 members, in more than sixty nations and eighty denominations.

Daniel A. Poling, a young man in his thirties, who has been closely associated with President Clark for several years, was an active leader in convention affairs. He is an admirable presiding officer, and read Dr. Clark's address with fine effect. He is, no doubt, destined to take a high place in the leadership of the society.

Dr. Royal J. Dye, of Africa, and Dr. George H. Combs, of Kansas City, and Rev. S. Guy Inman, of Mexico, represented the Disciples in prominent places on the program. Dr. Combs was not present and Dr. Dye was requisitioned for three evening addresses out of the six evenings of the convention, besides other daytime speeches. His narratives of the transforming power of the Gospel in Africa were as eagerly and thrillingly received by this Christian Endeavor host as by a convention of Disciples.

In the ranks of the convention were seen gray-haired veterans of the movement. But the great numbers of young people who were young in years showed that the movement has not failed to interest the adolescents of this generation. Out of this great gathering should and will go a new impetus which will help put all religious work forward in the days before us. Christian Endeavor is givilng to the churches hope and faith and consecration.

Here and There

To One Contemplating Leaving Our Ministry.

Dear Brother: I am sorry indeed that you are contemplating a change in your church relationships. Pause for a moment to listen to one who understands your feelings, and even presumes to see a little deeper than you do beneath the surface of events that have led you to think of change. That assumption of mine is based on a close observation of our history within very recent years, and I am on record as protesting against it almost five years ago. While you and many others like you seemed to be asleep, there were a few who were very much awake. Because I have spoken once I am bold to speak again.

You, like myself, were born into the faith of the Disciples (not little "d" for me); you were educated in their schools, you filled some of their best pulpits, and made a worthy name for yourself. You know the history of the Disciples, inspiring in many particulars, already filled with many notable achievements, second to none in consecration and devotion, while in other particulars disorderly, factional, and in spots chaotic—all inevitable in the life of a people finding their feet on solid ground, their fear of ancient orders gone, the spirit of the iconoclast in their blood as becometh reformers. In this hour we are face to face with the problem of going on or going back, the problem depending upon the point of view of those who feel secure in material possessions, and fear change, or of those who are yet under the influence of the broad-minded men who knew what sectarianism meant and broke away from it. This conflict has led you to doubt, and to look for a more solid footing than you enjoy today.

Of course, if you feel that the Disciples have no mission, that the sparkle has gone from their enthusiasm, and that the lights at their feasts are burning low; if you feel that your life can be invested to a better advantage elsewhere than among the people you have known so long, we say go where you will, and God be with you. No man ought to stay on a sinking ship when he has a chance for life.

But you have no such feeling. You believe that the Disciples have a mission, but that a certain set of antiquarians are determined that they shall be diverted from the main track. Pay no attention to these men; go on and make full proof of your ministry as you have already done; help us all to solve the problems which a reactionary spirit has raised; give us the benefit of your experience. You ought to know that every communion in the land has a group of men who must rule or ruin; they would build fires under all such as you, if they dared. When you talk of changing your fellowship they rejoice with exceeding joy. Don't walk into their trap.

This condition would not have been possible if men like you had spoken against it in a manner that could not have been misunderstood. I am afraid that you are one of the large company who whisper in the ear when they should proclaim from the housetops. You admired those who did speak against it, but you kept under the shadow of the sanctuary of silence. Neither you nor many more would be where you are today if you had determined to beat back this opposition to the Restoration movement which is making many wonder whereunto it will grow.

But stay with us. If you are good enough in other communions you are good enough in ours. You are a true blue Disciple, and there is no need to change.

Was the Text Appropriate?

An Episcopal minister whose son joined the Baptist church soon after his ordination to the Episcopal ministry was invited to preach in the pulpit of the large Baptist church to which his son had been called. Imagine the consternation of the congregation when the father took for his text, "Lord, have mercy on my son, for he is a lunatic."

Architectural Display.

We heard recently of one man who spent $80,000 on a church tower, and of another who spent $60,000 on a building adjacent to the church for social purposes. If the returns are adequate, who will say this money was spent in vain? But it looks like a vast outlay in view of so many ways which to us would have been a more judicious expenditure.

Most of us have learned that it is easier to secure investments in brick and stone than in men and women.

Of Course You Have Noticed.

That an unwritten creed may be as intolerable as one embossed.

That many people in every community can tell you how to reach the masses who have never been known to speak to a stranger at church.

That some men have the heat of a sheet iron stove at a political meeting, and the coldness of the same at a prayer meeting.

That as a man becomes infallible he becomes more bitter and intolerant toward those who question his claims.

Strong Move to Overcome Necessity for Retrenchment in Foreign Mission Work.

Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, has taken a most encouraging step to aid the Foreign Society in its retrenchment emergency. A movement was set on foot in the church to raise an amount of at least one dollar per capita of the membership, to aid in this special time of need. The pastor, Dr. G. H. Combs, explained the great need of the Foreign Society and made a strong appeal to the congregation. Twelve hundred dollars was pledged at the time, and the plan is to bring it up to $2,000. This is in addition to the regular offerings of the church and Sunday school to the work of the Foreign Society. It has been suggested that a widespread movement like this in the churches would result in such aid that the retrenchment and reduction of the salaries of workers in the mission fields could be soon cancelled.

North Dakota Convention Encouraging.

F. B. Sapp, State Secretary of North Dakota, writes with great enthusiasm of the state convention, held in June at Minot. Besides several of the national secretaries, who were present, Dean A. M. Haggard, of Drake University, delivered several addresses. A number of business men of the state made addresses, among them, Mr. Wendell Huston, of Carrington, a lawyer. The spirit of the convention was progressive and free. Says Mr. Sapp: "Each year witnesses the rising tide, and sectarianism is doomed—even our own precious morsel. All things that are worth while will be conserved, which, I think, are these: Faith, hope, love and loyalty to Jesus Christ, till his spirit becomes the indwelling principle and power in human life."

Texas State Paper Changes Editorship.

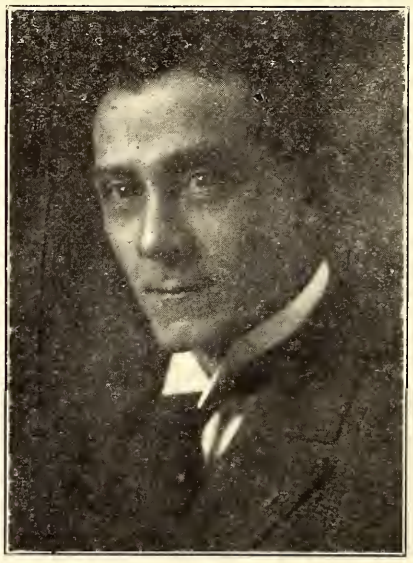
The Christian Courier, state paper of Texas, has been sold by Cephos Shelburne to M. M. Davis. Mr. Shelburne has owned and edited the paper for four years. Mr. Davis, the new editor, has been a leading minister of Texas for the past twenty years, having been for most of that time pastor of Central Church, Dallas. He is well known in the more conservative circles as a writer of ability. It was expected that the "Courier" would be taken over by the Texas Missionary Society and operated as an official state organ, but it was finally decided that the financial risk was too great to warrant such action.

Dr. Medbury's Father Passes to His Reward.

At the age of eighty-seven years, Sheldon Medbury, father of Dr. Charles S. Medbury, pastor of University Church, Des Moines, Ia., fell asleep July 3. Funeral services, conducted by Dr. Finis Idleman, were held in University Church, Sunday afternoon, and Dr. Medbury left immediately with the body for Warren, O., where interment was made. For more than twenty years, since the death of his wife, Father Medbury had made his home with his son. "There was a wholesomeness in Father Medbury's life," writes Dr. Idleman, "that was unique. Although more than eighty years of age, he kept a most alert interest in all the throbbing world about him. Lectures and concerts, commencements and recitals were his absorbing interests outside of the church. He kept an unfailing interest in childhood and a rewarding love of nature. The interests of the Disciples of Christ were always upon his mind. Although a man of reserve and almost timid modesty, he was well informed upon all current events and especially those lowed him to chapel and delighted in his of religious significance. He was the essence of cheerfulness and of gratitude, possessing the saving grace of humor. One of the most beautiful pictures about University Place, during the past twelve years, was the quiet gladness of this aged father's interest in his son's ministry. He not only attended every preaching service, but fol- public addresses. It was a tribute at once both to father and to son. Father Medbury radiated the sense of an imminent Paradise. He shared life's discipline so long and with such a beautiful spirit that he seemed to be but testing the last virtue, patience, before 'God took him.' To be in his presence made it easier to believe in Heaven. He had lived for the timeless things."

Pastor Complains of Losses by Marriage.

Graham Frank, secretary of the General Convention, appears to have other troubles beside those connected with his national office. In looking over the records of his church in Liberty, Mo., he discovered that twenty-three of the young women of the church have married out-of-town men since he became pastor there. He takes the matter seriously, as follows:



Rev. E. F. Leake, New Pastor at Independence, Mo., the Pulpit Made Famous by Alexander Proctor.

"Some of our choicest girls have thus been lost by marriage! We have only good wishes for those who have gone, and only congratulate the men who have robbed us! But we do wish that as far as possible our girls would either patronize home industry in the matrimonial world, or else, if they must patronize the mail-order concerns, that they will have it in the contract that the men are to move to Liberty! We enter our solemn protest against further losses by marriage!!"

Enthusiastic Rally of Disciple Endeavorers at Chicago.

Disciple Endeavorers present at the great Chicago convention held their "denominational" rally at Jackson Boulevard Church Friday afternoon. The house was full, first floor and balcony. Addresses were made by Rev. John E. Pounds, of Hiram, O.; Dr. Royal J. Dye, of Africa, and Mr. Frank Lowe, of Kansas City, field secretary for the Christian Endeavor for the state of Missouri. Rev. H. A. Denton, vice-president, presided in the absence of Rev. Claude E. Hill, national superintendent. Rev. Austin Hunter, of Chicago, gave a report for the national officers; Rev. W. F. Thaw, of Chicago, read the scripture, and Prof. A. W. Fortune, of Transylvania College, Kentucky, closed the session with the benediction. Among those present besides the pastors of Chicago and immediate vicinity were noted: Rev. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City; Rev. Allan B. Philputt, of Indianapolis; Rev. P. A. Sherman, recently arrived on his furlough from India; Rev. S. G. Inman, of Mexico, and Rev. Frank C. Ransdell, of New Marshfield, O.; Rev. Homer W. Carpenter, of Shelbyville, Ky., and Rev. Charles M. Fillmore, of Indianapolis. The rally was vigorous and enthusiastic. In closing the program, Chairman Denton made a speech, cautiously setting forth the complaint that has many times been heard in Christian Endeavor circles against the conversion of Junior Christian Endeavor societies into Mission Bands under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary auxiliaries. The applause with which his first timid statements were received emboldened the chairman, who dwelt at length upon the superiority of a Junior Endeavor Society—with its breadth of interest, its organic relation to the Senior Endeavor Society, its more frequent meetings, and its interdenominational character—to the mission band. President F. E. Clark was quoted as regretting this turning from Junior Endeavor by Disciples and a committee was finally appointed to make a report and recommendation to the Los Angeles convention next week. The committee was also instructed to recommend the appointment of a salarjed national superintendent of Christian Endeavor, to give his entire time to the work.

Church Services on the Roof.

The heat of summer has no terrors for First Church, Fresno, Cal. A roof garden that will seat a congregation of five hundred very comfortably and which is well lighted furnishes a cool and delightful refuge for the Sunday evening services. This is but one of the advantages of the new church edifice dedicated last winter. There is everything needed for the work of church and Sunday school. But aside from the utility of the building it is a masterpiece of architecture from the standpoint of religious impressiveness and beauty. Especially is this true of the main auditorium. The church is making splendid progress under the leadership of Dr. H. O. Breeden, who has able support from his assistant, Roy O. Youtz. The Sunday school has maintained an average attendance of over 500 during the past few months.

Minnesota Convention Enjoys J. H. Goldner.

Minnesota Disciples foregathered in a goodly number at Lake Minnetonka for their state convention the first week of July. The Baptist state association owns a commodious and well appointed summer resort on the lake some twenty miles from Minneapolis, which the Disciples have rented for the past three years. It is an ideal place for conventions, affording rest and quiet and all the conditions that make for intimacy in the exchange of counsel during the few days of conference. Rev. J. H. Goldner, of Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, O., was the chief speaker this year. He had a daily morning conference and lectured in the evenings, preaching also on Sunday. A suggestion of the stimulating character of the evening lectures may be given by the title of the first one, "Christianity a Laymen's Movement." The morning talks and conferences were especially for ministers, the first one being on 'The Minister with a Divided Mind." Mr. Goldner was listened to with great eagerness. He brought from his long and rich experience as the pastor of one of the chief congregations of our people a message ripe and satisfying. The tone of the convention was harmonious and courageous. There are fifty-three churches of Disciples in the state. Ray Hunt, of Grand Avenue Church, Minneapolis, is president of the convention. Incidentally, it may be said that Minnesota is a clean-cut delegate convention and there is no trouble over it!

Pastor's Wedding Announcement Follows Resignation.

Following the resignation of A. L. Cole, at Carthage, Ill., comes the announcement that Mr. Cole is to marry Miss Josephine Crawford, a member of the Carthage church and first cousin of Judge C. J. Scofield of that city, distinguished churchman, jurist and author. Mr. and Mrs. Cole will make a honeymoon trip to California, including the General Convention at Los Angeles, and will locate in some parish after September 1. E. M. Smith, of Decatur, Ill., was chosen to succeed Mr. Cole at Carthage. There were seventy-five applicants for the pulpit. Mr. Smith was not an applicant, but was sought by the official board.

Oregon Pastor Dies While Addressing State Convention.

The Oregon convention, meeting at Turner last week, sustained a shock when R. G. Callison, of Fall Creek, sank to the floor while addressing the convention and died within a few seconds. His death was due to apoplexy. Mr. Callison had just been saying, "Prepare to live and you will be prepared to die." The convention was held from July 6 to 14. Among those in attendance from outside the state were: A. F. Hensey and Emory Ross, missionaries to Africa; G. W. Muckley, Kansas City; W. R. Warren and Miss Grafton, Indianapolis; Grant K. Lewis, Cincinnati, and C. C. Garrigues, St. Louis. A new feature of the convention this year was an outdoor program under the direction of R. E. Jope, of Roseburg. The indoor programs closed at 4 o'clock and athletic exercises were enjoyed until 6 o'clock.

New York State Convention.

The fifty-fourth annual convention of the New York Christian Missionary Society was held at Keuka College, June 28-30. It was the best in point of attendance and interest for several years.

The program gave more oportunity than usual for the transaction of business and reports from the various missions and churches, and in consequence the few addresses were the more appreciated. The fraternal address from the Baptist denomination in the state was delivered by Rev. D. A. Abrams, pastor of the Southside Baptist Church, Elmira, and his treatment of the theme "Christian Union," was judged orthodox. Mrs. Josephine M. Stearns, of the C. W. B. M., was a great favorite of all the delegates, and her two addresses were much appreciated. F. A. Higgins, of Tonawanda, on State Work; J. P. Sala, on Evangelism, and Dr. R. H. Crossfield, on Christian Education, all deserve especial mention, while the convention sermon of H. B. McCormick, of the Bronx Church, on "Kingdom Builders," was one of the best messages heard in a long time.

The retiring of Dr. E. A. Long, as State President, and Daniel Krebiel, as State Treasurer, after nearly twenty years of continuous service was not passed without suitable records of appreciation. When Mr. Krebiel finished reading his annual report, a bouquet of seventeen American beauty roses, one for each year of service, was presented him. Both of these men begged to be released, so that the work might be passed on to other men who would infuse new ideas in the work.

The new officers of the State Board are: Rev. M. M. Amunson, Brooklyn, President; Mr. C. E. Van Zandt, Troy, first Vice-President; Mr. Joseph A. Serena, second Vice-President; Mr. Chester T. Macdonald, Rochester, Recording Secretary; Rev. C. A. Brady, Rochester, Corresponding Secretary (the only state officer to hold over); Mr. C. G. Van Wormer, Syracuse, Treasurer.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions reëlected the former officers: President, Mrs. Duncan Sinclair, North Tonawanda; Vice-President, Mrs. O. M. Wiley, Syracuse; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Laura G. Craig, Buffalo; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Nellie Dunstan, Buffalo; Treasurer, Mrs. Charlotte Long, Williamsville; Superintendent Young Peoples Work, Mrs. Edith Wagoner, East Orange, N. J.

During one of the intermission periods a motion picture of the delegates was taken as they were leaving the building, which was shown that evening when some of the scenes of the Keuka College motion picture play were produced. The next convention will again be held in Keuka Park, probably in the first week of July, 1916.

Rev. E. M. Smith of Decatur, Called to Carthage, Ill. He Will Accept.

Hammond Pastor Suffers Nervous Collapse.

C. J. Sharp, of Hammond, Ind., is reported ill with nervous breakdown. He is confined in Michael Reese Hospital, Chicago, and may have to submit to an operation. Mr. Sharp has been working beyond the endurance power of any average man and his present illness is no surprise to those who know of his energetic labors. The report from the hospital as to his condition from day to day is encouraging.

Straight Talk from Pulpit to Mayor's Office.

B. W. Tate, pastor at Sterling, Ill., addressing a union meeting of all the churches of the town, did not mince words in his discusstion of the "Sins of Sterling." He appealed to the people to stand by the ministers in their campaign for more strict law enforcement and especially for the closing of saloons on Sunday. The minister asserted that the saloons in Streator were soon to be closed on Sunday and intimated that certain steps had been adopted which would accomplish this result. He declared the mayor would be asked to resign if the laws were not enforced, and if he did not resign, some means might be taken to impeach him for failure to live up to the obligations included in his oath.

—Robert E. Hieronymus, formerly president of Eureka College, is now in the employ of the state university of Illinois as an expert counsellor of communities, with respect to the township high school idea. Mr. Hieronymus believes in the township plan and is accomplishing much in persuading communities to take it up and guiding them in doing so.

—George A. Campbell, of Hannibal, Mo., says, the Every Member Canvass is the greatest annual event in the life of his congregation.

—The Maryville, Mo., church will not allow the salary of Dr. C. C. Drummond, its living-link missionary, to be cut by the stringency in the Foreign Society's receipts. The church, writes Robert L. Finch, pastor, will make up the full salary by a substantial increase in its offering.

—E. B. Quick began his new pastorate at Barry, Ill., on July 4.

—The state convention of Illinois Disciples will be held at Bloomington, September 20-23. Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, and Prof. Walter S. Athearn, of Drake University, will be feature speakers.

—Agitation in the congregation of First Church, Davenport, Ia., resulting in the resignation of the pastor, J. T. Houser, to take effect in August, has continued until it has resulted in the further abbreviation of Mr. Houser's stay. The pulpit is now being filled by supply ministers. Dean F. W. Norton, of Drake University, preached on July 4.

—After the successful dedication of the new $50,000 Capitol Hill house of worship in Des Moines, Ia., his congregation voted T. F. Paris and Mrs. Paris a vacation to the Pacific Coast and the money to cover the expense thereof and elected them both delegates to the General Convention.

—Jesse P. McKnight, of Wilshire Boulevard Church, Los Angeles, preached the sermon at the dedication of the Sunday school section of a new house of worship for Washington Church, Pasadena, Cal., on July 11. W. C. Hull is the pastor of the church, which is a growing congregation with good prospects of growth.

—After a long, steady pull which reached its greatest degree of intensity in an "Out-of-debt-in-a-year" campaign, the past year, First Church, Lincoln, Neb., paid its last dollar of indebtedness on July 1. H. H. Harmon, the pastor, is described as "a pastor who not only builds, but stays until the debt is paid."

—During the month of June the Sunday school of Central Church, Terre Haute, Ind., had an average attendance of 824 and an average collection of $87.16. J. Boyd Jones is the pastor.

—Out of a total membership of 75, 47 members responded to the roll-call services at Rialto, Cal., on June 20. Nine members are now resident, and six were unavoidably detained. J. E. Pickett, the pastor, preached in the morning and evening, and Dr. W. B. Craig, of Redland, in the afternoon. The Sunday school has grown considerably in attendance since last January.

RESIGNATIONS.

John A. Tabor, Third Avenue Church, Dallas, Tex.

Clifford S. Weaver, Texarkana, Tex., to become Endowment Secretary of Texas Christian University. He will live at Fort Worth.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

The Society has received from Mr. Frank Coop, of Southport, England, a draft for $1,000. He is deeply concerned about the Society and hopes that the brotherhood will respond with liberal gifts, so that the reduction in salary may not continue for any considerable time.

The Foreign Society is still seeking for a doctor for Luchowfu, China, and also two nurses, one for Luchowfu and the other for Nantungchow, China.

Miss Kate Galt Miller, of Wuhu, China, has reached America on her first furlough. Miss Miller will be in California until after the convention at Los Angeles, and will then go to her home in Louisville, Ky.

Our Readers' Opinions

BAPTISM OR IMMERSION?

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

In last week's "Century" you say with reference to a press burcau:

"Suppose that from the beginning of the Disciples' movcment they, too, had had the sagacity to make use of it.

Suppose, for example, that whenever a paper represented the Disciples as teaching that immersion in water is a saving act a properly commissioned representative had been promptly on the spot to deny it."

Now, I think of a better way than "to deny it" and that is to give the Bible teaching on the subject and try to convince "ye editor" that when preceded by a surrendered heart it is a "saving" ordinance. Had it not been, would Peter have ever used language like he did in I Peter 3:18-22? Peter says the water which was used of God as a means of carrying thosc disposed for salvation over from the old world into the new and of destroying the wicked was a type of baptism—the antetype, and that the antetype, even baptism, now saves you.

It is not said that Noah and his family were saved by water nor in water, nor from water, but they were saved through water as the mode through which God exerted his saving power. So it is, as I see it, in regard to baptism, the antetype. It now saves us, not as a savior, but as a condition or medium through which God exerts his saving power.

It certainly is not an explanation of this scripture which says baptism in no sense saves us, but a contradiction of it. The cleansing in this case is not, the Apostle says, a Jewish cleansing of carnal impurities which, undcr the law, required the bathing of the whole body, but a cleansing that pertains to the conscience.

In some way, baptism to a penitent believer brings the scnse of a pardoned conscience. This is true, or there is no meaning in language or thought in human speech. This is also the interpretation of a host of commentators, among them the scholarly and pious Albert Barnes.

And then it ought to be remembered always that the conditions are conditions of grace, not of merit. We cannot pay God in any sense by what we do. Men do not receive God's help because they deserve it, but bccause they need it.

Kansas City. JAMES SMALL.

[The Scriptures nowhere say that immersion in water is a saving act. They do say that baptism is a saving act. But baptism and immersion in water are by no means the same thing, as Mr. Small's communication assumes.—THE EDITOR.]

WE ARE CHEAPENING THE CHURCH.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

Your editorials, "Our Plea" and "Are We Cheapening the Church?" are the utterances of the true prophet.

"Our Plea" expresses what has come to be the enforced conviction of every active minister who has not walled himself about with the most sectarian self-sufficiency worse than any he has essayed to batter down in others.

As to the other editorial, it should be sent out as a tract to the preaching brotherhood for free and generous distribution "among the brethren." And the pitiful truth is that this very cheapening of the church is the ideal "life" of the church. The preacher who will not stand for these things, or who speaks against them, is considered out of date and no hustler. This very test of a preacher's ability has driven—shall I say it?—scores of splendid men out of the ministry rather than permit themselves to be forced into a ruinous and irreligious bustle and hypocritical activity having for its aim two objects, to delude the undiscerning into believing that they are really busy in Christion work, and to shove over onto others the real burdens which they, themselves, ought to bear—asking the world without, in other words, to indirectly pay their bills for the church.

Yes, we are cheapening the gospel, we are cheapening the church, we are cheapening discipleship, we are cheapening religion, we are cheapening song, we are cheapening Bible-study, we are cheapening preachers, we are cheapening our sacred missionary enterprises, we are cheapening the pulpit.

Is not this the reason the church is marking time so perceptibly today? Is not this the real reason for the falling off of missionary enthusiasm, the disruption of our boasted solidarity, the halting of all our plans, and the prevalence of worldliness in the church activities at large?

But, the preacher who insists upon the reverence, self-denial, self-appreciation, the "self-reserve of our Lord," the calmness and dignity of the Church in reverent and humble worship, will be passed on as a back number in three congregations out of five. And yet you are doing a capital service in sounding this fearless, prophetic call to repentance among the churches. R. B. G.

WHY MEN DRINK

Scientists who have studied the problem of drink tell us that there are two underlying and unavoidable cases that are responsible for a large proportion of the causes of habitual intemperance. They are: (1) Mental fatigue, or worry: (2) Physical fatigue, or muscular exhaustion. When either the mind or the body becomes fatigued the system calls for help in the form of refreshment or stimulation. The scientists also tell us that the higher the degrce of intellectual development we attain the grcater is our demand for either refreshment or stimulation.

In his search for relief from fatigue man has sought out and pressed into service almost every vegetable and animal product that nature has endowed with refreshing or with stimulating qualities. As fatigue is universal and inevitable, the problem of its relief is one that should cngage our most careful and intelligent study. To ignore it is to court disaster, for physiologists tell us that worry kills; that physical and mental fatigue lower our vital resistance and predispose to disease.

Nature has provided two essentially different groups of substances to overcome the injurious effects of toil. They are the alcoholic beverages, including wines, bcers and liquors, and the nonalcoholic beverages, including coffee, tea, cocoa and Coca-Cola, and the animal products—beef tea and meat extracts. Almost evey mature person, especially those who are forced to perform arduous labor of mind or body, finds in one or the other of these bcverages the relief his system requires.

Which is the most wholesome and efficient?

Scientists tcll us that the alcoholic beverages rclievc fatigue by stimulation and are to be classed as artificial stimulants, whereas the nonalcoholic beverages refresh the nerves and muscles by a process analogous to lubrication. In the case of beef tea and meat extracts the refreshing principle is xanthin (pronounced zanthin), a substance found in the flesh and blood of all animals, including man, but espccially abundant in the tissues of the young. Many scientists regard xanthin as the natural stimulant and as the explanation of the remarkable freshness, young animals. As we grow older the quantity of zanthin in our bodies gradually diminishes and we become less alert and active.

In the case of coffee, tea, cocoa and Coca-Cola the refreshing principle is a substance called caffein, which is a vegetable xanthin. As xanthin is a normal ingredient of the human body, and as caffein when digested becomes a xanthin, some scientists class coffee, tea, cocoa, Coca-Cola and the meat extracts as natural stimulants, as opposed to the alcoholic or artificial stimulants. Others maintain that caffein and xanthin have no true stimulating qualities and should therefore not be classed as stimulants, for they relieve fatigue by refreshment, a process analogous to lubrication. Among the latter scientists are Dr. Schmiedeberg, the world's leading authority on such matters, and Dr. Hollingworth of Columbia University, a leading American scientist. In describing the effect of coffee, tea and Coca-Cola, Dr. Schmiedeberg says: "Caffein is, hence, a means of refreshing bodily and mental activity, so that this may be prolonged when the condition of fatigue has already begun to produce restraint and to call for more severe exertion of the will, a state which, as is well known, is painful or disagreeable."

Coca-Cola is the same as tea and coffee except that it is carbonated, is flavored with ripe fruit extracts, and contains no tannic acid or caffeol. The carbonation and the fruit flavors combine with the caffein to give a most delicious and refreshing beverage that quenches the thirst and relieves fatigue more perfectly than tea and coffee, in spite of the fact that Coca-Cola contains only about one-half the quantity of caffein. In their desire to give the public a thorough understanding of their product, The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet containing the scientific opinions of the world's leading authorities, explaining the composition and refreshing qualities of the drink. Write for a copy. Read it carefully and understand how and why Coca-Cola is the nearest approach to a perfect solution of the world's great problem of fatigue. LET THIS BOOK SPEAK FOR ITSELF

St. Louis Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents.

The Christian Intelligencer (Reformed)
The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal.

Zion's Herald (Methodist, Boston)
Dr. Morrison who is editor of The Christian Century, a national organ of the Disciples of Christ—a denomination which believes in immersion—handles with utmost frankness the position of his own denomination relative to baptism. The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of this leading publication in that denomination. Dr. Morrison's work is frankly done, and while arousing, doubtless, some criticism among those of his own denomination and the close communion remnant still to be found in certain localities, will be heartily received as a genuine contribution toward Christian unity.

The Advance (Congregationalist)
We commend this book to pastors who find the baptismal question up for discussion in the parishes. It is a strong contribution to the literature of the subject and we believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt. We do not think it possible for them permanently to hold to close baptism without going the whole length of the Baptists and join close communion to it.

The Epworth Herald (Methodist)
While not agreeing with all the statements made it is about the most interesting book on the subject I have seen. The author is master of good, clear English and knows how to express himself.

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination)
He presents his thought from a new and interesting standpoint. We wish it might be read by all Disciples, all Christians, all Baptists, and in fact by all denominations—it will have a moulding effect as to one's opinions of baptism. The Disciples' themselves will likely get the most good from the book. Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God.

The Continent (Presbyterian)
It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity for immersion, and he writes that "the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever, stands behind the practice of immersion." Instead, in the New Testament, baptism simply means the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian. He is strongly against demanding the rebaptism of Christian believers who apply to Baptist or Disciples churches for membership having been accepted in other churches by any mode of baptism whatever. Equally he opposes infant baptism, because the subject of baptism must be voluntary. At the root of his argument lies a sound desire for Christian unity.

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren)
The author is clear and candid, brave and kind in performing the task to which he assigned himself. . . . As we view the real meaning of this new interpretation of baptism it involves a complete abandonment of the dogma of immersion, and may lead to a new adjustment of attitude on that subject on the part of other immersionist bodies. At any rate, the significance of the work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement.

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Dr. Morrison belongs to what might be called the younger school of Disciples who have the discretion and the will to approach the members of other churches, not with the club of intolerance and pseudo-omniscience, but with the open hand of intellectual catholicity and good will. . . . The propaganda could not wish for a leader more truly representative. A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few. This book gives one evidence. The significant fact is that the author is a member of an immersion church, once commonly called "Campbellites," and while he holds to immersion as the correct mode of baptizing, yet he declares, "It would be too much to say, dogmatically, that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." The book is well worth reading, not only for its scholarly treatment of the question of baptism, which is satisfactory, but as an example of true liberality in modern church life, a liberality which is not degrading and flat, but catholic, appreciative and noble.

The Christian Endeavor World.
A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view but building a bridge toward the affusionist view.

The Congregationalist
A daring and splendidly Christian piece of work is "The Meaning of Baptism," by Charles Clayton Morrison, in which the author frankly asserts that Jesus "had no intention of fixing a physical act upon his followers. He did not have in mind the form of baptism but the meaning of it." Nevertheless, for historic reasons he recommends retaining the form of immersion.

The Christian Observer (Presbyterian)
It is a courageous man who will undertake to write a book on the subject of baptism in this age of the world . . . This book has stirred up considerable controversy in the writer's church. By many he is regarded as a heretic and is abused accordingly. However, in other respects the author is true to Disciples' sentiments. The chief value of the book lies in the author's contention that New Testament baptism is not tied to any physical act, but is "the spiritual, social act of self-commitment and self-consecration by the individual and his induction into the church." This idea, by the way, is very forcefully expressed in an old document that was formulated by the Westminster Assembly more than two centuries and a half ago when they said, "Baptism is a sacrament. . . whereby the parties baptized are solemnly admitted into the visible church and enter into an open and professed engagement to be wholly and only the Lord's."

The Standard (Baptist)
The argument throughout is good and there are conclusions that are worthy of careful consideration.

The Christian Union Quarterly (Disciple)
The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines. . . However one may differ from the author there is much in this book to be commended from both the Baptist and paedo-baptist sides of the house.

The Churchman (Episcopal)
Under the title "The Meaning of Baptism," Mr. C. C. Morrison has given an interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism. The Disciples, to whose fellowship Mr. Morrison belongs, practice rebaptizing for those who have not been immersed. Mr. Morrison is not in sympathy with this position. He shows that baptism by immersion has figured little in the divisions of the church and will doubtless likewise figure little in its unity.

Baptist Standard (Dallas, Tex.)
This is a very interesting work, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this summer!

The Homiletic Review
A volume on this subject with an irenic purpose by the editor of The Christian Century is welcome. The position taken is that while immersion is the valid mode of baptism the doctrine or dogma "eclipses the great objective task of the church for large majorities of Disciples and Baptists." Baptism has its essence not in the mode of administration, but in that it means "the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian" (p. 193). While, then, the volume is a plea for the adoption of immersion as a mode universally recognized as regular, the practice of rebaptism with its implication that Presbyterians, Methodists and others are not Christians is to be reprobated. Members should pass freely from these other churches to those of Baptists and Disciples without calling into question or ignoring their status as already members of the Church of Christ.
The spirit of the book is delightful and raises new hopes where none had seemed possible.

The Presbyterian Advance
The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which often has been asked of him by correspondents and readers—"What is the best book on baptism?" . . . Against all who insist that immersion and immersion only is baptism this book provides an unanswerable argument.

The United Presbyterian
An unusual book. Written by a Disciple and the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion. He says the use of the word "baptizo," in its New Testament usage, refers primarily to the function of initiation and only incidentally to the particular [physical] act.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

COMMENTS OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

St. Louis Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents.

The Christian Intelligencer (Reformed)
The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal.

Zion's Herald (Methodist, Boston)
Dr. Morrison who is editor of The Christian Century, a national organ of the Disciples of Christ—a denomination which believes in immersion—handles with utmost frankness the position of his own denomination relative to baptism. The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of this leading publication in that denomination. Dr. Morrison's work is frankly done, and while arousing, doubtless, some criticism among those of his own denomination and the close communion remnant still to be found in certain localities, will be heartily received as a genuine contribution toward Christian unity.

The Advance (Congregationalist)
We commend this book to pastors who find the baptismal question up for discussion in the parishes. It is a strong contribution to the literature of the subject and we believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt. We do not think it possible for them permanently to hold to close baptism without going the whole length of the Baptists and join close communion to it.

The Epworth Herald (Methodist)
While not agreeing with all the statements made it is about the most interesting book on the subject I have seen. The author is master of good, clear English and knows how to express himself.

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination)
He presents his thought from a new and interesting standpoint. We wish it might be read by all Disciples, all Christians, all Baptists, and in fact by all denominations—it will have a moulding effect as to one's opinions of baptism. The Disciples' themselves will likely get the most good from the book. Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God.

The Continent (Presbyterian)
It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity for immersion, and he writes that "the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever, stands behind the practice of immersion." Instead, in the New Testament, baptism simply means the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian. He is strongly against demanding the re-baptism of Christian believers who apply to Baptist or Disciples churches for membership having been accepted in other churches by any mode of baptism whatever. Equally he opposes infant baptism, because the subject of baptism must be voluntary. At the root of his argument lies a sound desire for Christian unity.

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren)
The author is clear and candid, brave and kind in performing the task to which he assigned himself. . . . As we view the real meaning of this new interpretation of baptism it involves a complete abandonment of the dogma of immersion, and may lead to a new adjustment of attitude on that subject on the part of other immersionist bodies. At any rate, the significance of the work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement.

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Dr. Morrison belongs to what might be called the younger school of Disciples who have the discretion and the will to approach the members of other churches, not with the club of intolerance and pseudo-omniscience, but with the open hand of intellectual catholicity and good will. . . . The propaganda could not wish for a leader more truly representative. A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few. This book gives one evidence. The significant fact is that the author is a member of an immersion church, once commonly called "Campbellites," and while he holds to immersion as the correct mode of baptizing, yet he declares, "It would be too much to say, dogmatically, that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." The book is well worth reading, not only for its scholarly treatment of the question of baptism, which is satisfactory, but as an example of true liberality in modern church life, a liberality which is not degrading and flat, but catholic, appreciative and noble.

The Christian Endeavor World.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Volume XXXII JULY 22, 1915 Number 29

God's Unobtrusiveness

OUR CHRISTIANITY is a religion of revelation. That is what distinguishes it more than any other single feature from the other great religions of the world. They are religions of human discovery; they represent man's search for God.

But Christianity represents God's search for man. It is not a religion of man's reasoning or hoping or guessing, but primarily of God's wisdom and power.

It is the glory and distinction of our Christianity that in it the initiative is with God. It is based upon the premise that God is a speaking God, a self-revealing God, and that his eternal passion is to make himself and his ways known to men.

Yet our hearts often complain that God seems to hide himself. In the perplexities of our faith and in the great crises of our moral experience we seek for a clear demonstration or token of God's presence and of his will and find it not.

It would seem, we say, that if God desired above all things to have us know him he would put his presence beyond peradventure of doubt, and make his will so clear that to misunderstand it would be impossible.

In a word, our hearts, when they are in this complaining mood, ask why God's revelation does not reveal! Why should there be any dispute about his meaning when once God hath spoken? Why should not God's personality and all the realities of the spiritual world be as surely known as are the things we know by sense perception?

As a matter of fact we must concede that God and his world of spiritual things are not to the ordinary mind as clearly discerned as are the trees, the houses, the rocks, the stars and other realities of the physical realm. These smite our eyes and our feet continually.

Why does not God smite our eyes with his presence in the same way? So that when a man says there is no God all his fellows would as promptly judge him insane as if he should deny the existence of the material realities about him. Why, for example, does not God arrange the stars in the sky to spell out the words "THERE IS A GOD" and "GOD IS LOVE." This would be a revelation indeed. Then no man could doubt. Then the infidel, the atheist, would be impossible.

But we find that in all his dealings with us men God has ever been unobtrusive. It would seem that his method could be described only in some such paradox as this: In his attempt at revealing himself God has ever been concealing himself. His self-revelation is not more characteristic than his self-reservation.

An Old Testament proverb declares, with a flash of insight not often met with in the book that bears that title, that "it is the glory of God to conceal a thing," or "to conceal himself."

It is God's glory to reveal himself—yes. But it is also his glory to conceal himself. His revelation is not obtrusive but modest, quiet, pervasive. He does not break into our lives bumptiously, compelling recognition; he stands at the door and knocks.

This divine courtesy, this patience of God until we have shown some recognition of him is indeed his glory. He is not a sensationalist. He does not splash his revelation in red ink upon the bill-boards of the universe. He approaches us men not in the earthquake, the storm, or the fire, but in the still small voice.

That is to say, the method of God's revelation is not compulsion or sensation, but suggestion. He leaves something to us. We must at least listen to him, turn toward him, wait upon him.

He crowds our world full of his presence. Every flower, every star, every friendship, every social tie that binds us in with our fellows, is silently vocal of God, and every problem, every sorrow, every crucial hour is vibrant with his presence. But there is no compulsion about it. He will not overwhelm our souls. He will let us find him.

> "Some say creation's meant to show him forth;
> I say it's meant to hide him all it can.
> And that's what all the blessed evil's for;
> Its use in Time is to environ us,
> Our breath, our drop of dew, with shield enough
> Against that sight till we can bear its stress."

Many a soul, like Moses at the great crisis of his life, prays to see the face of God, prays for such a demonstration of the presence of the divine Companion as to leave no place for doubt ever to creep in again. "I cannot go further unless thou show me thy glory!" And God always replies, "No man can see my face and live." By which God meant that a clear, fair, face-to-face view of himself by man's yet unprepared eyes would destroy forever the moral value inhering in the struggle with doubt.

Whatever awaits us on the plane of existence to which we rise at death, this is sure: that on this our present earth level we come into possession of moral character only through struggle with doubt. If God should make such a revelation of himself and his ways that there would be no longer any room for doubt he would thereby rob us of our chance of attaining character.

For character is formed by faith. And if God's self-revelation were without self-reservation there would be no moral value in our apprehending him. We would then walk by sight, not by faith, and the glory of our moral endeavor would be gone.

Our hearts may therefore be grateful to God for his concealments, for his silences. He wants us to share his glory. But in his gracious wisdom he knows that we can be made worthy of his glory only by walking in the pathway of obedient faith until the morning appears when we shall be like him.

Then we shall see him as he is.

Internationalism and the Church

By JAMES A. MacDONALD

This address by the editor of the Toronto Globe was the climax of the most thrilling session of the Christian Endeavor convention held in Chicago this month. Ten thousand people were present. Mrs. Mary Harris Armour, national lecturer for the W. C. T. U., in a cyclonic speech had swept the audience into a high pitch of enthusiasm for Prohibition. Mr. J. Campbell White, had gripped the imagination and conscience of the Christian Endeavor host with his picture of the strategic situation throughout the whole non-Christian world, and then came Dr. MacDonald with his address on Peace. Finshing this the manuscript part of his address, he said, "I praise God with every Briton for the strength and steadiness of Woodrow Wilson." The house went wild with applause and cheers. When a lull came Dr. MacDonald, though evidently not through with his address said he would join the audience in singing America. The national hymn was sung, and without another word the chairman pronounced the benediction.

NATIONALISM was the great word of the world of yesterday. By it colonies grew into nations, but by its perverted emphasis comes the conflict of nations today. Internationalism will be the far greater word of the world of tomorrow. By it war will be disproved, and out of it will come the world commonwealth of peace.

Independence was the great idea of North America in the days of George Washington; by it was organized the Republic of the United States and then the Republic of Mexico. Interdependence is coming to be the far greater idea of the North America of the days of Woodrow Wilson; by it will yet be organized "the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World."

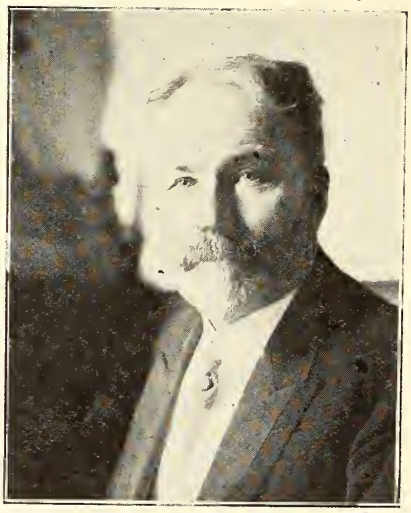
THE LIBERTY BELL.

Five days ago, at the La Salle Station in Chicago, hundreds of thousands of Americans crowded to look upon that sacred memento of American Independence, the Liberty Bell. As it is being carried across the continent this week, and as it will be exhibited at San Francisco for months to come, the people by the million will gather around it, with the reverence and holy acclaim paid by the people of Israel to the ark of the covenant when it was carried up from the house of Obed-Edom many centuries ago.

To the people of this American Republic, and also to the self-governing people of the British breed over all the world, that Liberty Bell is indeed the symbol of a great covenant. It recalls to this generation, and it represents to all peoples, the greatest achievement of these United States in all their national history; the declaration before all the world of the right of a free people to govern themselves, and the making good of that declaration in the expanding history of the nation.

MEXICO'S GRITO.

Five years ago, as a guest of President Diaz, I witnessed the celebration of the centennial of Mexican Independence. From the balcony of the National Palace in Mexico City on that centennial night I looked down over a half-million madly patriotic



Dr. James A. MacDonald, Editor the Toronto Globe.

Mexicans crowding the Zocalo, as their venerable but trembling president rang the very same bell that on the eventful September night, in 1810, was rung by Hidalgo from the church tower at Dolores; and when he repeated Hidalgo's historic grito, the Zocalo and all the streets around gave back to heaven the cry, "Viva la Constitution! Viva Independencia! Viva Mexico!"

That was Mexico's Liberty Bell. From that day to this Mexico has been rent and torn by factions among its own people. Revolution has followed revolution, murder has followed murder. Without captain, without rudder, without compass, Mexico has rolled in the trough of a turbulent sea. But never once, through all these five years of revolution and distress, has Mexican nationality been assailed from without, never once has Mexico's independence or integrity been threatened by either of the other nations of this continent. Mexico has been given a chance to live its own life, to follow its own culture, to work out its own destiny. And why? It is because a great new word, "Inter-nationalism," and a great new idea, "Inter-dependence," have come into the maturing mind of the English-speaking world.

Canada, the youngest nation on this continent, has no Liberty Bell. Canada has no Declaration of Independence. Canada came to nationhood, not by the old way of revolution and separation, but by the new, the untried, the adventurous way of evolution into inter-dependence. Canada was the first colony of any empire in all the world's history to come to national self-government without revolution, without separation, and without sacrificing the nation's thousand years of historic background.

CANADA'S GREAT ADVENTURE.

Less than fifty years ago the thing was done: the colonies of Canada were confederated under a national self-government. They said it would lead to separation from Britain. Beaconsfield said it meant separation. So said Gladstone. All the spokesmen of discredited imperialism said so again and again. They did not understand. They read only the past. The future was beyond their ken. They knew not the larger harvests of the Anglo-Saxon seed scattered by British hands in New England and the South more than a century ago, and now coming to full fruition in the great spaces north of the lakes, along the St. Lawrence, and to the sea.

First came Canada under the Maple Leaf. Then out of the South Pacific rose Australia, with New Zealand by her side. Then over the war-sweept veldt marches South Africa, Boer and British keeping step. And in the fogs of the North Atlantic stands Newfoundland undismayed. There they are today, five free Dominions swept by the seven seas, each one daughter in the mother's house, but mistress in her own. All free; free to go and free to stay. No power in Britain, not the king, nor the war office, nor the admiralty, not parliament itself, can take one dollar or one man out of any one of the British dominions without the authority and consent of that Dominion's own parliament and people. They are not colonies; they are free nations. There is no longer any British Empire. The imperium is gone. The imperator is gone. The divine right of British kings is gone. It is the British Commonwealth. Its sovereign bond is freedom.

And freedom holds. Freedom, not force, is the bond of unity. Democracy, not despotism, is the mother of loyalty. The day declared the truth. The five free dominions were neither weaklings nor cowards. The five fingers of the great hand—Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and the empire mystery of India—when the day came, the five fingers all closed toward the palm.

But, please God, that hand will never again need to be raised in its own defense, or to strike in defense of any little people whose only crime is innocence.

And, please God, out of this frightfullest folly of all history, all Europe will learn, all the continents will learn, what the two free nations of North America have proved, that freedom is power, that free peoples can be trusted, that democracy holds, and that in spite of differences and disputes, Christianized inter-nationalism is the bond of peace and the guardian of honor for all nations.

NORTH AMERICA'S WORLD LEAD.

North America can show an international boundary without precedent or parallel elsewhere in all the world; four thousand miles of mountain and prairie and lake and river, unfortified save by the impregnable strongholds of international public opinion, undefended save by the people's will. At that boundary the greatest empire of all the world and the world's greatest republic have rubbed shoulders, but across its sacred line in more than a hundred years no menacing army ever marched, no hostile gun was ever fired.

And all the while the armed boundaries of Europe were black with forts and bristling with bayonets, until, through one awful year, they vomit fires from hell and drench their lands with blood.

The war nations of Europe for fifty years kept on saying, "In peace prepare for war." Through more than a hundred years the two peace nations of America have kept on saying, "In peace prepare for more peace." They got, and are getting to the full, what they prepared for—war. We got, and in days to come shall get, more and more abundantly, what we prepared for—more peace. They sowed the seeds of hate and are reaping the harvest of hell. We set free the ideas of international co-operation and service and love, and the whole world will some day join in the Christmas carol of goodwill and peace.

THE DAY OF ARMAGEDDON.

Armageddon is now on, the real Armageddon of the nations. It is not the crude conflict of brute force against brute force. It is not army against army, navy against navy, shell against shell, smoke against smoke. All these are but the outward form and semblance of the world's real conflict.

It is the conflict of ideas: the idea of freedom against the idea of force, the idea of will-to-serve against the idea of will-to-power, the idea of world-evangelism against the idea of world-dominion, the idea of Christ against the idea of Cæsar. And the real battle fronts are not where bombs explode and torpedoes strike and shrapnel bites. The final battle front will be in the minds of civilization, in the judgment hall of mankind.

AND THE CHURCH.

And the conflict of ideas means Armageddon for the church. That conflict is not race against race or nation against nation. It cuts across all national boundaries, it overleaps all racial walls, it smashes through all commercial interests. It is world truth against world error. In that struggle of moral ideas it is father against son and son against father; it is brother against brother and friend against friend. And in that clash of unseen spiritual forces there are no noncombatants and no neutrals. In the clash of brute force the hand may be stayed, but on the moral battleground there can be no neutrality. And into Armageddon of the nations, the church must go with its program of Christianity and its leadership by the international Christ.

Anti-Saloon League at Atlantic City.

By ALLAN SUTHERLAND

"There is but one thing in America worse than the liquor trade, and that is the public sentiment that tolerates it."—A. C. Bane.

The sixteenth National Convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America, which was held in Atlantic City, New Jersey, July 6th-9th, was a gratifying success, and its far reaching influence will greatly add to the attainment of the object for which the league is so earnestly striving—namely, nation-wide prohibition.

Delegates were present from many sections of the country; and speakers whose names are household words, delivered able and eloquent addresses. These addresses were given with a conviction which profoundly impressed all who heard them that the time is rapidly approaching when the baneful influence of the liquor traffic will be unknown in our land and all who live within our far-flung boundaries will be free from this dreadful curse. Speakers have seldom had the privilege of delivering more ennobling and optimistic sentiments to more receptive and enthusiastic audiences. Every utterance prophetic of the downfall of liquor and of the coming universal prohibition was greeted with enthusiastic applause. Almost every man left the meetings with the feeling that national prohibition is an assured blessing, and with the determination that he would do his part in hastening the day of its coming.

Anti-Saloon Platform.

Removal of District of Columbia excise commissioners.

Modification of civil service laws to permit government employes to take part in local option and prohibition campaigns.

Bar intoxicating beverages from interstate commerce.

Bar newspapers and periodicals containing liquor advertisements from the mails.

Prohibition for the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Alaska, Porto Rico and the Philippines by congressional enactment.

Submission of national prohibition amendment to the people.

THE CONVENTION'S MESSAGE.

"The message of this convention," said Rev. Dr. Purley A. Baker, General Superintenrent of the Anti-Saloon League, on the closing night of the convention, "is that the battle against the liquor traffic should be pressed in every town, township, county and state in the nation; against every candidate for Congress and the United States Senate who is not in favor of the submission of a joint resolution for national constitutional prohibition, and against any candidate for the Presidency, who by sympathy or conduct, past or present, is known to be friendly to the traffic.

"The submission of a constitutional amendment by Congress is a ministerial act," Dr. Baker continued, "and the member of Congress or the United States Senate who is not willing to trust the people of his state to pass upon this question is not worthy of the confidence of the people of his state."

"The time is ripe to close in upon this monstrous traffic from every quarter of the republic, and politicians and public officials who persist in casting their lot with it must not complain when compelled to share its fate at the hands of an outraged public sentiment."

The declaration that the League stood for equal suffrage and universal prohibition was received with enthusiastic applause.

GOVERNOR CARLSON SPEAKS.

Governor George A. Carlson, of Colorado, said: "Take from the politics of our states and nation the insidious influences of the liquor interests, and nation-wide equal suffrage would prevail within a year's time. The mother who sees her family and home disintegrating, who because of the saloon or wine-room, helplessly watches her boy or girl, in whom are wrapped all her hopes and ideals, on the road straight to the penitentiary or the house of ill-fame, does not forget on election day. All mothers know the danger, and to the delegates of those states where the women are not yet enfranchised, I would say—give them the vote at your next election and liberate the greatest single agency for the success of national prohibition. Let others tell you that the mothers of your children will prove incapable, or become coarse, cold or neglectful in the home if given the ballot; those who for nearly a quarter of a century have actually observed the enfranchised woman at work, know that she can sense the enemy of the home more quickly and will fight him with more telling effect than the husband, and while preserving all her natural feminine charm and sweetness, she will become more devoted to the man who has allowed her ampler means and fuller power for protection of their common fireside. The State, in safeguarding and preserving the health and morals of the young, is but doing a mother's work. We need the blending of the mother heart and the masculine judgment and will, to sustain and guard our homes. It is my hope that the delegates here assembled will go back to their homes filled with added zeal and increased energy for the grandest cause that ever listed human support, and that the fight be carried on without quarter until all of these United States are made dry."

A BRYAN TREATY WOULD HELP NOW.

OUR negotiations with Germany over the Lusitania affair have made clearer than ever the value of the principles embodied in what are now popularly called Mr. Bryan's peace treaties.

The hot indignation of the hour when our nation first received word of the sinking of the Lusitania has had time to abate, and it actually has abated. What at first was seen as a purely one-sided case is now seen as at least an arguable case for both sides.

Had the United States rushed precipitately to war at the first rush of national wrath it would have been left to history to hear the other side of the case which through our government's self-restraint we are hearing now in the notes from Germany.

On the other hand, the discussion bids fair to be interminable. Each communication evades points raised in preceding communications and raises new points. The two governments have drifted far from the original issue. There is no umpire to hold them to the essentials.

Here is where arbitration comes in. Had there been a treaty between Germany and our nation compelling either nation to bring its claim before an impartial tribunal there would be positive ground for expecting in the face of the apparent impasse a final settlement in which the rights and honor of both nations would be unembarrassed.

Those who ridicule Mr. Bryan's treaties which provide for time in which national feeling may cool off before war may be declared, and which provide that irreconcilable differences shall be argued before an impartial umpire, should reflect on the aid such a treaty would be to the United States in the present delicate situation.

TEACHING OTHERS LIFE'S FINEST ART.

ON the forty-seventh anniversary of his wedding day Dr. J. H. Garrison, editor-emeritus of the Christian Evangelist, wrote tender words which every reader of the "Easy Chair" must have followed with congratulatory response.

> Isn't it strange how that day stands out undimmed and rather glorified by the flight of years? What hopes, what dreams, what vague longings and aspirations clustered about it! The picture is still vivid on memory's page—the old brick mansion, with its shade trees, its long green lawn in front, the white-haired and sweet-faced mother, the rosy-cheeked, sweet girl graduate, clad in simple white, who confidingly committed herself "for better or for worse" to a tall, pale-faced, bewhiskered young man with whom she had spent three years in the same college halls and classes; the grave professor who said the words that made us one in law as we were one in heart; the groups of brothers, sisters and kin, the congratulations, the wedding feast—it all comes back today, as if it were but yesterday. And yet, within these two score and seven years, what struggles, what sacrifices, what hopes deferred, what disappointments, and yet what joy over victories gained, over plans and ideals partially realized, over service rendered, and over God's tender mercies all the way—only He knows. But that is what makes life worth living. We are both grateful for these years of service together, in which love has lightened our labors and hope has beckoned us on to higher and better things. If there have been tears along the way, through them we have seen rainbows in the sky. If the burden has sometimes seemed too heavy for us to bear, we have felt the undergirding of the everlasting arms. If at times the way has seemed dark and we could not see ahead, we have "walked the faith." And so, looking backward, we feel that July 2, 1868, was a greater day by far for us than we knew at the time.

Dr. and Mrs. Garrison are among the most prized assets of the Disciples of Christ. Their married life bears all the marks of nobility and tenderness and singleness of purpose. In their wide travels among their brethren, at conventions, in their summer community and in their neighborly relations in their home city this gracious and still youthful-hearted pair are unconsciously serving many younger homes as the living and inspiring embodiment of the truly beautiful art of extending our years without growing old.

And in this, perhaps, they help mankind as well as by any other service of their long and earnest lives.

PROTESTANT OR CATHOLIC?

EPISCOPALIANISM is having a hard time to determine whether its sympathies are Protestant or Roman Catholic. Its whole body is being shivered through right now by another of those tests which come to it whenever the Protestant religious bodies start some united movement or other and ask their Episcopal brethern to join in.

The Every-member Canvass, the Laymen's Missionary Movement, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, all have been the occasion of no slight embarrassment to these our fellow Christians who speak of themselves as "the Church," and of the rest of us as "Protestant denominations."

All England was perturbed by the Kikuyu controversy which has just recently been presumably settled. This controversy was occasioned by the administration of the communion in a Presbyterian church in Africa by two Episcopalian bishops who had been attending a missionary conference with their Christian co-workers of several denominations.

Execrable offense, was it not?

Well, these two far away missionary bishops got the Archbishop of Canterbury and the whole English church into a heap of trouble.

And now there is likely to be trouble on this side of the water over the Latin American Missionary Conference to be held in Panama next February. Disciples, Presbyterians, Methodists and other such Christian people are going to be there and they would be glad to have their Episcopalian neighbors also.

It happens, too, that some of the Episcopalians want to go and feel they ought to go, while others say they ought not. The reason is that the Roman church is presumed to be in complete command of the Latin American situation, and to treat it as a missionary field (as this conference proposes to do) is an affront to the Roman church.

The Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal church voted last February, by 13 to 11, to table a resolution to participate. But in May, under pressure of Bishop Brown of Virginia, who announced that he was going to participate anyhow, the board reversed its decision.

And now the high church organs are gnashing their editorial teeth.

Meanwhile the preparations for the conference go forward. Pathetic as is the plight of the high church element, it is reassuring to the rest of us to observe the courage and determination on the part of those who insist, in spite of ecclesiastical technicalities, upon the fundamental and hearty sympathy of the historic Anglican church with Protestantism.

A COLLECTION IN A STREET CAR.

EVERY religious newspaper, it seems, has quoted the following clever recital of an interesting incident, and Christian Century readers ought not be left alone in not having it brought to their attention. It appeared in the Standard (Baptist), generally reputed among religious journals to be a truth-telling paper. The occasion was the holding of the Northern Baptist Convention in Los Angeles a few weeks ago.

"Hold up your hands!" were the startling words which greeted Secretary John M. Moore a week ago Sabbath night as he was returning to Los Angeles on an electric car from a preaching engagement in Santa Ana. This announcement of the collection met with a unanimous response, and the whole carload, with uplifted hands, walked out into the road, while two masked men proceeded to make an "every-member canvass" in record time. Surreptitiously slipping a twenty-dollar gold piece into his shoe—quite after the manner of some church members when the foreign mission offering is taken up—Secretary Moore waited for the usher to come down his aisle. Then, making use of his wide knowledge of the evasive devices of unredeemed humanity for side-stepping the offertory, he slipped unobserved from the "untouched" group over into the group who had already made their contribution, and thus escaped scot-free without the loss of a single penny. There is something about this story which will be strangely familiar to more than one minister whose eyes wander to and fro over the congregation while the organist plays an offertory selection. Who has not seen expressions and moods on the mobile faces of the people which are quite the equivalent of slipping twenty-dollar gold pieces into shoes and sliding into the aisle which the usher has just left?

While the Disciples are in convention in the same city at this time it would seem to be quite opportune that the secretaries be duly warned of these dangers and advised of their Baptist colleague's experience that they may profit thereby.

A TALE OF MORE THAN ONE CITY.

THE Christian News, of Iowa, has a little department conducted by "The Walks and Talks Man." A clever and often unusually helpful bit of writing it is, too, surpassed in that paper only by the editor himself. Last week this "Walks and Talks Man" told the following:

I was in a certain city this week on business and talked several times with the pastor of the Christian church. He said, "O, we had a great meeting! Over 300 additions. Great crowds. Seven hundred in Sunday school." This meeting was held last February. Now the following developed during my several little chats with him. He was very popular with his members before the evangelist came and with the general public also. He is still popular with both. He and his congregation worked very hard for weeks before the evangelist came—advertising the evangelist and the meeting. His membership worked loyally during the meeting going all through the audience pleading with sinners to turn to the Lord. The neighborhood visits were worked assiduously all the time. The evangelist and his singer were hard workers too and "boosted all the time." The Sunday school has now dropped from 700 to 250. His audiences are about the same as before the "revival." They paid the evangelist a free will offering of just one thousand dollars and the other extra expenses amounted to five hundred—in all $1,500. That is just the yearly salary of the pastor. They were out of debt when the evangelist came—and now they owe $400 at the bank. The pastor said, "We are falling behind just a little more each week." He said further, "I cannot afford to have this thing continue and have told my church board so." Somehow this does not seem right to me. I have always been a firm believer in protracted meeting. No layman has ever enjoyed them more than I have, but I am about to become suspicious of the "real good" from the "whoop 'em up" evangelist. I have given you the facts; draw your own conclusions.

Of course any member of average intelligence would be able to draw conclusions from such a story. There are several conclusions. But the most obvious and the chief would seem to be that the typical evangelism of our day is in large part illusory when it comes to results.

DIAZ.

PORFIRIO DIAZ who kept the peace with an iron hand in Mexico for nearly half a century died the other day. In the light of the events that have transpired in that country since his exile some five years ago, his passing affords a text from which to define more clearly our idea of the type of government Mexico now needs.

There are those who declare Mexico needs another Diaz. They are looking for the strong man, the dictator, who will grasp control of military and civil forces and wield them for the support of his absolute leadership of the nation.

But Mexico's troubles will not be cured by the appearance of such a man. It is quite likely that General Huerta would have successfuly exercised that sort of authority had not the United States refused to recognize him and put many obstacles in his way. But a Diaz or a Huerta would be only an apparent and deceptive solution of Mexico's problem. Sooner or later such a government would fall and a condition of anarchy like the present would ensue. It might therefore as well be now as later.

On the other hand, Mexico cannot at this time, apparently, unite her forces under a leader chosen by an intelligent popular will and supported by it. Francisco Madero represented the effort to solve it that way.

The will of the Mexican citizenry is not intelligent, nor does there exist a political mechanism by which it could find expression.

Mexico needs a combination of Diaz and Madero for its present emancipation—a strong man who will control but who will unselfishly use his control for the development of a unified popular will and for the creation of an adequate political mechanism for its expression.

In short, Mexico's savior must be an autocrat whose purpose is not self-aggrandizement but ultimate democracy.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F Jordan

Small Town Community House.

The Congregational Church, of Loda, Ill., called Rev. Wm. F. Bacon a year ago. He faced the problem of the church in a town of two thousand people. The story of his experiments is told thus: "The old store building has been renovated, repaired, remodeled and thoroughly furnished throughout. The farmers drive in to it to hold their institutes. Missionaries go there to tell of the work they are doing. The business men of the town hold their luncheons there. The ladies use it for their gatherings. The boys and girls of the high school make it their headquarters. There are classes in sewing, manual arts, cooking, scouting and athletics. Lecturers come from far and near. Professors from the University of Illinois speak on civics, geology, literature, personal hygiene, fertilizers, dairying, fruit trees, rotation of crops, hogs. Plans emanate from it for the commercial, moral, educational and spiritual advancement of the locality. Persons coming into touch with varied activities of Loda Community House become enthused and carry their enthusiasm away with them. The life centering in this building is distinctly elevating in tone, but one doesn't necessarily have to be a church member to enjoy any of the privileges. Many here who take part in the life of the Community House, however, are members of churches, and many who were not when they first became attendants have since identified themselves with one or another of the local congregations. The enterprise is not denominational."

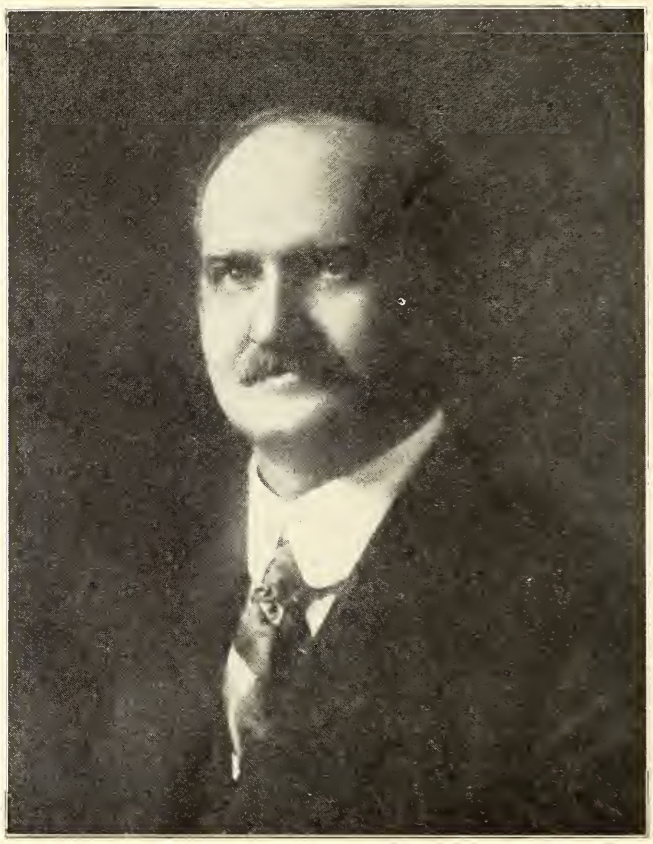
The plan has worked so well that it seems to have gone a long way toward giving the church its old-time pre-eminence in the hearts of the people.

Free Schools Threatened.

Church influence in public schools is deeply resented by a majority of American citizens. Many difficulties have been faced in order that American schools might be kept free from sectarian control. The recent effort by the Roman Catholic church, in New York, to have the fundamental law on the school question modified, is, therefore, attracting wide attention. The passage in the existing Constitution dealing with this subject reads as follows: "Neither the State nor any sub-division thereof shall use its property or credit or any public money, or authorize, or permit to be used directly or indirectly in aid or maintenance other than for examination or inspection of any school or institution of learning, wholly or in part under the control or direction of any religious denomination, or in which any denominational tenet or doctrine is taught." The proposal to change this provision of the constitution was presented by Mr. A. E. Smith, a Tammany delegate, in the constitutional convention from New York City.

Historical Church Celebrates.

It once required the decree of the king to open the doors of First Baptist Church, Boston, which had been closed because the congregation did not worship in the way established by law. The congregation is, this summer, celebrating its 250th anniversary. The present pastor is Rev. Austen K. deBlois, formerly of the First Baptist Church, of Chicago. Some of the great figures of the Baptist fellowship, of America, have graced the pulpit of this church. In the days of the American revolution, Dr. Samuel Stillman was the pastor, and he is reported to have been an intimate friend of George Washington.



Mr. J. Campbell White has resigned the leadership of the Laymen's Missionary Movement to accept the presidency of Worcester College, Worcester, O. The college is a United Presbyterian institution. Mr. White is a United Presbyterian.

Unity Conference to be Held.

The Commission on Faith and Order of the Protestant Episcopal church, will hold a Church Unity Conference, at Garden City, next January. This is preliminary to the World Conference, to be held later. At this American conference, all the denominations that have unity commissions will be represented. A number of Roman Catholic and Orthodox ecclesiastics will be present unofficially. Bishop Anderson, of Chicago, will deliver the address of welcome. Among those who will speak are: Rev. Dr. Raymond Calkins, Dr. J. B. Remensnyder, Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, Rev. Dr. Newman Smythe, Dr. John R. Mott, Bishop Boyd Vincent, Rev. W. H. Roberts and Rev. Dr. Peter Ainslie. The problem of unity will not be discussed but will be left to the World Conference to be held at the close of the war.

Three Millions to Study Peace.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America through its Commission on Christian Education has prepared a course of thirteen lessons on International Peace, A Study in Christian Fraternity. This course will be published during October, November and December of this year in the Sunday-school and other periodicals of the various churches affiliated with the Federal Council. Already these lessons are assured a circulation of three million among senior and adult Sunday school classes, and it is expected that their distribution will ultimately reach five million. While not discussing the present war, these studies aim to create and crystallize sentiment among professing Christians in the interests of international fraternity and inter-racial sympathy and appreciation. They will be incorporated in the Bethany System of Sunday School Literature. The lessons will be printed and distributed both in English and in German. The lessons are also accompanied by a service book and full commentary, now in press.

Correspondence Study.

The methods once peculiar to the University of Chicago, and initiated by President Harper, are spreading to many other institutions of learning, especially correspondence study and summer school work. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, of Louisville, Ky., of which E. Y. Mullins is president, is announcing correspondence courses for the coming year, covering many of the subjects of the seminary curriculum. Prof. W. J. McGlothin will act as director of the correspondence course department.

Lutheran Synod Expresses Sentiments Against Exporting War Munitions.

The general synod, the oldest of the Lutheran general bodies in America, at its session just held, denounced by resolution as un-Christian and inhumane the manufacture and exportation of war munitions to the warring nations, and as American Christion citizens disclaimed "before God any willing assent and willing participation in such shameful commercialism." The same body also urged Lutherans to read again their own Augsburg confession and be guided by it in keeping out of movements of various kinds, and in sticking to the task for which the Church of God exists, viz., the preaching of the gospel and the administration of the sacraments. It furthermore urged Lutheran pastors not to take part in corner-stone laying of buildings containing in purpose or even in architectural decoration any recognition of a secret order.

A large body of Lutheran pastors in Eastern Pennsylvania give "Billy" Sunday plans their stout opposition, and decline to take part in a movement of ministers to bring Sunday into that region. They say they do so because they prefer the method always followed by Lutherans, of orderly work, and the usual administration of the church. General synod and general council pastors are in the protest.

The Lutheran general synod, already mentioned, has taken action looking to larger use of laymen in public services of the Lutheran churches, agreeing for the first time to license them as lay readers of the service, and as licensed catechists, which gives them the right to make religious addresses. The net gain in membership of the Synod Lutherans last year was 10,871, which is above the average, and the total gifts last year were $3,587,000.

Methodist Care for Tuberculosis Victims.

The Methodists have established a sanatorium at Silver City, New Mexico, for the care of their brethren, who become ill with the "white plague." Many of the unfortunate sufferers from consumption have flocked to the southwest for the benefit of the climate, without adequate resources, and have found accommodations very expensive. Care in sanatoria has cost from $100 to $150 per month. The Methodists propose to provide this care for $50 to $60 a month, and have a small balance left for the care of indigent cases. Bishop McConnell is president of the association.

No More Compulsory Worship.

Princeton University is one of the more conservative of Presbyterian institutions. This school has lately decided to abolish compulsory chapel attendance, but will depend on the future on the attractiveness of the service to build up chapel attendance.

Lecky on the Marriage of the Clergy

"In Protestant countries, where the marriage of the clergy is fully recognized, it has, indeed, been productive of the greatest and most unequivocal benefits. Nowhere, it may be confidently asserted, does Christianity assume a more beneficial or a more winning form than in those gentle clerical households which stud our land, constituting, as Coleridge said, 'the one idyll of modern life,' the most perfect type of domestic peace, the center of civilization in the remotest village. Notwithstanding some class narrowness and professional bigotry, notwithstanding some unworthy, but half unconscious mannerism, which is often most unjustly styled as hypocrisy, it would be difficult to find in any other quarter so much happiness at once diffused and enjoyed, and so much virtue attained with so little tension or struggle. Combining with his sacred calling a warm sympathy with the intellectual, social, and political movements of his time, possessing the enlarged practical knowledge of a father of a family, and entering with a keen zest into the occupations and amusements of his parishoners, a good clergyman will rarely obtrude his religious convictions into secular spheres, but yet will make them apparent in all. They will be revealed by a higher and deeper moral tone, by a more scrupulous purity in word and action, by an all-pervasive gentleness, which refines, and softens, and mellows, and adds as much to the charm as to the excellence of the character in which it is displayed. In visiting the sick, relieving the poor, instructing the young, and discharging a thousand delicate offices for which a woman's tact is specially needed, his wife finds a sphere of labor which is at once intensely active and feminine, and her example is not less beneficial than her ministrations." — European ' Morals, Vol. II. pp. 334, 335.

Lecky on the Celibacy of the Clergy

"It is not surprising that, having once broken their vows and begun to live what they deemed a life of habitual sin, the clergy should soon have sunk far below the level of the laity. We may not lay much stress on such isolated instances of depravity as that of Pope John XXIII., who was condemned among many other crimes for incest, and for adultery; or the abbot-elect of St. Augustine, at Canterbury, who in 1171 was found, on investigation, to have seventeen illegitimate children in a single village; or an abbot of St. Pelayo in Spain, who in 1130 was proved to have kept no less than seventy concubines; or Henry III., Bishop of Liege, who was deposed in 1274 for having sixty-five illegitimate children; but it is impossible to resist the evidence of a long chain of councils and ecclesiastical writers, who conspire in depicting far greater evils than simple concubinage. It was observed that when the priests actually took wives, the knowledge that these connections were illegal, was peculiarly fatal to their fidelity, and bigamy and extreme mobility of attachments were especially common among them. The writers of the middle ages are full of accounts of nunneries that were like brothels, of the vast multitudes of infanticides within their walls, and of that inveterate prevalence of incest among the clergy, which rendered it necessary again and again to issue the most stringent enactments that priests should not be permitted to live with their mothers or sisters. Unnatural love, which it had been one of the great services of Christianity to eradicate from the world, is more than once spoken of as lingering in the monasteries; and, shortly before the Reformation, complaints became loud and frequent of the confessional for the purposes of debauchery. The measures taken on the subject were very numerous and severe."—European Morals, Vol. II., pp. 330-1.

SOLOMON DEDICATES THE TEMPLE.

LESSON FOR JULY 25.

I Kings 8:22-30.

Verse by Verse.

By Asa McDaniel.

22. Solomon stood before the altar. In the court in front of the temple, before the altar of burnt offering. Read in this connection II Chron. 6:13.—And spread forth his hands. This was the common custom in prayer. Usually the hands were stretched out palms upward, indicating a desire for God's direction and a willingness to receive the gift bestowed by him.

23. O Jehovah. The beginning of the longest prayer recorded in the Bible.—No God like thee. Solomon thus showed his confidence in the God of his fathers. Among all the gods known to the people there was none like Jehovah.—Who keepest covenant. Solomon ascribed to him faithfulness and mercy. Read at this point Deut. 7:6-12.—With. Or, for, RVm—With all their heart. The condition upon which men then, as now, received the divine favor was to walk before him in sincerity, devotion and faith.

24. Who hast kept with thy servant David that which thou didst promise him. The promise made to David is recorded in II Samuel 7:13, and Solomon felt that the temple was a partial fulfillment of the promise and hence a gift of Jehovah and that he should have the glory.—As it is this day. Read verses 15-20. The temple is the proof of God's presence with the people.

25. Shall not fail thee a man. As Jehovah had fulfilled the promise made to David regarding the temple, so the king besought him to fulfill the second part of the promise regarding the kings who should succeed him on the throne.—Take heed to their way. Their manner of life. Jehovah was faithful to the people and he demanded faithfulness on their part.

26. Let thy work be verified. Solomon was so anxious to have the second part of the promise fulfilled that he repeats his request.

27. But will God dwell? He had an idea of God as a limitless being. Yet Jehovah met and communed with his people in the temple. In his infinite mercy he dwells in the hearts of men. See I Cor. 3:16.—Upon the earth. Confined to one place and dependent upon it as men.—Heaven of Heavens. The wide extent of creation.—Cannot contain thee. Solomon's spiritual conception of God was one of the best to be found in the Old Testament scriptures.

28. Have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant. The Hebrew is, "Thou wilt have respect," Cam. Bible. Although thou art infinite, I beseech thee to show thyself in the temple.—Prayer.....supplication.....cry. "The first expresses every thonght of the heart which is to Godward; the second is entreaty for mercy and favor; the third is a vehement utterance, whether of joy or sorrow." Wood.

29. That thine eyes may be open. That thou mayest give attention to the temple. My name shall be there. That is to say, in this presence Jehovah will answer to his name.—Shall pray toward this place. The Jew always faced the Holy City when he prayed. Daniel in Babylon prayed three times a day with his face toward Jerusalem.

30. And when thou hearest, forgive: The house of God was set apart, not only for prayers, but also for confession of sin and realization of forgiveness.

Miss Emma Lyon, of China, who is at home on furlough, is now at Washington, Pa. She will soon be returning to her work in the Girls' School in Nanking, of which she is the principal and to which she has devoted so many years of her life.

Temples

The Lesson in Today's Life

BY JOHN R. EWERS

Solomon did one fine piece of work. He built a church and he built a grand one. The ancient Jews had at least one correct idea and that was that God should be worshiped in the best that man could provide. I believe in great and magnificent churches. They honor God. While it is true that God is everywhere and one should be able to worship him in barn or meadow, yet I must admit that a fine church helps me to worship. I knelt one evening in the cathedral of Cologne, when the setting sun was shining through the Munich glass, and the high vaulted nave, the vastness of the church, the beauty of the stained glass, helped me to aspire and to reach out after God. I frankly confess that I cannot worship as well in a barn as I can in Cologne. Nor do I believe that anyone else can! There are places in nature where we can pray—the vaulted forest, the silent seashore, the lofty mountain, the moonlit night. A church is for worship and it should help worship.

CATHEDRALS.

Nothing on earth appeals to me like a cathedral. Notre Dame thrills me. Canterbury delights my soul. York is a white dream. Durham, were it not for the miserable town, would be a massive joy. St. Pauls stands like a sentinel over London. Westminster kindles all that is noble in one. Even sleepy Chester soothes and sustains. Were they fools, those men who built their souls, so painfully, into these mighty churches? I cannot think so. I began my ministry in an old, deserted, Salvation Army barracks on a back street in one of our Eastern cities. A livery stable was next door and the whole thing was anything but inviting. My appreciation of cathedrals is a reaction upon this despicable beginning. There is no virtue in poor church buildings any more than there is virtue in shabby clothes when you might have well pressed suits. It is a dishonor to God Almighty to try to interpret him in such cheap quarters. Solomon was right. Gold, cedar, precious stones, ivory, silk, were not good enough for God. The best is not good enough.

DISCIPLES AND CHURCHES.

One of the most cheering angles of our development is the fact that we are now building noble churches. Every edition of our church papers has pictures of newly dedicated churches. We like to study them. They interpret our assessments of values. What do they show? Greater appreciation of worship. Churchly auditoriums, grand organs, thoughtful provision for the observance of baptism and the Lord's Supper. There is a quiet dignity and a cultured appreciation of worship. Moreover these buildings show a new interest in the Bible school. For the first time churches are built as school buildings. There are many separate class rooms where the word of God may be quietly taught. The school idea has at last penetrated. Finally the social service truth has gotten home and the modern church has club rooms, gymnasiums, recreation rooms, nurseries, and kitchens. Thousands of dollars are being spent upon well-equipped, well-balanced churches. Worship, Bible instruction, service are the big ideas in modern buildings for God. This is very hopeful.

HANDICAPPED.

The Disciples are handicapped just now by inadequate buildings. We are Sunday-school experts. We live close to the people. Crowds attend our services. The Disciples are full of energy; our preachers work; we get results; but two-thirds of our churches are handicapped by inadequate buildings. We have outgrown the idea of shacks on back streets. Poverty is no longer a part of our three-fold vow! But we have not risen yet to the vision of a properly housed congregation; we have not realized yet the pull of the meeting house. Our Church Extension Society has done admirable work in educating us to this need. Hundreds of congregations have no house at all. Bees without a hive. Hundreds more are cramped, cabined and congested. O, for a double portion of Solomon's wisdom as shown in building noble temples for our God. Let the Disciples move out into an era of noble temples.

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast!"

Disciples Table Talk

Dr. Idleman Called to Undertake Significant Forward Move in New York.

Strong influences are at work to consummate the dream long cherished by Eastern Disciples to erect a house of worship in New York that will fitly represent the Disciples of Christ in that city. Since the resignation of Dr. J. M. Philputt from the pulpit of Central Church some two years ago that congregation has been seeking for a leader to worthily carry to completion this fine program. Dr. Philputt's continued incumbency of the pulpit since his resignation has been in deference to the hearty wishes of the church whose members greatly love him and deplore his decision not to consider himself their permanent pastor. Some months ago a call was extended Dr. Finis Idleman, of Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., to take the leadership of this church and of the larger enterprise for the Disciples in New York. Dr. Philputt stands with the membership in urging Dr. Idleman to accept and they are backed by the persuasive influence of men like Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, and President F. W. Burnham, of the American Missionary Society. These leaders argue the necessity of providing strong leadership for the Disciples in New York and believe that Dr. Idleman will furnish it. No announcement has yet been made as to Dr. Idleman's own view of the matter. His great church in Des Moines was never more flourishing. He confesses that the call appeals to his desire for a heroic task, and yet modestly wonders whether he is capable of it. It is expected that a decision one way or the other will be reached before the fall.

New Pastor Finds Work at College Church Congenial and Fruitful.

Henry G. Burgess, called by the Canton, Mo., church to be its pastor without a candidating visit, writes of the satisfaction with which his new work is opening up. He speaks glowingly of the Summer School of Religious Pedagogy conducted by Superintendent J. P. Rowlison and mentions particularly the lectures on Social Service by Prof. A. W. Taylor, of Columbia, Mo. The ministers of the sixth district of Missouri held a "Retreat" at Canton recently which Mr. Burgess says was especially helpful. The lectures and conferences by Secretary S. J. Corey dealing with mission work in the far East proved to be thrilling. Mr. Burgess is a graduate of Yale Divinity School and of Eureka College. He will prove to be a forceful factor in the lives of college students as well as in the work of his church.

Last Pre-Vacation Sermon by Dr. Edgar D. Jones.

In a remarkable sermon on "The Middle Estate," Dr. Edgar DeWitt Jones, of First Church, Bloomington, Ill., showed the peril of extreme wealth and of extreme poverty. These, he said, "constitute the greatest and most complex problem of present-day civilization. The submerged tenth and the upper ten; Fifth Avenue and Five Points; London's west end and London's east end; the perilously thin upper crust and the lower layer trembling with impending eruption. Between these two extremes is the middle estate, knowing neither abject poverty nor great riches, and this estate has thus far been the bulwark of civilization." It was Dr. Jones' last Sunday before leaving for his vacation, and one can imagine what a challenge would keep ringing in the social conscience of his hearers during the summer months as a result of such searching words as these: "When the top of our social structure trembles with the excitement of some new experience of luxury, simultaneously the bottom shivers in pain. When the ill-fated Lusitania made her first trip across the Atlantic much publicity was given to the luxury of her apartments and her speed was a ten days' marvel; but the newspapers did not tell at the time that the Lusitania's turbine engines, in order to justify such speed, were requiring such terrific heat in the furnaces that the stokers were frequently overcome and resuscitated with difficulty."

Church College Closes First Year's Work with Recognition Service.

Seventh Church, Indianapolis, Ind., held a recognition service on Thursday evening, July 8, for all the persons who completed one or more semester's work in the Church College which the pastor, Clay Trusty, has been conducting the past year. The College is an institution novel in its character and methods. Its purpose is to teach the fundamentals of Christianity to those who wish to become useful church workers. No attempt is made to give professional training, but a thorough and systematic curriculum is organized for training day workers and a competent faculty provided. More than 200 persons registered for the work the past year. Sixty completed one semester, twenty-one completed both semesters and passed satisfactory examination in their work. The classes were held on Thursday evenings at 7:15 in the educational building of the church, after first convening in the auditorium for song and prayer. Special lectures were introduced at times to follow the class instruction. Prof. F. E. Lumley, of the College of Missions, and Prof. D. C. Brown of Butler College, are two whose lectures are spoken of especially. Instruction was given in Bible study, Church History, Special Service, Missions, Religious Pedagogy, Christian Endeavor Efficiency, Comparative Religion, Departmental Sunday School work. Each class used a suitable text book. The course is planned to cover four years, at the end of which time a diploma will be given to those who finish. Those completing the one year's work were given certificates at the Recognition Service. Pres. Charles T. Paul of the College of Missions, delivered the Recognition Day address, speaking in very appreciative terms of the significance of such a school to the church. All the teachers were members of Seventh Church, save one, Mr. R. A. McLeod who is a graduate student in Butler College. His work in conducting the social service class has been conspicuously successful, drawing into the fellowship of the church a number of active citizens who hitherto were not connected with church activity. The pastor and leader of this very substantial enterprise, Mr. Trusty, deserves and is receiving much commendation for his vision and courage in projecting it. The second year will open Sept. 16, and the prospects are good for increased success both in number of students and in quality of instruction.

Sunday School Not to Use Collections For Its Own Maintenance.

Here is one church that has put its Sunday School finances on the right basis. First Church, Hutchinson, Kan., will support the Sunday School out of the general church treasury and all the school's collections will be devoted to missions and benevolence. K. F. Nance is pastor. The School is organized under a commission form of government with a commissioner of organization, a commissioner of finance, etc. K. F. ..ance, the pastor, began his fourth year with this church on July 4. His congregation has given him a six weeks' vacation to attend the General Convention and visit the Panama Exposition.

Dr. Corey Stirs Hearts of Ministers at Retreat.

The Northeast Missouri ministers enjoy an annual "Retreat" in the summertime. This season it was held at Canton, with Dr. Stephen J. Corey, secretary of the Foreign Society, present as chief counselor. He spoke mainly of his trip through the Far East and made all his hearers' hearts burn within them at the thought of the retrenchment policy which the Foreign Society has been compelled to adopt on account of a deficit in the offerings.

—Kentucky state convention will be held at Madisonville Sept. 20-23. S. S. Jones is the pastor of the entertaining church.

—A summer Sunday morning series of sermons on the topic "With Christ in the Out-of-Doors," delivered by H. W. Hunter at Wellington, Kan., this season will appear shortly in booklet form. They are highly spoken of by his congregation.

—In caring for his flock of 575 members at Richmond, Ind., L. E. Murray made 580 calls during the first six months of 1915.

—Liberty, Mo., church is about to call a young man to lead the music of the church and to assist the pastor, Graham Frank, in pastoral work among the young people.

—Centennial Church, Bloomington, Ill., L. G. Huff, pastor, is rejoicing in the wiping out of its building debt. The remaining $2,900 was attacked by a campaign last spring and finally surrendered July 1. A banquet in celebration was held in the church at which optimistic talks were made by the church leaders and by John R. Golden, state secretary.

—Near Eureka, Ill., is Mt. Zion Church. After fifty years of goodly service it found the community changing so greatly that new adaptations seemed necessary. Under the leadership of Will Smith, its leading member and a trustee of Eureka College, it formulated a plan to become a community church and called Prof. Boyer of Eureka as pastor. All Christians in the community are welcomed into a free association. Neighborhood and farmers meetings are held and much is made of the sociable life of the youth. Thus a dwindling congregation is made over into a living church that enlists the whole community.

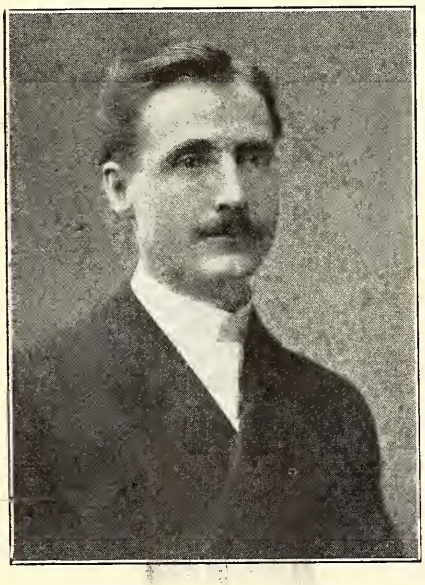
—R. A. Bennett, of Marion, Ind., has resigned the pulpit of First Church to enter the evangelistic field. He has organized a party of five members. Ralph Mitchell, who was formerly with the M. H. Lyon evangelistic organization, will have charge of the music in the Bennett organization. The first series of evangelistic meetings will be held at Greensburg, under direction of five churches of that city. A tabernacle will be constructed.

—Further report of the condition of C. J. Sharp, pastor at Hammond, Ind., tells of his steady convalescence at a Chicago hospital. Mr. Sharp underwent an operation for appendicitis.



Rev. J. H. Goldner, Pastor Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, O., whose lectures at the Minnesota State Convention captivated everyone.

—After a continuous ministry of twenty-five years — seven years at Paola, Kan., seventeen at Marshall, Mo., and one at Springfield, Mo.—B. T. Wharton is enjoying a summer vacation at Topeka, Kan. He expects to locate with some church about Sept. 1, but has made no engagement as yet.

—J. Fred Jones, for eighten years state secretary in Illinois and who is now pioneering in North Carolina for the Disciples of Christ, is holding rural church institutes all over his state. Among the many themes considered are the following: "The Development of the Community," "The Value and Care of the Young," "The Work of the Rural Preacher," "The Neighborhood Church," "The Church as a Social Center," "The Working Christian Unity," "The Church and Amusements," "Christian Citizenship," "The Christian Farmer and His Tenants," "The Relation of the Church to Public Health, the Weak and to the Public Schools."

—J. T. McKissick has resigned as president of Milligan College, Tenn., and Josephus Hapwood has been appointed by the board in his place.

—Jackson Avenue Church, Kansas City, had 1145 in its Sunday school July 4. Ellmore Linclair is pastor and C. F. Fowler is superintendent.

—Frank E. Jaynes, pastor at Wabash, Ind., was recently seletced by the Noblesville, Ind., Chautauqua as platform manager. Mr. Jaynes is the secretary of the Commercial Club of Wabash.

—The Men's Class of the Albia, Ia., church invited United States Senator Cummins of Des Moines to address them on a recent Sunday afternoon. The class packed the house for the senator.

—The will of Randell E. Gordon, of Decatur, Ill., which provided for a bequest of $40,000 to First Christian Church, St. Louis, Mo., is being contested by a man who claims to be his son. John L. Brandt, pastor First Church, was called upon to testify at the hearing.

—All the churches of Texarkana, Tex., dismissed their Sunday evening congregations to unite with Central Christian Church on the occasion of a farewell service for its pastor C. S. Weaver, who was departing next day for his new work as field secretary of Texas Christian University.

—Crawfordsville, Ind., church is prospering as never before. A large addition to its house of worship is now found necessary and action toward its construction has already begun. The pastor, R. E. Moss, was presented with a handsome gold watch the other evening by the men of his church as an appreciation, so they declared, of his splendid work on behalf of the church during a recent union evangelistic meeting held there. Mr. Moss is building up the church on the spiritual side of its life.

National Benevolent Association

Under the leadership of J. M. Elam the church at Delta, Iowa, is making a most commendable record. Delta is a town of not over 800 souls, of whom 300 are members of the Christian Church. In the last twelve months this church has given over $1,100 for missions and benevolences. Fully $100 of this amount for the comfort of the widow and the orphan.

The building of the Home for the aged in Jacksonville, Illinois, is undergoing a thorough renovation. New floors are being put into some of the rooms, while other are being freshened and sweetened with paint. It is not being done before it was needed. Money is needed to pay for it. Miss Josephine Sallee, who has served so efficiently as matron, has resigned. Mrs. John Clouse has been elected to succeed her.

An order has just been placed for thirty especially constructed beds for the boys' dormitory of the Southern Home, at Atlanta, Georgia. The work is being pushed by Mesdames Gentry and Wilson.

The Kansas City Christian Hospital is making preparations for its opening. A superintendent has been installed. He comes from the Polytechnic Hospital of Philadelphia. He has had large experience in the service of the best hospitals in the country.

This is the season for fruit. God has sent a bountiful crop. Much will go to waste. Many poor people will suffer for the lack of it. The Homes of the National Benevolent Association could use almost an unlimited supply if they had it. The Homes will furnish the cans in any quantity on condition that they are to be filled and returned. If each housewife would put up one extra can for the orphans when she puts up her own they would have an abundance.

Not long since sixty members of J. D. Toggart's Bible Class, of Waitsburg, Washington, motored over to Walla Walla for a day's visit with the old people in the Northwestern Home. They brought well-filled baskets with them from which they spread an elaborate picnic dinner for the old folks. They were so delighted with their visit that they left behind them a cash offering amounting to $37.00.

The Association is desperately in need of funds. Its work has been unusually heavy this year. Its Homes are full with others still pressing for admission. Funds are low for this time of year. The babies call for bread. Shall they cry in vain? If you have not sent your offering, do so now.

From the Foreign Society

Dr. W. A. Frymire, of Africa, writes: "We are busily engaged in building the Lotumbe hospital, or rather in preparing to build it. We are now making bricks for the foundations and getting out lumber for the framework. I hope to complete the entire building by the time my furlough is due. Mr. Hobgood and I will make a five or six weeks' itinerary early in June. It will be over the district that Mr. Eldred and Mr. Hobgood covered at the time the former lost his life. The work is very much in need of a visit and we wish to make it before Mr. Hobgood goes home. Our conference is to be held here the first week in June and we expect it to be a great spiritual uplift to all."

W. L. Burner, of Cuba, writes: "We had the privilege of burying five persons with their Lord in baptism, and report two from Union. Four of the Matanzas baptisms are fruits of the work in La Loma, the other is a fine young man of the city. Others have asked for baptism, but we have deferred the matter until they are better taught. We received eleven candidates during the month; they will need teaching before being baptized. With heavy hearts we were praying for guidance for the work in Cidra and our prayer was heard and answered. The Sunday-school in Mackinaw, Ill., has promised to stand back of the work there. The Lord is also opening the way to another place if we only had the man and the money. One of our recent candidates goes back to a town that opens a great field, which we hope to enter as soon as possible. The way is open when we can put the man there."

Dr. Paul Wakefield, of Luchowfu, China, writes: "I have had 1,758 separate cases since March 1st. About this many return for treatments."

The Sunday school at Richmond, Ky., send $219.78 to apply on their Livinglink.

W. E. Parlette, superintendent of the South Side Sunday school, Lima, Ohio, writes: "We send herewith $100 from the Sunday school for foreign missions. This is double the amount we gave last year."

C. M. Yocum, pastor of the Main Street Church, Rushville, Ind., sends $300 as the offering from the Sunday school.

P. A. Davey of Tokyo, Japan, writes that as a direct result of R. A. Doan's visit and five addresses, together with a three days' union campaign which followed in the Oriental College, Mr. Hasagawa has been able to organize an Adult Bible Class of about twenty persons.

Thomas A. Young, of Fukushima, Japan, reports two baptisms and the promise of several more in the very near future. A regular feature of the work is the monthly meeting for women. This is growing in interest and numbers, the April meeting having twenty-six present.

Mrs. Sarah M. Burner of Matanzas, Cuba, writes: "Three promising services in Cidra during the month. There is opposition, but we are sure our converts there will be successful. There was an average attendance of over fifty, the majority being men."

The Children's Day offering from the Sunday school at Allison, Kan., was $20, just double their apportionment.

PROUD OF HIS ENEMIES.

How the late Col. William R. Nelson, editor of the Kansas City Star, replied to the pleading of Mr. R. A. Long on behalf of a fellow business man.

From Collier's Weely.

As the years went by he came to know the works and ways of the plunderbund of common interests that preys on every community, large or small; that unites always the very rich and the criminals in a community to maintain the order that is; to stop progress, because progress means a wider distribution of the fruits of civilization. And when the "Star" began a fight it knew its enemies. And for all his wide tolerance of the weaknesses of men, for all his forgiving nature which made him forget easily, no wings of a pale sainthood sprouted under Mr. Nelson's suspenders. He was as proud of his enemies as Cornelia was of her jewels. And he liked to keep them and count them over. Once the president of a scurrilous newspaper that had dogged Mr. Nelson's heels for years, accusing him of all the crimes of the calendar, became manager of a theater—the Willis Wood—a beautiful playhouse and popular. The time came for the "Star" to increase its rates. Notice was served on all the "Star's" patrons, and they agreed to the raise—all but the Willis Wood. It refused to pay its bill. Naturally its advertising was refused. It was told that it could have advertising over the counter at the counter rate. It came in a few times, paid the counter rate, and then formally notified the "Star" that it would use the "Star" no longer as an advertising medium. In a few weeks the manager of the theater saw that he could not get along without the "Star." He brought his advertising back. It was refused. Mr. Nelson declared that the Willis Wood had gone out voluntarily; it could stay out. As the winter grew old it was apparent that the Willis Wood was losing money. Its owners tried to get the "Star" to take the theater's advertising. Delegations of business men came and pleaded. Mr. Nelson was obdurate. Finally came R. A. Long, one of the most benevolent of the rich men of Kansas City. A kindly, churchly, soft-spoken, meek man was Mr. Long. He sat before the pyramidal bulk of the "Star's" editor and begged that the "Star" would take the advertising of the failing theater. He knew, did Mr. Long, that the manager of the theater, as president of the scurrilous newspaper, had attacked Mr. Nelson unmercifully; had accused him of dastardly crimes; had assailed his honor and integrity, without a word of defense or reply from the "Star." And Mr. Long recited these things and begged the editor to take a high and charitable view of the man who now was pleading for his financial life. Mr. Nelson's theory was that the community was better off if the manager of the theater and of the newspaper company didn't have any further financial life. Finally Mr. Long said: "Now, Mr. Nelson" (he said Colonel, of course, as the world did), "now, Colonel, wouldn't you feel better if tonight you could think that in all this town you had not one enemy when you turn on your pillow to rest?"

Quick as a flash the deep-roaring voice came thundering out of the mountainous pyramid with the implacable face at the apex:

"No—no, no, by God! If I thought that I wouldn't sleep a wink."

The Most Remarkable Offer We Ever Made

The above books are live, popular and influential volumes. We have arranged a combination that will prove attractive to every eye that falls on this page.

If you already have one—or more—of these books and wish us to mail to separate addresses, we will do so.

For Old As Well As for New Subscribers

There are two points which especially commend this offer:

First, the fact that The Christian Century may be addressed to one person and the books to another, or divided among several persons, thus making it possible to make a gift of either the paper or the books.

Second, the fact that our present subscribers may extend their own subscriptions on these terms. Usually premium offers are limited to new subscriptions, but this is an exception. This offer is open for all.

Tear out along this line and mail today to Disciples Publication Society, 700 E. 40th Street, Chicago

For the enclosed $5.00 (Check, Money order or Stamps) you may send The CHRISTIAN CENTURY for one year and THE EIGHT BOOKS named in your advertisement.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Volume XXXII JULY 29, 1915 Number 30

The Spirit of Unity

LET US CONFESS, we Disciples of Christ, that we have not in the century of our history cultivated, as we ought to have cultivated, the spirit of Christian unity.

We are a big enough people now to make a public examination of our movement and to confess in the hearing of others whatever faults we find. It will do us no harm to face the facts, and it may do us good, for that way alone lies the hope of remedy.

We Disciples have not always gotten on amiably with our Christian neighbors in the past. It was partly their fault, partly ours, but we have not been able to transcend the animosities of sectarianism and open up for ourselves and our movement a large and hospitable place in the hearts of other Christian people. This would be a misfortune for any purposeful movement, but it is particularly unfortunate for a movement whose initial aim is declared to be to promote and practice Christian unity.

Possessing as we do a conception of Christian unity which is more and more coming into the favor of the Christian world, it is regrettable that our attitude of argumentation has closed so many doors against that conception. We cannot carry the trenches of sectarianism at the point of the bayonet. Our neighbors are moved more by what we are than by what we believe. They might, conceivably, admit the reasonableness of our basis of unity and yet decline to unite with us. They might say, "Better the Church on a divided basis, with amity and co-operation and mutual tolerance than the Church on a basis of unity, with contention and unbrotherliness. We will stay where we are."

After all, the thing that will win the denominations away from their denominationalism is the presence among them of an undenominational group of Christians whom they cannot help loving.

The Disciples ought to be a marked people, distinguished for their courtesy, their tolerance, their considerateness, their modesty, their calm and unprovocable assurance and their depth of spiritual life. These are the qualities that must prevail in the united Church, and any lack of them in our attitude toward other Christians discounts and nullifies any theoretical basis of union which we may propose.

Even among ourselves we have not been marked by the highest degree of brotherliness. One would suppose that a people pleading for all the Christian world to practice Christian unity would be themselves an exemplary embodiment of the spirit of unity. But we Disciples are not more loving and tolerant of one another than are the members of the Christian denominations.

It has often been remarked in criticism upon us that we are a particularly clannish people. Some of us have accepted this comment as if it were a compliment. But clannishness is not unity.

Clannishness is the essence of sectarianism.

It rests upon the accident of association, or agreement in point of view, while unity rests upon a principle, a principle whose very genius is that it holds together those who hold many and various points of view.

If we Disciples possessed in ample measure the spirit of unity we would now be theologically the most heterogeneous group of Christian people in Christendom. And therein we would find our glory.

Instead, we have taken the modes of thought and the vocabulary of our free-thinking fathers and erected them into a sacred tradition, from which some would make it perilous to deviate. And when the inevitable happens, as it is now happening, and this body of thought begins to take on a new interpretation, our spirit of Christian unity is subjected to a severe test.

It must be confessed that we are not meeting the test as gracefully and decisively as might be expected. The spirit of contention and suspicion, of alienation and division has in some quarters choked the spirit of unity.

Centrifugal forces are being revealed which make continually against all plans for more intimate fellowship and more effective cooperation among our churches and which strongly tend to break down what means of fellowship and cooperation have already been established.

Our spirit of unity seems to lack positiveness and decision, else the brotherhood would long ago have made short work of the strife-breeding opposition which has become a scandal in our midst.

The recent appearance of a number of irresponsible societies and associations in various localities, under the encouragement of more or less powerful influences shows the lack of a strong spirit of unity in our churches. The toleration of these rival societies whose origin is rooted in disaffection, inevitably means the fomenting of jealousy and division as well as waste. There is no more serious thing happening among us today.

The spirit of unity is a spirit of coöperation. We cannot hope to impress the world with a plea for unity if from our own householdd are heard the sounds of vulgar jarring and contention. Nor can we hope to please our Lord. The deepest need of our churches in this pivotal hour is that they should work together harmoniously, in the spirit of true brotherliness and mutual trust.

The spirit of unity goes with a certain large-mindedness, a tolerance, a willingness to keep fellowship with others with whom we may have disagreements.

Because there was in our movement the presence of the opposite spirit—a spirit of cavilling, of literalism, of individualism—we have had to bear the shame of the separation of what are now called the "anti" churches.

Unless the same "anti" spirit which is still bitterly present in us today is cast out there is no doubt that a second schism will result.

Against such an outcome all alert and loyal souls will strive to defend us. Our conventions should be full of prayer for the spirit of unity to possess our people. Our churches and homes should coöperate to create such a spirit.

For it is only by the spirit of unity that the plea for unity can be made to prevail.

Is there a Way to Peace?

Address Delivered at Carnegie Music Hall, New York, on Her Return from a Visit to Europe's Warring Nations

By JANE ADDAMS

I AM sure we would call all of this a tribute to the cause of peace. It is very fine that peace can be as rousing almost as war. It is very difficult to try to formulate one's experiences when one has been brought face to face with so much genuine emotion and high patriotism as Europe exhibits at the present moment, and one becomes very much afraid of generalizing. In the first place, the situation is so confused, so many wild and weird things are said about it, that one is afraid to add one word that is not founded upon absolutely first-hand impressions and careful experience, because for the world one would not add a bit to this already overwhelming confusion. And one does not come back—at least I do not—from these various warring countries with any deside to let loose any more emotion upon the world. I feel that what is needed above all else is some careful understanding, some human touch, if you please, in this over-involved and over-talked-up situation in which so much of the world finds itself in dire confusion and bloodshed. One gets afraid of tall talk; and one does not know where words may lead the people to whom one is speaking. They seem to have acquired such fearful significance and to have power over the very issues of life and death itself. And so I should like, if I might, for a few moments, to tell as simply as I can the experiences which we had at The Hague.

Miss Jane Addams, Head of Hull House, Chicago.

DISAVOWS PRE-EMINENCE.

People are much too kind who call me the leader of that movement, for I was not that in any sense of the world. The meeting was convened and called together by a group of European women, and only after all the arrangements had been made did we know about it in America, and consent to go. They were anxious to have a woman from a neutral country to serve as president, and it was safer to have the neutral country as far away as possible, and America was the furthest away. Therefore, I think, America was chosen. But I beg of you to look at it, if we may, for a few moments together, in its simplest terms. After all, the women who called the congress were sure that, although during this last year none of the great international congresses, in science or arts or the most abstract subjects, have dared to meet, yet the women who had been meeting during many years in such conventions as Dr. Shaw has described, at least a few of them, could come together and in all sobriety and in all friendliness discuss their common aims and the terrible stake which they all had together in this war. And, of course, that faith, as you know, was well grounded, and for three days and a half, with much less friction than is usual in the ordinary meetings of men or women, so far as I know them, the women met there at The Hague and formulated their series of resolutions.

On the last day of that conference it was suggested that the resolutions be carried by committees to the various governments of Europe, and to the President of the United States. Some of us felt that the congress was ending very happily, that we had proceeded day by day in good will and understanding, and that it was perhaps unfortunate to venture further. But the resolution was passed, and two committees set forth.

I should like, if I may, to reproduce some of the impressions made by this pilgrimage of ours, if you choose to call it so, going from one government to another, to nine governments in all, as we did in the space of five weeks.

DIFFICULT TO SUGGEST PEACE.

In practically all of the foreign offices and especially in two of the foreign offices which I supposed to be leading, one on one side, and one on the other side of this conflict, the men said, in very similar phrases, that a nation at war cannot make negotiations, that a nation at war cannot even express a willingness to receive negotiations, for if it does either, the enemy will at once construe it as a symptom of weakness, and under the terms which are made the side which first suggested negotiations will suffer as being considered the side that was weaker and was suing for peace. But they said in all of these different foreign offices that if some other power will present propositions; if neutral people, however they may be gotten together, peoples who will command the respect of the foreign offices to whom their propositions are represented, if a small group is willing to get together to study the situation seriously and to make propositions, one, two, three, even though they are turned down over and over again—they do not say turned down in diplomatic circles, but perhaps you will permit that free phraseology—I say, giving them all over and over again, even if it goes up to ten, until some basis is found upon which negotiations might commence, there is none of the warring nations that would not be glad to receive such service. That came to us unequivocally. We presented to each of the chancelleries our resolutions, but we talked for the most part about the possibility of substituting negotiations for military processes. It is very easy for a minister to say, "This country will never receive negotiations. We are going to drive the enemy out inch by inch." But it is pretty hard for him to say that to one or two or three or four women who are sitting there, and who ask, "If a propostion were presented to you, which seemed to you feasible, if something were presented to you which might mean the beginning of further negotiations between yourselves and your enemies, would you decline such a proposition, would you feel justified to go on sacrificing the young men of your country in order to obtain through bloodshed what might be obtained through negotiations, the very thing for which your foreign office was established?" No minister, of course, is willing to say that he would, and no minister would be willing, of course, to commit himself for a moment to such a policy. That we found true everywhere.

ALL WISH WAR TO END.

Then there was another thing that was impressed upon us all the time, and this was that in all of the great countries which we visited, although the people are tremendously united within the countries at the present moment, although there is no break that can be seen or heard anywhere on the part of the people fighting together, still they wish the war to cease, or they are going to divide into parties, one party to oppose the other. While they are united in this tremendous national consciousness, there are in every single country two general lines of approach. One is through the military party, which believes that the matter can be settled only upon a military basis, and the other is through a civil party, which very much deprecates this exaltation of militarism, which says that the longer the war goes on the more the military authorities will be established, as censors of the press are established in all sorts of places which they ordinarily did not occupy; the longer the war goes on, the more the military power is breaking down all the safeguards of civil life and civil government, and that consequently it will be harder for civil life and for the rights of civil life to resuscitate themselves and regain their place over the rights and power of the military. And that goes on through the mere continuation of the war, and the military becomes more strongly intrenched in these countries every month, and the longer the war goes on, and the more desperately the people cling to their armies for their salvation, the more absolute are the power and the glory of that army. And the people, who represent the civil view of life, in the midst of their patriotic fervor, in the midst of their devotion to the army see that, and long for some other form of settlement, for some other form of approach to this terribly confused situation, long for it in each succeeding month more than they did in the month before.

WHY NOT BEGIN NOW?

And one can only say as one goes from one country to another, one can only say for oneself and say it to the citizens as one has opportunity, that if this war is ever to be settled through negotiations, and some time it must be—heaven knows when, but some time men must stop fighting and return to their normal existence—one says to those men, Why not begin now before the military becomes even further entrenched? Why not begin now when you still have enough power to hold them to their own statements, to hold them to their own purposes, and not allow them to rule and control the absolute destinies of the nation.

I am quite aware that in every country we met, broadly speaking, the civil people and not the military people. I am quite aware that it was natural for us to see the pacificists, if you please — although they are hardly known under that name — it was more natural for us to meet and know the people who were on that side of life, instead of those on the military side of life. But because we did not meet dozens of them, I am willing to believe that there must be many more of the same type of mind in every country, quite as loyal as the military people, quite as eager for the growth and development of their own ideals and their own standard of living, but believing with all their hearts that the military message is a wrong message and cannot in the end establish those things which are so dear to their hearts.

EXCHANGE OF OPINIONS DIFFICULT.

That is something to work upon, and when peace comes it must come through the people within those countries having some sort of claim upon the same type of mind and the same type of people in other countries. At present they have no communication. They say under the consorship of the press one man cannot tell how many other men are feeling as he does or believing as he does. Although he is a comrade in mind, and may be living in the next town, may be living in the next street, he does not know how many there are; he cannot get them together because, as you know, in our large cities with their huge agglomerations of human beings, we can communicate largely only through the daily press. We cannot find out the public opinion in any other way. Poor method as it seems, it is all that we have worked out as yet—and in the warring countries nothing goes into the press excepting those things which the military censor deems fit and proper.

So, as we went about, people would say to us, in regard to the press, "If you see so and so, say a word about lessening the censorship of the press." And we said, "No, we can talk about but this one thing. We cannot carry messages from the citizens to their governments." But over and over again this request was made. And as we got back to one country they would say, "Are people talking like that there? That is just the way we are talking here. But they do not know each other from one country to another, and the individuals cannot find each other within the country itself.

AN OLD MAN'S WAR.

Another thing which seems to me very striking is this: in each of the warring nations there is this point of similarity; generally speaking, we heard it everywhere—this was not universal, but we heard it everywhere —that this was on old man's war; that the young men who were dying, the young men who were doing the fighting, were not the men who wanted the war, and were not the men who believed in the war; that somewhere, in Church and State, somewhere in the high places of society, elderly people, the middle aged people, had established themselves and had convinced themselves that this was a righteous war, that this war must be fought out, and, as a young man put it in a certain country, "and we young fellows have to do the fighting."

This is a terrible indictment, and I admit that I cannot substantiate it, I can only give it to you as an impression, but I should like to bring one or two details before you to back it up, so to speak.

We met a young German in Switzerland. He had been in the trenches for three months and a half. He had been wounded in the lungs and had been sent to Switzerland to be cured. A physician, I think, would hardly say that he was going to be cured. I think a careful physician would say he had tuberculosis and would die.

But he thought he was being cured, and he was speaking his mind before he went back to the trenches. He was, I suppose, what one would call a fine young man, but not an exceptional young man. He had had a gymnasium education. He had been in business with his father, had traveled in South Africa, had traveled in France, England and Holland, in the line of business, and had come to know men, as he said, as "menschen." Good "menschen" might be found in every land. And now here he was, at twenty-eight, facing death, because he was quite sure when he went back to the trenches death awaited him. But this is what he said: never during that three months and a half had he once shot his gun in a way that could possibly hit another man; nothing in the world could make him kill another man. He could be ordered into the trenches; he could be ordered to go through the motions, but the final act was in his own hands and with his own conscience. And he said, "My brother is an officer"—he gave the name of his brother; he gave the name of his rank; he wasn't concealing anything; he was quite too near death's door to have any shifting and concealing —"he never shoots anything; he never shoots in a way that will kill; and I know dozens and dozens of young men who do not."

We had a list given to us by the woman at the head of a hospital in one German city of five young Germans who had been cured and were ready to be sent back to the trenches who had committed suicide, not because they were afraid of being killed, but because they were afraid they might be put into a position where they would have to kill some one else.

CONVICTIONS AGAINST KILLING.

We heard stories of that sort from France, while we talked with nurses in hospitals, with convalescent soldiers, with the mothers of soldiers who had come back on furlough and had gone again into the trenches; and in all of those countries there are surprising numbers of young men and older men who will not do any fatal shooting, because they think that no one has the right to command them to do that thing.

I am not going to tell of many things that were said, because I think there have been for the present too many things said, but the mothers said to us repeatedly, "It was hard to see that boy go, because he did not believe in war. He did not belong to the generation that believes in war."

One of the leading men of Europe, whose name you would instantly recognize if I felt at liberty to give it, said, "If this war could have been postponed for ten years, perhaps," he said, "I will be safe and say, twenty years, war would have been impossible in Europe, because of the tremendous revolt against it in the schools and the universities."

YOUNG MEN'S POINT OF VIEW.

I am quite sure when I say that that it is a partial view. I am quite sure that there are thousands of young men in the trenches feeling that they are performing the highest possible duties. I am quite sure that the spirit of righteousness is in the hearts of most of them, at least of many of them. But I am also sure that throughout there are to be found these other men who are doing violence to the highest teachings they know. It seemed to me at times as if the difference between the older generation and the new was something which was apprehended dimly in each country; that the older men believed more in abstractions, shall I say, that when they talked of patriotism, when they used certain words, certain theological or nationalistic words, these meant more to them than they did to the young men; that the young men took life much more from the point of view of experience; they took life much more empirically, and when they went to the trenches and tested it out, they concluded that it did not pay, that it was not what they wanted to do with their lives.

HOW WOMEN FEEL.

I would like to say just a word about the women in the various countries. The belief that a woman is against war simply and only because she is a woman and not a man, of course, does not hold. In every country there are many, many women who believe that the war is inevitable and righteous, and that the highest possible service is being performed by their sons who go into the army, just as there are thousands of men believing that in every country. The majority of women and men doubtless believe that. But the women do have a sort of pang about it. Let us take the case of an artist, an artist who was in an artillery corps, let us say, and was commanded to fire upon a wonderful thing, say St. Mark's at Venice, or the Dome at Florence, or any other great architectural and beautiful thing. I am sure he would have just a little more compunction than the man who had never given himself to creating beauty and did not know the cost of it. And there is certainly that deterrent on the part of the women who have nurtured these soldiers from the time they were little things, who brought them into the world, and brought them up to the age of fighting, and then see them destroyed. That curious revolt comes out again and again, even in the women who are most patriotic, and who say, "I have five sons, and a son-in-law, in the trenches. I wish I had more sons to give," Even those women when they are taken off their guard, give a certain protest, a certain plaint against the whole situation which very few men, I think, are able to formulate.

It seems to make it quite clear that whether we are able to recognize it or not, there has grown up a generation in Europe, as there has doubtless grown up a generation in America, who have revolted against war. It is a god they know not of, and they are not willing to serve him, because all of their inmost sensibilities and the training upon which their highest ideals depend, revolt against the whole situation.

INTERNATIONAL INTERESTS.

We have an international body of science. A man takes the knowledge of the science to which he is devoted, and doesn't ask whether it was gathered together by Englishmen or Germans. We have an international postal system, a tremendous international commerce, and a tremendous international finance — internationalism in all sorts of fields. But the law lags behind, and perhaps will lag behind for a long time, just as many of our most settled customs have never been embodied in law at all. If men could be brought together who had international experience, who had had it so long and so unconsciously that they had come to think not in nationalistic terms, but in the terms of the generation in which they were living, whether concerning business or labor or any other thing which has become so tremendously international, if they could be brought together and could be asked to try to put the very best mind they had, not as they represented one country or another, but as they represented human life and human experience as it has been lived during the last ten years in Europe, upon the question of what has really brought about this situation—Does Servia need a seaport? Is that what is the matter with Servia? I won't mention any of the other warring countries because I might get into difficulties, but is this thing or that thing needed? What is it from the human standpoint, from the social standpoint? Is it necessary to feed the people of Europe who are, as you know, so underfed in all of the southern portion of Europe? Is it necessary in order to feed them to get the wheat out of Russia? In Heaven's name then, let us have more harbors in order to get that wheat out of Russia. Let us not consider it from the point of view of the claims of Russia, or the counterclaims of some one else, but let us consider it from the point of view of the needs of Europe.

A HUMANE STANDPOINT.

I believe if men with that temper, and that experience, and that sort of understanding of life were to begin to make propositions to the various governments which would not placate the claims of one government and set it over against the claims of another government, but would look at the situation from a humane standpoint, I am quite sure, I say from the knowledge of dozens of men in all of the countries who talk about the situation, that that sort of negotiation would be received. That does not seem an impossible thing, does it?

WAR TEMPER WORKED UP.

Perhaps the most shocking impression left upon one's mind is this, that in the various countries the temper necessary for continuing the war is worked up and fed largely by the things which have occurred in the war itself. Germany has done this, the Allies have done that, somebody else tried to do this, and we foiled them by doing that, and what awful people they are, and they must therefore be crushed. We all know the strikes that have gone on for weeks with the original cause quite lost sight of. I submit that something of the same sort is happening in Europe now. They are going on because of the things which have been done in the war, and that certainly is a very curious reason for continuing the war. And what it needs, it seems to many of us, is a certain touch of human nature. The human nature in the trenches would be healed over, the kindly people in the various countries would not support the war longer, and foreign officers themselves would resume their own business, that of negotiation versus that of military affairs, if the thing could be released instead of being fed and kept at the boiling pitch as it is all the time by outrages here and there and somewhere else.

A PRIME MINISTER'S REPLY.

We went into the room of one of the prime ministers of Europe—and I never have a great deal of self-confidence, I am never so dead sure I am doing the right thing, and I said to him, "This probably seems to you very foolish, to have women going about in this way," and he said: "Foolish? Not at all. These are the first sensible words that have been uttered in this room for ten months." He said, "That door opens from time to time, and people come in and say, 'Mr. Minister, we must have more men, we must have more ammunition, we must have more money. We cannot go on with this war without more of something else,'" and he continued, "At last that door opens and two people walk in and say, 'Mr. Minister, could not negotiations be begun.'" After all I may not represent his country very worthily, but he is an officer of the government in a high place, and that is what he said. I give it to you for what it is worth. And there are other testimonials of the same sort from all kinds of people in office, and they are part of the peoples who are at war and unable to speak for themselves.

THE GREAT ILLUSION.

There is one more thing I should like to say and I will close: that is, that one feels that the talk against militarism, and the belief that it can be crushed by a counter-militarism is, as has been uttered so many times, one of the greatest illusions which can possibly seize the human mind. England likes to talk and does talk sharply against what it calls militarism, but if they have conscription in England, the militarism which they think they are fighting will, at least for the moment, have conquered England itself, which had always been so proud that it had a free army, not a conscriptive army. All of the young men of France between certain ages come to their deaths in their effort to move people out of trenches from which they cannot be moved, because they are absolutely built in of concrete on both sides—and even military men say that you cannot budge these without tremendous loss of life—if these young men are convinced that France must arm as never before, that she must turn herself into a military nation, then, of course, the militaristic idea has conquered in France; and the old belief that you can drive a belief into a man at the point of a bayonet is in force once more. And yet it seems almst as foolish to think that, if militarism is an idea and an ideal, it can be changed and crushed by counter-militarism or by a bayonet charge. And the young men in these various countries say of the bayonet charges: "That is what we cannot think of." You know, of course, that all of the countries make their men practically drunk before they can get them to charge, that they have a regular formula in Germany, that they give them rum in England, and absinthe in France. They all have to give them the "dope" before the bayonet charge is possible. Think of that. No one knows who is responsible. All the nations are responsible, and they indict themselves. But in the end human nature must reassert itself. The old elements of human understanding and human kindliness must come to the fore, and then it may well be that they will reproach the neutral nations and will say: "What was the matter with the rest of the world that they kept quiet while this horrible thing was happening, that men for a moment had lost their senses in this fanaticism of national feeling all over Europe." They may well say, "You were far enough away from it not to share in it, and yet you wavered until we had lost the flower of the youth of all Europe."

MESSAGE OF WOMEN'S CONGRESS.

That is what they said in various tongues and according to their various temperaments, and that is what enables them to fight for their countries when they are at war, believing as they did in the causes for which they were fighting. The women who came to the congress were women who were impelled by a genuine feeling of life itself, which compelled them to come and see if it could hold for three days and a half composed of women. Now they say: "Oh, yes, we see it can be done; we thought it could not be done." Three or four scientific societies who saw it said, "Perhaps we can do it. We were not at all sure that, if we tried to do it, we could do it." But we women got there, and there it is standing for what it is worth. Now, please do not think we are overestimating a very slight achievement, or taking too seriously the kindness with which we were received abroad, but we do wish to record ourselves as being quite sure that the peoples in these various countries were grateful for the effort, trifling as it was. The people say, "We do not want this war." They say that the governments are making this war, and the governments say, "We do not want this war. We will be grateful to anybody who will help us to stop it." We did not reach the military offices, but we did talk to a few military men, and we talked to some of them who said that they were sick to death of this war, and I have no doubt there were many others who, if they spoke freely, would say the same thing. And without abandoning their causes, and without lowering, if you please, the real quality of their patriotism, whatever it is which these various nations want, the women's resolutions said to them, and we said it to them as long as they permitted us to talk, "Whatever it is you want, and whatever it is you feel you ought to have with honor, why in the world can't you submit your case to a tribunal of fair minded men. If your cause is as good as you say it is, or you are sure it is, certainly those men will find the righteousness which adheres within it." And they all say that if the right medium can be found the case will be submitted.

THE CHURCH AND THE WAR.

By Robert E. Speer.

We hope that this war situation will recall the Church to the sacrificial principles of missions. The Church, as a whole, has never done anything sacrificial. Individual Christians have followed Christ, but the Church, as Duff said, has played with missions. An average of a few dimes a year from each member has represented the measure of her missionary giving, and now there are some who doubt whether the Church can continue to do even this. * * * What warrant have we, in a time of distress, for making Christ and his cause suffer first? The war which now shadows the world, and the sacrifices which are willingly made in it, should shame our timidity and our tame trifling with duty, and call us to deal with life as a reality, and with the work of Christ in the world as worth more devotion than national honor or commercial advantage or racial pride.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

PERIL IN SCRIPTURE READING.

DR. CHARLES R. BROWN, of Yale Divinity School, meets with convincing frankness an objection to his interpretation of Scripture in the Congregationalist. Recently Dr. Brown explained the death of Uzzah, who put out his hand to steady the Ark, on somewhat naturalistic grounds. A correspondent asked, "Is it not dangerous to deal with the plain statements of the Bible in that way?" Dr. Brown's retort is courteous but crushing. "Yes, it is dangerous to think at all—you may not think straight. It is dangerous to live in the presence of the titantic forces which are all about us—a man may get hurt. But as between the peril of attributing to those early men a faulty diagnosis in the case of a sudden death (involving as it does the setting aside of a literal statement of Scripture) and the peril of attributing to God an unreasoning act of vengeance upon a well-meaning man which would be utterly inconsistent with the character attributed to Him by Jesus Christ, I much prefer incurring the former and lesser peril."

THE EVANGELISTIC MANIA

"RESIGNED, to enter the evangelistic field"—that is the legend in which scores of items in the church papers convey the latest news of many a pastor.

After all, this taking up of evangelistic work is merely a means of keeping usefully busy until the minister can find a satisfactory parish in which to settle down. The new work represents necessity or prudence rather than choice.

But too often the adoption of evangelistic work represents the minister's ideal of his ministry. There is an excitement, a flashiness of experience, about it; there is in evangelism a sharp and apparently unambiguous test of one's effectiveness; and there goes with it a degree and kind of publicity which the pastor does not receive.

Mr. Sunday's popularity has increased the lure of the evangelistic field. His great crowds, his large collections, the costly personal gifts showered upon him and Mrs. Sunday, the adulation of press and people have had the effect of making many a pastor uneasy in his slower-going task. Bishop Berry of the Methodist Church estimates that the number of itinerating evangelists in the United States has increased by three or four hundred in the past three years. He says it has become a sort of "mania" to be an evangelist.

Bishop Berry goes on to declare his conviction that "the present popularity of the evangelist with his singer will not last. It is a phase of gospel work that will pass away. It is a serious question whether, in the long run, the results of faithful pastoral evangelism are not more fruitful than the sort of mass movement which is just now so popular. The results are certainly more permanent."

Whatever is true of the Christian denominations it is assuredly a fact that the churches of Disciples are not now in need of professional evangelists. We have too many evangelists now. The churches need pastors—prepared, studious, spiritually-minded, quiet-mannered pastors who have learned the fine and gracious art of shepherding a flock, feeding it, leading it beside the still waters and into green pastures of spiritual Truth.

Our evangelism, taken by and large, is not a strength to the Disciples of Christ. It is often a hindrance and an obscuration of the higher idealism of religion. Too often it hinders our Disciples plea.

There are exceptions, of course, but as a statement of the net effect of professional evangelism upon our church life it is, we believe, true to fact.

Is there any reason why this should not be frankly said? Is there any reason why the churches should be allowed to continue under the illusion upon which the evangelistic profession thrives?

IT WILL WORK THE OTHER WAY TOO.

A CORRESPONDENT who has evidently read and reflected much upon our editorial entitled "Union Churches" which appeared in the issue of July 15, writes to inquire whether our definition of In that editorial we said that all churches striving to practice Christian unity are churches of Disciples whether they have any organic connection with our historic movement or not.

Our correspondent now asks whether a church that bears the name Disciples and is organically connected with the historic movement denominated by that title, but which does not practice Christian union, is a church of Disciples.

Our reply is that such a church is not in truth a church of Disciples. It is not any more a church of Disciples than is a Baptist or Methodist church. Like them it is a denominational church.

The Disciples, we repeat, are an undenominational league of churches who have made it their prayerful purpose to practice Christian unity with all Christians. They believe Christian unity can be practiced here and now without waiting for any parliamentary action by denominational representatives, and they propose to set about practicing it.

Some will practice it more fully, others less, but they have this in common that all are striving to practice it and all stand ready to extend their practice when they are made to see wherein their present practice is sectarian.

However the world insists upon defining us, we Disciples of Christ must not define ourselves in the terms in which the Christian denominations define themselves, that is, as a social organism numbering so many people, with so many churches, ministers, etc. Our fall into that denominational conception of ourselves is responsible for the deterioration of our ideals which have been so marked in recent years.

We must keep redefining ourselves in terms of the original purpose which actuated Thomas Campbell when he launched this movement one hundred years ago—that is, if we still hold that purpose to be a valid one.

There is no doubt at all that there are many men and churches which have attached themselves to the historic movement and bear the name of Disciples which are not in practice or disposition sympathetic with our original ideal of Christian unity. Judged by this ideal they are not Disciples, and we must learn frankly and kindly to distinguish them from those who are.

It does not follow that we should deny them fellowship in the movement; on the contrary, our principle of Christian unity makes it mandatory that we give them the fullest fellowship in the movement.

But the guidance of the movement ought not be committed to their hands, as we have come perilously near doing in many cases in our recent history.

Every union church is a church of Disciples.

And every church of Disciples is a union church.

Let us get these two concepts clearly defined in our minds and we will be a long way advanced on the right road that leads to the consummation of the divine errand upon which we no less than our fathers were commissioned.

MR. WHITE'S RESIGNATION

ALL friends of the Laymen's Missionary Movement will regret the decision of Mr. J. Campbell White to step down from the leadership of that movement to undertake the presidency of Wooster College, in Ohio. Mr. White has achieved a place of almost unique distinction in American Christianity by first conceiving and launching this great movement and then sustaining it for over six years by the investment of his own masterful personality in it.

His name and the name of the movement are synonymous in the minds of informed Christian people of all the churches. It will be with difficulty that Mr. White's name can be dissociated from the work he set going.

This is no matter for outsiders to pronounce upon. A question like this has to be settled by the man himself, and a man of the quality of J. Campbell White can be trusted to make his decisions on the basis of the most unselfish considerations. What factors entered in to determine his decision no one can know, but it will be universally regretted that he felt constrained to step from such leadership as he was exercising in missionary work to assume the presidency of a college.

As an educator he cannot possibly count for so much to the kingdom of God as he counted for while leading Christian laymen out into a great vision and a generous support of the missionary enterprise.

We believe and have often been thrilled by his own reiterated thesis that there is no work in the modern world in which the investment of life can be made to yield such returns as it yields when a qualified personality is consecrated to the cause of Christian missions.

It is our conviction that his friends and his Christian public should remind Mr. White of his own thesis, and assure him of its very peculiar pertinency to his own case, not in criticism—far from that—but for his reassurance in what may be a temporary mood of self-depreciation.

The cause of missions needs Mr. White in the very place which Providence so obviously prepared for him to fill and which he has filled so well in the past half-dozen years.

If his decision is not irrevocable, no influence should be omitted to persuade him to revoke it.

PROPERTY AND THE CHRISTIAN CONSCIENCE

FEW interpreters of Christianity have a genius for going straight to the sensitive spot of the Christian conscience equal to that possessed by Prof. Walter Rauschenbusch. His books on the social application of Christ's teaching exercise a dynamic moral influence throughout the whole body of the Church. His occasional writings and addresses are always arresting and luminous.

At the Northern Baptist Convention the other day he asked a simple question that carries Christian ethics right down to the root of our economic problem. Here is the question:

"Is it morally tolerable to live on unearned incomes?"

You cannot reflect on this question without a certain shaking up of conscience. It is a question not alone for the very rich but for many moderately circumstanced people. The economic problem is in this way translated into terms of personal responsibility. It is not merely a secular question, to be relegated to statemen and lawmakers; it is a moral question to be reckoned with by the individual soul. It strikes its roots into the religious life.

What is the just basis of property? Is it the mere fact of possession, whether by inheritance, unearned increase, or other fortuitous method? Or must property imply my own productive labor? Questions like this are not academic questions any longer. They are vital personal questions searching out the very soul of the Christian conscience. And with such questions the church must learn to reckon.

As Professor Rauschenbusch says: "Our churches can be ever so emphatic on moral issues, but unless they have an unmuffled message on the rightful basis of property they will lose their moral leadership with the mass of the working part of the nation."

The application of the principles of Christianity to the social order involves a profound revolution of our economic life. How profound no one yet seems to know. But questions like this asked by Professor Rauschenbusch give one a flash of insight into the depth to which Christianity must at last go in its transforming work.

GETTING ALONG WITHOUT WHISKEY

DES MOINES, IOWA, dry since last February, when the saloons were closed by action of the city council, still retains its commercial equilibrium. Conditions are steadily improving, especially among the working class. People thrown out of work by the closing of saloons are finding other employment. One hotel is adding five more stories to its six.

"People come to the bank regularly now, who perhaps were never inside a bank half a dozen times in their lives before," says a leading banker, "and the weekly payroll of large employers of labor is steadily increasing."

The city of Des Moines by closing its saloons lost an annual revenue of $133,000. This deficit has been almost wholly provided for by the municipal economy program.

Life, like war, is a series of mistakes, and he is not the best Christian nor the best general who makes the fewest false steps. He is the best who wins the most splendid victories by the retrieval of mistakes. Forget mistakes; organize victory out of mistakes.—F. W. Robertson.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

The Trend of the Parochial School.

Four religious denominations have commonly provided parochial school instruction the past decade in the United States. In all but one of them, the parochial school system is rapidly decreasing. There are 2,500,000 Jews in this country, but they have only five parochial schools left, with an enrolment of less than 5,000 pupils. Mormon schools are now mainly high schools, the younger children going to the public schools. The parochial school has completely disappeared from the General Synod, the oldest of the American Lutheran bodies. In fourteen independent Lutheran bodies, numbering a million communicants, the schools decreased last year from 2,644 to 1,426; the pupils from 97,868 to 78,981. The Roman Catholics have 5,403 schools, with an enrolment of 1,429,859. There has been a growth in the parochial school enrolment among the Catholics.

New Russian Archbishop in America.

The authorities of the Orthodox Church, of Russia, have sent to America Archbishop Eudokim. He will have charge of the interests of that commission in America. Archbishop Eudokim received a deputation from the Episcopal fellowship, of New York, at the Cathedral, on the evening of June 10. Bishop Courtney (Episcopalian) read an address of greeting on behalf of the members of the Angelican and Eastern Orthodox union, to which Archbishop Eukodim made a suitable reply. He expressed the sentiment that the great war provided a time that was very propitious for a closer relation between the two communions.

Who are Valid Ministers?

There is a wide variety of opinion in the Protestant Episcopal denomination about the standing of ministers who have not been episcopally ordained. The Bishop of West Texas says, "Are they, in the sight of God, ministers of Jesus Christ, or no? I hope I would have grace to go to the stake before I would declare the negative of that question." A writer in the Churchman denies that this is the true attitude of the denomination. He says, "Thus we see that this Protestant church of ours has long ago decided and declared by her Ordinal and its Preface that non-Episcopally ordained men are not ministers in the 'Church of God,' and can become such only by a bishop's ordaining hands. Of course, we all rejoice in the belief that God's grace has done much by Protestant ministers; but still, if we would be true to the positive teaching of our church, we must aver that such ministers are laymen only. And though they have doubtless saved many souls, yet probably several times as many would have been saved had these ministers been priests of the Catholic church ministering the precious Sacraments."

Religious Education at the Panama Exposition.

Three days of the important educational congresses at the Panama-Pacific Exposition are to be devoted to the subject of religious education. The meetings of these congresses which occur from August 16 to September 5, are to be held in the Oakland City Auditorium, and the program for the days August 27-29, has been prepared by The Religious Education Association. The morning sessions of the congress are to be given up to the discussion of the problems in the Sunday schools and public schools, the afternoon to the college problems and the night programs to addresses on "Religious Education and the New World Order." The speakers at the last mentioned sessions include such well known men as Chancellor David Starr Jordan, Commissioner P. P. Claxton, President H. C. King, President Joseph Swain and President A. Rose Hill.

Membership Conservation.

Along with other denominations, the Baptists have felt the difficulty of church work in Chicago. For five years, previous to this year, fully as many members have been dropped from the roll as have been received by baptism. Much of this loss is due to the fact that people have changed neighborhoods in the city and have been lost in the change. The Baptists have adopted the slogan of "membership conservation." The clerk of the association will have charge of this work and non-resident membership secretaries will be appointed in each church, and they will work with the clerk of the association. The absent members will be followed up until they are placed in the nearest Baptist church. In the past year, 1,639 new members have been received in the association.

Gen. Joffre a Protestant.

It has been both affirmed and denied that Gen. Joffre, of the French army, was a Protestant. A Catholic view of France settles the question by the following statement:

"He is from every point of view the marvelously balanced man who was necessary for the French army. . . . A Protestant as regards religion, known as a fully convinced republican, a Free Mason of old standing, he has never, in distributing his favors, made exception of persons or beliefs. Born a Protestant, at Turenne, . . . he is tenacious and meditative, growing with years in courage and suppleness."

The Death of Bishop Toll.

The Right Rev. William Edward Toll, suffragan bishop of Chicago, of the Protestant Episcopal denomination, dropped dead, while climbing the steps of the elevated station, at Adams street, Chicago, Sunday afternoon, June 27. He had always been in the best of health, and his death was a great shock to his friends. He was consecrated as suffragan bishop in 1911. At the time of his death he was 72 years of age.

Missionary Education.

The educational departments of the home and foreign mission boards of America co-operate with what is known as the Missionary Education Movement. The eleventh conference for the middle west will be held at Lake Geneva, August 6 to 15. Various groups are taught missions with reference to their special interests. Pastors, Sunday school workers, Christian Endeavor members, and women's missionary societies are among the most largely represented at these conferences. The new mission text books are given class treatment and the delegates are shown how to handle the material. The Missionary Education Movement has rendered a great service in placing missionary interest upon the solid basis of a knowledge of world conditions. The old emotional appeal was not a dependable basis for missionary support.

American Rector in Munich.

The Episcopalians of America sustain rectors in a number of the important cities of Germany, and Rev. Webster Wardwell Jennings has been stationed at Munich for a number of years. The church has prospered until the opening of the present war. The rector has been compelled to resign by conditions now prevailing.

Mission Tracts by Aeroplane.

Missionaries are nothing if they are not progressive and many of their methods would probably be looked upon by the home folks as sensational. A novel way of getting attention for their message was used recently at Osaka, Japan, by some Methodist missionaries. They secured the services of a Japanese aviator who was a Christian and he flew over the city scattering Christian tracts that were eagerly seized by the people.

THE QUEEN OF SHEBA VISITS SOLOMON

LESSON FOR AUGUST 1.

I Kings 10:1-10, 13.

Verse by Verse.

1. The queen of Sheba. Sheba was south of Judah, and many scholars believe that it was at the southern end of the Arabian Peninsula. It was a journey of fifteen hundred miles, and by their method of travel would take about seventy-five days to make the journey one way.—Heard of the fame of Solomon. Solomon's name was widely known because of his commerce. His ships had probably been to Arabia. See I Kings 9:26-28.—Concerning the name of Jehovah. Solomon's name was great, but it was great because of what Jehovah did for his people, and what he was able to do for God.—She came to prove him. To test him. Read Matt. 12:42. She was interested in the questions of her day, and sought guidance wherever it could be found.—Hard questions. Riddles. The custom of testing the wisdom of distinguished persons with riddles has been in Arabia for a long time.

2. A very great train. A large number of beasts of burden, and many servants. There may also have been some distinguished men of her country with them.—Spices. Arabia is noted for her spices. Frankincense and myrrh are common to the country. She brought the products of her country.—Precious stones. The onyx and emerald are still found in the land. She came with a large number of presents and provisions, hence the force of men and beasts of burden.—She communed. She had many long conferences with Solomon about matters of state and questions of the day.—All that was in her heart. Questions of great importance must have been upon her mind to urge her to make such a long journey.

3. Told her all her questions. He answered her questions satisfactorily.—Not anything hid from the king. Solomon had a great fund of knowledge and much wisdom at his command. Jehovah had promised him wisdom and that promise was fulfilled.

4. The house that he had built. The house here mentioned is probably the king's palace. Read the account given in I Kings 7:1-12.

5. The food of his table. The variety and quantity of food. In this connection read I Kings 4:22, 23. It has been estimated that forty-eight thousand people must have been fed!—The sitting of his servants. The officers of the kingdom, and the distinguished persons who sat at the royal table of the king.—Attendance of his ministers. Those who ministered unto him. Hebrew, standing, RVm.—Their apparel. The guards were richly dressed in full uniform. It is difficult for the western mind to grasp the splendor of some robes you may see in the East, even in modern times.—Cupbearers. The servants who had charge of the king's plate. They also poured out the wine at the feasts.—His ascent by which he went up into the house of Jehovah. The reference is probably to the steps from the palace to the temple. See II Kings 16, 18, also note the margin of the R. V.—There was no more spirit in her. Literally, "There was no more breath in her." She was beside herself with amazement. She was speechless in the presence of such royalty.

6. And she said to the king, it was a true report. She could no longer doubt the splendor of Solomon's court, and nobly acknowledged the truth without envy or conceit.—Acts. Or sayings, RVm.—Wisdom. On this word read I Ch. 29:25, and Prov. 3:14-18.

7. I believed not the words. The reports went far beyond what she had seen, and it was difficult for her to believe.—Mine eyes has seen it. She could not help believing when her eyes beheld the glory.—The half was not told me. The actual glory and wisdom so far surpassed the reports that the queen was led to say the half had not been told her.

9. Blessed be Jehovah thy God. Compare I Kings 5:7. The word blessed here means worthy of praise.—To do justice and righteousness. The queen was convinced that Solomon's wisdom as a ruler came from Jehovah, and that his judgments ought to be right. She did not see all.

10. She gave the king. It was customary to bring the king presents.—A hundred and twenty talents of gold. The intrinsic value of their gold was between three and four millions of dollars.—Spices. See verse two.

13. Solomon gave her of his royal bounty. Compare the RVm. "The word royal is well chosen, for we think of something which is greater when we apply this term to it. It is this excess of giving, beyond that which is demanded of us, which makes the real generosity." (McKenzie.)

An Astonished Queen

The Lesson in Today's Life.

The lesson of a few weeks ago gave to us the wise choice of Solomon, and today we behold a queen attracted from afar, by the wisdom and splendor of his court. The Queen of Sheba came from a land smiling with plenty, and yet she was speechless with astonishment when she stood in the presence of the unsurpassed splendor of Solomon's court. Amid this glory she was led to exclaim, "The half was not told me." What was true in regard to conveying to another one's impression of the significance and wisdom of the court of Solomon, is even more true of our deepest emotions. Words are poor servants at times, and fail us at the point of deepest need. When the sensitive soul stands in the presence of the luxury and poverty of the modern world, it is led to exclaim, "The half is not known!"

ADMIRATION A VIRTUE.

The sensitiveness of the Queen's nature is admirably shown in her ability to admire the greatness of Solomon's court. There is something radically wrong with the person who has lost the power of admiration. The more we admire of the true and good the richer we are in life. If there is anything admirable which you do not admire, you have lost that much of this world's good, for this world is full of admirable things and we are daily in contact with that which should stir the sensitive soul. Every person you can admire enlarges your soul, as every landscape you admire enlarges your life. Great men and women are rich in this quality of life.

She came with many questions to the court of wisdom. She was greeted with a satisfactory answer to them. She was a fortunate seeker, for so many times we are disappointed in our search for an answer to the deep questions of life. We fall, however, because we do not go to the source of supreme wisdom. "Behold a greater than Solomon is here." When our answers do not come from the example of his life, they do not satisfy. Jesus Christ claimed to be "the way, the truth and the life." No other being could claim so much. He is the king of kings and lord of lords. The queen was a seeker after the wisdom of her age, and the kind of wisdom which enabled her to react on her environment in a helpful manner. Every leader of the people must restate the experiences of the past in terms of the thinking of his own day. In our day there is no end to the quest for wisdom on the part of men and women everywhere. They are seeking the wisdom and splendor of the world at any cost. Great sums of money are parted with in order to obtain the culture and refinement of life, only too often for selfish purposes. A comparatively few people are asking for bread that they may feed the hungry multitude. The greater part of our energy is spent in planning to get rather than to give. Harm does not lie in honest getting but in the keeping for selfish purposes in the face of the world's hungry. To own an automobile and not share the pleasure with your less fortunate friend is to have a kind of selfishness that makes life hard for thousands in our day. A very prominent manufacturer in a large city said recently to his associates that the flaunting of wealth in the face of the poor is one of the greatest wrongs of our day. He is a man who employs between five and ten thousand men and women.

THE QUEEN'S HUNGER.

The supreme lesson for us is the hunger of the queen after that divine wisdom which attracted her to the court of Solomon. She did not say, "I am rich and need nothing," but she felt that still she needed the highest and best. How superior is this woman to many Christians, who hunger after all manner of things, but never after the word of life. We do not need to journey hundreds of miles to find him who is greater than Solomon, for he has promised: "I am with you all the days, even unto the consummation of the age."

Disciples Table Talk

Episcopal Rector Unites With Disciples of Christ.

Rev. Arthur W. Higby, for the past seven years rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Canton, O., was baptized on a recent Sunday morning by Pastor P. H. Welshimer, and took membership with First Church of that city. Sunday evening he preached in First Church pulpit, setting forth his reasons for leaving Episcopalianism and identifying himself with the Disciples of Christ. Mr. Higby has been an Episcopal rector for twenty-five years. Writing of his ministry, Mr. Welshimer says: "His church reluctantly accepted his resignation. He has been a successful pastor. The church he is leaving had its most successful period in the seven years of his ministry. He is recognized in this city as a scholar and a forceful speaker. His careful study in the past six months has led him from the Episcopal to the Christian Church. He expects the next twenty years to be the best and most prosperous years of his life and he desires to give himself fully to letting the people of the world know the great truths that are being emphasized by the people who plead for the restoration of the New Testament church. He is now ready to accept a call to one of our churches. He is forty-seven years of age, has a wife and four children. He has a splendid personality, is a tireless worker, a good student and has read extensively. He has been especially successful in dealing with men and has had remarkable success in helping churches he has served to solve their financial problems. He will be a power in any church he may serve. I unhesitatingly commend him."

Student Preacher Builds Up Churches.

Clarence G. Baker has been a graduate student in the University of Chicago for three years. During that time he has preached on Sundays at Douglas Park Church, Chicago, and at Batavia, Ill. He has received into these two churches 136 new members. Mr. Baker has been asked to name his successor at Batavia. He will locate with a church in the middle or western states which is willing to adopt a social service program along with the spirit of evangelism.

Not Charles Darsie But His Father.

An error in this department two weeks ago makes us say that Charles Darsie, of Cleveland, O., had received a call to McLean, Ill. It should have been J. L. Darsie, the Cleveland pastor's father.

Another Church Started Under Favorable Auspices in Akron, O.

High Street Church, Akron, O., mother of several congregations in that city, recently organized another congregation in the northern section of the city. A lot was purchased in the best possible location. A building costing approximately $20,000 was erected and paid for by High Street Church. The new congregation was organized in April and the dedication of the new building occurred May 2. One hundred seventy-three members were dismissed from High Street by letter, which number, supplemented by a few from the other churches of the city who were living in the immediate neighborhood, constituted the 187 charter members with which the new organization began its existence on the day of dedication. B. R. Johnson, of Wellsville, O., was called to the pastorate. The membership is now beyond the 200 mark and increasing steadily. High Street Church presented the new congregation with a deed to the property. Three members from the board of each church have representation on the board of the new church, that the work may go forward in harmonious fashion, but otherwise the young congregation is quite left to independent ways. A reception was tendered Wednesday evening, July 21, for Mr. and Mrs. Johnson. The new building was well filled with an enthusiastic and consecrated body of Christian people. Great things may be expected from this new organization.

Christian Union League Meets At San Francisco.

During the state convention of Northern California, in session this week, at San Francisco, the Christian Union League is announced to hold its second annual meeting, on Thursday evening, at the Y. M. C. A. building. There are no afternoon and evening sessions of the state convention. The League is the organization that has been fostering the union of Berkeley Bible Seminary and Pacific Seminary at the University of California. It has recently somewhat enlarged its task, and is engaged actively in the promotion of Christian union ideals in other ways.

Ft Worth Pastor Mourns Death of Wife.

A deep sorrow has fallen upon the congregation of Magnolia Avenue Church, Ft. Worth, Tex., in the death of Mrs. Edward McShane Waits, the wife of their beloved and talented pastor. Mrs. Waits had been in feeble health for some time and finally submitted to an operation, but without avail. In a note from President F. D. Kershner, of Texas Christian University, he says: "Mrs. Waits was a teacher of extraordinary ability, a writer of distinction, a woman gifted with a really remarkable facility for making and retaining friends. She was a home builder and maker above all, the type of woman who embodies and combines in herself the best traditions of American Christianity. Only those who, like the writer, enjoyed the privilege of entering the home circle over which she presided can appreciate what magic there was in her hand and brain and heart."

Former Pastors Participate in Church Anniversary.

Urichville, O., church celebrated its thirty-eighth anniversary July 25. J. P. Allison, of Waynesburg, Pa., who was at one time pastor of the church over eight years, and Charles Darsie, of Crawford Road Church, Cleveland, a former pastor for a period of six years, were present and participated with the pastor J. A. Canby in the speech-making and fellowship of the occasion. An illustrated and artistic edition of the parish paper was gotten out as a souvenir.

Church Observes "Visitation Week."

First Church, Springfield, O., set apart the last week of June as "Visitation Week." The pastor, C. M. Burkhart, reports that 1,513 calls on 522 homes were made by 102 members. Calling cards bearing the name of church and pastor together with the name of the caller were left at each home and much information as to addresses, members of family who are not church members, family conditions, etc., was collected and brought to the pastor. Mr. Burkhart has only recently begun his ministry there and reports ten recent accessions to the membership.

Well Known School and Sunday School Leader Moves.

Prof. Geo. W. Brown, who has been County Superintendent of Schools in Edgar County, Ill., for twelve years and an active member of First Church of Paris, has accepted the superintendency of the schools at Pana, Ill., and has already moved his family to that place. Mr. Brown has been superintendent of the Sunday school in Paris all these years and the church is having some difficulty in securing a successor. H. H. Peters, the pastor, will have charge of the school in the interim and will keep it up to its high standard of efficiency. The Paris Sunday school has always been one of the best in Illinois and ought to grow into even larger usefulness.

Prings Christian Unity Home.

"San Bernardino has no use for ten churches," declared A. F. Roadhouse, of San Bernardino, Calif., to his congregation, on a recent Sunday. "There is no vital difference between the Christian church and the Baptist church, between the Presbyterian and the Congregationalist. The Methodists, north and south, differ little. All could unite," he continued. "Now about the economy of it. If we had a big union church, the masses would attend, and that would solve the problem of the unchurched. San Bernardino has no need for ten churches. Combined, the expenses of these churches are over $20,000 a year. The church properties are worth $300,000. We could build a wonderful church with this sum and do tremendously effective work."

Transylvania and the College of the Bible Offer Course for the Rural Minister.

In addition to the recent extension of its courses for the degree of Bachelor of Divinity for graduate study, the College of the Bible, in co-operation with Transylvania College, announces a course for men preparing for service in the rural community leading to the degree of Bachelor of Practical Theology. This announcement was released simultaneously with the publication of the first report of the Disciples' Commission on Social Service and the Rural Church. This Commission found that 7,700 of the 9,900 churches and 40 per cent. of the membership among the Disciples' constituency are in the country. This represents forcibly the intimacy with which the fortunes of the Disciples are related to the welfare of the rural church. The report clearly indicates that the needs are for a larger number of men who love the country and appreciate its opportunities and definitely choose the ministry in the rural church, and for definite professional training for this type of ministry. Feeling the urgency of this need, the College of the Bible has departed from all precedents in theological seminaries in offering a degree course in preparation for a rural ministry. The new course consists of four years of college work—a prerequisite year in Transylvania College and three years in the College of the Bible, one-third of which may be elected from such subjects as the plant and animal life of the country, rural sociology, rural economics, the rural church, and general religious education. The purpose of the course is to give the student, besides a careful Biblical training, understanding and appreciation of country life and to prepare him intelligently and sympathetically to help in the correlation of the church and the school as the leading factors in rural life.

Mrs. Thompson Porter Active and Effective in Public Addresses.

Mrs Lura V. Thompson Porter of Carthage, Il., State President of the C. W. B. M., was one of the evening speakers at the Loraine, Ill., Chautauqua, her subject being "The Tied Colt." Mrs. Porter is especially interested in community work and is kept busy giving addresses in her own city and surrounding community looking toward social betterment—giving special attention to Sunday School work. On a recent Sunday evening she addressed the annual convention of the Sunday Schools of her own township on "The Most Telling Thing for Sunday School Attendance." This convention was held in the First Methodist church of her home city and she was greeted with a large and enthusiastic audience.

—J. Fred Jones, long time state secretary of Illinois, and for the past year secretary of North Carolina, has resigned and returned to Illinois where he is just now beginning his work as pastor at Metropolis. He will be welcomed back.

—Mark Wayne Williams holds an open air service after the Sunday evening service at St. James' Street Church, Boston.

—Tolbert F. Weaver, formerly of Pendleton, Ore., now of Timpson, Tex., in taking up evangelistic work, defines his aims thus: "To emphasize the need of a deeper spiritual life in the church; to enlist new lives in the Master's cause and to help churches get on a sane, solid financial basis."

—First Church, Norfolk, Va., has just closed its first nine months in its new building. The months of April, May and June brought 51 additions to the church at the regular services.

—Paris, Ill., church observed the Fourth of July in a very impressive manner. Hon. Frank T. O'Hair, congressman from Illinois, and one of the leading attorneys of the Edgar County bar, delivered an address in the evening. Mr. O'Hair's mother has been one of the active members of the Christian Church in Paris for many years and Mr. O'Hair has been interested in all the affairs of a progressive and moral character in the community.

—H. H. Peters of Paris delivered his lecture, "Is the Sun Rising or Setting?" before the Bureau County Chautauqua, at Princeton, Illinois, Monday afternoon, July 19. The Chautauqua management speaks highly of the lecture. C. C. Carpenter, pastor of Princeton Church is platform manager this year.

—B. H. Bruner, pastor at Arcola, Ill., is preaching a series of three Sunday morning sermons on the following subjects: "The Incarnation," The Atonement," "Supernatural Religion." Mr. and Mrs. Bruner will take their vacation the last three weeks in August. They will spend most of their time in Akron, O., with Mr. Bruner's sister, and Mr. Bruner will supply for L. N. D. Wells in High Street Church the last two Sundays in August.

—Parkland Church, Louisville, Ky., Delaware W. Scott, pastor, has completed its new home of worship, which was dedicated last Sunday, by Geo. L. Snively.

—The call extended to Joseph Underwood, of Pittsburgh, to Anderson, Ind., has been accepted. Mr. Underwood will begin work at Anderson the third Sunday in September.

—A. M. Hale has begun his new pastorate at Knoxville, Ill.

—Central Church, Terra Haute, Ind., had a "jitney picnic" last week. Over four hundred persons were taken to the picnic grounds by using all the jitney busses in the city.

—The rural church at New Alexander, O., dedicated a well equipped and beautiful building. The old building was remodeled and enlarged. The new plant provides a beautiful auditorium, a large and well equipped basement with various class rooms, etc. The sum of $1,200 was needed to complete the payment of all obligations, and $1,587 was raised in cash and short time pledges on the day of dedication. I. J. Cahill, the state secretary, was in charge.

—E. A. Bosworth, for many years one of the honored ministers in Ohio, who was called to his reward during the past year, arranged for a substantial contribution out of his estate to the work of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society.

—Ohio district conventions begin Aug. 31. The state secretary, I. J. Cahill, is busy preparing the final schedule for them.

—The Singers' School of Efficiency will offer at its session at Bethany Park, August 3-20, a course in appreciation and interpretation of standard hymns and gospel songs. The course will be non-technical in its nature and will appeal to all classes of church workers, Sunday School teachers, Christian Endeavorers and ministers as well as choir leaders. Dr. J. B. Herbert, of Monmouth, Ill., will be the lecturer and instructor.

—Evangelist G. I. Hoover has succeeded in re-establishing the church and Sunday school at Abington, Wayne Co., Ind. There had been no regular preaching in this church for fifteen years. A church of forty-one members and a Sunday school averaging almost fifty in attendance are now in operation there.

Los Angeles Convention Enthusiastic and Harmonious

The General Convention of Churches of Christ, embracing the conventions of various missionary and benevolent societies of the brotherhood closed its annual gathering at Los Angeles last Sunday night with a program devoted to Christian unity. A huge out-door communion service attended by some ten thousand people was held Sunday afternoon in Exposition Park.

The attendance from outside the city was as large as could be expected, considering the times and the distance. Southern California outside of Los Angeles probably sent 2,000 visitors to the convention. From east of the Rockies there were from 800 to 1,000 visitors. Other attendants would make a total of about 4,000 visitors.

The sessions were held in the Bible Institute building newly erected for housing Dr. R. A. Torrey's training school. The auditorium of this building seats nearly 5,000 people. It was well filled at many sessions. The sessions were without exception harmonious. Disturbing questions seemed by common consent to be left outside and the convention gave itself heartily to hearing the reports of the missionary and benevolent secretaries and to stirring addresses of missionary workers and those who came to interpret the great tasks of the church.

Additional reports will be given next week. At this time we present extracts from the masterly address by the president of the General Convention, Rev. Walter M. White, of Cedar Rapids, Ia. The address was given on Sunday evening, July 18, at the opening session of the convention.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

" I am glad we have arrived at this hour. I believe we are here in the right spirit—the spirit in which our Master would have us assemble ourselves together as brethren for the purpose of attending to the business of the King. Permit me in this opening word of the first session of this, our annual gathering, to express the hope for the cordial support of all in making this convention conspicuous for high ideals; deep, sober consideration given to all questions pertaining to the task with which our Lord has honored us; and for the real spirit of true spiritual devotion.

"The months which have intervened since we last met have been the most trying and difficult for our nation of any similar period in her history. The fury of the war storm cloud has left its impress upon every phase of our life. The church in every department of our activities has felt the strain and the burden to this experience.

Heavy Burden Borne.

"Our missionary and benevolent agencies have borne a heavy burden; they have been forced to adopt measures which have all but broken the heart. During the sessions of this convention each organization will bring you its own heart message. The feebleness of our language makes impotent the servants of our God in telling the full story of the world's suffering and need. I beseech you, my brethren, to give such earnest attention to these several reports as will serve to quicken your own hearts into more loyal suuport than ever before given, and cheer and encourage those who stand on the far flung battle line, and those who carry the burdens of official responsibility as has not been true for many a day.

"There is, however, as our good poet has taught us to sing, 'a silver lining for every cloud.' Today we lift our faces toward the sunrise—hope fills the soul as the promises of our God fill his holy word

"We have given so much consideration to the superstructure that we have forgotten the foundation. We have stressed so hard the individual membership of the body that we have forgotten the body.

"In other words, while we have been professing to believe in a universal brotherhood, we have been all the while engaged in emphasizing the things which make for disunion. We have made a task of disunion rather than union. We have made it a question of all hands, all foot, all eye, or nobody at all.

"The fact of the matter is, my brethren, we have been so busily engaged in the advocacy of 'our plea' that we have often forgotten our Lord.

Continuing on this theme, President White said that the creation of a universal brotherhood in no sense undervalues the existence of the local congregation, and added that it must be understood that the local congregation has no authority for its existence save the authority of expediency, while on the other hand the church as an universal institution has all the authority of Jesus Christ and the inspired New Testament writers to sustain its existence.

'Autonomy Not Separation.'

"Our contention for the independence and autonomy of the local church when interpreted to mean separatism, is wrong and does violence to the teachings of Jesus and the apostles," he went on to say.

"We have magnified the importance of the local congregation to the detriment of the world mission which Jesus assigned for the church. Let me very plainly state that I find nothing in the New Testament which to my mind seems to justify anything else than local self-government for the church. At the same time I find nothing in the scriptures that even remotely would prevent congregations of Christians adopting different forms of local self-government from uniting in the fullest and freest manner in all work pertaining to the extension of the larger interests of our Lord's Kingdom. Furthermore, we do not find in the history of the New Testament church anything other than belief in the Lordship of Jesus Christ serving as a basis of cooperation.

"If such was the spirit of the first and early disciples how can we possibly justify ourselves in the erection of any addition barriers to the freest of Christian fellowship?

Rev. Walter M. White, President of the General Convention.

"Furthermore, it appears to me that the Word is very plain in its teaching, by precedent, that all co-operating agencies for the upbuilding of the Kingdom should be within the church and are consequently directly amenable to the church. This at once is both scriptural and practicable.

"The general convention does not presume to exercise any authority whatsoever over the church or local congregation, and no fair interpretation of its constitution and by-laws can possibly be construed into any such relationship. Its sole function lies in its usefulness as an agent of and within the church in assembling together representatives of the local congregations before whom may be presented in an orderly manner the reports of the several co-operating agencies of the church. Such a service insures unquestionably the largest possible efficiency with the greatest degree of economy.

No Excuse Needed.

"I do not offer any excuse for the existence of the general convention; it needs none. The occasion which demands its presence is too palpably plain to any thinking person. That the time is ripe for such an organization is evidenced by the repeated declaration of the representatives of the churches for such an organization from year to year, for the past half dozen years or more, as they have met together in conventions.

"The ends desired are so sanely Christian and so truly in accord with the fundamental teachings of the Scriptures, and at the same time so evidently wise and freighted with common sense, that it appears all but absurd to think of any but a favorable attitude toward the organization.

"In truth, my brethren, we shall never rid ourselves of the contention, which, like the fury of the storm, has beat itself against our Zion for many, many years past, by keeping our ears constantly to the ground catching the rumbling, ominous sound of every discordant note, but by the grace of Him who gives us wings of faith must we rise into the realm of Christian service made possible in the existence of an universal brotherhood through faith in Jesus Christ, the triumphant Son of the Living God."

Our Readers' Opinions

Approves Editorial

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

I write to say that the editorial entitled "Union Churches" in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY of July 15 is exactly what I have waited thirty years to see proclaimed by a paper that possesses some power to make it good.

I hope and do most earnestly desire that the editors may be able to drive right at this goal until we get definite results in a union of persons and churches standing for these principles. FRANCIS M. CUMMINGS.

"The Only Possible Way to Union."

I find great pleasure and comfort in your most excellent paper. While I am old (72 years) and belong, I suppose, too much to the past, with its battles for "first principles," to keep step with you along some lines, I get strength and inspiration from the Christ-like spirit you manifest, and also enjoy the paper from a literary standpoint. Down deep in my heart, I believe you are blazing the only possible way to Christian union. Mrs. L. Pollard, McAlester, Okla.

Why Meat Keeps Children Awake

Almost every one is familiar with the fact that infants and very young children should not be allowed fresh meat for supper. We have all noted that it disturbs their sleep, but few of us, probably, have stopped to inquire the physiological reason.

According to scientific authorities, the explanation lies in the fact that fresh meats contains a stimulating or refreshing substance known as xanthin (pronounced zan-thin), which is the refreshing principle of tea and the meat extracts that we sometimes use to relieve fatigue. The bodies of young children and of all young animals also contain a large proportion of this xan-thin and when more is added in the form of meat for supper the rest of the child is disturbed and dreams come to break the restfulness of sleep. The bodies of older children and of adults also contain more or less xanthin, but as age advances the quantity grows smaller and in old age there is little xanthin left. This interesting information in regard to xanthin also expplains the characteristic vivacity, alertnes sand energy of childhood and the sobernessor moroseness of old age. Metaphorically speaking, xanthin is the 're of youth and as we grow older we gradually lose our vivacity with our xanthin.

This leads to another explanation, viz: why infants and very young children should not be allowed coffee, tea and Coca-Cola, for these beverages contain a form of xanthin known as caffein, which refreshes the tired nerves and muscles and, therefore, keeps the child awake. Like meat, they are good for adults and are the most efficient and wholesome means of refreshing mind and body, but like meat they disturb the rest of children, for the body of the child already possesses a sufficient supply of xanthin.

This ,in turn, leads to still another explanation for we no wunderstand why tea, coffee and Coca-Cola have the same effect in the relief of fatigue, though they ddiffer so widely in flavor and appearance. We can understand why the human race has come to depend upon these refreshing beverages as the most wholesome and efficient means of combating the injurious effects of physical and mental fatigue.

Desiring that the puublic shall fully understand the composition and character of their product, The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet containing the expert opinions of the world's leading scientists, explaining the wholesomeness and refreshing qualities of this popular temperance drink.

A copy may be had by addressing the Coca-Cola Co., Atlanta, Ga.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

The Catholic Plea

THE DISCIPLES AIM AT CATHOLICITY.

To their way of thinking catholicity is not a treasure possessed and preserved by a single section of Christendom, but it is the essential common denominator underlying the denominational order of the Church.

Approaching the Christian denominations the Disciples do not say: We are catholic, you are not; so you must come to us and share in the catholicity we possess.

On the contrary, they say: You Presbyterians and Methodists and the rest are as truly members of the one holy catholic Church as any one else in Christendom dare claim to be. You are Christians. Your churches are churches of Christ. You and we and all who love our Lord are really one Church. Is it not sad that we allow our denominationalism to obscure this unity and rob us of its power and its joy?

The Disciples ask others to do what they are themselves striving to do: to establish their church life and Christian fellowship on the catholic basis which all share in common, rather than on the denominational basis which all do not and cannot share in common.

The Disciples declare that divisions are rooted in things that are not essential to catholicity, and that the way to unity is to abandon all non-catholic practices which have caused disunion and organize the Church on the basis of the great catholic essentials.

Up to date there has not been brought forward a suggestion for uniting the divided Church which compares in reasonableness or adequacy with this ideal which the Disciples are striving to realize.

We say "striving" to realize, for the better spirits among the Disciples do not presume that this ideal has been perfectly realized in their movement. They have not attained, but they have gone far toward their goal and will go farther.

What, specifically, have the Disciples done to establish their church life on a catholic basis?

First and most obvious of all, they decided that they would wear no denominational name, but the catholic name only. That was a difficult thing to do, for it laid them open to the charge of trying to monopolize the generic name of the church, and by some it was, naturally, interpreted as an affront to the rest of Christendom.

Are not we Christians too? they would ask. Are not we also Disciples of Christ?

To which the reply has been patiently reiterated: You are indeed Christians, and you are in truth Disciples of Christ, and we wish that you would be content, as we are, to be known only as Christians or Disciples.

Secondly, they decided that they would use no denominational creed, but the catholic creed only. They did not condemn the teaching contained in the denominational creeds, nor approve that teaching, but they saw clearly that it was impossible to unite Christ's followers on any such creed. Yet his followers were already united on a creed that was all-sufficient as a basis of fellowship. The divine lordship of Christ himself: that was the catholic creed, and they determined to reject all others.

Thirdly, they decided that they would use no denominational book as possessing any authority in matters of faith or discipline, but would take the catholic book only, the holy Scriptures of the New Testament. By this they did not reflect upon other books of discipline and instruction, but they clearly saw that no other book could command the united allegiance of all Christians.

Fourthly, they decided that they would practice no denominational form of baptism, but only the catholic form of baptism. The Christian world was conscientiously divided over the propriety and validity of sprinkling and pouring in the practice of baptism, but there was no conscientious division over the use of immersion in water. They therefore practiced only immersion.

Likewise, in the fifth place, they decided to administer the communion not in a denominational but in a catholic way. They would not make the Lord's table the symbol of the narrower fellowship of those who belong to a sect, but the symbol of the fellowship of all those who belong to the Lord himself. Open communion is catholic communion. Close communion is denominational communion.

Finally, the Disciples decided not to practice a denominational church-fellowship but a catholic church-fellowship. This, though we name it last, was the first and most controlling purpose of the Disciples' movement at the start. They determined to make "the door into their church as wide as the gate into heaven," to show not only that they had a theoretical basis of Christian unity but that it would actually work when put into practice.

Unfortunately the Disciples forgot this principle when their movement united with the Baptist denomination. And when after nearly twenty years of unabsorbed identity with the Baptists they came out again, they kept on doing what the Baptists, of course, did: they limited their church fellowship to those who were immersed, debarring all others.

In our time, however, the tendency is strong to go back to the original practice. The younger generation of Disciples is taking the principle of catholicity with a new earnestness. They not only discern the logical demand for the adoption of a catholic practice at the church door, but they see that upon the abandonment of a denominational church-fellowship depends their own moral good faith in pleading for unity.

Holding to the principle of catholicity we Disciples earnestly plead with all Christians to co-operate with us in striving to practice it.

We do not ask others to unite with us, but we ask them to abandon every denominational thing that separates them from one another.

When all Christians are ready to do that the problem of Christian unity will solve itself.

The Roomiest Fellowship in Christendom

Address Delivered at the Los Angeles Convention

By CAREY E. MORGAN

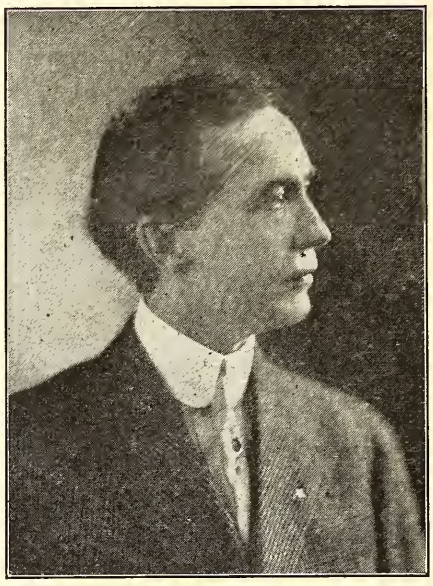
WE who plead for peace must keep the peace among ourselves, or stultify ourselves, and cancel our testimony in behalf of unity. Does this mean that we are never to have any differences of opinion—that when one of us takes snuff, all the rest of us are to sneeze? Who is to lead off in this mighty nasal chorus? I thought we had agreed to disagree about things and unite around the Person. When I came into this fellowship through the influence of O. A. Burgess, I came thinking that my mind should have elbow room—that I should never be cramped or crowded into any pent-up theological Utica—that I should have the right to do my own thinking, and that I should accord to my brethren the same privilege; that I could continue in the liberty wherewith Christ had made me free. Was I wrong about that?

MUST HAVE CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.

There never can be any Christian unity without Christian liberty. The Roman church sacrificed liberty for unity. Protestantism sacrificed unity for liberty. The Apostolic church had unity with liberty, and these were linked together and vitalized by loyalty. That is the trinity of victory, the three in one of fellowship and brotherhood, unity with liberty and loyalty. We are to be left free. If a church prefers a tuning fork to an organ, let it alone. If it chooses to send out and support its own missionary, it is well within its rights. If it wants to make its service formal, even to the extent of having a ritual, who shall say no? If the preacher wants to wear a gown in the pulpit, let him. If a church prefers to send delegates to the conventions of the brethren, surely no other church can forbid it. If it chooses, rather, to withhold credentials from its representatives who may attend the conventions of their own accord, I hope we will continue to receive them as brethren in Christ. Surely there can be no coercion among free disciples, and we will not refuse them participation in the great work unless they agree to a certain plan or method of organization. These are all matters of opinion. They are not questions of faith, and so are not to be made tests of fellowship in the church, or in the missionary society. Is the church loyal to Christ? Does it acknowledge Him to be God's Son? Does it declare its allegiance to Him? These are the vital questions, and this alone should be allowed to affect the fellowship.

NO "GRAVEYARD" PEACE.

No, we will not all think alike. There is nothing of that sort in our plan. We will always have differences of opinion. Nobody wants graveyard peace. Some people act as if an argument had horns and was as destructive as a bull among china. An argument may be Christian and may do good if the men who engage in it are Christians and remember that they are brethren. Differences of opinion are a sign of life. We are a growing people and a progressive people and we are alive, which means that we think—which means that we will not all think alike. It is the unity of the spirit which we must keep in the bonds of peace, if our great plea for peace is to be effective.



Rev. Carey E. Morgan
Pastor Vine Street Church, Nashville, Tenn.

THE REAR GUARD.

There are those who constitute what you will permit me to call the rear guard--the folk who act as if they wanted to stay in the past; who want to go into camp or stay on some ancient mount and build memorials to the fathers. Among these is the "weak brother" we have heard so much about. Shall the slowest men among us determine our gait? Shall we change our great motto, "Where the Bible speaks, we speak," and make it read, "Where the weak brother speaks, we speak, and where he is silent we are silent?" That would be to give "weakness" an immense amount of power. Shall we gauge our progress to suit his uninstructed conscience? Shall we do nothing in order not to displease him? If he is so weak that he wants to lie down, shall we wait while he rests? What shall we do with those whose glory is their weakness? We must not leave them behind if there is any way in the world to help it. We might slow down a bit on their account, but we dare not stop on our Lord's account.

THE VANGUARD.

But our vanguard is as threatening to our peace as our rear guard. These remind me of what Senator Carmack said about Theodore Roosevelt. He said that Mr. Roosevelt was like Tom Bellamy's horse, "whose natural gait was running away." There are among us those who snatch our banner and rush on ahead at break-neck speed. They are committed to unity, as the rest of us are; but they go so fast in the interest of unity that they leave their own brethren behind, but not fast enough to catch up with anybody else. The result is unity in isolation —a sort of disjointed cohesion — an inverted mathematical process of adding by subtracting—a new method of getting the total by division. I like those brethren who are trying to break into the future prematurely. I am sorry that I can have only long distance connection with them. They surely do go up the highest hill in high gear. I would not disparage their minds or their hearts, but, man alive, their legs, how they do use them! But I am not discouraged. I am still in touch with them. When they got so far ahead I could not call to them, I telephoned them, and now I use the wireless. Their speech may sometimes sound to me like the language of Ashdod, but we have one code in common — the language of love. When I communicate with them I use this language, and both of us can understand. Thank God, the wireless instrument in my heart is keyed in tune with all the brethren and distance shall not change or time alloy my good will for them.

THE PRACTICE OF PEACE.

It is with us as it is with the state —our safety and our strength lie in the great middle class. The mass of our brethren are bound together with indissoluble bonds. They love each other and the cause to which they are committed. They will not be tethered to a post on the one hand, or stampeded on the other. If our plea for peace is to be effective, we must keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace, we must "mark those who cause divisions among us."

There is also involved in our historic motto, "In essentials unity, in non-essentials liberty, in all things charity," the obligation to maintain a catholic spirit, and to preserve a Christian attitude toward members of other religious bodies who hold the common faith. I always feel sorry when I see a small man try to fence up heaven, and then stand guard over the little gap he has let down in his man-made fence. There is no place in our movement for narrowness, for bigotry, for the spirit of intolerance, for the iron bedstead, for martyr flames, for Phariseeism, for premature judgment days, or the assumption of judgment authority and prerogatives. Ours is the roomiest fellowship in Christendom, and if we are true to ourselves we have the broadest and most sympathetic outlook. What did our fathers mean by Christian unity? Is there not a recognition of the larger fellowship in the very phrase of the plea? What, then, shall be our attitude toward those of other communions? Shall we speak contemptuously of them, calling them names which we repudiate, and so give intended offense to the very folk to whom we go with offers of peace in the name of the Prince of Peace? Shall we plead for peace belligerently?

If our message is to carry far, we must preserve and exhibit the spirit of good will toward all who love the Lord.

Christian Union and Infant Baptism

From the Watchman-Examiner (Baptist).

We are hearing much in our day about the reunion of Christendom. For this reunion all Christians should pray and work. It ought to be manifest to all thinking people that the only platform on which all Christians can stand together is a Scriptural platform. If union is to come it must be by the process of elimination. All denominations will have to yield non-essential beliefs and practices. Why not cut the Gordian knot? Why not eliminate everything that is un-Scriptural, extra-Scriptural or anti-Scriptural? Who shall be the judge? We shall be willing to rest the case with the consensus of the scholarship of the Christian world, irrespective of denominationalism. We cannot speak for the Baptist denomination, but we unhesitatingly declare that The Watchman-Examiner, with whatever influence it yields, is ready to stand on a Scriptural platform with the Christians of the world. Anything and everything in creed and polity not in accordance with the unmistakable teaching of God's Word we are willing to give up. Will other denominational papers, such as The Continent, The Congregationalist, The Christian Advocate and The Churchman, take the same position? No Christian ought to be satisfied with less; no Christian ought to demand more.

Ought we to have prefaced this plea for the reunion of Christendom on a Scriptural platform with the expression of our opinion on the subject of infant baptism? Have we not prejudiced our case? We hope not; we think not. The reunion of Christendom has been advocated on sentimental and utilitarian grounds. The multiplication of denominations has been ridiculed. and the modern efficiency expert has suggested that the union of churches in a given locality ought not to be more difficult than the union of competing commercial enterprises. The whole argument for the reunion of Christendom on the ground of greater efficiency has come perilously near to the ridiculous. Let us face the questions at issue with open minds and generous hearts. For the sake of union are we willing to give up age-long dogmas and practices if they prove to be un-Scriptural? For instance, if the Scriptures are proved by the weight of scholarship to teach believer's baptism and if it is proved that infant baptism, if it has any support at all, is supported only by inference, would those practising infant baptism openly reject it and openly submit to believer's baptism? We use this merely as an illustration, but it is an illustration to the point. If the Scriptures teach infant baptism, then Baptists ought to practise it, and they ought to be ashamed that they have not practiced it all along. If the Scriptures do not teach infant baptism, then those denominations practicing it ought to cease to practice it, and they ought to be ashamed that they have practiced it all along. Are we willing to take the Bible for our guide and to follow its teachings to the letter?

What Missionaries Do

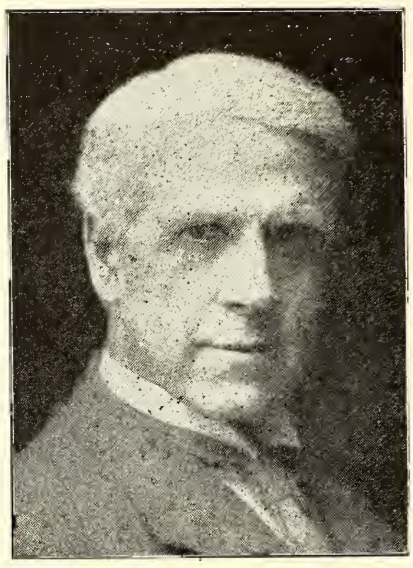
Graphic Portrayal of Missionary Task in the Light of Things Already Accomplished

By ARCHIBALD McLEAN

AT the close of forty years of service it may be profitable to consider what God has done with the Foreign Missionary Society for the furtherance of the gospel and for the glory of his name.

The representatives of the Society have preached the word of truth, the gospel of salvation, in many lands and in many languages. What was said of the apostles can be said of them, "They went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with the signs that followed."

They preached in chapels, schools, hospitals, dispensaries, temples, theaters, tea-houses, on the streets, in the markets, at the public wells, in their homes, wherever they found a soul ready to listen. They made it their aim so to preach the gospel, not where Christ was already named, that they might not build upon another man's foundation.



Archibald McLean
President Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

LESSEN PAIN OF WORLD.

The agents of the society have healed the sick; they have opened the eyes of the blind, caused the lame to walk, ministered to the consumptive, the victims of cholera, typhus, smallpox, blood diseases, elephantiasis. They have brought back the dying from the gates of the grave; in the estimation of many thousands they have raised the dead. They have introduced vaccination and taught the people to "swat the fly" and have done other things to prevent diseases from spreading.

They have lessened the pain of the world and have sweetened life for a great number.

The medical work makes friends for the cause.

The missionaries have opened schools from the kindergarten to the college and university and seminary. The converts are eager to read and write. They want to be able to read in their own tongues the mighty works of God. Evangelists, pastors, teachers, colporteurs, Bible women and church officers must be taught and trained. The children of the believers must be educated. In India, Hindus and Marathis and Mohammedans attend Christian schools and study the same subjects as the children of the Christians. The Bible is the chief text-book, one period of each school day is devoted to its study and to worship. The pupils are taught to sing the great hymns of the church.

ENRICH LIVES OF PEOPLE.

The teaching of science and philosophy and history does much to break down the non-Christian faiths and to enrich the lives of the people. Chemistry and bacteriology are making rubbish of a good deal of hoary and venerable idolatry, and make it easier for the people to understand the Christian religion. A few lessons in astronomy cause the people to smile when they are told that a lunar eclipse is caused by an attempt of the great dragon to swallow the moon. By precept and example the missionaries teach the people the principles of sanitation and hygiene. They make the station clean physically, morally and spiritually.

They teach the people the value of a supply of pure water. They train physicians and nurses to work among their own people. The native physicians and nurses no longer believe that diseases of the liver and of the eyes can be cured by doses of a pork's liver, or that tiger's claws ground into powder and taken internally will give strength to the weak. They no longer puncture the body to let the evil spirit that is causing the trouble out.

UPLIFT OF WOMANHOOD.

The women and girls are gathered into Bible classes and taught of God and Christ, of sin and holiness, of all the things that pertain to the life that now is and the life that is to come. Professor Ross says that the reading of the New Testament exalts a woman in her own eyes and exalts her in the eyes of others. The women are taught domestic science; how to cook palatable dishes for the sick; how to care for their children, how to make their homes attractive and their own lives increasingly noble and beautiful.

The people of India, Japan, China and the Philippines are studying English more and more. They are ambitious to read and to speak English, and they ask the missionaries to teach them. The English lanlanguage is shot through and through with Christian ideas. President Faunce has said that to learn English is to become familiar with terms wrought out by centuries of freedom and Christian faith. In philosophy the student learns the meaning of personality, soul, freedom of the will, conscience; in social science such words as society, responsibility, progress, representative. To learn English is to become familiar with English liberty and law and ethics and religion. One cannot learn English without learning what are the chief treasures of the English-speakng race. The words, God, sin, holiness, eternal life, with their New Testament connotation, convey to the natives of India novel conceptions.

When a Hindu reads in the English Bible that God has made of one all the nations that dwell on all the face of the earth, caste is not regarded as it was before. When a Japanese or a Chinese reads that all have sinned and have come short of the glory of God, he realizes the need of not thinking of himself more highly than he ought to think.

IMPORTANCE OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The Sunday schools number 308, and the enrolled teachers and pupils, 18,077. The Christian Endeavor Societies number 71, and the membership, 4,123. Special emphasis is laid on the Sunday school for the reason that it is much easier to reach the young people than it is to reach their parents. The parents are satisfied and wish no change; the young people are curious and wish to learn.

The missionaries have assisted in the preparation and circulation of literature. They have written books and tracts, translated hymns and other works, edited magazines and weekly papers.

The press has been used with the most gratifying results.

Many forms of benevolent work are carried on by the workers on the field. Boys and girls whose parents are dead or worse than dead are rescued and prepared for lives of usefulness and nobleness. Children that otherwise would develop into thugs and thieves and beggars and become leeches on the body politic are producers and leaders in their community.

The saving and training of these boys and girls give the Hindu, the Confucianist, the Shintoist, the Moslem, and the savage a new idea of the worth of a soul.

The missionaries assist the people among whom they live in time of famine, in time of flood, in time of revolution. They minister to the leper and the beggar. In time of war they co-operate with the Red Cross Society.

The Society's agents have been advocates and leaders in community betterment.

HOW THE WORLD HAS GROWN.

The whole amount received from the first till the last day of last September was $5,748,201.34. The receipts for the first year amounted to $1,706.25; last year to $464,149.16. The first year twenty churches sent offerings to its treasury; last year 3,187 churches sent offerings to its treasury. The first year one Sunday school sent an offering to its treasury; last year 4,122 Sunday schools sent offerings. The Sunday schools have given in all $1,387,412. There has been a steady increase in the receipts year by year from the beginning. There is a determination in the hearts of a great and growing number to do more and more continually.

The Society has sent out 351 men and women in all. Most of these are in harness today. Some have died and some have resigned on account of sickness or for other reasons.

The fields in which the society is at work number 11; stations and outstations, 237; the missionaries, 181; the native workers, 809; schools of all grades, 115; pupils, 5,494, of whom 281 are preparing for the ministry; hospitals and dispensaries, 22; treatments, 181,564; presses, 4; pages printed each year, about six millions.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

Four years ago A. E. Cory came home from China to raise a half million dollars for equipment, enlargement and maintenance. Soon the amount to be raised was increased to a million dollars. The pledges were to be paid in five annual installments. The million-dollar campaign gave the churches a larger vision. They saw the work in a new light and responded worthily. When the million dollars were pledged Mr. Cory led in a campaign to place a thousand new workers in the field in the next five years and to add $6,000,000 to what would otherwise be given for education, missions and benevolence.

The churches need a definite missionary objective to widen their horizon, to deepen their sympathies, and to develop the spirit of sacrificial devotion. They need a program large enough and costly enough to challenge their best efforts. At a time like this when the old faiths are dying slowly or more swiftly, when the idols long worshipped are thrown into the street or into the river, and the temples are changed into schools, and the East is passionately craving for the learning of the West, the people of God should take heart and hope and do far more than they have ever seriously thought of doing.

WHAT THE WAR COSTS.

The last month has brought forward increasingly definite information as to the cost of the war—in men, in munitions and in the increased cost of food-stuffs. A few of the most startling figures may be listed as follows:

Premier Asquith announced in June that Great Britain's expenditure during the next three months would be not less than $15,000,000 daily.

The total cost of the war per day —to all combatants—is about $50,000,000. An amount equal in value to the agricultural lands of America, or to the assets of the Russian Empire, has been expended so far upon the conflict.

The British national debt has more than doubled in one year. Its increase of $4,000,000,000 represents an advance of 113% over last year.

The increase in the price of foodstuffs in England is about 43%. Meat has advanced 40% and fish 25%.

Bread and meat show an increase ranging from 74% down to 10%. Potatoes show an increase of 180%; peas, 200%; lentils, 174%; beans, 152%. One must, of course, allow for natural exaggeration; but from various authoritative statements it seems clear that food in Berlin is 55% dearer than it was in the spring of 1914.

A Seasonable Scene.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE CONVENTION.

ANOTHER annual convention of the Disciples of Christ has passed into history. The gathering at Los Angeles was like most of its predecessors in the sanity, progressiveness and optimism of its utterances and in the harmony of its action.

Each annual convention is preceded by a period of three months or so of acute agitation and apprehension, and everybody goes up to the meeting place wondering what will happen.

But nothing that they feared ever happens!

Probably no Chrisian body in the country holds conventions so evenly harmonious as are those of the Disciples.

It ought to get home to us all by this time that the Disciples are by inherent disposition a forward-going people and that the noisy "anti" and reactionary element among us is a negligible quantity. It is never in at the finish. It makes a loud noise and excites the fear of some because it has a newspaper organ—or better, is a newspaper organ—and a newspaper can make some people think the end of the world is just around the corner.

But the party of reaction among the Disciples never can deliver the delegates.

The people who attend our conventions want progress, order, co-operation, unity. They have demonstrated this too many times to admit of further doubt.

At Los Angeles the question of the delegate principle as applied to our conventions was not even discussed. It was taken for granted as a settled principle. It will continue to be taken for granted and will be the basis of a great development in the coöperative relationship of our churches.

The convention this year was noteworthy in the absence of many leaders to whom we have looked in previous years for guidance in matters of action, and whose utterances are always inspiring and persuasive. But this gave opportunity for many new voices to be heard on the program, and many were the surprises at the notes of leadership and authority which these voices sounded.

Los Angeles and Southern California—and Northern California too, for that matter—made good use of the convention event and the presence of many able speakers in extending the public knowledge of the ideals and hopes of the Disciples of Christ.

THE RIOT OF THE SECOND COMING.

GREAT social and political emotions, like those produced by the present war, afford the ideal psychological opportunity for the prophets of the second coming of Christ to get themselves heard.

We are told that adventism is having a recrudescence in this country. The presses seem to be spawning books on the Revelation and Daniel. It is said that the programs of the summer assemblies like Winona and Northfield are charged with millenarianism. The Billy Sunday revivals are more pronounced and aggressive in their emphasis on the imminent bodily return of our Lord than ever before, and Pastor Russell flourishes like a green bay tree.

The discerning will not be surprised at this. A time such as ours with a world war going on inevitably stimulates unscientific minds to associate the lurid and mysterious imagery of certain portions of the Bible with these events.

So long as the magical idea of the Bible remains with us, the idea that the great proof of the Bible's divinity inheres in its power to predict the future, so long may we expect a repetition of this periodic riot of talk and emotion over the second coming.

There is only one cure for it. Every teacher of religion who is himself emancipated from the magical view of the Scriptures must seek to free other minds from it also. It is a time just now for a revival of critical interest and activity in Bible teaching.

If pastors allow their people and teachers allow their pupils to pursue their Bible study with the uncritical literalism that takes no account of time and place and historical context and meaning of terms they need not be surprised if this method produces a fine crop of millenialists with all the unsocial and fanatical tendencies that are usually associated with that point of view.

MR. ROOSEVELT AND MISS ADDAMS.

COL. ROOSEVELT may be gaining the support of some but he is surely losing the support of many others by his intemperate utterances on peace and war. As between his article in the August Metropolitan and the great address by Miss Jane Addams printed in The Christian Century of last week, we believe the Christian and humane conscience of mankind will instinctively approve the sentiments of the latter.

Miss Addams and Mr. Roosevelt stood together in 1912. They represent opposite views now.

If the development of the campaign of 1916 brings these two into hostile juxtaposition on the platform, with the peace and war issue between them, we predict that the Colonel for the first time in his political life will meet his match.

AN ABSURD TRAGEDY.

MIXED with the horror and grief occasioned by the destruction of a thousand lives, citizens of Chicago feel an almost equal sense of the absurdity of the tragedy.

The Eastland disaster did not happen out on the great lake where the water is deep and the winds are strong and ships sail fast and alone and fate has a free field—there is a certain glory about a Lusitania or a Titanic sinking in mid-ocean.

But this all happened in the Chicago river, in twenty feet of water, in the heart of a great city where thousands of citizens were going by to their work, in the presence of policemen and sailors, with a dozen other boats large and small standing by, and the Eastland herself tied fast to the dock!

There is something so absurd about it, so impossible, that it is difficult to believe it is not all a hideous dream.

But one has only to go out to the vicinity of the Western Electric Company, whose employes filled the Eastland's decks that morning on their way to their annual picnic, to be made sure how terribly real is the impossible story. There for days the people have done nothing but bury their dead. Every other house is in mourning. A score of caskets at a single funeral service is not an infrequent sight.

It does not take much imagination, therefore, for the far away reader to understand the attitude of the people of Chicago toward Secretary Redfield, member of President Wilson's cabinet, who came to this city to make an investigation and commenced by acquitting the builders and the government inspectors of any possible blame.

The disaster is so absurd that Secretary Redfield acts as if it must be chargeable to unseen powers, whether providential or diabolical he does not say.

But all Chicago believes that there is no need of dragging God or devil into it, that it was as clearly a man-made thing as ever happened, and that the human responsibility ought to be traced out and the guilty ones punished.

There has been a great outflow of money and sympathy on the part of the citizens.. Hearts have been opened and love has been doing its invisible work in drawing all lives together in an increasing sense of the common life.

This is the compensation that God makes to men for the sufferings of the innocent.

AN EVEN EXCHANGE.

LAST week it was announced that an Episcopalian clergyman had united with the Disciples of Christ. This week the news comes that Rev. Bernard Gruenstein has passed from the Disciples to the Episcopalians.

Those who like to keep count on such matters may call this an even exchange.

CHRISTIANITY AFTER THE WAR.

YES, there will be a Christianity after the war. Have no fear on that point. The indictment the Church is now undergoing will not weaken the Church; it will strengthen her.

There is a certain wistful longing on the part of churchmen to get at the problem of religion again under the normal conditions of human life. Church leaders feel strongly that when the war is over the church will attack its work with a new eagerness and a new intelligence.

Religion is going to reach the highest mark in history when peace at last is declared.

Christ will come into his own.

He is better loved; his teachings command greater respect; his place in human life is more clearly seen to be unique than ever before.

But it is certain that the orthodox institutionalism that has usurped the place of the Church is doomed to perish in the present world upheaval. The orthodox establishment has broken down. Confronted with the commercialism and jealousies of the nations it has proved itself impotent to do the typical thing the Church is here to do, namely, to maintain and deepen brotherhood.

The orthodox, complacent Church has emphasized things that Jesus cared nothing for—orders and creeds and ceremonies and traditions.

With that Church and with those things the disillusioned world will have little patience when the war is over. We can expect instead an unprecedented development of religion along the lines of social control and personal experience.

Religion after the war will grip the state and the social order with a determination and an insight it never manifested before.

And instead of the formal piety into which Christ's followers had fallen, we may expect new mystical depths of personal experience to be sounded and a new and richer revelation of God than men have known before.

It will be one of the greatest periods in human history.

It will be called the era of the soul.

CUTTING RELIGION TO FIT THE NEED.

PRAGMATISM would find a good argument for itself in British religious life right now. The doctrine of pragmatism is this: that our beliefs depend upon our practical interests and purposes, as contrasted with the traditional doctrine that our practical interests depend upon our beliefs.

English churchmen are mobilizing all the motives of religion they can command in support of the public conscience in the war.

Of course one hears no more the peace note in British preaching, and the note of universal brotherhood is smothered. Anger and hatred toward the Germans is stimulated without apology.

To one detached from the bloody business in which the nations are engaged the question keeps coming up: Are such men as R. J. Campbell, John Clifford, George H. Morrison, W. Robertson Nicoll preachers of the Christian religion or of some other religion?

Take the British Weekly, for example. That paper is accustomed to deal measuredly with whatever subject it touches. But its present style of interpreting everything German is so manifestly biassed by its hatred of Germany that it goes to ludicious extremes. Dr. Nicoll, the editor, recently had an article interpreting Goethe as one of the deeper sources of German militarism!

But the most signal instance was an article, the leading editorial, devoted to this question: What hopes of salvation have non-professng soldiers who die on the battlefield?

The editor labored, and succeeded in making out a good case for the soldier whose patriotism was, in some occult way that we could not quite grasp, accounted to him for righteousness.

The article proved so comforting to thousands of mourning relatives that it was published in tract form by request, and distributed as a campaign document by the recruiting agents.

In ordinary times the British Weekly would have been the last paper in the world to make such an argument.

ONLY GOD IS GREAT.

A certain pasha . . .
. . . had this sentence on the city's gate
Deeply engraven, ONLY GOD IS GREAT.
So those four words above the city's noise
Hung like the accents of an angel's voice.

And evermore from the high barbican,
Saluted each returning caravan.

Lost is that city's glory . . .
And all is ruin—save, one wrinkled gate
Whereon is written, ONLY GOD IS GREAT.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

What Shall be Done With Old Bishops?

The query that went the rounds a few years ago: Shall we shoot old ministers? is agitating the northern Methodists in new form just now. The problem is to know what to do with old bishops. The law recently enacted automatically retired at the first general conference (held every four years), after the bishop reached the age of 65. At the coming general conference Bishop Cranston, aged 74, and Bishop Hamilton, aged 70, are slated for retirement. Bishop Cranston has been specially active and his case is regarded as being specially unfortunate under the new law. Bishop Warren was well into his eighty-second year when he was given the retired relationship.

Swedenborgians Build Cathedral.

A million dollar cathedral is to be erected at Bryn Athyn, a suburb of Philidelphia, by the Church of the New Jerusalem. It is to be a home for Swedenborgians the world over. This church arose from the allegorical interpretations of the Bible by the Swedish scientist, Emanuel Swedenborg. There are less than seven thousand adherents of this sect in America, and probably not twenty thousand in the world, but they have exercised some influence on thought as is seen by the fact that Emerson included Swedenborg in his list of "Representative Men." Swedenborg found three meanings in the Bible, terrestial, spiritual and celestial. He professed to have witnessed the Last Judgment. His treatment of the Bible doubtless influenced the work of Peter Quimby and Mrs. Eddy in Christian Science.

Rev. B. Fay Mills Evangelizes.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, whose return to the church from the speculations of theosophy has already been chronicled, has joined the forces of Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman for the summer and will help in the Tent Evangel, in New York City, conducted by Rev. G. A. McPherson. This would seem to indicate that the former evangelist was returning to his first love, the evangelistic calling.

American Preacher for Ireland.

Several British preachers of eminence have been called to America in recent years and the compliment has been returned by the calling of American preachers to Great Britain. Now Ireland wishes to share in the stimulus of American methods. The famous May Street Presbyterian Church of Belfast has called Dr. Robert Huge Morris, now of Philadelphia and formerly of Evanston, Ill. If he accepts, he will be the third American preacher to fill the pulpit in succession.

Scotch Churches Progress.

Scotland has been regarded as conservative in religious matters. The United Free Church of Scotland has a committee that is dealing with the status of women in the church. This committee has come out in favor of the presence of women in the governing bodies of the congregations as deaconesses. It is further suggested that advisory committees shall be associated with the elders in caring for the spiritual interests of the church. Women who are giving all their time to religious work are to be called "church sisters" if the report of the committee is accepted.

Federation Secretary Grilled.

The Federation of Churches in Chicago, through its executive secretary, has served notice on Mayor Thompson that he is expected to favor Protestant measures because he was elected by a Protestant vote. This action on the part of the federation has met with considerable protest on the part of Chicago Protestants who say it is of a piece with Catholic interference in political matters.

American Catholic Church Organized.

The American Catholic church is the name that has long been desired by the high church element of the Protestant Episcopal communion. This title has now been pre-empted, as the state of Illinois has issued incorporation papers for such an organization, but which has no relation to the Episcopalian movement. The new denomination is composed of Chicago Poles who are breaking away from Rome. The incorporators were the Most Rev. Joseph René, the Rev. René L. Zawistowski and the Rev. F. E. J. Loyd. There are over 400,000 Poles in Chicago, and it is stated that only 75,000 of them are members of either the Roman Catholic church, the Polish National church, or of the American Catholic church.

Fine Calendar for Yale.

The School of Religion, at Yale, is announcing a very attractive program for the coming year. President Wm. DeWitt Hyde will deliver the Lyman Beecher lectures on preaching; the lectures in theology will be given by Prof. Wm. Ernest Hocking, of Harvard; Sir William Mitchell Ramsay, of Edinburgh, will lecture on the History of Religions. Bishop Oldham, of New York, is to give a series of missionary addresses.

A Day's Income for Missions.

The Protestant Episcopal church asked, some time ago, for a day's income from each of its members to cover the missionary deficit. There has been a generous response and up to the present time over $220,000 has been raised. Some have objected to revealing the amount of their day's wage. These are permitted to give more than a day's wage if they so desire.

Criticise World Conference.

The Episcopalian project of calling a world conference on faith and order to be participated in by Catholic, Orthodox and Protestant churches, is meeting with some criticism in Presbyterian quarters. The Episcopalians have called a preliminary conference in January next to consider the plans for the world conference but they will vest all control of the conference in the Episcopalian representatives. This has been termed by a prominent Presbyterian as a "unity program which omits unity."

Preacher Crosses Sectional Line.

The Presbyterians are still divided north and south but the line of division is less significant than formerly. Dr. Robert Keer of Baltimore was a southern man in a northern pulpit. He has accepted a call to become co-editor of The Presbyterian of the South, published at Richmond. On account of his experience in the two communions, it is to be expected that he will powerfully influence the journalism of the southern branch of the communion in favor of corporate reunion.

Eliminating Overlapping.

Not only has there been overlapping in the missionary operations of the various denominations, but there has often been a lack of delimitation of territory of the various societies within the denomination. The Baptists are seriously agitated just now over a duplication of function of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society and of the American Baptist Publication Society. The latter has devoted its profits to certain phases of Sunday school evangelism which have proven competitive to the work of the home mission organization. The Chicago ministers, and later the ministers of St. Paul and Minneapolis, have taken action asking that this conflict be removed.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan Withdraws Resignation.

Sometime ago the report of the resignation of Rev. G. Campbell Morgan of Westminster Chapel, London, was given to the public. It was rumored that the congregation has been in financial difficulities since the war began. The British Weekly now announces that Dr. Morgan has withdrawn his resignation. What changes in the situation have come about to induce him to change his mind have not come to light.

New York Ministers Form Club.

A project is on foot to organize a club of New York ministers. It is proposed that this club shall have quarters in the Presbyterian building. The new organization will be formed when four hundred men have pledged themselves to contribute ten dollars a year to the enterprize. The city federation is pushing the plan through a committee and the personalities behind the movement are Dr. Frederick Lynch, Dr. Frank Mason North and Dr. Walter M. Laidlaw.

Passion Play Leader at Rome.

Some weeks ago, the report became current that the Passion Play leader of Oberammergau were in the German army and the play might not be given in 1920 on account of the death of the actors. It struck the public mind as peculiarly inappropriate that Anton Lang, who has been the Christus for twenty years, should be in a role so different from that of the Prince of Peace. Frau Anton Lang, in a letter to Dr. Gray of the Baptist Standard, reports that her husband is not in the army nor are any of the actors in prominent positions except Alfred Bierling who played the part of St. John.

Lutherans Want a Bishop.

Church government among Lutherans is by no means uniform. The Lutherans of Sweden, Denmark, Norway and Finland have bishops while the church in Germany does not. American Lutherans are congregational in church government. Recently the New England Conference of the Augustana Synod (Swedish) and the Emanuel Synod have made striking announcements in favor of episcopacy. They propose that their bishop shall be an attorney as well as a clergymen, that he may represent the church in the courts. It is argued that the press gives more attention to denominations with dignitaries who are empowered to speak for the whole church.

Shall Baptists Be Endeavorers?

Some Baptist young people are members of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, but far more of them belong to the strictly denominational movement, the Baptist Young People's Union. Howard B. Grose, the eminent Baptist missionary editor, is vice-president of the Christian Endeavor movement. He is asking his denomination to bring all their young people's work into fellowship with Christian Endeavor by organiing the Baptist Union of Christian Endeavor.

The Reckless King

The Lesson in Today's Life.*

Rehoboam had some of the best of Israel's blood flowing in his veins. His early footsteps were guided by the hand of wisdom, and his early life filled with the beautiful things of his day. The court of Solomon had gathered from the great everywhere the treasure of earth. In this luxury the new king was cradled.

Before wealth and prosperity had begun to blind the eyes of Solomon to the higher ideals of life, the boy had a home that gave him great advantages. He must have inherited from his parents some good, strong qualities of mind and body. When in play with his companions, he was their natural leader. He dictated their social activities, and led them in their quest for knowledge. The hope of the father is reflected in his name, which means, "Enlarger of his people."

IRONY IN HIS NAME.

Like many men whose ancestors have given them a rich inheritance, he failed, and by a strong irony of fate he became in reality the diminisher of his people.

In a city situated in the flood district of Ohio stands the "hull" of a once beautiful home. The flames devoured all but the walls in the midst of a torrent of water. A striking picture of ruin, and a suggestion of the wreck of a man standing in the midst of every influence intended to check, in his life, the destroyers' power.

In many ways he had an unfavorable environment for the highest type of manhood. The sons of kings and rich men have many disadvantages. They are peculiarly tempted, by unscrupulous men and women, to wrong doing. Their leisure accorded them by their easy circumstances furnishes time for idle and harmful thought. Their companions, also, live on "Easy Street," and are content with the glitter and show of life, wholly unmindful of the higher reaches of soul within their grasp. Thus, "the blind lead the blind, and they both fall in the ditch" of undeveloped manhood and womanhood.

There are some very interesting examples of rich men's sons who have turned out well. In my college days I was well acquainted with a young man who had the resources of a wealthy father at his command, and who as a matter of choice was as economical in the use of money as other boys whose mothers were washing to keep them in school. Our environment is very largely a matter of choice, and we may choose the elements of life or death from it.

THE POWER OF CHOICE.

Rehoboam had the power of choice. God has given every one a free will, and the will is the king on the throne of our life. It is the rudder that finds a course for the ship; the guide that leads to life or death. Rehoboam chose the counsel of the wrong class of men and because of it called down upon his head the wrath of the larger and more progressive portion of his father's kingdom.

Every man has within him a kingdom of royal possibilities; by taking counsel of the experienced he can realize all that God has cherished for his life.

Two boys came to Chicago. The one chose his companions from the men who swear, who are given to strong drink, and who are irreligious. The other found his friends among those whose speech is pure; whose lips never touch strong drink; and whose religion is pure and manly. The one spent his leisure hours in the pool-room, the public dance hall, and the saloon; the other man spent his in the art galleries, the wonderful libraries, and the beautiful temples of the living God. The choices of the one man were stepping stones hellward, while the choices of the other man were stepping stones heavenward.

Which way are YOU going?

Disciples Table Talk

Remarkable Three Years' Record in Cincinnati Church.

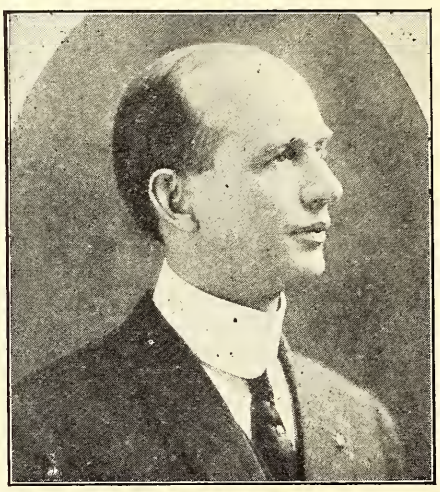
When Pastor C. R. Stauffer went into his pulpit at Norwood Church, Cincinnati, the last Sunday in July he found that a great arch had been erected over the desk and decorated heavily with flowers as a way of marking the beginning of his fourth year as pastor of the church. During the past year, 143 new members have been added to the church; 540 new scholars enrolled in the Sunday School. Over 1,200 calls were made by the pastor; 16 funerals were conducted and 20 weddings were solemnized. A total of 445 new members have been added during the three years; over fifteen hundred added to the Sunday School; about 4,000 calls made; 50 funerals conducted and 40 marriages solemnized; a new church erected and about $30,000 raised for all purposes. Mr. Stauffer has greater plans for his church for the future.

Southern California Convention Reports Progress and Enlarges Plans.

The annual convention of the Southern California churches was held on the three days prior to the opening of the General Convention at Los Angeles. The reports showed that four new churches have been established during the past year. They are located at Barstow, Brea, Niland and Pasadena. About $11,000.00 was paid into the state treasury during the year and $1,700.00 in pledges is still unpaid. Secretary F. M. Rogers was reëlected. A fund of $12,000 was provided for by pledges taken at the convention for the new year's work. Mr. C. C. Chapman pledged $1,200 of this amount. Mr. W. I. Holt of Holtville was another leading contributor. It was resolved to organize a training school for Christian workers in Los Angeles, and B. C. Hagerman, formerly president of Campbell-Hagerman College in Kentucky, was chosen to lead in this enterprise.

Straight From the Shoulder Political Preaching.

As an example of straight-from-the-shoulder speech the sermon of L. J. Marshall at Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City, takes high rank. An iniquitous personal contest has been going on in the city hall for some time and the better citizens of the city are out of patience with it. In introducing his discussion of local and state political affairs Mr. Marshall said: "I am opposed to the Church entering the field of politics as a political factor, but I am firm in the conviction that it should be the mission of the Church to do those things which make for civic righteousness. It is the duty of the Church to stand for the uplift of the community and it cannot shirk its duty when servants in public office ignore the wishes of the people who elected them and put in their time playing petty politics and indulging in personalities at the expense of the taxpayers. Kansas City, potentially, is the best city in the United States," he continued, "but its reputation as a decent community is being jeopardized by such conduct by its city officials. The men who are now holding office in the city hall are not representative of the citizenship of this city—and I expect I voted for most of them—but I will never do so again. Do you think men are capable of spending millions of your money who misbehave as the officials of the city hall have been doing? They are showing themselves to be unfitted to hold public office. And the members of the church have a duty to perform now. They must set higher ideals than are now being exemplified by our city officials who are engaged in this disgraceful row. These officials have betrayed your confidence; they do as they please in the council halls which have been dedicated to public use. Whisky is being sold near schools and in residence districts; streets are in bad repair; the bonds have been voted for but have not been sold—and the disgraceful quarrel still goes on at the city hall. Are there any conditions which need the attention of Christians more than these?



President F. W. Burnham of the American Missionary Society, Made His First Report at Los Angeles Convention.

Put to rout this system which has made bad public servants and purify our local politics by electing men to office who will serve the people!"

Mother of Well-Known Missionary Passes On.

First Church, Lincoln, Nebr., is saddened by the death of Mrs. T. J. Drummond, who with her husband has been for many years active and very helpful members there. Mrs. Drummond's passing has interest for the entire brotherhood of Disciples through the fact that her son, Dr. C. C. Drummond, has been for seventeen years a medical missionary under the Foreign Society in India. Dr. Drummond has earned for his work high commendation from the British government. The mother is described by those who knew her as a woman of noble and saintly character, finding her chief joy in ministries of helpfulness and in the work of the church.

A Lively Church and Sunday School.

The Sunday School of East Creighton Avenue Church, Fort Wayne, Ind., Edward H. Clifford, pastor, has made an increase in its average attendance for the first six months of the year of 31, and there has been a net increase in the church membership of 50. The Sunday School has exceeded its apportionment for both Easter and Children's Day offerings. The men's class has built and paid for a tabernacle, having outgrown their quarters in the Sunday School room. The Christian Endeavor society was represented at the Chicago convention by the pastor and five of its active members. A class in "Expert Endeavor" has been graduated, and the society had a handsome float in the Fourth of July temperance parade and observance at one of the city parks. One of the young women of the Endeavor society is planning to go to the foreign field. Six hundred dollars has been pledged and is being paid through the calendar club plan upon the building debt. A definite effort to conserve the good results of the recent Lyon evangelistic campaign and the local meeting which followed is being made under the direction of the pastor. Prayer meetings twice a month in the homes are proving helpful. The East Creighton church is in southeastern Fort Wayne and is made up almost entirely of road and shop men of the railroads passing through the city.

A Dream or a Nightmare?

A local paper at Paris, Mo., has the following which the pastor, Mr. Shively, believes is good enough to pass on: "In the course of a very practical and timely sermon at the Baptist church Sunday night Rev. E. B. Shively, pastor of the Christian Church, told of a dream he had dreamed the night before and painted in glowing terms the vision he saw of a community like Paris gathering in one house of worship for its religious services and spending the balance of its funds for an institutional building in which old and young could meet together for recreation, pleasure and profit. An orthodox sister who saw in this recital a sly bid for a Church union that would eliminate her own militant sect, remarked to him after the benediction, "That was no dream, Bro. Shively; it was just a nightmare."

Churches Serve Communities by Installing Playgrounds.

Two churches, Centralia, Mo., C. H. Swift, pastor, and Central, North Tonawanda, N. Y., Geo. H. Brown, pastor, have taken up the playground idea this summer. Lots adjoining the church, in each case, have been put to use for the purpose of providing amusements for the children of the community. Apparatus of the most improved type has been installed and supervision by competent persons provided. This is community service of a visible and convincing sort.

—For the third season Dean W. J. Lhamon, of Drury College Bible School, will be Bible lecturer at the Clarinda, Ia., Chautauqua this summer. The Clarinda Chautauqua is one of the best in the West.

—The friends of Professor William Watkins Frost will be pained to learn that he was instantly killed on Sunday, July 25, 1915, by an electric shock in his home at Mankato, Minn., where he was the very successful and greatly beloved teacher of English in the State Normal School. He leaves a wife, Mrs. Bessie Grable Frost, a son Dwight, aged fifteen, and a daughter Winifred, aged eleven. His mother, Mrs. A. P. Frost, and his sister, Adelaide Gail Frost, also survive him.

—Parkland Church, Louisville, Ky., dedicated a new house of worship July 25. George L. Snively assisted the pastor, Delaware W. Scott. The sum of $5,000 was needed to meet the indebtedness and $8,900 was raised. The church was established as a mission in 1888 by the First Christian church, of which Dr. E. L. Powell is pastor. It has steadily grown in membership and now has a roll of 375 members.

—Bethany Assembly at Bethany Park, near Indianapolis, is now in session and will continue until Aug. 27.

—Sunday morning, July 18, J. F. Messenger occupied the pulpit of First Church, Canton, O., speaking on the subject, "The Call of Japan." Mr. Messenger graduated from Phillips Bible Institute in June. He is a member of the Canton church. On August 23 he and his wife will go to Japan, where they will be associated with W. D. Cunningham in the Independent Mission at Tokio. At the close of the morning address the church presented Mr. and Mrs. Messenger a purse of $180.

—McPherson, Kan., church has decided to build a new house of worship.

—C. C. Rowlison, Congregational pastor of La Crosse, Wis., preached on a recent Sunday for Third Church, Indianapolis, of which T. W. Grafton is pastor. Mr. Rowlison was formerly pastor of Third Church and was heartily welcomed by his former flock.

—Dr. Herbert Martin, professor of philosophy in Drake University, is supplying Dr. Meadbury's pulpit at University Church, Des Moines, Ia., during the pastor's vacation.

—B. A. Abbott, pastor Union Avenue Church, St. Louis, was summoned to Roanoke, Va., by the illness of his brother, Frank L. Abbott, whose death occurred shortly after Mr. Abbott's arrival. The St. Louis pastor is remaining in the East for his summer vacation. His pulpit is being supplied by his colleague Disciple pastors in St. Louis.

—E. F. Leake, new pastor at Independence, Mo., was given a reception by his congregation the last week in July. A large company of church and townspeople made the occasion one of great inspiration to the new pastor. L. J. Marshall, of Kansas City, former pastor of the church, and W. F. Richardson of First Church, Kansas City, attended and brought greetings.

—Basil S. Keusseff, leader of the mission work among the Bulgarians and Russians of Chicago, reports that a church is about to be organized in Lorn, Bulgaria, by Kyro Kristoff, a young man whom Mr. Keusseff led to the truth in Western Pennsylvania. This is the third church to be planted in Bulgaria by immigrants who have returned to their native land.

—John H. Booth of the Church Extension Board, supplied the pulpit of Central Church, Terre Haute, Ind., last Sunday in the absence of the pastor, J. Boyd Jones.

—Mrs. Louise Loos Campbell, state secretary of the Kentucky Women's Missionary Society, calls attention to the extraordinary program to be offered by the women at the state convention, Madisonville, Sept. 21. The women expect a large attendance this year to match their excellent program.

—All the national secretaries were present at Los Angeles except F. M. Rains of the Foreign Society, who has been in Texas and Colorado for several months recovering his health. The good report was given out that Mr. Rains will be back in the office in Cincinnati by Sept. 11.

Features of Los Angeles Convention

W. F. Richardson Elected President of Next Year's General Convention.

W. F. Richardson, pastor First Church, Kansas City, was elected president of the General Convention for the coming year. Edgar D. Jones of Bloomington, Ill., first Vice-president; Mrs. O. H. Grist, Carlisle, Ind., second vice-president; Fred'k D. Kershner, Ft. Worth, Tex., third-vice-president; Graham Frank, Liberty, Mo., corresponding secretary; Stephen Zendt, Bloomington, Ill., treasurer; W. E. Crabtree, San Diego, and E. B. Bagby, Baltimore, recording secretaries.

Des Moines was chosen as the next place of meeting and the time about the middle of October, 1916.

The address of President Walter M. White on the first Sunday evening of the convention was received with great satisfaction. There was no voice raised in the convention in criticism of the delegate principle, all present having apparently taken it for granted that the General Convention as an orderly and representative body is an established institution. More than 500 delegates from churches were present.

The total registration of visitors and delegates was more than 3,000, and it is estimated 2,000 more were in attendance who did not register. Nearly every state was represented. Missouri led with 180 registered. More than 800 came from outside of California. The attendance surpassed the most optimistic expectations. In the recent Northern Baptist convention at Los Angeles it was said that only 275 were from outside of California.

General Convention Adopts Budget for 1915-16.

The missionary and benevolent budget of the Disciples of Christ for next year as adopted by the General Convention at Los Angeles calls for a total fund of $630,000 to be raised by the churches and be divided as follows: National Benevolent association, $45,000; Christian women's board of missions, $110,000; American Christian Missionary society, $125,000; ministerial relief, $35,000; Church Extension, $45,000; Foreign Christian Mission society, $165,000; Christian Union Commission, $15,000; Board of Education, $75,000, and American Temperance Board, $15,000.

This budget refers to churches only and does not include individuals gifts, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor offerings etc., all of which are directed according to the option of the giver to the society of its choice. The apportionment plan, inaugurated last October by the Atlanta convention, met with hearty response from 249 churches in the first nine months of the year the amount offered by these churches being $67,964 or about one-tenth of the entire general budget.

This is counted as a good beginning. Systematic instruction will be provided the churches to show them the superior value of symmetrical giving to all the organized agencies of the brotherhood. It is expected that the number of churches coöperating in the budget plan will grow from year to year.

The Convention voted to leave in the hands of the various societies the task of mailing the joint apportionment to the churches and that the expense of so doing be borne by the societies. This work has been done by the Secretary of the General Convention the past year.

The report of the treasurer of the General Convention shows the following figures: Receipts for the year, $5 304; disbursements, $4,571; on hand June 30, 1915, $688; due from societies and boards, June 30, 1915, $244.

It was decided that the expenses of the General Convention be hereafter paid by the registration fees collected at the annual gatherings instead of by the various societies as has been the case for the past two years. It was suggested that the registration fee be changed from 50c to $1 henceforth.

The Incomes of the Missionary and Benevolent Societies.

While all the Societies presented reports they were not conclusive as to financial statements on account of the year not having come to an end. In round numbers the Men and Millions Movement reported $2,500,000 already pledged toward the $6,000,000 fund. This includes Mr. R. H. Long's initial and conditional pledge of $1,000,000. The Woman's Board, the American Society and the Foreign Society report decreases in income as compared to this date last year. For the Benevolent Association Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, treasurer of the association, read the report of finances, showing that more than $96,000 had been received in the first eight months of this fiscal year. C. C. Garrigues, secretary of the board, read his annual report, in which it was shown that more than $1,000,000 has been spent by the organization. The association maintains hospitals, orphans' homes and homes for aged in various parts of the country. W. R. Warren reported that the Ministerial Relief fund will reach $40,000 this year, which is about the same as last year. Church Extension has suffered a slight decrease.

Former Secretary of State Excites Enthusiasm.

William J. Bryan was in Los Angeles at the time of the convention and accepted an invitation to speak on Friday afternoon. He spoke on "The First Commandment," declaring that we have set up many false Gods who rival the true God. He named nine: Gold, Fashion, Fame, Ease, the Intellectual God, Travel, Chance, Passion, Drink. Introduced by Mr. C. C. Chapman, Los Angeles as "a statesman who believes righteousness exalts a nation," Mr. Bryan began his address by saying his opportunity to speak at the Disciples of Christ convention was a fitting conclusion to his stay in Southern California, for it afforded him a chance to speak on a subject near to his heart and one which his audience was in a responsive and receptive mood to hear. Prior to the beginning of his speech, while the audience was yet applauding his appearance, Mrs. Bryan was observed and brought to the platform to stand at the side of her husband as he was being given the ovation. Her appearance was the signal for more thunderous hand-clapping and cheering. An elderly woman tossed toward the platform a drooping bunch of carnations, which was conveyed to Mrs. Bryan, and it was several minutes before quiet could be restored. Then "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," was sung.

Mr. Bryan reminded his audience that he was a church member, a Presbyterian, although, he confessed, he did not know, until he was thirty-one years old, that the branch of the Presbyterian church he joined when he was fourteen was not the regular Presbyterian church. My wife and I belong to the Presbyterian church," he said. "But for convenience, at home, we attend the Methodist church. One of my three children belongs to the Episcopal church, another belongs to the Methodist and the third belongs to the Baptist. And if my grandchildren spread out among the other churches, the Bryan family will be pretty well represented among the various creeds."

Presbyterian Pastor Sounds Strong Union Note.

The closing session of the Convention on Sunday evening was conducted by the commission on Christian Union with Carey E. Morgan, of Nashville, presiding. Perry J. Rice of El Paso delivered the convention sermon at this sermon, choosing for his topic "On Being Christians." It was a masterful interpretation of essential Christianity as contrasted with institutionalism and intellectualism. Rev. Matt. S. Hughes, Methodist pastor of Pasadena, and Rev. Robert J. Coyle, Presbyterian pastor of Fullerton, Cal., also spoke. Dr. Coyle said some striking things on Christian unity:

"Denominational colleges and literature will have to be sacrificed if we are to have one great church of Christ," declared the speaker in addressing the delegates of the Christian chruch. "There is nothing more inconsistent than to appoint a committee to consider union while insisting on building sectarian schools for the education of the young. While preaching the obliteration of denominational lines we are putting denominational literature in the homes and the Sunday schools, thus prejudicing the minds of the young in a way which is blocking at the very start the growth of our propaganda of union.

"We will have to make use of the ax and knife and do a great deal of cutting away before we can hope for real results in our preachment of a united church. I say this wishing to be unmistakably clear and specific. By Christian union I mean an organic union, but it is not necessary that we should all be cut after the same pattern and sewed on the same machine.

"I believe that there should be a United States of the church. In the United States of America we have an organic union, which leaves to the individual states all the local freedom they could reasonably ask for, and the integral parts are combined to make one national life. So it should be with the church. The same blood currents in the patriotism of those who live hard by Plymouth Rock and those who dwell in the city by the Golden Gate. Likewise, all Christians owe an identical loyalty to Christ.

"But we must do something more than talk about union. Courting has the promise of closer relations later on, but it is not union. We should not encourage division of missionary territory among the denominations. There can be no sectarian zones of influence where Jesus is king. All fences must be smashed to smithereens and the debris scattered to the winds.

"Economy of administration demands union. The present divisions result in gross extravagance of the king's money and the king's men. When I visit a country town of 2,000 inhabitants I am not surprised to see half a dozen churches, struggling one and all for existence and forever begging for funds, whereas one evangelical church would meet all demands."

The President Sustained.

The General Convention sent the following message to President Wilson:

"Our hearts are still grieving over the awful destruction of human life in the great war now in progress, but we believe that Almighty God has a service for our Nation to perform in providing a more permanent basis for peace and in making the civilizations of the world more thoroughly Christian.

"Therefore, be it resolved, that we commend our President, Woodrow Wilson, for his sanity, his patience and for his faith in God, and that we continue our ministry of intercession for him and for the cause of world peace."

Discuss Japanese Immigration Freely.

Without restraint or caution two speakers at Los Angeles entered freely into a discussion of the Japanese immigration problem. It was a delicate thing to do on the Pacific Coast. Rev. M. B. Madden, missionary to Japan said:

"I have been in Japan twenty years and read their newspapers and magazines and have a pretty good knowledge of the national psychology of the Japanese people, and I am sure that Mr. Blythe, who only spent a few weeks in Japan and had no opportunity of addressing the mission except by the very unsatisfactory way of an interpreter, did not discover the real Japanese aspiration when he said: "Japan wishes to unite the yellows against the whites." I am sure that I have sounded the real Japanese feeling when I say: They would unanimously welcome the opportunity of allying themselves with the western nations in all things rather than to head a yellow alliance. To the California people I would like to say that Japanese do not wish any special treatment, but that they be treated like other foreigners. They would gladly heed any financial or educational test for citizenship in this country. Our work in Japan is often hindered by the unfair treatment of the people of the Pacific Coast, and we hope that a righteous and fraternal treatment will be given to Japan."

Pres. F. W. Burnham, of the American Christian Missionary Society said: "We hear much of the honor accorded to Great Britain for going to war because of the violation of the rights of Belgium, but how about our treaty responsibilities as towards China and Japan? What is to be said of a nation that permits one of its states to disregard treaty rights of a friendly nation? What is to be said for Canada, that holds a shipload of Hindus out at sea and does not permit them to land, British subjects though they are, whose fellows are now fighting in the trenches of the Allies. When this war ends, we shall have no more of exclusion, either here or in Canada. North America is to be the home of all who want to come to it and live here under the advantages of Christian civilization and political liberty. I know and love Californians and I love my native land, but I do not want any people of the earth to be deprived of the blessings of life here if they desire it."

THE FINANCES OF THE AMERICAN SOCIETY.

Extract from the Sixty-Fifth Annual Report Made at Los Angeles.

The table of receipts for nine months shows a total of $103,825.00, which is a decrease, compared with last year amounting to $11,665.68. Notwithstanding the decrease in total receipts, it is not nearly so much as it was last year at this time as compared with the nine months of the preceding year, 1913. This is encouraging and gives us reason to hope that in the next three months our churches and Sunday-schools may send in sufficient funds to cancel the loss and permit the American Christian Missionary Society to report a gain at the close of the year.

At the Atlanta convention your Board reported an accumulated indebtedness of $44,232.96, to which sum the debt of the previous year of $70,140.91 had been reduced by the transfer to the general fund of Annuity and Contingent funds. During the nine months from October 1 to June 30, the receipts from churches show a loss of $5,811.38; from Sunday-schools, $6,288.34 and from individuals, $5,286.49.

Soon after the Atlanta Convention, in keeping with its recommendation, your Board undertook to inaugurate a campaign for eliminating this standing indebtedness by securing Life Memberships at $100 each. This campaign, however, was no more than tentatively begun until protest was made by the leaders of the Men and Millions Movement that this was an infringement, if not of the letter at least of the spirit, of the agreement into which our society had entered with that great Movement. Accordingly your Board withdrew at once from the field of solicitation, leaving its debt to be carried until the consummation of the Men and Millions Movement or reduced by other means. Since this indebtedness, with its accruing interest, is a constant hindrance to the progress of the work of the American Christian Missionary Society, your Board determined upon the only course left to it, namely, that of a drastic retrenchment and reduction of appropriations all along the line.

Some seven of its agents and missionaries were released into other service, administration expenses were reduced and carefully guarded, appropriations on all new contracts were cut, so that reductions aggregating more than $10,000 on the current year were effected. This course was not at all in keeping with the ideas your Board has regarding missionary service in our great home land at this time; but it was found that our appropriations alone, made in response to insistent demands from many fields, were in excess of the annual receipts from the churches by more than $10,000. To this must be added the operating expenses of the society with its several departments, commissions and agencies, so that our total deficit July 1 is $77,401.88. Prohibited from soliciting individual gifts, and with this heavy indebtedness to be carried, retrenchment was the only course open until the offerings from our churches shall equal the demands from the field.

—Dr. Charles Reign Scoville was advertised at Los Angeles as "the Billy Sunday of the Disciples." He conducted noonday meetings every day in the First Methodist Church during convention week.

—"The every member canvass is Christian science spelled with a small s—an orderly, systematic, whole-hearted method of Christianizing the church for the world's sake." This was the central thought in Edgar De Witt Jones' address on the Every Member Canvass Session of the Men and Millions Movement at Los Angeles.

NEWS OF THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

The Sunday school at Oakley, Cincinnati, Ohio, send their first Children's Day offering of $27.69. This is a new school and this is a splendid offering.

Miss Jessie J. Asbury, of Sendai, Japan, says: "The National Sunday-school Convention was held in Sendai the first four days of April. Japan's best Sunday-school workers and singing evangelists (all native) attended this convention. Mr. R. A. Doan was called to Sendai to speak at the Concention. My helpers and I made many calls in preparation for Mr. Doan's three days' meetings here. While the audiences were

The First Christian Sunday school of Kansas City, Mo., sends $200, doubling their apportionment.

William Bright, Bellaire, Ohio, writes: "The offering in the Sunday school on Children's Day was $175. It is not all in yet. Think it will go over $200."

S. J. Corey, Secretary.

WHEN I WAS LITTLE.

When I was little, if a cloud
  Came on my mother's brow,
I could not run away and play.
  I sorrowed, too, for how Could one be happy when she grieved,
  Or laugh, she wept the while.
Does not the child's whole world of joy
  Lie in the mothers' smile?

So I would hang about, in mute
  Alarm at cheeks so pale,
Until she asked, "What, Dollie dear?"
  (Ah, mothers never fail!)
And then, scarce knowing how to put
  In words the fear that clung,
I'd say, "Sing, Mother, sing." Was she
  Not happy when she sung?

Only in dreams I hear it now,
  Sweet voice that used to rise,
Singing to still the anxious heart,
  And troubled childish eyes.
Oh, Mother mine! Oh, Mother mine!
  The child thought you were glad,
Oh, do you know that she has learned
  You sang when you were sad?

—Elizabeth West Parker.

COMMENTS OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

St. Louis Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents.

The Christian Intelligencer (Reformed)
The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal.

Zion's Herald (Methodist, Boston)
Dr. Morrison who is editor of The Christian Century, a national organ of the Disciples of Christ—a denomination which believes in immersion—handles with utmost frankness the position of his own denomination relative to baptism. The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of this leading publication in that denomination. Dr. Morrison's work is frankly done, and while arousing, doubtless, some criticism among those of his own denomination and the close communion remnant still to be found in certain localities, will be heartily received as a genuine contribution toward Christian unity.

The Advance (Congregationalist)
We commend this book to pastors who find the baptismal question up for discussion in the parishes. It is a strong contribution to the literature of the subject and we believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt. We do not think it possible for them permanently to hold to close baptism without going the whole length of the Baptists and join close communion to it.

The Epworth Herald (Methodist)
While not agreeing with all the statements made it is about the most interesting book on the subject I have seen. The author is master of good, clear English and knows how to express himself.

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination)
He presents his thought from a new and interesting standpoint. We wish it might be read by all Disciples, all Christians, all Baptists, and in fact by all denominations—it will have a. moulding effect as to one's opinions of baptism. The Disciples' themselves will likely get the most good from the book. Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God.

The Continent (Presbyterian)
It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity for immersion, and he writes that "the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever, stands behind the practice of immersion." Instead, in the New Testament, baptism simply means the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian. He is strongly against demanding the rebaptism of Christian believers who apply to Baptist or Disciples churches for membership having been accepted in other churches by any mode of baptism whatever. Equally he opposes infant baptism, because the subject of baptism must be voluntary. At the root of his argument lies a sound desire for Christian unity.

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren)
The author is clear and candid, brave and kind in performing the task to which he assigned himself. . . . As we view the real meaning of this new interpretation of baptism it involves a complete abandonment of the dogma of immersion, and may lead to a new adjustment of attitude on that subject on the part of other immersionist bodies. At any rate, the significance of the work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement.

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Dr. Morrison belongs to what might be called the younger school of Disciples who have the discretion and the will to approach the members of other churches, not with the club of intolerance and pseudo-omniscience, but with the open hand of intellectual catholicity and good will. . . . The propaganda could not wish for a leader more truly representative. A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few. This book gives one evidence. The significant fact is that the author is a member of an immersion church, once commonly called "Campbellites," and while he holds to immersion as the correct mode of baptizing, yet he declares, "It would be too much to say, dogmatically, that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." The book is well worth reading, not only for its scholarly treatment of the question of baptism, which is satisfactory, but as an example of true liberality in modern church life, a liberality which is not degrading and flat, but catholic, appreciative and noble.

The Christian Endeavor World.
A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view but building a bridge toward the affusionist view.

The Congregationalist
A daring and splendidly Christian piece of work is "The Meaning of Baptism," by Charles Clayton Morrison, in which the author frankly asserts that Jesus "had no intention of fixing a physical act upon his followers. He did not have in mind the form of baptism but the meaning of it." Nevertheless, for historic reasons he recommends retaining the form of immersion.

The Baptist Banner
A new book of more than ordinary interest. It is learned, and, is written in excellent spirit and fine style. It is eminently suggestive and well worth the price and a careful reading.

The Meaning of Baptism

By Charles Clayton Morrison.

Regarded by both friends and critics as the most significant contribution made to the baptism problem since the debate between Alexander Campbell and N. L. Rice. Do not let your opinion of this book be formed at second hand. It deserves your own careful reading.

The Christian Observer (Presbyterian)
It is a courageous man who will undertake to write a book on the subject of baptism in this age of the world . . . This book has stirred up considerable controversy in the writer's church. By many he is regarded as a heretic and is abused accordingly. However, in other respects the author is true to Disciples' sentiments. The chief value of the book lies in the author's contention that New Testament baptism is not tied to any physical act, but is "the spiritual, social act of self-commitment and self-consecration by the individual and his induction into the church." This idea, by the way, is very forcefully expressed in an old document that was formulated by the Westminster Assembly more than two centuries and a half ago when they said, "Baptism is a sacrament. . . whereby the parties baptized are solemnly admitted into the visible church and enter into an open and professed engagement to be wholly and only the Lord's."

The Standard (Baptist)
The argument throughout is good and there are conclusions that are worthy of careful consideration.

The Christian Union Quarterly (Disciple)
The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines. . . However one may differ from the author there is much in this book to be commended from both the Baptist and paedo-baptist sides of the house.

The Churchman (Episcopal)
Under the title "The Meaning of Baptism," Mr. C. C. Morrison has given an interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism. The Disciples, to whose fellowship Mr. Morrison belongs, practice rebaptizing for those who have not been immersed. Mr. Morrison is not in sympathy with this position. He shows that baptism by immersion has figured little in the divisions of the church and will doubtless likewise figure little in its unity.

Baptist Standard (Dallas, Tex.)
This is a very interesting work, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this summer!

The Homiletic Review
A volume on this subject with an irenic purpose by the editor of The Christian Century is welcome. The position taken is that while immersion is the valid mode of baptism the doctrine or dogma "eclipses the great objective task of the church for large majorities of Disciples and Baptists." Baptism has its essence not in the mode of administration, but in that it means "the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian" (p. 193). While, then, the volume is a plea for the adoption of immersion as a mode universally recognized as regular, the practice of rebaptism with its implication that Presbyterians, Methodists and others are not Christians is to be reprobated. Members should pass freely from these other churches to those of Baptists and Disciples without calling into question or ignoring their status as already members of the Church of Christ.
The spirit of the book is delightful and raises new hopes where none had seemed possible.

The Presbyterian Advance
The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which often has been asked of him by correspondents and readers—"What is the best book on baptism?" . . . Against all who insist that immersion and immersion only is baptism this book provides an unanswerable argument.

The United Presbyterian
An unusual book. Written by a Disciple and the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion. He says the use of the word "baptizo," in its New Testament usage, refers primarily to the function of initiation and only incidentally to the particular [physical] act.

The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal.

Zion's Herald (Methodist, Boston)
Dr. Morrison who is editor of The Christian Century, a national organ of the Disciples of Christ—a denomination which believes in immersion—handles with utmost frankness the position of his own denomination relative to baptism. The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of this leading publication in that denomination. Dr. Morrison's work is frankly done, and while arousing, doubtless, some criticism among those of his own denomination and the close communion remnant still to be found in certain localities, will be heartily received as a genuine contribution toward Christian unity.

The Advance (Congregationalist)
We commend this book to pastors who find the baptismal question up for discussion in the parishes. It is a strong contribution to the literature of the subject and we believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt. We do not think it possible for them permanently to hold to close baptism without going the whole length of the Baptists and join close communion to it.

The Epworth Herald (Methodist)
While not agreeing with all the statements made it is about the most interesting book on the subject I have seen. The author is master of good, clear English and knows how to express himself.

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination)
He presents his thought from a new and interesting standpoint. We wish it might be read by all Disciples, all Christians, all Baptists, and in fact by all denominations—it will have a moulding effect as to one's opinions of baptism. The Disciples' themselves will likely get the most good from the book. Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God.

The Continent (Presbyterian)
It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity for immersion, and he writes that "the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever, stands behind the practice of immersion." Instead, in the New Testament, baptism simply means the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian. He is strongly against demanding the rebaptism of Christian believers who apply to Baptist or Disciples churches for membership having been accepted in other churches by any mode of baptism whatever. Equally he opposes infant baptism, because the subject of baptism must be voluntary. At the root of his argument lies a sound desire for Christian unity.

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren)
The author is clear and candid, brave and kind in performing the task to which he assigned himself. . . . As we view the real meaning of this new interpretation of baptism it involves a complete abandonment of the dogma of immersion, and may lead to a new adjustment of attitude on that subject on the part of other immersionist bodies. At any rate, the significance of the work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement.

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Dr. Morrison belongs to what might be called the younger school of Disciples who have the discretion and the will to approach the members of other churches, not with the club of intolerance and pseudo-omniscience, but with the open hand of intellectual catholicity and good will. . . . The propaganda could not wish for a leader more truly representative. A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few. This book gives one evidence. The significant fact is that the author is a member of an immersion church, once commonly called "Campbellites," and while he holds to immersion as the correct mode of baptizing, yet he declares, "It would be too much to say, dogmatically, that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." The book is well worth reading, not only for its scholarly treatment of the question of baptism, which is satisfactory, but as an example of true liberality in modern church life, a liberality which is not degrading and flat, but catholic, appreciative and noble.

The Christian Endeavor World.
A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view but building a bridge toward the affusionist view.

The Congregationalist
A daring and splendidly Christian piece of work is "The Meaning of Baptism," by Charles Clayton Morrison, in which the author frankly asserts that Jesus "had no intention of fixing a physical act upon his followers. He did not have in mind the form of baptism but the meaning of it." Nevertheless, for historic reasons he recommends retaining the form of immersion.

The Baptist Banner
A new book of more than ordinary interest. It is learned, and is written in excellent spirit and fine style. It is eminently suggestive and well worth the price and a careful reading.

The Christian Observer (Presbyterian)
It is a courageous man who will undertake to write a book on the subject of baptism in this age of the world . . . This book has stirred up considerable controversy in the writer's church. By many he is regarded as a heretic and is abused accordingly. However, in other respects the author is true to Disciples' sentiments. The chief value of the book lies in the author's contention that New Testament baptism is not tied to any physical act, but is "the spiritual, social act of self-commitment and self-consecration by the individual and his induction into the church." This idea, by the way, is very forcefully expressed in an old document that was formulated by the Westminster Assembly more than two centuries and a half ago when they said, "Baptism is a sacrament. . . whereby the parties baptized are solemnly admitted into the visible church and enter into an open and professed engagement to be wholly and only the Lord's."

The Standard (Baptist)
The argument throughout is good and there are conclusions that are worthy of careful consideration.

The Christian Union Quarterly (Disciple)
The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines. . . However one may differ from the author there is much in this book to be commended from both the Baptist and paedo-baptist sides of the house.

The Churchman (Episcopal)
Under the title "The Meaning of Baptism," Mr. C. C. Morrison has given an interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism. The Disciples, to whose fellowship Mr. Morrison belongs, practice rebaptizing for those who have not been immersed. Mr. Morrison is not in sympathy with this position. He shows that baptism by immersion has figured little in the divisions of the church and will doubtless likewise figure little in its unity.

Baptist Standard (Dallas, Tex.)
This is a very interesting work, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this summer!

The Homiletic Review
A volume on this subject with an irenic purpose by the editor of The Christian Century is welcome. The position taken is that while immersion is the valid mode of baptism the doctrine or dogma "eclipses the great objective task of the church for large majorities of Disciples and Baptists." Baptism has its essence not in the mode of administration, but in that it means "the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian" (p. 193). While, then, the volume is a plea for the adoption of immersion as a mode universally recognized as regular, the practice of rebaptism with its implication that Presbyterians, Methodists and others are not Christians is to be reprobated. Members should pass freely from these other churches to those of Baptists and Disciples without calling into question or ignoring their status as already members of the Church of Christ.
The spirit of the book is delightful and raises new hopes where none had seemed possible.

The Presbyterian Advance
The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which often has been asked of him by correspondents and readers—"What is the best book on baptism?" . . . Against all who insist that immersion and immersion only is baptism this book provides an unanswerable argument.

The United Presbyterian
An unusual book. Written by a Disciple and the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion. He says the use of the word "baptizo," in its New Testament usage, refers primarily to the function of initiation and only incidentally to the particular [physical] act.

The Meaning of Baptism

By Charles Clayton Morrison.

Regarded by both friends and critics as the most significant contribution made to the baptism problem since the debate between Alexander Campbell and N. L. Rice. Do not let your opinion of this book be formed at second hand. It deserves your own careful reading.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

A Remote Ideal or a Present Task?

CHRISTIAN UNITY BEGINS AT HOME!

That in a nutshell is the distinctive contribution of the Disciples of Christ to the movement for the re-union of Christendom.

Nobody else conceives unity in this way, or, at least, nobody else emphasizes this home end of the problem.

Nearly everybody that talks about Christian unity talks in terms of a remote ideal, a "far-off divine event" toward which the providence of God is slowly but steadily leading the Church.

The slow processes of education are factors in bringing it to pass. There must be much actual change of conviction all around, and in matters of custom and expediency and opinion much adjustment by mutual concession, before ever the great day can be ushered in.

This requires a wider interdenominational acquaintance, conference on conference, long-continued diplomatic negotiation, and perhaps a final parliament of Christendom in which the denominational order will be dissolved.

It is a huge undertaking, as stupendous and full of complexities as is the dream of an international unity—a parliament of man, a federation of the world.

The men who are working fruitfully at this remote problem of Christian unity we call "Christian statesmen." They are far-visioned men, who perceive world tendencies, think in terms of world forces, and enlist the support of powerful leaders of the various Christian groups.

This method of working at the Christian union problem begins at the top, so to speak, and undertakes to bring Christ's people together, ultimately, by wholesale.

In the meantime this Christian statesmanship has succeeded in bringing about a sort of truce among the denominations whereunder a certain degree of co-operation may be carried on and a growing fellowship maintained until the day of organic unity is brought about.

This truce is called Federation.

It is frankly a compromise. It involves no abrogation of any denomination; it even leaves a place for those who care to to extol denominationalism as an efficient and necessary device in the work of Christ's Kingdom.

Federation represents an attempt to act upon so much unity as we are sure we do already possess.

It is part of the strategy of at least some of our statesmen, no doubt, to bring us together in such a tentative Federation so that by actual experiment we may find how easy and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in complete organic unity.

Until very recent times the Disciples of Christ have had but little hand in this kind of Christian union development. They have produced few, if any, Church statesmen, or, if they have produced them, their statesmen have not been recognized as such in the councils of their peers.

Even in the Federation movement the Disciples have had but little part. From the start our connection with it was openly opposed by some, and is yet opposed. Our financial relation to the Federal Council is so humiliating that our leaders cannot get up the courage necessary to publish the facts, not even as a means of remedy.

From all this it is argued that the Disciples are insincere in their talk about Christian unity and that they really care more for their own denominational clan than they do for the great ideal whose consummation they protest is their greatest hope, as it was also their fathers' before them.

We have here a genuine problem whose mystery cannot be solved by invidious comparisons, or impatient criticism.

It can only be solved by a sympathetic understanding of the Disciples' point of view.

To the Disciple mind, the task of Christian unity is a much simpler task than it appears to be to other minds.

In the background of their thinking there has always lain, no doubt, the remote ideal of unity, more or less vaguely guiding their practical procedure.

But in the foreground of their thinking they have put the notion of Christian unity as a present task, a task to be worked at here and now by every individual Christian and by every local congregation of believers.

Unity is to other Christians a problem of inter-denominational conference.

Unity is to the Disciples of Christ a problem of individual conscience.

The denominational order is taken for granted by the Presbyterian or Methodist believer in Christian unity, and he stands ready to let go his denomination and his denominationalism whenever his denomination as a whole is ready to let go also.

But the typical Disciple believer in Christian union looks upon the denominational order as essentially a sinful thing, a thing not to be tolerated until certain long-drawn-out processes of diplomacy and education have borne fruit, but to be abandoned now. Like the Israelites in Babylon, he hears the command of God to "come out of her."

The Disciple feels that he must practice Christian unity whether anybody else does or not!

To him unity is not a far away ideal but a present and practicable duty.

It is wrong for him to be a member of a church whose basis of fellowship is narrower than the catholic Church of Christ. He cannot, in good conscience, stand at the door of his church and forbid any whom Christ has received into His Church. His church and Christ's Church must be kept identical, else haply he be found to be aiding and abetting the sectarian order.

Baptists, Presbyterians and the others have but slight conscientious scruple—if any at all—on the matter of maintaining a fellowship narrower than the Church of Christ. If you do not accept their creed, or if you have not submitted to their form of baptism, or if you are not willing to wear their name, they do not hesitate to debar you from their church, though not for a moment denying that you are a member of the Church of Christ.

And that is precisely what denominationalism is.

And when Disciples talk about abandoning denominationalism it is precisely that thing they have in mind.

To them, to practice Christian unity is not merely to cultivate an amicable spirit of co-operation and tolerance; it is actually to maintain a church-fellowship in which all Christ's disciples are one without distinction or selection or exclusion.

It is this purpose to bring Christian unity down out of the air to the common ground of practice that distinguishes the Disciples of Christ.

While others are contemplating the far-off divine consummation Disciples are determined that, so far as they are concerned, they will have Christian unity here and now.

It would be too much to say that the Disciples have consistently, in every particular, realized this purpose; but the whole theory and motif of their movement is that their churches must be simply churches of Christ, nothing more, nothing less, union churches every one of them, receiving all whom Christ receives, and thus leavening the lump of Christendom with the principle and passion of unity.

"The hour cometh," said Jesus.

"And now is," he quickly added.

Christian unity cometh, say the seers and statesmen of the Church.

Christian unity now is, say the Disciples of Christ, and it is our present duty to practice it in deed and in truth.

PROGRESS IN CALIFORNIA NORTH.

FIRST CHURCH of Berkeley, Cal., sent its delegates to the state convention at San Francisco the last week of July, and again they were refused participation in the convention.

This time, however, the vote was apparently nearly even as compared with an overwhelming majority against the church last year.

This indicates progress, a progress that wlll widen and gather momentum in the months to come, until the true character of such excommunication proceedings is made plain to a majority if not all the churches of the state.

The attitude of the Berkeley church as indicated in its willingness to send delegates again after being rejected last year, is in every way admirable.

The church humbly and sincerely holds itself to be a church of Disciples in spite of the treatment accorded it by the convention. It knows that no convention can rob it of its Disciple character. And no action of such a convention can alienate it from the love of its brethren, even of those who are forward in taking such action.

The magnanimity and Christian spirit of Pastor H. J. Loken and the Berkeley Disciples is shown in their way of interpreting the attitude of those who are opposed to them. By sending their delegates this year they in effect said: We do not believe the action of the convention last year really represented you; even if you say it did represent you we will not believe it; and we intend acting as if we were one with you until you yourselves acknowledge it.

In that spirit we expect to see Berkeley church send its delegates next year to the convention and to continue to send them in subsequent years until the convention receives them.

Berkeley church knows it is a church of Disciples. It cannot live alone.

And where else can it find fellowship save among those who, no matter how distorted their present vision is, share the same ideals for which the church is now made to suffer?

"IMPERFECT BAPTISM."

REV. CAREY E. MORGAN, as retiring president of the American Missionary Society, delivered a characteristically broad and gracious address at the General Convention at Los Angeles. A portion of the address was published in The Christian Century last week.

It was a unifying speech. It gathered opposite extremes of thought into the embrace of love. It made the conservative feel at home among the disciples. It made the progressive feel at home. Mr. Morgan made his hearers and his readers feel that what he said was indeed true, that the Disciples' fellowship was "the roomiest fellowship in Christendom."

But there was one paragraph that sounded strangely out of tune with this thesis of the Disciples' catholicity. Speaking of baptism and our attitude toward unimmersed Christians, Mr. Morgan said:

> Now if I admit that the man who misinterprets this holy ordinance, but who is true to his teaching, and who lives up to his convictions, whose obedience is from the heart, and whose imperfect baptism is the answer for him of a good conscience, maybe a loyal disciple of Jesus, does it follow that I must be untrue to my conviction, or that his obedience would be obedience for me, or that his baptism would be the answer of my conscience, or that he should be admitted with his divisive baptism into one of our churches, and so emphasize differences of opinion among the brethren, and furnish an occasion for strife—and all this in the interest of unity? If we let him bring his baptism into our churches, why not let him bring his name, and his creed, and his polity? If we ask him to give up his party name in the interest of unity, and his divisive creed, is it any more unbrotherly to ask him to give up his disputed baptism? These are the very things that have caused strife in the church, and to compromise with them is to continue the strife. Unity has been, and will be, impossible under that plan. No man shall drive me into a corner at this point, or make me deny the discipleship of devout men whose obedience I regard as incomplete. My own obedience is incomplete. I, too, expect to be saved by grace, but that does not commit me to the acceptance of any name, or form, or polity, that has caused division in the church of God.

We wish to subject the above paragraph to a critical analysis, but before doing so we pause to commend the phrase "imperfect baptism" as applied to those Christians who have not been immersed.

Happily, the more sensitive thinkers among us have abandoned the conception that immersion is baptism and that therefore unimmersed Christians are unbaptized.

Mr. Morgan manifestly believes that the essential meaning of baptism is something other than the physical act by which baptism is administered, and he therefore speaks of those who have been baptized in some other way than by immersion as having been "imperfectly baptized."

The use of such language marks positive advance in our attitude toward other Christians.

To concede that a man is a Christian, a member of the Church of Christ, and yet declare that he is unbaptized is repugnant both to the Scriptures and to Christian feeling.

LIMITING OUR CATHOLICITY.

BUT let us look closely at Mr. Morgan's argument in justification of a restricted membership for Disciples' churches. One wonders if the speaker could have been aware of the contradiction, so obvious to every unbiassed hearer, between the paragraph quoted above and the remainder of his address.

Declaring that the Disciples have "the roomiest fellowship in Christendom," the most comprehensive and most truly catholic church-fellowship, Mr. Morgan proceeds to shut out of this church-fellowship the major portion of Christendom, a portion, too, whose membership in the Church of Christ he takes pains positively to assert.

On the face of it, is it not clear that this is to rob the Disciples of their catholicity, and to confess that they are but another sect among the sects?

Mr. Morgan concedes without equivocation that the "imperfectly baptized" person he has in mind is "a loyal disciple of Jesus," and yet he asks, "Does it follow that he [the loyal disciple of Jesus] should be admitted into one of our churches?"

How strange that question in that context must have sounded to, let us say, a Presbyterian or Methodist hearer!

And how strange it sounds to any Disciple of Christ who has grasped the essentially catholic principle of our movement!

What are these churches of "ours," from whose membership we seem to have the right to debar one who is a loyal disciple of Jesus? Does Mr. Morgan have such a church, or belong to one?

We supposed that the church to which he belonged was simply one congregation of the Church of Christ, and that the very genius of its participation in the Disciples' movement was its purpose to avoid having any part or lot in the restriction and exclusiveness of the denominational order.

Yet here Mr. Morgan is presuming to exercise the prerogative claimed by sectarian bodies and — in the name of "roominess" and catholicity!—to drive a line of exclusive discrimination straight through the body of Christ's disciples.

The reason suggested for not receiving such a loyal disciple of Jesus into one of "our" churches is that by so doing we would "emphasize differences of opinion."

But why not rather say that by so doing we would emphasize the unity of our faith, in comparison with which our differences of opinion about the mode of baptism are practically negligible? That is what the Disciples say about every other difference of opinion: "In opinions liberty, in faith unity."

THE DISCIPLES' CATHOLICITY.

ONE is surprised to hear from a man so well-versed in Disciples principles words such as these: "If we let him [the loyal disciple of Jesus] bring his baptism into our churches, why not let him bring his name and his creed and his polity?"

As a matter of fact, is not that precisely what we Disciples do and glory in doing? We are glad to receive the Presbyterian Christian with his creed and with his name and with his polity.

The analogy drawn by Mr. Morgan between our treatment of imperfect baptism on one hand, and our treatment of divisive creeds and party names on the other, is a mistaken one. Mr. Morgan inquires, "If we ask him [a loyal disciple of Jesus] to give up his party name in the interest of unity, and his divisive creed, is it any more unbrotherly to ask him to give up his disputed baptism?"

But the Disciples do not ask the denominationalist to give up his creed or his name. They ask him to give up the use of that creed as a test of fellowship in the Church, and to give up the wearing of that name as the name of the Church.

Consistency therefore demands not that we compel the unimmersed to change his baptism, nor his opinions about baptism, but that he refrain from any attempt to impose his disputed mode upon the Church.

Our church-fellowship with the unimmersed Christian does not depend upon the mode by which he was himself baptized. It depends upon his willingness, whatever his own opinions may be, to put the church's regular administration of baptism on the basis of catholicity.

And it is not only unbrotherly, but disloyal to our own principles to subject him to a condition which we do not impose anywhere else.

CREEDS, NAMES AND BAPTISM.

THERE is not a member of a Disciples' church, Mr. Morgan and the editor of The Christian Century included, who does not have a human creed, better or worse than, say, the Presbyterian creed.

There is not one who does not wear a name—presbyterian, Arminian, congregationalist, Calvinist, Campbellian, conservative, progressive, Socialist, orthodox, Mason, pragmatist, Republican, what not.

The one thing asked of us by Disciple principles is that we shall not seek to impose these human names and creeds upon the Church, but strive to maintain the unity of the Church by means of the catholic creed and the catholic name.

And precisely the same principle holds with respect to what from our point of view is the "imperfect" baptism of "the loyal disciple of Jesus."

It is not his baptism that we receive, but himself.

He is already in Christ's Church. We cannot without usurping Christ's prerogative debar him.

If he cannot be convinced that he ought to be rebaptized we can instruct him in the principle of catholicity. As he observes this principle in respect to his name and creed he will likewise observe it with respect to his baptism.

CATHOLIC PRINCIPLE MAY BE TRUSTED.

FEAR lies at the base of Mr. Morgan's reasoning—fear lest the principle of Christian unity cannot maintain itself without arbitrary support. It is feared that to receive the unimmersed into our churches would imperil the practice of immersion. To receive them would "emphasize differences of opinion among brethren and furnish an occasion for strife."

Why would it do so in the case of baptism and not in the case of the creed?

Thousands of Disciples believe the denominational creeds with profound conviction, yet our fellowship with such Christians has never imperilled the catholic creed in our practice.

We have yet to learn that the principle of Christian unity will take care of the cause of Christian unity if we trust it. It needs no arbitrary support at our hands.

Let the Church determine to go the full length of the principle of catholicity and she will find that all the safeguards necessary are inherent in the principle itself.

The deepest need of us Disciples just now is that we shall become in fact Disciples.

WATCH YOURSELF GO BY

Just stand aside and watch yourself go by;
Think of yourself as "He" instead of "I."
Pick flaws; find fault; forget the man is you,
And strive to make your estimate ring true.
The faults of others then will dwarf and shrink,
Love's chain grow stronger by one mighty link.
When you with "He" as substitute for "I"
Have stood aside and watched yourself go by.

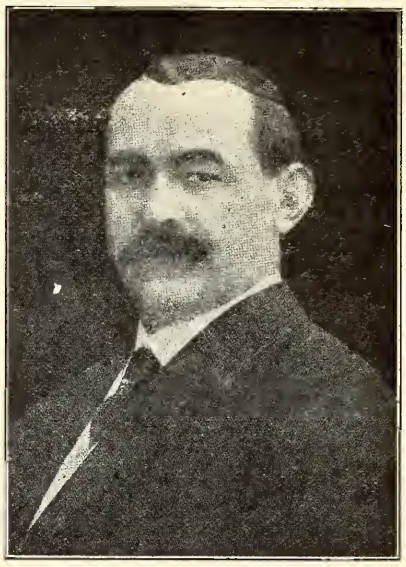
"Sound Doctrine"

By L. O. BRICKER

"IS he doctrinally sound?" used to be asked concerning every preacher. "We want sound doctrine in this church," the elders used to say to every applicant for the pulpit, and say sometimes still, in some places. It may be somewhat of a surprise to learn that Paul, who alone of all New Testament writers uses this term, never meant what we mean when we say "sound doctrine"; never contemplated that such use would be made of the term as has been made of it. We know what we mean when we say sound doctrine, but we mean something entirely different from what Paul meant. In fact Paul never said "sound doctrine" at all; he said "healthy teaching." The Greek word he used is the word from which we get our words "hygiene" and "hygienics", meaning pertaining to health. In 1611, when Paul's Epistles were translated into English the word "sound" meant healthy—a healthy body was a sound body, and a sound body was a healthy body. When they said "sound doctrine" in those days they meant "healthy doctrine."

"But speak thou the things which befit sound doctrine."—PAUL TO TITUS.



Rev. L. O. Bricker, First Church, Atlanta, Ga.

WORD CHANGES ITS MEANING.

But as the years passed the word "sound" came to have a broader meaning. It was applied to money—"a sound dollar," "as sound as a dollar," they said, and they did not mean a healthy dollar; they meant a dollar conforming to a certain accepted standard. This definition and meaning of the word "sound" came to be used in theological circles. So that today, when we speak of "sound doctrine" we do not connect it with the idea of health at all. We mean orthodox, correct, conforming to our accepted system of belief. This was not Paul's idea. When the common idea of "sound" is applied to a preacher of today, it is asked: "Do his sermons harmonize with the accepted standards? Does he say what he is expected to say? Does he repeat frequently and faithfully the approved formulas?" But if you should apply Paul's idea of "sound" to a preacher, you would ask: "Is his teaching healthy and wholesome, convincing and inspiring? What kind of men does it make? What sort of souls does it grow? What graces of character does it produce?"

ORTHODOXY AND HETERODOXY.

Sound doctrine is different to different people. Sound doctrine is my doctrine. Orthodoxy is my doxy; heterodoxy is your doxy, if you differ from me. For sound doctrine the Presbyterian appeals to the Westminister Confession and the Catechism, the Methodist appeals to the sermons of John Wesley, the Episcopalian to the Thirty Nine Articles and the Book of Common Prayer, and we Disciples, perhaps, appeal to the writings of Alexander Campbell. And what echoes of ancient controversies do we reawaken! What bitter feelings and harsh disputes! How easy it has been and is still sometimes and in some places to condemn a good man by whispering behind his back: "Ah, but he is not sound." All this is as far removed as the poles from what Paul meant. If you say it as he said it—"healthy teaching," "wholesome words"—lo, you are in a different world. In his Epistles to Timothy and Titus he uses this expression some half dozen times; and while the revisers leave the words, "sound doctrine," in the text, they always put the literal Greek meaning, "healthy teaching," in the margin. And according to Paul, sound doctrine is not necessarily that which has the conventional ring, as familiar as the lilt of an old song; sound doctrine is whatever tends to build up strong men, to bring a healthy color to the cheek, a wholesome vigor to the spirit, and a buoyant and beautiful life to the soul.

CHRIST A HERETIC.

Think of Christ, himself. According to the accepted standards of his day, his doctrine was not sound. It was regarded by the religious teachers and leaders of the times as the most hated form of heresy. They tried, condemned and put him to death because his doctrine was not sound. But it was healthy, wholesome, inspiring, life-giving. "His word was with power." "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." "Now ye are clean through the words which I have spoken unto you." And this is always the true test to apply to religious teaching. That is sound doctrine which makes good, clean, strong and wholesome men and women.

WHAT PAUL MEANS.

If we read on in the chapter from which this text is taken we shall see just what Paul meant by sound doctrine; for he went right on to explain and apply it to all the relations of life. First, he sets forth what is sound doctrine for aged men—"that aged men be soberminded, sound in faith in love and patience," or literally, "healthy in faith." This is sound doctrine for the aged men, that you be healthy in faith, in love and in patience. Is it not good to see an old man with a healthy, vigorous, active faith, and a hearty, wholesome, bounding love, and a glad, confident patience? There is nothing in life more horrible and repellant than growing old. And there is no need of it. There is a remedy against old age: it is a healthy faith. Nothing can save us, make and keep us well and strong and glad and young except faith. People never grow old who have a healthy faith; they just grow rich and sweet and beautiful and child-like in heart and disposition.

DOCTRINE AND LIFE.

Then Paul goes on to give a line of healthy teaching for aged women, young men and young women, ending with some sound doctrine for servants. If any Christian, he says, is occupying a servant's place, let him do good work, try to be well-pleasing unto his master, showing all good fidelity, and thus adorning the doctrines of God our Savior, by showing employers that Christianity makes good men and women even out of servants, thus commending the faith and perhaps winning their masters to Jesus Christ. This is what Paul meant by sound doctrine—the kind of teaching that makes for healthy, wholesome inspiring living, for pleasant and helpful relations between men and women.

And, when further on, Paul gives us a black list of the things that are contrary to sound doctrine, what do we find? Not heresies, as we might suppose, but vices—the things that ruin healthy-mindedness, that make clean, healthy, wholesome living impossible.

Do you not like this phrase—

"healthy teaching," "wholesome words"? It is what we want everywhere, in our schools, newspapers, books, from the platform and pulpit, in politics as well as in religion. And we know it when we get it. We all have an instinct for what is wholesome, a taste for what is clean, a clear consciousness of what is healthful. This is Christianity as Paul presents it—a sound, robust, healthy message, clear in its principles, practical in its aims, ready to be judged by the quality of manhood it makes. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Among the many important things in this life, nothing is more important than this, that the doctrine you hold and live by shall be sound doctrine, healthy and wholesome doctrine, because your life is bound to be according to the quality of your belief. Creed and conduct, doctrine and practice, belief and behavior are inseparable. Inevitably we become what we believe. If we are to have healthy minds, vigorous spirits, sound hearts, and a wholesome personality, we must have sound doctrine to live by. Through the Christian centuries much that has passed for orthodoxy has been unsound, that is, unhealthy and unwholesome. Within the circles of orthodoxy there has been a type of unhealthy teaching that has produced fanatics, cranks, bigots, persecutors. Whatever doctrine that makes a religious man a crank or a fanatic or a bigot, is unsound. Christianity is healthy-mindedness. Says Paul: "We have received the spirit of a sound mind"—literally, a "healthy mind." And whatever is contrary to healthy-mindedness is not Christianity, is not sound doctrine.

HEALTHY-MINDED RELIGION.

In Professor William James' great book, "Varieties of Religious Experience," there is a notable chapter entitled "Sick Souls"—souls that have been made sick and unhealthy through unsound, unwholesome religious teaching; and there is another chapter on "The Religion of Healthy-Mindedness," showing the fruits of sound doctrine, healthy teaching.

So be careful how you hear. In the words of Paul to Timothy, "Take heed to thyself and to the doctrine." Every man becomes at last the illustration of the doctrine he receives and holds. Don't listen to unsound, unwholesome, unhealthy teaching. It will eventually disease your mind and sicken your soul. We are here in the world for the education of our souls, to grow strong, vigorous spirits, to become healthy and wholesome in heart and mind—to have the blessings of a healthy mind that does not think gloom, despair, sickness and fear, but thinks love and light, joy and peace. Let us have sound doctrine then; let us insist upon it. In other words, let us have the Christianity of Jesus Christ and his Apostles, not adding anything to it, lest there be added unto us the plagues that are written in the Book; not taking away from it, lest our names be taken out of the Book of Life, and we drop out of the ranks of those worthy to be called Christians. But let us have the whole Gospel of Jesus for the whole life of man in this world, the Gospel for our minds and bodies and spirits; the Gospel of work and rest, of pain and pleasure, for living and dying. And having received it, let us so adorn the doctrine of God our Savior through our own sane, wholesome, helpful lives that we shall prove to the world and demonstrate to men that Christianity is good to listen to and good to live by; that its sound doctrine, its healthy teaching and its wholesome words are the very salt and light of life.

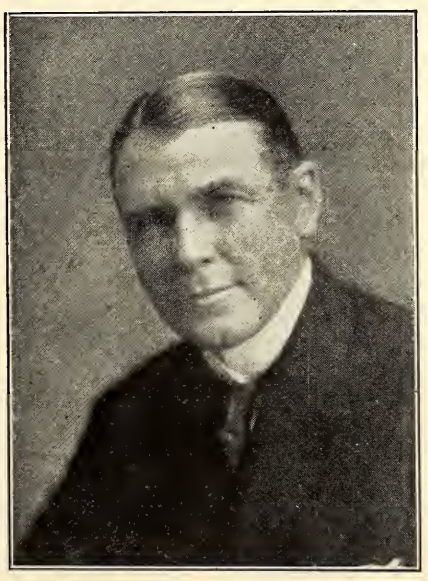
Dealing With Doubt

By EDGAR DeWITT JONES

IT is not necessary to prove that doubt is an experience common to us all, but it may be profitable to illustrate this fact. Such illustrations abound. Biography teems with them. Look at the characters of the Bible. Religion is the great theme of the Bible and faith is at the forefront of the pages of Holy Writ. Great heroes of the faith are there, and yet, what hero of the faith was without his experience of doubt.

DOUBT IN THE BIBLE.

Abraham's faith failed at least once. Moses was beset with doubts. David's doubts dampened his Psalms with tears. Elijah doubted that there was one other beside himself faithful to Jehovah. Peter's faith weakened woefully. Paul fought the demon of doubt daily. John the Baptist's faith went into eclipse. Even Jesus was no exception to this experience, else how could he have been 'tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin.' In Luke 18:8 the doubt of Jesus in mankind's acceptance of his teaching is expressed in the pathetic question: "When the son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" And on the cross at the end of that awful ninth hour for one brief yet awful period Jesus seems to have doubted God, crying, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"



Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones, D.D., First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH DOUBT?

What shall we do with our doubts? Shall we let them be? Shall we ignore them? What shall we do with those gloomy uncertainties that rise between us and God, between us and man—the doubts that threaten to destroy us? The best advice that any doctor of doubts can give is this: Doubt your doubts! Face your doubts, don't run away from them. Question your question, don't raise a question and be satisfied merely with having raised it. George Herbert in his most readable little volume, "The Country Parson," has this bright and wholesome word concerning doubts: "If you ever have any doubts do not run away from them. If you are going through a cemetery and you think you see a ghost, go up to it and pull it to pieces; possibly you find that instead of being a real ghost it is only a sheet that was hung out to dry and has been forgotten by the servant." What sublimated commonsense, and how many of us do just the opposite. We think we see a ghost and instead of doubting and investigating Mr. Ghost we run away from him, spreading abroad the wonderful story of the ghost we saw, how he flitted among the trees and the tombs, how sepulchral his tones, how awful his groans—this is the way we are prone to treat our doubts. We are inclined to believe our doubts, we are tempted to feed our doubts. What we ought to do is to doubt our doubts, to investigate our doubts, and put our doubts to rout. This is precisely what John the Baptist did when he began to doubt Jesus. He squarely faced that doubt. He straightway began to doubt that doubt. And he sent his followers to Jesus himself, with the question: "Art thou he that cometh or look we for another?"

DOUBT YOUR DOUBTS.

There is hope for every doubter who will doubt his doubts, who will deal with them fairly and squarely, who will rigidly investigate the truth. Here, as in everything else, the pioneer plainsman's homely advice is good: "Be sure you are right, then go ahead." If you say you do not believe the Bible be sure you mean what you say. It may be you do not believe what somebody has said about the Bible. If you say you do not believe the Bible is inspired be sure that you do not mean somebody's theory of Biblical inspiration. If you say you do not believe in Christ as divine, it may be you are disbelieving some definition of his divinity. Cultivate the open mind. If you are reading books that challenge what the Bible teaches is true, read carefully the Bible with a view to finding out for yourself what it does teach. Then decide what you will believe, but not before. If you are uncertain as to the value of Christianity, put your doubt to the test. You might read history and be profited by the study of the effects of Christianity upon the world's civilization. But there is a simpler, and even more practical test. Select the people whom you know, the people whose lives are tolerably well known to you, and group them in two companies. On the one hand group those who are believers and are seeking the mind of Christ. On the other hand group those whom you know to be unbelievers and who take no stock in religion. Study the lives of each group. Talk with the members of each group. Obtain their views of life, their attitude toward God and man, and then out of your intimate study decide which group you would rather cast your lot with. Any great truth must stand or fall by this test: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Doubt your doubts. Bring acids and test their metals. Bring tape line and take their measure. Bring plummet and sound their depths. Face them squarely. Probe them thoroughly. Drag them out of the shadows where they lurk and watch them shrivel in the strong white light of investigation.

WHAT ABOUT THE DOUBTER?

So much for doubts. But what can we do with the doubter? Shall we doubt the doubter? No, the very opposite. Believe in the doubter, doubt the doubter's doubt, but believe in the doubter himself. The same distinction exists between the doubter and his doubts as between the sinner and his sin. It is not always easy to make the distinction, but it exists. It used to be quite the fashion to confuse the doubter with his doubts and to run over him rough-shod. It is still the fashion in some quarters to doubt the doubter, to damn him for his doubts, to put him outside the pale of respectability alongside with the reprobate and the scoundrel. But that was not Jesus' way. The severity of Jesus was not visited upon honest doubters, but rather upon those who believe themselves to be very religious, yet who were actually hypocritical and loveless. Look at the attitude of Jesus toward John when he sent the message: "Art thou he who cometh, or look we for another?" Did Jesus condemn John? Did he take advantage of the opportunity to weaken his influence or assail his character? The very contrary. He commended him. He said: "Among them that are born of women there hath not arisen a greater than John the Baptist." Jesus believed in John and Jesus' method of destroying John's doubts and increasing John's faith is worthy our emulation. To the Baptist's disciples he said: "Go and tell John the things which ye hear and see."

DRIVING THE DOUBTER AWAY.

The attitude of some well-meaning persons toward honest doubters is as certain to drive them farther away from faith as though deliberately designed to accomplish that very purpose. When a young man questions some Scriptural truth or some view of the Bible only to discover that in raising the question he has drawn suspicion to himself and called forth censure, naturally enough his doubt is deepened, not dispelled. He asks for bread and is given a stone; he seeks for light and experiences a thunder storm.

Jesus' attitude toward John the Doubter, should be the attitude of preacher and parent and teacher toward the doubters in Church, in home, and in school. Jesus' attitude toward John the Baptist in his experience of doubts is altogether beautiful, patient, sympathetic. Imagine Jesus calling John an "infidel" if you can; fancy Jesus calling Thomas a "skeptic" if you can. How unChristian our custom of flinging the name "infidel," "skeptic," "atheist" in the face of those who are seeking truth and light; who need to be helped, not hindered, builded up not destroyed.

Here, then is the prescription for doubts and doubters. Doubt your doubts, subject them to the closest scrutiny and the most thorough investigation.

Believe in the doubter. Help him to doubt his own doubts by showing your faith in him.

The Unnamed Saint

What was his name? I do not know his name.
I only know he heard God's voice and came;
  Brought all he loved across the sea,
  To live and work for God and me;
Felled the ungracious oak,
    With horrid toil
    Dragged from the soil
The thrice-gnarled roots and stubborn rock;
With plenty filled the haggard mountainside,
And, when his work was done, without memorial died.
No blaring trumpet sounded out his fame;
He lived, he died. I do not know his name.

No form of bronze and no memorial stones
Show me the place where lie his molding bones,
  Only a cheerful city stands,
  Builded by his hardened hands;
  Only ten thousand homes,
    Where, every day,
    The cheerful play
  Of love and hope and courage comes;
These are his monuments, and these alone—
There is no form of bronze and no memorial stone.

And I?
Is there some desert or some boundless sea
Where Thou, great God of angels, wilt send me?
  Some oak for me to rend, some sod
  For me to break,
  Some handful of Thy corn to take,
    And scatter far afield
    Till it in turn shall yield
      Its hundredfold
      Of grains of gold,
  To feed the happy children of my God?
Show me the desert, Father, or the sea,
Is it Thine enterprise? Great God, send me!
And though this body lie where ocean rolls,
Father, count me among All Faithful Souls!

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Centenary of Francis Asbury.

American Methodists revere the name of Francis Asbury next to that of John Wesley. It was he who was ordained by the great English rector as a bishop for America, though Wesley had not formally broken with the English church, and never did sever relations with that communion. It was Asbury who laid deep and strong the foundations of American Methodism. The centenary of his death is March 26, 1916. At that time every Methodist pulpit in the land will do him honor. It is proposed that a bronze equestrian statue shall be erected in the city of Washington from the voluntary contributions of American Methodists.

Charles Stelzle an Arbitrator.

Rev. Charles Stelzle, long the head of the Labor Temple in New York, has been for several years an arbitrator between the New York newspapers and their union labor. Though Stelzle came up from the ranks of labor, he has not shown preference for either side, and it chances that most of his decisions have gone to the papers instead of to the men. A recent trouble in the office of the New York American was decided in favor of the union.

Widow of Great Preacher Dies.

Rev. Theordore L. Cuyler, was one of the great figures of the American pulpit. His widow joined him the other day in the land unseen. Dr. Cuyler preached often about the women of the Bible, and it is said these sermons were inspired by his saintly wife.

Dr. Jowett in Scotland.

Dr. J. H. Jowett of New York has been preaching in England ever since he crossed the water for his vacation, but he has gone to Scotland for a complete rest for the remainder of the summer. While he is away, his pulpit is being filled by some well-known men.

Rectors go to Romanism.

The English church has been deeply stirred by the decision of the Archbishop of Canterbury in the Kikuyu case. The attitude of the noted ecclesiastic has not been satisfactory to the Romanizing wing of the communion who had hoped that any religious fellowship with Protestant "sects" would be absolutely forbidden. In protest against the decision of the Archbishop a number of rectors are reported as going over to Romanism. This is only the backwash of the spent Oxford movement which arose a hundred years ago as a counter-movement to the liberal tendency in the church.

Presbyterians Conduct Vacation Schools.

The Presbyterians of Chicago now have an enrolment of four thousand children in vacation schools in various parts of the city. In many of the schools great attention is being given to athletics. One teacher is specializing on swimming and gardening, not a bad combination for the city boy. Lectures are given the children at stated times on vital themes.

Establish New Summer Conference.

The Moody church of Chicago has established a summer conference at Cedar Lake, Ind. They have purchased twenty acres of land. The conference this summer is being carried on by well-known city mission workers. Among these are Melvin Trotter, Leon Tucker and Paul Rader.

Hold Park Meetings.

The story of summer methods of the churches of America makes a most interesting narrative. In Pittsburgh, the Presbyterians have been holding park meetings, sometimes gathering together as many as a thousand people in a single service. On July 18, twelve such services were held.

Methodist Missions Gain.

While some denominations are busy making up deficits, the Northern Methodists report a gain both in home and foreign mission receipts. The gain for foreign missions is over a hundred thousand dollars. The home board will have the most encouraging year of its history. The Episcopalians are raising $400,000 to meet a deficit in their funds.

Methodist Unity.

Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon of the Southern Methodist fellowship has made a notable statement about the reunion of American Methodism. He says: "This result is very much nearer realization than it ever has been. The General Conference of our church at Oklahoma City two years ago unanimously approved the measure. The Methodist Protestant Church is on record in its favor. The Methodist Episcopal Church at its General Conference next year will act on the matter. If it fails, the blame will rest on the Northern church. There is no difference in faith between the three Methodist churches. The church was bisected by mutual agreement in 1844 through a disagreement on slavery. The Methodist Protestant Church was organized by seceders who object to the lack of lay representation in the General Conference. Since that time both the Northern and Southern churches have enacted this reform, and the Methodist Protestants feel that there remains no barrier between the churches."

Russian Immigrant Work.

The presence of the great Baptist Russian leader, Fetler, in America has stimulated interest in the Russian immigrant. Recently there was held in New York an "American convention of Russian and Ruthenian Baptists and Evangelical Christians." The Evangelical Christians are affiliated with the Disciples of Christ. It is proposed to found a training school for making immigrants ready for Christian work.

Dissents from Sunday Theology.

Billy Sunday has been holding evangelistic meetings in San Francisco this summer. It was thought that the presence of thousands at the great exposition gave opportunity for effective evangelistic work. As vice-president of the committee having the matter in charge, Dr. Charles F. Aked, of the First Congregational church had been interested in the enterprise. He resigned, however, after listening to the sermons for awhile. Dr. Aked said "I must be free to say that there is no such God as he pretends, no such Christ, no such heaven and no such hell—and that I cannot compromise my position as minister of Jesus Christ." Billy Sunday left San Francisco very indignant at the turn events had taken, and made his way to Los Angeles. This closes his work at the western sea-port.

Sunday School Interested in Publicity.

The International Training School for Sunday School leaders held at Conference Point, Lake Geneva, Wis., July 2-11, considered the matter of publicity for religious work. Dr. Wm. T. Ellis of Philadelphia led the conferences. It was decided to ask the men's Bible classes of the country to be responsible under the pastor for proper publicity for the church. Church news is to be sent to the denominational weeklies and the work of the church is to be given publicity in the local community through the daily newspapers, placards, illuminated signs, and by other means.

Protestant Ministers Volunteer Service.

The Protestant ministers of Chicago, led by the energetic religious editor of the Chicago Herald, Mr. A. G. Fegert, organized promptly after the Eastland disaster to help the unfortunates in any way, and for several days conducted a Bureau at the Hotel La Salle. They volunteered to conduct funerals and furnish music free of charge and there were numerous calls for the service.

Union Seminary Holds Summer Conference.

The Union Theological Seminary, in connection with a summer session at Columbia University, held a summer conference on religion at which some of the most eminent men on the Union faculty spoke. The sessions were well attended and the conference is likely to become a permanent part of the Union program.

Prominent Congregational Minister Dies.

Rev. George Slocum Foiger Savage, the oldest Congregational minister of the middle west, died Aug. 6, in Chicago, in his 99th year. He was a graduate of Andover and Yale, and was one of the founders of the Chicago Theological Seminary. He has been retired for many years and made his home in Chicago. He has served on the board of directors of several educational institutions in the middle west.

Want More Trouble With Union Seminary.

It was announced to a weary public this year that the trouble with Union Theological Seminary in the Presbyterian church was at an end. Even that most determined antagonist of the seminary, who was active in bringing on the last investigation, Dr. Mark Matthews, of Seattle, gave the opinion that there was no occasion for legal action against Union. Now, however, two of the more conservative papers of the denomination, The Presbyterian and the Herald and Presbyter, are busy suggesting legal action to recover for the denomination the endowment funds of Union. As legal experts have declared this impossible, Union Seminary is in no danger from loss of funds, but the institution had hoped to go on its way in peace as an interdenominational institution. It seems this privilege is to be denied it. Truly the odium theologicum leads men to some strange attitudes in the name of the Man of Galilee!

Well-Known Pastor Weds.

Rev. Charles W. Gilkey is pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, which is the ecclesiastical home of nearly all the Baptist instructors in the University of Chicago. After an extended period of study in German universities, he settled with this church as its pastor and is already well-known in the life of Chicago. There is interest therefore in the announcement that he was married on July 26 to Miss Geraldine G. Brown, who is daughter of the Congregational pastor in Hinsdale, a suburb of Chicago. The bride is a niece of Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus. The young people met each other during Miss Brown's student days at the University of Chicago.

A New King of a New Kingdom

The Lesson in Today's Life.*

The northern kingdom was subject to the ravages of the surrounding nations, which formed a serious handicap to its progress. Yet, over against this great handicap there came the two decades of splendid service for the kingdom which indicate Jeroboam's strength as a ruler, in spite of much criticism from the southern Kingdom.

Jeroboam's early training is not clearly related for us in the records we possess. His success when promoted to rule over all of the house of Joseph would indicate that he was a young man of exceptional worth. The activity of the young man increased when encouraged by the prophet, until the suspicion of him became active in Solomon's life, and fears for the safety of his kingdom began to haunt him until Jeroboam was banished to Egypt where he remained until the death of Solomon. He was a natural leader, and could not be kept down. His mistakes should not keep us from seeing the real values of his life. He was a man shrewd in many ways, and always devoted to the new kingdom.

The kingdom over which Jeroboam ruled was about the size of the state of New Hampshire. It was made up of ten tribes of rather undeveloped people. His first great task was to unite this chaotic and turbulent people into a kingdom. He sought to accomplish it in three ways, namely: by establishing houses on high places; by making priests of all classes of the people; and by ordaining a feast. He was made king by the choice of the people when they rebelled against Rehoboam at Shechem. This brought him to the throne under the most favorable circumstances.

Had his future been guided by principle rather than policy he would have continued in the way of progress, and in the favor of God.

Men will not put their trust in a "trimmer" very long at a time, however brilliant his career.

The young man who expects to be of permanent value to the world must be loyal to principle, no matter how many times it causes change and discomfort. "Nothing in this world is worth doing wrong." (Hugh Black.)

The king's policy was wrong. He sought to please the people rather than to devote himself to the highest ideals of his day. He saw that the affection and devotion of the people compelled them to worship in the temple at Jerusalem. Where the object or place of your worship is, there your heart will be also.

The religious current toward Jerusalem must be changed, if the loyalty of the people is to remain true to Jeroboam. This loyalty he sought to retain by building shrines in his own land. The calves represented Jehovah "which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt." These were not meant to be substitutes for Jehovah, but were intended as emblems, visible expressions of God. The new worship was to be a continuation of the old under new forms and in new places. Jeroboam never dreamed that in time the altars of Jehovah would become altars of Baal. His plan was shrewd. As a means of accomplishing his purpose it was successful; his people were turned from Jerusalem and the temple, and his own power established.

But he gained his power at the cost of disenthroning God and degrading his people.

Our young men need to learn that wealth and fame often cost more than they are worth, because they are sought in ways out of harmony with the divine will. You cannot expect to steal from your neighbors six days in the week and be pious enough on Sunday to atone for your sin.

Our boys need to learn they cannot succeed by breaking the rules of the game. All around them are the laws of God, and they cannot disregard these laws and be truly successful.

You cannot break God's laws of health and continue in health. Cigarettes, strong drink, and other forms of vice, are all in defiance of God's law of life: "The wages of sin is death; but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Indiana Pastor Denounces Militaristic Jingoism at Bethany Assembly.

A vigorous denunciation of the spirit of militarism, which was declared to be entering the life of the nation in the disguise of a demand for preparedness for war, was made by E. Richard Edwards in an address at Bethany Park, Ind., last Sunday morning. Mr. Edwards is pastor of First Church at Martinsville. He spoke on "The Tower of Babel or the Tongues of Pentecost" and showed how these two well-known occurrences in biblical history often are repeated nowadays in humanity's struggle for existence. Mr. Edwards said that certain men and classes of men in this and other countries are trying to confuse and embitter and divide the nations by making stirring appeals for an increase in arms and implements of war. He said that the jingoists are without exception a selfish class and that, as a rule, they have all to gain and nothing to lose by war. He pointed out that the real need of the nation is for an increased devotion to things of a spiritual nature, and asserted that an increased number of good citizens who are not afraid to make an outcry against civic wrongs is needed much more than a larger standing army or larger navy.

Churches of County Hold Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Christian Churches of Tipton County, Ind., was held in the city park, at Tipton, Sunday, Aug. 1. The ten congregations were represented and there were visitors from Hamilton and Madison Counties. J. Boyd Jones, pastor of First Church at Terre Haute, preached morning and afternoon, and Floyd J. Evans, evangelist, conducted a combined choir of 100 voices. W. A. McKeown, of Marion, taught a Bible class of several hundred men in the Sunday-school in the morning.

San Diego's Popular Pastor Closes Twenty Years in a Complimentary Reception.

Completing twenty years as pastor at Central Church, San Diego, Calif., W. E. Crabtree was given a reception July 29 by his people. It was an evening of unconstrained appreciation of the popular pastor. Speeches were made by office bearers of the church, Dr. W. H. Geistweit, of White Temple Baptist Church, B. C. Hagerman, of Chicago, and Frank W. Dowling, pastor at Fullerton, who has been in Southern California for twenty-three years. By the time the minister himself was called upon to speak he was, as he said, too full for utterance, but in broken sentences he told something of what the church itself had done during these twenty years. An old Testament text, he said, described his feelings better than words of his own: "And Jacob served seven years for Rachel, and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her." The wish was spoken on all sides that Mr. Crabtree might remain in San Diego at least twenty years more. William Dunn Ryan, of Youngstown, O., preached for Mr. Crabtree on Sunday morning, Aug. 1.

Los Angeles Convention Workers Celebrate at Banquet.

After the Los Angeles Convention of Disciples adjourned Mr. C. C. Chapman, chairman of the local committee on arrangements, gave a banquet for all workers—pages, guides, committee-men and others—who helped to make the convention a success. Over 300 persons sat down to the feast. Addresses were made by members of various committees and other guests. Music was furnished by a quartette of Hawaiians, accompanying themselves on native instruments. The banquet room was decorated with roses, ferns and wild flowers with American Beauty roses as favors. Among the speakers of the evening were Mr. R. A. Long, of Kansas City, Mo.; Dr. A. E. Cory, of the Men and Millions Movement; W. M. White, president of the convention; F. M. Dowling, of Fullerton; C. R. Hudson, of Pomona, and several others. A feature of the banquet that was not on the programme was staged when several of the guests raised Mr. Chapman, the host, on their shoulders and marched around the hall while the other guests cheered and applauded.

Rural Church to Meet Community Needs.

Union Chapel, Mo., in the Northeast district of the state, a rural church, dedicated a remodeled house of worship Aug. 1 with George A. Campbell, of Hannibal, in charge of dedicatory exercise assisted by J. P. Rowlison, secretary of the district, and Arthur Stout, pastor at Bowling Green. H. W. Hale is the pastor of the church and has led his people to rebuild along lines that would make the house adaptable to the service of a community center.

Pioneer Work in Census Taking in Central Africa.

Mr. E. A. Johnston and C. P. Hedges, of Longa, Africa, the Upper Congo country, made a nine-days' itinerate through the back-country in March. Mr. Johnston says: "Of the nine days, big parts of seven were spent afoot or in canoes. The distance covered was something like 180 miles. We had seen eleven villages, nine of them new to us, and seven of them now visited for the first time by our missionaries. We had seen the chief and four of his sub-chiefs, had copied a map of the chefferie, and had learned of new water routes into the country, as well as of many other villages we lacked the time to visit. Enroute we had estimated the country we saw to contain about five hundred houses with a possible population of two thousand or more. From the number of villages on the map, one may reasonably estimate the total population of the chefferie to be nearly eight thousand. Of the remainder of the Bolingo territory we cannot speak as yet, but look forward to find great numbers there as well as in the Ngombi country, which we hope some day to see. After extensive surveys, we are assured by the manager of one of the oil companies that we must have at least fifty thousand people in Longa's immediate back-country. This means that the total for Longa must range between eighty and one hundred thousand."

Twentieth Report of the Board of Ministerial Relief.

In three annual steps the receipts of the Board of Ministerial Relief advanced from a little more than $17,000 in 1911 to nearly $40,000 in 1914. The challenge afforded by Mr. R. A. Long's proposal to add 20 per cent to the total offerings of the brotherhood made the receipts last year, without his $6.000, twice what they were three years before, says Secretary W. R. Warren. He also points out that corresponding increases were made both in the number of names on the Pension Roll and in the amount paid to each. The list was 72 in 1911 and is now 124. The maximum payment was then $30 per quarter and is now $30 per month, with one exceptional case receiving $40. In the stress of the current year, after three years of such extraordinary growth, it would not have seemed strange if there had been a reaction toward the lower level of former years. So it is gratifying to report that in church, Sunday-school, and individual offerings for the nine months to July 1, 1915, there has been a gain of $1,040.

Japanese Christians Prompted by Missionary Spirit to Help India.

Miss Mary Rioch, of Tokyo, Japan, writes concerning a visit paid her by Miss Josepha Franklin, of Damoh, India, on her way home to America on furlough. She spoke to the mothers of my kindergartners last week and told them of the condition of women in India, and also of the orphanage where she and my brother, David Rioch, have worked so long. The women were so impressed with the need of their sisters in India that they voted all the money in the club treasury to be given to her to help them. The children, too, in the Sunday-school at the same place, on hearing from the teacher of the little orphans saved from the terrible famines in India wanted the Sunday-school to give some of the money received in the year to help feed them."

Chinese Institute Dedicated in San Francisco.

The dedication of the new Chinese Christian Institute building at San Francisco occurred Monday, Aug. 2, at 1:30 P. M. The Institute is an enterprise of the Christian Women's Board of Missions, and the exercises were under the direction of the national officers of that organization. Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, Mrs. J. McDaniel Stearns and other national officers participated in the opening. The building is located on Stockton street between Sacramento and Clay. On Monday evening the State Board of C. W. B. M. gave a reception to their friends and neighbors in the mission work. The program continued Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. On Tuesday afternoon there was a reception by the Chinese ladies to their American and Chinese friends and in the evening the motion picture production of "From the Manger to the Cross." Following the motion pictures Rev. Geo. W. Brewster gave a reading of Henry van Dyke's "The Story of the Other Wise Man." Wednesday evening was set apart for a house warming by the Chinese church. The program closed Thursday evening at which time the Chinese church gave a banquet to their American friends.

Bloomington Bible Chair Receives Another $10,000 Gift.

John A. Peterson, of Swayzee, Ind., has offered to give the Bloomington Bible Chair $10,000 on condition that another $10,000 be given by others. Two thousand of the second $10,000 has already been subscribed so that it is safe to predict $20,000 will be added to the permanent funds of the institution in the near future. Mr. Peterson is a prominent farmer of Grant County, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson own over eight hundred acres of land between Swayzee and Elwood. He is a director of the First National Bank of Swayzee, the Farmers National Life Insurance Company, a member of the Farmers National Congress and taught school for twenty-three years. Mr. Peterson's offer was unsolicited and was made voluntarily in a written statement to Dean Joseph C. Todd during a recent trip to Grand County. This is the second $10,000 gift to the Bible Chair this year. The other was made in February by Mr. and Mrs. Harry H. Glascock, of Kingman.

Berkeley, Calif. Church Keeps Active Throughout Summer.

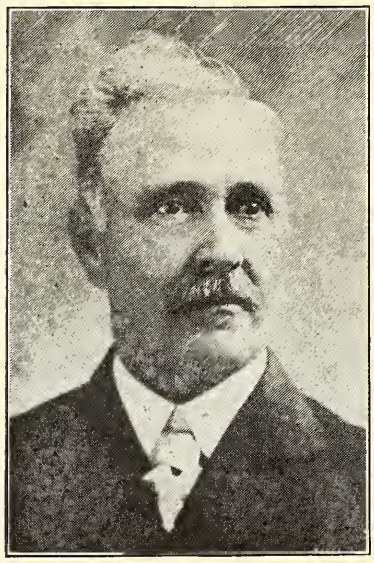
Summer has seen no lessening of activity in First Church, Berkeley, Calif. The summer session of the State University is being attended by over five thousand students. The church has fitted up its parlor as a rest room for the use of these students and many are taking advantage of this convenience. The regular services of the church are largely attended. A special popular evening every Thursday has enabled the visitors to get acquainted with the membership of the church. Mrs. Rose Berry, official lecturer on Art at the Exposition has been giving a series of lectures on these evenings. Other features on the program and refreshments at the end make these meetings a splendid social treat. H. J. Loken, the pastor is preaching to large congregations on Sundays and receiving additions to the church.

How California Spirit Impresses Conservative Ohioan.

E. A. Hibler, pastor Central Church, Warren, O., writing to his congregation from California where he took in the General Convention and the Exposition, expresses his feelings with great frankness as to the habit Californians have of dealing in superlatives. He says: "The one most characteristic thing about all California is the extreme, perpetual, everlasting boasting of its citizenship. The people boast, and boost, and brag about everything until they attract your attention, then amuse you and at last fill one with real disgust. They will take you up to a little strip of lawn twenty-five feet square and ask you if you ever saw anything like it. They will drive you out over their splendid roads and circle around until they draw up before a house then they will use every known adjective in describing its beauty, comfort and cost, until you actually have to look again to convince yourself that such a building would not be permitted on Euclid avenue, Cleveland, or Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, for a garage, and would actually look vastly inferior on Washington or Porter avenues in our city. They have some of the finest houses ever looked upon, but this spirit of boast has so taken possession of the people that if the mansion is not handy, then the smaller and cheaper residence receives the praise."

Graham Frank Making Long Post-Convention Trip.

Graham Frank, secretary of the General Convention is making a long tour from Los Angeles through San Francisco, with a stop-off at the Exposition and the Northern California convention, to Portland, Seattle, Spokane, and Vancouver, and homeward through the Canadian Rockies where he makes several camping stops, ariving in Liberty, Mo., on Sunday, Aug. 15, in time to preach to his congregation there.



Rev. J. Irving Brown, Ten and a Half Years Pastor at Sac City, Iowa.

Tarrying in Californiia.

Perry J. Rice, of El Paso, Tex., is tarrying on the Pacific Coast a few weeks for rest and pleasure after the General Convention at Los Angeles. He preached at Alhambra and Pasadena, Aug. 1, and at Pomona for C. R. Hudson, Aug. 8. Mr. Rice's convention sermon at Los Angeles is spoken of again and again by our correspondents who heard it as a very significant message masterfully prepared and uttered. We hope to give the substance of it to our readers soon.

Extricating Church from Sunday Baseball Reputation.

Centralia, Mo., is considerably exercised over the question of Sunday baseball. The Christian Church is the largest in the town, its members are the leading business men, and some of these business men are the backers of the baseball team. On a recent Sunday every member of the official board was present at the game. The pastor, Charles H. Swift, told his people the other day that it was being talked on the street in both jest and earnest that the Christian Church was making Sunday baseball possible. He spoke with great candor to his people about it, declaring that the church could not afford in the sight of God or of man to carry the responsibility for the desecration of Sunday. His statement was not intolerant or fanatical, but appealing and persuasive.

Church Must Satisfy the Spirit of Youth.

At Bethany Assembly in Indiana E. H. Clifford, pastor at Fort Wayne, speaking to young people, asserted that the devotion of the young men and women of America toward the church never was more in evidence than it is today, but he declared that this devotion could be made even more intense and that the ever-present danger of loss of interest in spiritual things on the part of the young people could be removed if the church would shoulder more of the responsibilities of the world. For years the church was considered a thing that exists for, and is controlled by, men and women of advanced age," said Mr. Clifford. "Its underlying principles are those of the vigor of youth, but, through centuries of dust and decay, it became covered with the moss of inactivity that hid its true aims and purposes from mankind. The church now has many faithful workers among the young men and women and the boys and the girls of the land. It should be duly thankful for this, but at the same time it should take notice of the many hundreds of thousands of young people who are not touched by its influence. It must put its shoulder to the wheel to assist in the accomplishment of the many practical tasks and issues that face the world today. It must convince the young men and women by emphatic work and wholesouled deed that it means business. If it does this it will have no trouble in holding the support of the young people who are now within its influence, and in gaining the faith and confidence of those who have failed to participate in its far-reaching religious program."

Glad the Editor Did Not Come.

On the Sunday of the General Convention, at Los Angeles, the editor of The Christian Century was announced to preach at the Greek theatre of Pomona College, at Claremont. Unable at the last moment to attend the convention the message to that effect did not reach the college until after the Sunday service. The following note from the religious service committee of the faculty explains how, with a little foresight, an ill wind can be made to blow more good than a presumably good wind:

"We did our best to make the occasion one worthy of the speaker and looked forward with expectation to seeing, hearing, and meeting you. We did not give up your coming until noon of the 18th of July, but in the meantime we fortified ourselves with a "refusal" from Dr. Burnham of Cincinnati, Ohio, who filled the vacancy. Dr. Burnham was a most acceptable speaker and the people were rather glad that you did not appear! For while you might have brought a more enlightening message they could not be sure of that, and they were sure that Dr. Burnham was one of the most inspiring speakers ever heard in Claremont. All is well that ends well and we only hope that we may have the pleasure of hearing you at some time in the near future."

—G. W. Muckley reported to the Los Angeles Convention that the Church Extension Society had loaned $2,974, 103 to 1,776 needy churches during the period of its existence and that only $1,990 has been lost.

—Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, of Kansas City, was chief speaker at a ministers' retreat at Camden Point, Mo., recently.

—Herbert Smith, of Lotumbe, Africa, reports the baptism of 28 people on April 4.

—Dr. L. F. Jaggard, of Monieka, Africa, reports that on his way back home from a trip to Lotumbe he visited the outposts between the two stations, baptizing 41 converts by the time he got to the last outpost.

—Taking advantage of the psychology of the times, C. F. Stevens, pastor First Church, Beatrice, Nebr., chose as his subject for a union meeting sermon, "Soldierly Qualities Desirable for Christians."

—Without taking time to catch their breath after raising the last dollar of a many-year-old debt, First Church, Lincoln, Nebr., has gone on to the purchase of a new pipe organ for their beautiful house of worship. H. H. Harmon, the pastor and leader of the congregation shows his genius as a leader in developing others besides himself to take responsibilities for church progress. It seems to be the lay leaders who are solidly behind the new enterprise.

—During the heated season, Homer F. Cooke, pastor at St. Petersburg, Fla., looks forward with much interest to the influx of many visitors to that winter resort next fall and winter. He says all Disciple visitors may be assured that they will find not only the most delightful of climates, and natural beauties and advantages unsurpassed anywhere but that the church offers a warm and hearty welcome to all and anxiously strives to make their stay both pleasant and profitable. The fellowship during the past winter, he says, was the most delightful he ever enjoyed. Mr. Cooke recently baptized eight persons.

—Evanston Church, just outside of Chicago, finds satisfaction in the steady and substantial reduction of its church debt. It is going down at the rate of about $1,000 a year and now stands at $4,000. Orvis F. Jordan, the pastor, reports good congregations through the summer.

—H. W. Hunter, pastor at Wellington, Kans., preached on "Cities of Light" on a recent Sunday morning dealing concretely with the civic obligations of the residents of his own town. The sermon was published in the local newspaper. It is a good illustration of the way to bring the social gospel straight home.

—About 1,000 persons attended the Disciples Day exercises at the San Francisco Exposition July 27. Dr. J. H. Garrison of St. Louis presided. Addresses were given by Dr. Isaac Newton McCash on "The Influence of the Disciples of Christ in American Christianity"; J. J. Haley, on "The Message of the Disciples of Christ," and R. H. Miller, secretary of "Men and Millions Movement," who talked on "The Present Task of the Disciples of Christ."

The Human Hot Box

Wherever there is motion there is friction; wherever there is friction there is heat. Excessive heat destroys the machine, whether human or mechanical.

The hot box of the railway train has its counterpart in the muscle and brain of man. Mental and physical fatigue are merely terms that we use to describe human hot boxes. Scientists tell us that work is good for us, that it exercises and develops our muscles and nerves, but that when work is carried beyond the point of fatigue it becomes injurious and results in the rapid destruction of our tissues.

As the car inspector examines the rolling stock of railway trains and repacks the boxes with fresh lubricant when he discovers excessive heat, so is it necessary that we look carefully to the protection of our human machinery against the ravages of physical fatigue and mental worry. When our minds and bodies become fatigued by excessive work we must either give them rest and sleep, which are often impracticable, or we must supply them with a natural lubricant to relieve the friction and refresh the nerves and muscles. Such lubricants have been provided by Nature in the form of xanthin and caffein. Xanthin (pronounced zan-thin) is an animal product derived from fresh meats and may be taken in the form of beef tea or meat extracts, which are almost instantly refreshing. Caffein is a vegetable product found in coffee, tea and Coca-Cola. When caffein is digested it becomes a xanthin and possesses the same refreshing quality. As xanthin is a constant ingredient of the flesh of all animals and man, and as caffein is a form of xanthin, we may regard the xanthin and caffein beverages as natural lubricants for tired nerves and muscles, and, next to rest and sleep, the most efficient and wholesome means of preventing the injury of fatigue.

According to Dr. Hollingworth of Columbia University, who has made exhaustive experiments with the caffein beverages, their fatigue relieving quality is due to the fact that the caffein acts in the nature of a lubricant in relation to the tired nerves and muscles, enabling them to respond more easily to the impulses of the will. This view is also expressed in different language by Dr. Schmiedeberg, the greatest living authority on such subjects. Discussing the action of coffee, tea and Coca-Cola, Dr. Schmiedeberg says. "Caffein is hence a means of refreshing bodily and mental activity, so that this may be prolonged when the condition of fatigue has already begun to produce restraint and to call for more severe exertion of the will, a state which, as is well known, is painful or disagreeable."

Discussing the wholesomeness of the caffein beverages, Dr. Schmiedeberg says, "This character of caffein action makes plain that these food materials do not injure the organism by their caffein content, and especially, do not by continued use cause any chronic form of illness." The Coca-Cola Company has accumulated a valuable and most interesting collection of scientific information furnished by the world's leading authorities and explaining the fatigue relieving qualities of Coca-Cola, tea and coffee. Desiring that the public shall know all that is to be known about their product they have published this information in a booklet for free distribution. A copy may be had by addressing the Coca-Cola Co., Atlanta, Ga.

The Best Place to Continue Your Education

From an intellectual standpoint it must be that institution which offers the largest amount of work, of the best quality, and under the best teachers.

From a personal standpoint it must be that institution which by the size of its student body offers the largest possibilities of acquaintanceship, and by its influence and standing gives its graduates the largest prestige when they are through school.

From a spiritual standpoint it must be that institution which abounds in provision for religious nurture; and yet which through the cosmopolitan character of its teaching force and of its student body tends to make all its students cosmopolitan, tolerent, and broad-minded in their culture rather than provincial, intolerant, and narrow,—lovers of truth rather than party.

BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI
(Not a Bible Chair, but a Bible College)

From a health standpoint it must be that institution which, in addition to its ample gymnasium and athletic fields, has its own student physician to look after the health of its student body, and furnishes its students hospital care and nursing when sick.

From a financial standpoint it must be that institution which, in addition to offering the best of everything in the student line, does it at the least expense in the way of tuitions and other fees.

The Bible College of Missouri, in connection with the University of Missouri, meets the test of all the foregoing. Write for Catalog

DES MOINES, IOWA

THE fruits of Drake University are strong, capable men and women. Her ideals are democracy and accomplishment. Her traditions are self reliance, integrity and success. She bases the foundations of education upon hard work, upright character, determined pursuit of goals hard to obtain.

In spite of youth, Drake has a long line of honored alumni, leading men of the state, stalwart men of the church, capable men of education, successful men of business. The women graduating from the University have been equally efficient and successful in all the vocations open to them, attaining honors wherever honors are to be had.

Changes in the educational methods and ideals of the last decade enable schools in the large centers of population to present the more efficient education. The men and women of Drake get knowledge outside of books. They find it in the large church organizations of the city, in the city's Sunday School institute, in the public-school system, in the forms of city government, in the lives of the cosmopolitan peoples of both school and city.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

From Canada to the Gulf with Church Extension

1776 Church Buildings have been erected in the Mission Fields of 44 states of the Union, and in Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Ontario and Hawaii by the assistance of the Church Extension Board in loans amounting to $2,410,000. Place these buildings three quarters of a mile apart, they would reach from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. They are well distributed in the Mississippi Valley in proportion to the population of the states and the activities of the Disciples of Christ. A WALL CHART HAS BEEN SENT TO THE CHURCHES SHOWING THE DISTRIBUTION. PLEASE PUT UP THE CHART WHERE THE PEOPLE CAN SEE IT.

The Manner of the Doing

This great work was done by loaning the money to one church to complete its building, which was returned in five years to go out to help another congregation. By this plan the same money is building a church every five years in country, village or city community. Even by this plan we cannot house the new churches as fast as they are organized by our 127 City, County, District, State and Territorial Boards and the American Society. Forty per cent of the new organizations must have help in building. This is the work of the Church Extension Board.

Why Church Extension Started, and What is Yet Undone

At the National Convention held in Indianapolis, in 1887, Robert Moffett, Secretary of our Home Board, was asked to find out how many unhoused organizations there were among the Disciples of Christ and report to the Convention at Springfield, Ill., one year hence. He reported 1,628 mission churches without buildings that would build if they could borrow one-third or one-fourth of the cost, at reasonable rates, for a few years' time, from a friendly source. This report caused the creation of the present Church Extension Board.

An interesting fact about our growth is, that during the past nine years, the Board of Church Extension has had 2,412 appeals for loans in erecting mission church buildings. Of these only 787 have been answered during nine years, leaving 1,625 yet to be aided. Some of these have become discouraged and disbanded. But the fact to be remembered is that WE HAVE HAD AS MANY UNANSWERED APPEALS DURING THE PAST NINE YEARS as we had unhoused congregations in Robert Moffett's report of 1888, and therefore WE ARE NOT CATCHING UP WITH THE OPPORTUNITIES GOD GIVES US. We are answering but one-third of the appeals.

Education and the Democratic Disposition

JUDGE LOBINGIER'S ARTICLE on another page deals with the relation of education and democracy from the standpoint of the school and its program.

The question he asks is: What sort of school should we maintain in a democracy?

This editorial deals with the relation of education and democracy from the standpoint of the student.

The question we here set out to answer is: What sort of intellectual disposition should a person who lives in a democracy derive from his educational discipline?

The answer is obvious. He should derive a democratic disposition.

The educated man in a democracy should be the most democratic man in his community. If his education has made him snobbish or partizan or aristocratic either the educational system is out of harmony with democracy or there is something vitally wrong with the man himself.

We have long since passed away from the superficial notion that education was simply a process of taking on knowledge. We now define it as a process of getting into sympathetic touch with life.

Life is getting to be the great word of our educational system, not knowledge. This does not mean that knowledge is held at a discount, but that it is regarded as a means to an end, and the end is a wider and deeper fellowship with our fellowmen.

The essence of culture is reverence, reverence for truth and reverence for the personal life of all men.

This reverence for personality is the very soul of democracy; it is the secret support of every democratic institution.

Until man's mind had learned to acknowledge the inherent dignity and absolute worth of every man's personality democracy was impossible.

And the only sound and valid reason why the state should engage itself in the enormous task of providing free education to its youth is that such an education shall maintain and further develop the democratic disposition in those who pass through its disciplines.

To have passed through the courses of a high school or a college and not have learned to regard other men and women—no matter how lowly or how far removed in culture from oneself—with reverence is to have missed the one thing that education is good for.

Gone is the day of reverence toward the king, the priest, the sage. Gone the day of reverence for aristocracy. Gone the day of the doctrine that God has chosen a certain set of men for eternal life, and another for eternal death. Gone the day of what President King calls the privileged classes in industry, in politics, and in religion.

Our democracy is making us feel that God has no favorites, that nature has no favorites, and that society must have no favorites. The equal right of every man before God and the law is a settled conviction of every soul who is touched by the spirit of modern times. The common man has arisen into a place of signal importance.

Education that is really education, culture that is not merely intellectual veneer but an earnest pursuit of the truth for the love of the truth, will produce a democratic soul, a soul respectful toward and sympathetic with those who may be far removed from one in those accidental matters of birth or breeding or success.

There are three things that education ought to do for the citizen of a democracy:

It ought to develop intellectual sympathy—the power imaginatively to enter into the soul of another and understand his experience and his manner of thought.

It ought to develop tolerance—the habit of sincere respect for another's point of view with the assumption that it probably contains truth if, indeed, it be not wholly true.

And it ought to develop the will to coöperate with others on the basis of common purposes in spite of divergences of opinion.

These three things our public schools and colleges should be accomplishing for the youth of our nation whatever else they accomplish.

Our literature and art and civil government and sociology and psychology should issue not in mere information or knowledge but in a democratic disposition shot through with sympathy, and tolerance, and the will to coöperate.

It is easy to be interested in the great people of the world, the rulers, the courtiers, the sages, the heroes, but the truly educated soul has been made aware of the infinitely interesting character and the immense significance of the common man or woman.

Our modern artists help us to gain this democratic point of view.

The art of the ancients dealt mainly with gods and demigods.

The art of the middle ages dealt mainly with kings and courtiers, with princes and heroes.

But our art is discovering a new subject-matter in the life of very common people. When some Howells or Kipling or Tolstoi or Millet comes along we are made to see beauty in the street gamin and to hear the nightingale that sings in the soul of the common worker.

Our new science of sociology is a thrilling revelation of the dignity of the common man and woman and child. It has elevated the sweat-shop worker and the man with a hoe into a never before acknowledged importance by focusing social attention and intellectual sympathy upon them.

And psychology, too, comes in with its unique contribution to the development of the democratic disposition, by asserting the universal like-mindedness of men —the doctrine that all men, from Plato to the Louisiana plantation negro, from Mr. Lloyd George to the London cockney, are cast from the same mould, organized alike in powers of knowing and of feeling and of doing.

This is a wonderful doctrine.

In its light the mental differences of race and caste are seen to be not foreordained but to lie within the control of society.

No class is doomed to ignorance.

No stratum of society is doomed to be the hewers of wood and drawers of water for the rest of mankind.

No race is beyond the pale of possible civilization.

Not of one blood only, but of one mentality also, hath God made all nations and classes of men—this is the supreme ethical insight of modern psychology.

That an education in the disciplines of modern science or literature or art should turn out snobs or self-centered aristocrats or anything but democratic-minded citizens is pedagogical abortion.

The whole value of a culture rooted in such disciplines is found in its equipment of the soul not with knowledge only, but with wisdom, a wisdom which enables the soul to enter upon the supreme task of life—the sharing of so much of other people's lives as one can.

LINCOLN AND WILSON.

TWENTY senators once waited on Abraham Lincoln at the White House to advise him how to act as President. As usual his sense of humor did not desert him and he described to them what Blondin really did when he crossed Niagara on a tight rope. Then he asked the senators whether they thought that it would be well in such circumstances for spectators to shout, "Go a little faster! Slow up! Lean more to the north. Lean a little more to the south." The senators saw the point, and from that time on the patient burden bearer had some respite—from legislators. "It is interesting to note," says the Christian Science Monitor in alluding to the historic episode, "that in 1909, President Woodrow Wilson of Princeton College, as he then was, said that the most valuable thing about Mr. Lincoln was that 'in the midst of the strain of war, in the midst of the crash of arms, he could sit quietly in his room and enjoy a book that led his thoughts off from everything American.' He added: 'Always set your faith in a man who can withdraw himself, because only the man who can withdraw himself can see the stage.'"

AN EQUITABLE AWARD.

CHICAGO had a street car strike some weeks ago. It lasted three days and was settled by both sides agreeing to arbitration and appointing arbitrators. When the arbitrators made their report they gave an increase of something like 30 cents a day to the wages of the workingmen, besides two or three other concessions.

Under the terms of its arrangement with the surface street car lines, 55 per cent of their annual net receipts goes to the city itself. It is estimated that the total wage increase agreed upon in the settlement of the traction strike will reach $1,250,000 a year. The city, therefore, will contribute $687,000 of this amount.

Chicago makes this contribution cheerfully. Commenting on the matter, the Journal says that "the community does not care to lay up money by making men work for inadequate wages—it is willing to pay its share in the making of better homes, better living conditions, better citizens."

It is a doubtful arrangement at best that the city should make a profit out of every nickel paid by the clerks and working girls and laboring men of the city in going to and from their daily tasks.

That would seem to be obviously too large a share of the public funds for them to contribute, for of this particular public fund the wage-earners, being vastly in the majority, contribute the largest share.

Anything, therefore, that brings back a portion of this money to the wage worker should be and is popularly felt to be just.

EFFICIENCY AND COURTESY.

FOLLOWING the dictates of efficiency in business it is now being suggested by a New York newspaper that formal amenities of business correspondence be hereafter omitted and the letter deal directly and solely with the matter in hand without salutation or valedictory.

All such commonplaces as "My dear Sir," or "Dear Sir," or "Sir," it is proposed, should be abandoned, together with "Thanking you in advance," "Trusting that this may be satisfactory," "Hoping for a continuance of your favor," "With assurances of our esteem," "Yours sincerely," "Yours faithfully," "Very truly," and, of course, "I have the honor to remain," and so on.

There is a limit even to a good thing like efficiency. Business is brutal enough without cutting off the few amenities of speech that tend to sweeten and humanize the work of office, store, and counting room.

The almost irresistible tendency of modern business is to eliminate the human element, to reduce the business man to a mere cog in a machine. But when business loses its soul the soul of the business man is lost too. For the business man must find his life in his work, in the human relations that inhere in his work—his relation to his customers, his employes, his employers, his partners.

After all, it is the human side of business that makes it worth while. A man who lets efficiency squeeze the human element out of his business will find that he has no real human relationship anywhere else.

Life not livelihood is the essence of business.

And when efficiency in the interest of livelihood proposes to sacrifice the common courtesies that draw and hold men together it is time in the interest of life itself to call a halt.

A DOUBTFUL VIRTUE.

IT is a habit with Roman Catholics to point with pride at the fact that when any public disaster occurs their priests are on the spot a long time ahead of the clerical representatives of Protestant churches, and that often they are quite alone in bearing the consolations of religion to the injured and dying.

The Eastland disaster was a case of the latter sort. Priests were on hand within thirty minutes of the turning over of the boat, as many priests as policemen, it seemed, moving here and there among the crowds administering extreme unction to the dying.

It is not reported that a single Protestant minister was in evidence.

To make the inference that the Roman priests thereby proved their greater consecration is too naïve.

Certain very ordinary considerations account for their prompt presence. One, of course, is the fact that the police force of this city and most cities is virtually a Roman Catholic institution. Naturally the priests would be notified of the disaster and the ministers left to find it out.

Besides, the priests are more accessible. They live in institutions, not in private homes, or at least in close connection with institutions.

Moreover, in the particular instance of the Eastland disaster, probably over 90 per cent of the victims were Catholics, and the flocking of priests to the place was natural.

But there's a deeper explanation in the dogma of the efficacy of extreme unction. The administration of this rite at the dying hour has no analogy among Protestants. In a situation like the Eastland catastrophe a Protestant minister would be able to render only the same sort of service rendered by the other helpers. Very likely many an athletic minister had he been on the scene would have plunged into the water and aided in the rescue of the drowning.

It is even doubtful that these priests were not in the way, clogging the narrow platform where the rescued were being brought.

There is a place for the consolations of religion in the hour of death—a mighty place for it—but in the confusion of such an hour as the Eastland or Iroquois disaster, with other lives still to be rescued, the supreme service a Christian minister can render is not the mumbling of a superstitious hocus pocus, but a brave man's effort to rescue those in danger, or to help bring to life those rescued by others.

PROGRESS.

IS THE world getting better? The answer to this question is not so easy, so nonchalant, as it was a little over a year ago.

Then we said: Of course the world is getting better; see our increasing wealth and our knowledge and our art and our labor-saving inventions and our culture; every day is making it a better world to live in; the scale of living is rising, hours of work are shortening, pleasures and privileges long denied the masses are now being claimed by them. Besides, we affirmed, there is a law of progress running through history and through present events; the world not only is getting better: it must get better.

But in sight of the things that have been happening during the past year our optimism has lost its nonchalance.

No really serious soul can give an answer to the question in casual or cocksure tones. There is so much to suggest the theory that history, instead of going forward, is repeating itself, that civilization is destined ever to return to the primitive, from which it emerges only to descend again in endless cycles.

After all, may not progress be an illusion?

In a whole century there has never been a moment when such a possibility could be as easily entertained as right now. It will do us good to listen to two great voices in reply to this grave suggestion.

Henri Bergson, leader of modern French philosophers and psychologists, answers this question in the negative. Bergson does not despair of civilization or of human progress. He is convinced that great and lasting good will come out of the war, for he expects that it will teach humanity the tragic folly of exalting the material, the mechanical, the technical elements in what we call progress, and neglecting the spiritual and the moral. The modern world has worshiped false gods, according to Bergson, and its ideals and standards of greatness and success must undergo radical revision. The war will take humanity back to the simple standards of national and individual conduct—back to righteousness and morality.

Prof. John Dewey, a leading American philosopher and educator, has reached the same conclusion, although he expresses it differently. The war, he holds, does not disprove the cherished theory of progress, social, national and international. What it proves, according to Dr. Dewey, is that we have been egregiously mistaken in some of our ideas as to the inevitability of progress; that we have been too complacent, too indolent, too ready to assume that progress will take care of itself. In truth, progress must be carefully planned; it must be patiently worked out and persistently pushed.

Evolution will not bring progress, declares Dr. Dewey. There is no such thing as a "law of progress." What modern humanity possesses to an extent never dreamed of in past ages is a method of progress or opportunity for progress. Invention, discovery, science, material abundance, the internationalization of commerce, of letters and art, of knowledge—all these things make progress far easier than it could ever have been before in human history. But these things are not in themselves progress in the true sense of the word. Progress is the humanization of societies and nations, the abolition of war and militarism, the eradication of unjust privileges, the establishment of equality of rights and opportunities, the realization of the highest religious and ethical ideals of human solidarity and human brotherhood. None of these things will come to humanity unless we desire them and work intelligently and scientifically to bring them about.

This is inspiring and satisfying doctrine. We have lodged progress too much in material goods, or we have imagined that because we possessed the method of progress that we therefore were progressing.

But these two great teachers show us that progress comes back at last to our desires, our inner purpose to realize ideals and to make an ideal order amongst men.

Only if men have this desire is there any such thing as progress, and so long as they possess it progress need not be despaired of.

PEACE AND RIGHTEOUSNESS.

MILITARISTS say: "Of course we are for peace, but it must be peace with righteousness. Righteousness is a condition of peace and we can never have peace without it."

All of which is true, but it is a half-truth, and works mischief among men as all half-truths have a way of doing.

The twin truth that is overlooked is that peace is a prerequisite to righteousness in the world of nations. The two are reciprocal.

War does not bring justice. There is no guarantee that the outcome of the present war will be a just outcome. Might and science determine the issue of war, not right and wrong. God may not be on the side of the heaviest battalions, but Victory is.

To submit great human questions to the arbitrament of the sword is to submit them to unreason.

So long as we live in an order of the world where nations assume that they must fly at one another's throats when they think they are suffering injustice at the hands of a neighbor nation, it will be impossible to have an order of righteousness in the world.

Militaristic presuppositions defeat justice in advance. Righteousness cannot be established among men until they learn to carry their differences to the high court of reason.

The presuppositions of peace are essential to the discovery of justice when international differences arise, to the purging of the dross from conflicting claims, and for the emergence of a plan of settlement in which justice may be done.

ANGELS ON THE BATTLEFIELD.

RELIGIOUS papers of a certain type are giving circulation to a report that soldiers see angels on the battlefields of Europe. One of the peculiar psychological phenomena of the war has been a credulity which one would not encounter in times of peace.

After the passing of the hoax of the Russians going through Scotland, one story after another has gone the rounds. The story of the angels may have originated from some expression of a dying soldier, which has worked on the imaginations of men weak with fatigue.

Less excusable is the attitude of religious journals this side the water, removed from the stress of war, who would further such a superstition.

On account of the array of college advertising appearing identically in this week's issue of both The Christian Century and The Conquest, the two papers have combined their reading pages also, and the readers of each paper have the benefit of the pages of the other. If the merger serves to introduce to each constituency the paper prized by the other it will have accomplished what the publishers have in view.

Education For a Democracy

BY CHARLES SUMNER LOBINGIER

Judge Lobingier represents the United States government in a peculiarly vital capacity in China's affairs. Appointed to a position of dignity and responsibility in that Republic by our government, he imparts to all who come into touch with him the culture and grace of a Christian missionary. The following article is the substance of an address delivered by him at the Commencement exercises of the University of Nanking, on June 28. Struggling as China is with the great problem of democracy, the commencement orator could hardly have selected a more appropriate theme. His treatment was as illuminating as his selection of a theme was pertinent. Judge Lobingier is a Disciple, holding his American church membership in Hyde Park Church, Chicago. He formerly lived in Lincoln, Nebr

I FANCY that the title which I have selected will not pass unchallenged. "What," I hear it asked, "is education a matter of politics? Is one's cultural training to depend upon the accidental circumstance of what government he happens to live under? Is not science cosmopolitan and are not the tests of an educated man the same everywhere?"

To these I would answer, Education is not an end; it is a means. The end, it is now agreed, is to fit the individual the better for his environment, i. e., his place in human society. And as environments differ, so the means of preparing for them are necessarily not the same. That the training of individuals for a democracy is a distinct branch of education, differing from all others, is recognized by one of America's most prominent educators, Charles William Eliot, who, while still President of Harvard University, said:

> I think that republican education * * * may naturally differ in several respects from imperial education, or monarchical education, or education under any form of government which cannot justly be described as a commonwealth.

Perhaps the most striking feature —if not the basis—of this difference is the inseparability of democracy and education. A monarchical form of government may flourish very well —probably better — without popular education. An aristocracy needs to educate only the favored few and some aristocracies are themselves the product of artificial selection in this field. But for a successful democracy education is indispensible. For Democratic government is but the reflection of average public opinion and that form of government, even more than others, requires intelligence to guide it. As the conservative Robert Low remarked after the passage of the English Reform Bill: "We must now educate our masters."

PURPOSE OF EDUCATION.

Concluding, then, that in a democracy education is essential and that it has a distinct place of its own, what are its peculiar purposes and goals?

I believe that the first is individuality—to teach future citizens to think for themselves and to draw correct conclusions. For it is obvious that just in proportion as its members do this, the affairs of the commonwealth are likely to be well administered and to the extent that they fail to think independently and soundly, the ship of state which they control is in peril of shoals and breakers. It may be conceded that the masses, even in a democracy, are prone to follow a popular idol and to take their ideas from him instead of originating their own. But this is in part a result of monarchical tradition and in part a consequence of defective educational method. Heretofore men have not been taught to think; they have been taught to follow. Too often the school curriculum has loaded the memory and excited the imagination but neglected, if not suppressed, the reasoning faculties. When real democracy comes into its own the state will no longer discourage, but will offer the strongest inducements to thinking.

SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY.

But for democracy's purpose it is not enough that her people should acquire the capacity to think correctly; they must exercise it and that too upon subjects which vitally concern the whole commonwealth. "The enormous faith of millions made for one" may be more spectacular but the spirit of democracy requires us to raise, even a little, the level of the entire mass rather than to leave it sunk in ignorance, in order to create a few scholars and dilettantes.

Far better is it for China, e. g., to teach her teeming millions even the rudiments of sanitation, of child conservation, of reforestation and of monetary reform, than to perpetuate appalling popular indifference to these fundamental questions while training a group of specialists to gather and hoard scientific facts relating thereto. Far be it from me to decry the specialist. He is the pioneer of science and without him progress in any line would be almost imperceptible. But the fact remains that the specialist is valuable to the community chiefly in proportion as the results of his researches and discoveries are assimilated by its masses.

FOLK HIGH SCHOOLS.

I have been much impressed, recently, in studying certain publications of the Federal Bureau of Education treating of the schools, and especially the Folk High Schools of Denmark. These unique institutions have been largely instrumental, it appears, in the remarkable transformation of the Danish masses from the unhappy serfs of a century and a quarter ago to the intelligent, prosperous and progressive yeomanry of today. Speaking of these Folk High Schools the author of said publications observes:

> To make their students able to think and reason for themselves has been the aim of the school men. Encyclopedism has been avoided, and the students generally return to their homes with strong, reasoning minds, open to conviction, but just as ready to convince if on the right side of the argument.

The second object of education for a democracy I believe to be cohesion or co-operation—the habit of working together for the common good. This, indeed, is the democratic form of patriotism. In a monarchy patriotism involves devotion to the ruler; in a democracy it is devotion to the commonwealth, i. e., the whole people. So in a monarchy the goal is obedience to the ruler's will; in a democracy it is respect for the will of the majority.

Democracy can never be highly successful where society is divided into groups and classes hostile to, or unsympathetic with, each other. For its highest development it needs common ideals and aspirations on the part of the people. And those democracies are most efficient where, as in Switzerland, the co-operative habit is strongest.

To make a local application of this point let us consider in connection therewith the situation of China. Here is a country of enormous territory, a vast, virile and surpassingly industrious population, and with natural resources as unlimited as they are untouched. Yet when facing the demands of an alien power of less than one-tenth her potentiality, China seemed impotent! And when we inquire the reason, we find it summed up in three words—lack of cohesion. The various elements and sections of this far flung realm are not yet animated by a common purpose—are not yet ready to sink all minor differences for the common good. Back of that lies the fact that the object of Chinese allegiance has heretofore been not so much the state as family and ancestry — an ideal which, however noble, must give way to the grander vision of all embracing nationality if the hopes of new China's leaders are ever to be realized. So the Chinese more than any other people must fix their eyes on the second object of education in a democracy. When they have learned to co-operate the other goals will easily be attained and China will not then need to seek outside help in order to maintain her national integrity.

EDUCATION A COHESIVE FORCE.

Now popular education is in itself a cohesive and centripetal force. In America we justly regard the public school as the melting pot which enables us to assimilate our vast immigrant population and prepares each generation for a common citizenship. Passing a step higher in the educational scale we may refer again to the Danish Folk High Schools of which it has been said:

> * * * They came into being at a time when the nation was politically distraught and needed a healing and unifying influence. They succeeded in harmonizing the discordant elements, binding all classes together in the common bond of love of fatherland. Duty and opportunity became watchwords. The educated seized upon their opportunity and gave the best they had in them for their country; the ignorant became educated and in time formed a great working force for a better Denmark.

But I do not believe that the democratic educator should stop with merely incidental results. I hold that the co-operative spirit may be actively and effectively cultivated. And surely one method is to emphasize the democratic and patriotic purpose in education.

SERVICE TO THE COMMONWEALTH.

In America today institutions of learning are recognized as most progressive which exert the greatest effort to render service to the commonwealth. Evidences of this tendency may be seen in the recently established Agricultural High Schools, whose purpose is to elevate and dignify rural life and stop the movement from farm to city; in the older agricultural colleges with their practical efforts toward the betterment of American agriculture such as popular instruction in seed selection; and in the forty-one state universities, notably that of Wisconsin, where the aim is to bring all branches of knowledge directly or indirectly to the people.

I am glad to draw my final examples of the democratic trend of education from China. The University of Nanking, among its other good works, has initiated and led what promises to be a far-reaching and ultimately successful movement for the restoration of China's ancient but long denuded forests, and in this the Governor of Chekiang province has ably co-operated.

CHINA GRASPING DEMOCRATIC MOTIVE.

Recently the President of St. John's University at Shanghai asked me to pass on the respective merits of certain theses which had been submitted by students in sociology of that institution. Their theme was "Child Labor in China" and I was agreeably surprised not merely at their command of English but at the research displayed, the mass of material and the methods of exposition. But what impressed me most was the consciousness which the productions of these young Chinese revealed that they were facing a tremendous national problem and that the welfare of their country was deeply involved. They had grasped the democratic motive in education!

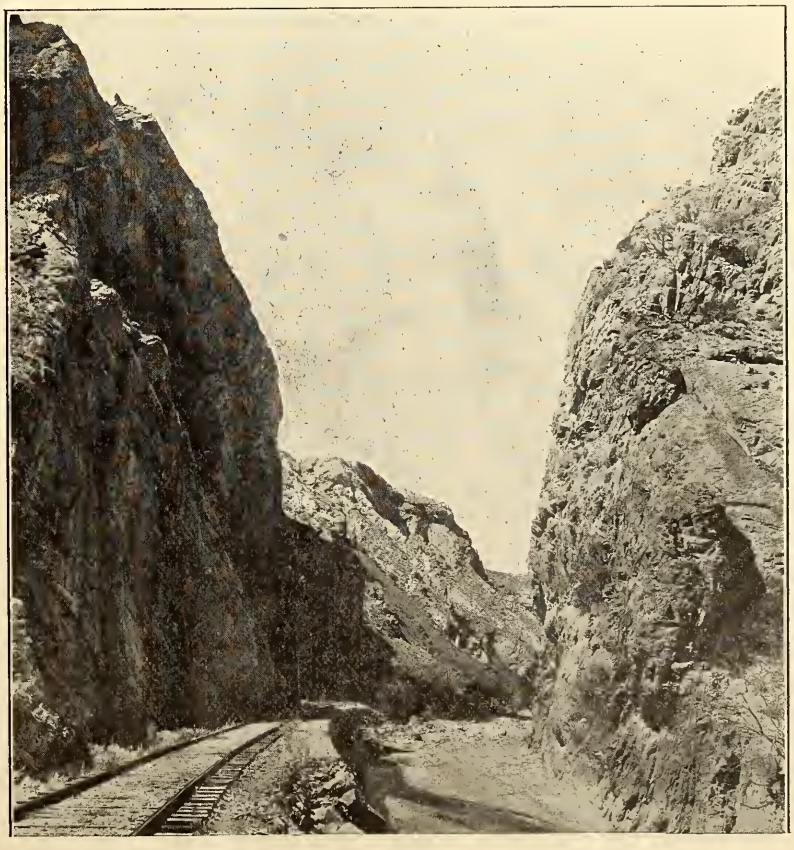
During a recent visit to Peking I was once more agreeably surprised to find in the south city, away from the noise and turmoil of that great metropolis, a modern prison, clean and sanitary, whose inmates are taught useful trades and the elementary Chinese branches. This, I was informed, had been established about five years previously by Shen Kao Pun, the Minister of Justice. It may be only a beginning, but it shows that at least one of China's high officials was imbued with the spirit of the democratic educator.

EDUCATION AND CHINESE PHILANTHROPY.

It was pleasant also to learn of the Chinese philanthropist, Frank Jung Fao, who is educating at his own expense no less than four hundred of his young countrymen and is devoting a large portion of his ample means to the benefit of orphans in China.

* * * * *

The ancient commonwealth of China is the oldest sovereignty on the globe. It has outlived countless monarchies, aristocracies and democracies—kingdoms, empires and republics without number. Long possessing democratic elements in its local institutional life, it has now, after millenniums of independent existence under other forms of government, entered upon the road to a nation wide democracy. That road is long—is beset with many obstacles—but others who have trodden it with some degree of success are glad to offer a helping hand to their latest fellow traveller. Progress along this difficult path will be greatly facilitated by a handmaid of democracy which we call popular education. But to enable new China to reach her goal it must be education of a distinct type —not education which contributes merely to personal and private ends, but education which is consecrated to the whole commonwealth. That way alone lies education for a democracy.



The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orris F. Jordan

Higher Criticism for the Book of Mormon.

There is much agitation among young Mormons in Utah over some recent events. Bishop Spaulding of the Protestant Episcopal church secured permission from the Mormon elders two years ago to have translated an Egyptian document which the prophet Joseph Smith secured from some sailor and pretented to translate. The leaders permitted the translation, full of confidence it would vindicate the inspiration of the prophet. When a well-known Egyptologist translated the tablet, he did not find what Joseph Smith found at all. The result has been the awakening of the critical spirit among young Mormons all over Utah. One student graduating recently from the University of Utah took for his thesis "Needed Reform." Four Gentile professors have been expelled from the university to stop the critical movement, with the result that fourteen other members of the faculty, the strongest in the institution, have also handed in their resignation.

Federal Council Incorporates.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia. The incorporators have elected trustees, among them being Doctors Wallace Radcliffe, Charles L. Thompson, Josiah Strong, Robert E. Speer, William H. Roberts, Frank Mason North, John R. Mott, Shailer Mathews, Chas. S. Macfarland and Gifford Pinchot. The Council has an exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition and they were awarded a gold medal for it.

Unify Work for Immigrants.

Work for immigrants at ports of entry has been a popular form of Christian effort, with the result that there has been some duplication and a failure to co-ordinate properly the forces. The Home Missions Council has secured the co-operation of thirteen denominations in an effort to bring this work together into an effective program.

Baptists are Studying Education.

Most denominations now have more students in the state universities than in the denominational colleges. The Baptists report that they have in the northern branch of the denomination 3,500 Baptists in the denominational colleges and 4,650 in the state universities. The denominational leaders have discovered that the total formed by these two figures is much less than a similar total for any of the other leading denominations operating in the field. This has stirred up Baptist leaders to agitate for an educational campaign in the churches, by which Baptist young people should be induced to go to college.

Three Hundred Missionary Centers.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement will hold in a hundred cities this coming year, three days missionary conventions in the interest of a forward movement in Christian missions. A thousand co-operative centers will be organized and three hundred of these are already secured. The first convention will be held in Chicago, the middle of October.

Y. W. C. A. Helps at Exposition.

The Y. W. C. A. has been very active at the Exposition this year in helping the women on the grounds. Not only are the visitors provided with information, and a booth in which to rest, but the women employees on the ground have been given special attention. The girls in the Joy Zone, an amusement street of the lighter sort, have been given special attention. They have lived in cheap quarters on the grounds and eaten at inferior places, under the high pressure environment of commercialized amusement. The work the Y. W. C. A. has been able to do for them has been of peculiar value and significance.

Episcopalians Raise Funds.

The effort on the part of the Protestant Episcopal church to secure a gift of a day's wage from each of its members to make up an emergency fund of $400,000 to meet some deficits in the foreign missionary treasury is meeting with much success. Two-thirds of the amount is already in hand and the success of the movement seems assured.

Bibles for the Soldiers.

The heir apparent to the throne of Russia, Grand Duke Alexander Nicolaevitch, has allowed his name to go into the new testaments that are being circulated in the Russian army. The Orthodox church takes a more generous attitude toward Bible distribution than the Roman Catholics have commonly done. Each Bible sent by an American Sunday-school scholar will have in it the following inscription: "His Imperial Highness the Czarevitch, Heir Apparent, and Grand Duke Alexander Nicholaevitch, most graciously presents this gospel which has been sent him by a Sunday-school scholar in America." The American Bible Society has arranged to present a gospel or a new testament for each nickel contributed by an American Sunday-school child.

Gary Plan Extending to New York.

The problem of religious education for public school pupils is receiving much attention these days. In New York the past year, attention has been given to this matter, and experiments in a modification of the Gary plan have been made. In several schools the children were released eighty minutes three times a week. Bishop Courtney of the Protestant Episcopal church is chairman of a committee of a hundred religious leaders to plan for the extension of this system. Rev. G. U. Wenner of the Lutheran church was prominent in the enterprise last year.

Dignified Ministers Preach in Street.

Street preaching has not been practicularly attractive for the educated ministry of the older communions, and least so in New England. The ministers of New Haven, Conn., have arranged a regular program of street preaching for Saturday night when the population of the town turn out in considerable force. The people will be able to hear just as good a sermon on the street as in any church in the city. Street preaching is not regarded as undignified in England and Scotland.

Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch Accused.

The odium theologicum has been invoked in a variety of ways against progressive thinkers, but a rather novel form of attack is that recently made by an obscure Baptist editor against Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch, the Socialist theological professor of Rochester Theological seminary. He has been called a Bahaist! To most people that wouldn't sound so bad, for perhaps they haven't heard of the cult of Mohammedan origin which has undertaken to syncretize the religions of the world into a universal religion. Dr. Rauschenbusch has broken the silence which he usually maintains in the face of such utterances and has indignantly, though humourously, denied the charge, insisting that he doesn't even know very much about the cult in question. The Baptist editor weakly responds that if Dr. Rauschenbusch isn't a Bahaist, he ought to be. This form of reasoning is not confined to the Baptist denomination.

Here and There

THE CONVENTION IN RETROSPECT.

This was a peaceful and harmonious convention. It was a delight to every man who believes in our plea and in our future. It was, let us hope, a harbinger of our total deliverance from the reactionary influences that are doing their utmost to convert us into a warring sect. The real life of the Disciples was never more clearly seen than at Los Angeles.

The man with a grouch, the man with the countenance which foretold that something dreadful was going to happen, the man with his finger to his lips to enjoin silence lest we say the wrong thing, the man who was going to throw the convention into a panic with a revolutionary resolution, or who would protest against those who were trying to deliver us to the "sects," was not there, Glory hallelujah! The convention could proceed with its work unhampered, and with the result that everything moved like clock-work.

REGARD FOR ALL.

All the plans of years had a free hand, and never was there a disposition to over ride anybody, to railroad any measures through, or to engage in high-handed proceedings. If such charge has been brought against other conventions, although purely fictitious, it could not be brought against this. There was a fine regard for all differences of opinion. No visitor was given a back seat because he did not bring a delegate's certificate. The convention demonstrated its ability to do all its friends claimed for it as a servant of all the interests of the brotherhood. The only hint of an ecclesiasticism we heard of was when the aforementioned brother rose and asked that the majority renounce their rights in his behalf. This rule of the hierarchy was ended in its incipiency.

HIGH CLASS ADDRESSES.

The addresses throughout were excellent, probably as uniform in merit as any we have had in recent years. It is encouraging to note the presence of men on our platforms in increasing numbers year after year who are in sympathy with the great forward movements of their day, who know what the world need is, and who are trying to meet it, who are never pessimistic nor fearful nor dyspeptic. Fewer and fewer men whose thought is set in the moulds of the past are being heard in our conventions. Conventions for their special benefit are being planned for later in the season to which all are cordially invited. Go early and get a front seat. The men who spoke to us at Los Angeles represent the ripest fruit of our ministry. Of course, the visitors were men of national reputation. Mr. Bryan still holds his audience in the hollow of his hand. Dr. Francis ranks as one of the ablest expository-evangelistic preachers. Dr. Coyle with his magnificent trumpet-like voice won all his hearers with clear cut address on Christian Unity. Dr. Matt. S. Hughes, the popular preacher of Pasadena, presented the same subject in his brilliant manner, but with an air of apology for the divisions of Christendom.

CAREY E. MORGAN'S ADDRESS.

Those who heard and have read the address of President Carey E. Morgan will agree with me that it was a creditable and timely production. We have learned to expect great and tender messages from Mr. Morgan. This was a plea for good fellowship, for toleration, for peace in the midst of strife. We recall his address at Atlanta and the similarity between that and this. Hugh McLellan made a similar plea at Louisville, and Peter Ainslie at Topeka. All these addresses were received with unanimity by the convention. Thousands of Disciples could join heart and soul with Mr. Morgan in his sentiments. All they ask is the liberty he declared he meant to conserve for himself, the liberty to live and die a free man. But what a gulf yawns between such convention addresses and our practices! Instead of granting such liberty what has been our course for twenty-five years? Instead of love for those who differ, not because they differ but because they are our brethren, the policy has been to denounce, to disfellowship, to drive out of the ranks. The intolerant and the exclusive have sought to promote peace by compelling uniformity under penalties, and have done what they could to make our plea a hissing and a by-word. One must accept their interpretations of Scripture or be called ugly names.

A SENTIMENT TO BE PRACTICED.

Now if such addresses mean anything to us they ought to be reduced to practice. If we love our brother on the platform we can love him off the platform. If we can love him while we speak we ought to love him while we listen. If we can tolerate his peculiar views in convention mood we can tolerate them when the convention has been brought to a close. The fault of all such addresses has been that they perished on the air. We came together to enjoy a delightful fellowship; we separated to behave like the publicans. We declared our undying affection for those who granted a wider latitude to certain texts than we did, and proceeded straightway to treat them as we would treat those whom we hated.

THE WAY TO LOVE.

A certain Englishman held that a wife never knew how much her husband loved her until he had beaten her into helpless submission. Some of our brethren have accepted the same doctrine and acted accordingly, with the result that others prefer to be hated for a while if the sample of love produces such misery. It is rather difficult to convince a man that you love him while roasting him over martyr or editorial fires. So the only way to love is to love, to honor is to honor, and to recognize the liberty of differences by recognition. If we have a sympathetic heart for Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, Nashville, Hammond, and Sand Creek, no man can object to their representation on our convention programs. Henceforth, if a man is needed from either one the question of fitness and not geography must alone determine the choice.

If this be not true then all such addresses as President Morgan's are sweetened words, pits covered with flowers to deceive, painted deserts to allure to destruction. If love does not mean recognition then we say to all ironic spirits among us your faith is vain and your preaching vain. And let not program committees heed the medieval cry that recognition means endorsement of errors. If there were any justice or truth in such a claim no man could be heard, for no man is free from error; no man like Shailer Matthews or Dr. Coyle or William J. Bryan could appear. The duty of every man is to prove all things and hold fast that which is good. We ought to have the best men on our convention programs no matter what their postoffice. For a long time we have been catering to the fanatic, we have been feeding him tidbits to keep him from flying off the handle. That folly ought to come to an end speedily, and half the care given to the cultivation of the scholar would be productive of much better results.

THE ONLY BONDS.

We ought to write it down in our little book that among a people like ours with no ecclesiastical bonds to hold them together, love, loyalty, and liberty are the only bonds that will hold, and we ought to have learned this after the folly and fuss of twenty-five years to hold us by the use of the words, really a misuse, without regard to their meaning.

The only cure for too much liberty is more liberty!

I should like, for myself, a little more freedom in the matter of applause, and more hearty singing, and none of the soft-pedaling which is more of an experiment in pneumatics than an aid to devotion. Otherwise everything was lovely, our health was never better, and the best wish we have for Des Moines is that the same good will and fellowship may prevail there next year as at Los Angeles. In that city we ought to have the most spiritual convention that we have ever held. The setting is right for it.

ELLIS B. BARNES.

"Weighed and Found--"

The Story of a "Filler In"

BY IDA K. WILLIAMS

From the Christian Endeavor World.

WE ARE very grateful to Sister Richards for all the work she she has done for us; therefore we feel obliged to comply with her request. As you all know, Sister Richards teaches a Sunday-school class, sings in the choir, plays at Sunday-school and prayer meeting." The erect figure of Sally Brooks as the piano stirred restlessly.

"We feel that she is right in thinking she has too much to do; so we want some one to volunteer to lead the Juniors. Sister Richards is willing to help," continued the superintendent.

Sally darted a glance at Mary Richards. She was looking down modestly. Sally gave the opening chord of the last hymn with a crash, closed it with a bang, and flew out of the Sunday-school room by the back way.

Her mind was in a turmoil, her heart was beating turbulently; and she had no desire to talk with any one. Least of all did she want to talk with Mr. Bailey, who she felt sure was looking for her.

"If I do, I'll fly right off and tell him what I think. Sunday school and prayer meeting, indeed!" she sniffed.

Brother Jack raised his eyes from his paper, and allowed them to rest on his sister's face as she came up the porch steps.

"What's wrong, sis?" he questioned, reading the very evident storm-signals.

"Nothing and everything," she answered, flinging aside her hat.

"Must be, if you didn't stay to church," he commented.

"I couldn't. I just could not sit there and listen to Mary Richards singing with that satisfied smirk on her face."

"Whew!" whistled Jack. "I thought you and Mary——"

"We were," she interrupted tersely. "But I'm getting tired of it. Almost every Sunday either Mr. Bailey or Rev. Mr. Johns gets up and gives a eulogy to Mary for the good work she does. Yes, I know"—she answered her brother's look—"she does work faithfully—pretty much so; but she only does it for the glory in it. And there isn't anybody who shirks as much as she does, if she can without people knowing it. I know, because I've been on too many committees with her."

"Yes?" encouraged Jack, smiling whimsically at Sally's outburst.

"O, I suppose it sounds hateful, and I'm jealous, and all that; but it does seem as though they might praise some one else awhile. I'd like a little appreciation myself. They might at least give me credit for what I do. Mr. Bailey announced that Mary played in Sunday school—she only plays one opening hymn in her own classroom—and at prayer-meeting. And she hasn't even been at prayer meeting for goodness knows when."

"And who does play?"

"I do. And Mr. Bailey knows it. Sometimes I just feel like never going near them again. It makes me so mad." She was silent a moment; then, as Jack patted her hand reassuringly, she broke out again.

"You're a dear, Jack, to be my safety-valve. I wouldn't for worlds have any one know I felt this way, but sometimes I feel as though I had to tell some one. It would hurt mother," she concluded irrelevantly.

"Fire away," grinned Jack.

"Thanks. I've had this stored away for some time. Ever since election of officers in our Young People. I didn't care particularly about being pianist,—nobody wants to work so hard, but I worked so hard to get the piano. Mary was on my committee, but she didn't do a thing. Well, then, after I'd been playing every evening for months, and after I'd done all that work, didn't they go and elect her pianist and me second assistant? That's how much they appreciate my efforts. Even then it wouldn't be so bad, but now that Mary has the honor she tries to get out of the work. Comes late every night, after she knows I'll be playing."

"That isn't very nice, Sally. But why don't you let the first assistant play?"

"She never comes."

"Hm," studied Jack. "I suppose it wouldn't do for you to refuse to play? Tell 'em you aren't a pianist, and won't play."

"O, goodness, no! Everyone would think I was a sour ball."

"Well, I don't see anything you can do."

"There isn't. Unless I go late to the meeting, and wait until she gets there; but that makes things draggy,—for no one else plays much,—and I hate draggy meetings. I guess I'll just have to grin and bear it. I feel better now after letting loose on you," she smiled gratefully. "But," she continued as she rose, frowning slightly, "I won't lead the Juniors."

"Juniors?" Jack looked up from the paper to which he had retired. "I didn't hear anything about them, did I?"

"Maybe not. That's what got me going this morning; but, when I got fairly started, there were so many things that I forgot that one. You see, Mary does so much," sarcastically.

"Hold on a minute, Sally mine; I don't like that tone. Doesn't Mary work pretty faithfully?"

"Yes, I suppose so," conceded Sally somewhat reluctantly; "not any more than some others, though."

"Doesn't she sing twice every Sunday?"

"Ye-es. O, I suppose it's all right, though goodness knows I'd be glad enough to sing if I could. Well, unto him that hath."

"All right, we'll give her credit for what she does do. Go ahead."

"Well, she doesn't want to lead the Juniors. I always helped, you know—played for them, and gave them the lesson; but she was leader and got all the credit; so I got tired, and didn't start in again this fall. So now she wants some one else to lead. Says she'll help."

"Then, if you want some credit, why don't you lead, and let her help?"

Sally made a wry face.

"My dear brother, I know what that means. The habit is so strong upon every one that they would still think Mary was doing it. She knows it; that's why she offers to help," she concluded vindictively.

"Isn't there any one else?"

Sally shook her head.

"No, we haven't many workers. Of course there isn't a great number in the church. Well, I guess they'll have to let it go. I hate to see the Juniors dropping out, but I simply won't take them. Goodness! there are the people coming home from church. I'd better go in and see if I can help 'Liza set the table."

Jack watched the last flutter of Sally's skirts disappear kitchenward, a thoughtful look on his serious face.

"Poor kid Sally! She's learning the ways of the world. Well, she's eighteen, and every one has to learn sometime, sooner or later. It's such a busy old world that it can't stop to give much appreciation. But Sally's all right at heart. This is just the surface. She'll rise to the occasion." A loving smile settled in his eyes, as he heard her chattering cheerily to 'Liza, maid of all work

When the afternoon bell rang, Jack looked at his sister. Looking up, she caught his eyes, but dropped hers quickly.

"Let's go for a walk, Sally, suggested Jack, guessing at her struggle and uneasiness. It was not like Sally to shirk.

The last bright leaves of autumn clung to the trees; the country road was lined with nodding goldenrod undaunted by Jack Frost's cold fingers; the sun poured down its wealth of gold warmth, as though to belie the chilliness of mornings and evenings before he was fairly up. Already the birds had flown to a warmer climate; save for the rustle of the leaves, the dropping of a nut here and there, and the scurrying back and forth of a bright-eyed squirrel, the wild things were silent. A soft breeze was singing a sleepy lullaby to all the sleeping flowers.

Sally walked along silently, drinking in the beauty and reveling in the keen sweetness of a late fall day. Finally the rhythm of the song Jack was softly whistling attracted her attention.

"What is that, Jack? You've been whistling it a long time."

"It's a bit of ragtime, Sally. I don't suppose you'll approve, with your love for the classical; but the sentiment of it caught my fancy.

"'Don't you bother, honey, if the world goes wrong;
Don't you worry, honey, if the years seem long;
Don't you mind the trouble;
Life is only just a bubble:
It all ends right.'"

"Thanks," laughed Sally somewhat dryly. "Meant for me?"

"Not exactly. Mustn't think you're the only one who has trials and tribulations. How do you know but what Mary is scolding this very instant because you aren't at Junior? Probably she thinks she is abused"

"No doubt she does," admitted Sally, flinging herself down on a bed of bright leaves.

The two lapsed into an understanding silence. Sally, with her arms under her head, lay watching the leaves rustle and listening to the soft murmur of the breeze. Drowsier and drowsier it grew until Sally's dark eyes drooped, lulled by it.

They flew open, suddenly wide-awake, as a voice rang in her ears. Two strangers were passing by, so near that she could have reached out her hand and touched their garments. Strangely enough, though it seemed perfectly nat-

ELIJAH AND THE PROPHETS OF BAAL.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 5.

..Golden Text: Jehovah is far from the wicked; but he heareth the prayer of the righteous. Proverbs 15:29.

I Kings 18:30-39.

(30) And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me; and all the people came near unto him. And he repaired the altar of Jehovah that was thrown down. (31) And Elijah took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of Jehovah came, saying, Israel shall be thy name. (32) And with the stones he built an altar in the name of Jehovah; and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two measures of seed. (33) And he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid it on the wood. And he said, Fill four jars with water, and pour it on the burnt-offering, and on the wood. (34) And he said, Do it the second time; and they did it the second time. And he said, Do it the third time; and they did it the third time. (35) And the water ran round about the altar; and he filled the trench also with water. (36) And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening oblation, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, O Jehovah, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Isreal, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word. (37) Hear me, O Jehovah, hear me, that this people may know that thou, Jehovah, art God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again. (38) Then the fire of Jehovah fell, and consumed the burnt-offering, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench. (39) And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces: and they said, Jehovah, he is God; Jehovah, he is God.

Verse by Verse.

30. And Elijah said unto the people. A common form of speech in the Old Testament. Read the first 29 verses of this chapter.—All the people came near. The people were willing to obey. Our willingness to obey determines God's ability to help us. —Repaired the altar. This shows clearly that a local sanctuary once stood on the spot. Here Jehovah had been worshiped.

31. Twelve stones. There were two kingdoms composed of the twelve tribes and in this great test Elijah considered them religiously one. Jehovah was the God of both kingdoms. See Josh. 4:5.—Israel shall be thy name. Israel means "prince of God," and, was given to Jacob at Peniel, Gen. 32:28; 35:10.

32. Built an altar in the name of Jehovah. This seems to be unnecessary when the old one had been repaired, see verse 31. Some scholars hold that verse 31 and the first part of 32 are interpolations.—A trench. To hold the water that was to be poured upon the sacrifice.—Two measures of seed. Or, a two-seah measure. RVm. The third part of an ephah, about two and a half gallons.

33. He put the wood in order and cut the bullock in pieces. Thus far the preparations made were similar to those made by the priests of Baal.—Fill four jars with water. He was taking every precaution against fraud. There could be no concealed fire. Here we leave the likeness to Baal preparations.

34. Third time. This would remove all possible doubt from the minds of the people. Few of us are as sure of God's help as this! Some see in this a corresponding symbol to the twelve tribes and for the same reason.

35. Filled the trench. All this preparation was intended to make more evident the superiority of Jehovah. It was to be the triumph of the true God.

36. Came near. Came near to the place of sacrifice with calm and trustful boldness.—The God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Israel. The common form of expression and one intended to remind the people of God's favors to them in the past.—I am thy servant. Willing to do thy bidding. One wholly given up to the cause of the true God. He was conscious of following the word as he understood it.

37. Hear me, O Jehovah. Elijah's prayer is brief, but full of pathos, and pleading. His confidence in God finds beautiful expression in prayer.—That this people may know that thou, Jehovah, art God. The prayer is not burdened with selfish interests no matter how worthy they might be. Most of our prayers are shot through and through with selfish ideas; they have not the world wide vision.—And that thou hast turned their heart back again. Or, for thou didst turn their heart backward. RVm. His great desire was that the people should turn from idolatry to Jehovah.

38. Then the fire of Jehovah fell. The answer was complete and convincing, which is the point.

39. They fell on their faces. Either because they were excited, or because they were convinced, and fell down before the work of their God.—Jehovah, he is God. The experience cleared up any lingering doubt that may have lingered in the people's mind relative to the merits of the two religions. Jehovah to them was the all powerful God.

Baal or Jehovah?

The Lesson in Today's Life.

One of the important meanings of the word worship is "the state of worth" or worthiness. We ascribe worth to the thing we worship. It is the dramatic representation of the inward feelings and desires of those who worship.

In the lower religions worship is almost entirely a matter of specific acts duly performed, and small importance is attached to the frame of mind in which the acts may be performed.

As a man becomes more and more spiritual he seeks more spiritual ways of worship.

The sensitive soul seeks always to disengage itself from the trappings of religion.

The tragedy of the process lies in the fact that there are so many who fail to reach these higher levels. They are satisfied to have the temporal rather than the spiritual ideals of religion. They worship Baal rather than Jehovah.

All men and women worship. It is a part of our very nature. The objects of our worship vary just as widely as our spiritual refinement.

We often arrest this development by allowing the object of our worship to crystallize in the form of a temple, church, ritual or Bible. These time-honored helps to our devotions are used as ends in themselves rather than as means to an end.

In our practical lives the thing we attach supreme worth, to, that we really worship. We may have some fine-spun theories about our devotion to Jehovah, but the real and practical fact is that a number of other interests come first as will be clearly seen by our action.

This is nowhere more clearly seen than in our homes, where like Carmel, the altars have been destroyed, and where religious conversation is no longer in good taste.

Behold our churches with their empty pews and demoralizing indifference!

We are worshiping Baal or Jehovah every day. It is a choice between the lower and higher ideals in our life. One after another of our pet schemes fail, our highest ideals refuse to be realized. Our best friend fails, our idols are crushed, and we by these and other tests are made to see that Jehovah is the only one who can give real substance to life.

There is a perfect babel of voices clamoring for our worship. The gods of Baal never were more numerous than they are today.

The god rapidly growing in favor today is the "god of pleasure." A ride through the parks, a look into our homes, and a glance at the pleasure resorts of our land would convince most any one that the "god of pleasure" claims much of our devotion.

The Baal-god of wealth receives the worship of increasing numbers of devoted people who are lured into its spacious temples by the promise of ease and plenty.

We see an increasing number of people bowing in true Eastern style, to the "god of fashion."

It would be difficult to estimate how much our lives are given over to this form of Baal worship. The highways and byways are full of evidence of the popularity of this god.

"And what shall I more say? for the time will fail me if I tell of Ease, Fame, Travel, Chance, Passion, and Drink: who through their popularity have wrought havoc, and turned the shrines of Jehovah into the temples of Baal.

"How long go ye limping between the two sides? If Jehovah be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him."

News and Hopes of the Colleges

CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, COLUMBIA, MO.

Mrs. L. W. St. Clair-Moss, President.

Christian College, at Columbia, Mo., will open Sept. 15 for its sixty-fifth year. This institution now is a fully standardized junior college, offering the four years of high school work and two years of standard college courses. The degree of Associate in Arts is conferred upon those completing the college course. Candidates for this degree, who have also completed the course in the School of Education, receive a certificate for teaching from the State Department of Education.

Christian College emphasizes the lines of education which will best prepare women for successful future home-making. It sustains an excellent department of home economics with courses leading to certificate. A recent gift from a friend of the college provides for better equipment and for the enlargement of this department. A new building is planned for the near future. The first floor of this building will be devoted to the School of Home Economics. Christian College anticipates a prosperous year with a large enrollment of resident students.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS AT CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY, CANTON, MO.

Earl M. Todd, President.

Christian University is making a bold venture. Relying on the churches to support them in a progressive policy, the trustees have increased their budget by several thousand dollars over previous years, and are reorganizing the educational forces of the school on the basis of a standard college. With the carrying through of this program, Christian University will enter upon a new stage in her history, and will be able to serve the churches far mare effectively.

BETHANY COLLEGE, BETHANY, W. VA.

T. E. Cramblet, resident.

The past year witnessed a continuous growth in the life and power of this honored institution. The student enrollment for the college year, including the summer school, reached the high-water mark of 436. The college has grown, not only in the number of students, in its property and in its endowment; it has also kept pace with the educational standards of the best American colleges. The great commonwealths of Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, West Virginia, and other states, after careful investigation, have placed Bethany upon their accredited lists. Graduates of Bethany College are given certificates to teach in the public schools of these states, without examination.

The missionary spirit has never been more marked than at present. The Volunteer Mission Band, with a membership of twenty-four consecrated young people, helps to keep alive the missionary spirit. The total enrollment of ministerial students for the year numbered eighty-four. With such profes sors as Taylor, Johnson, Finley and Miller, this department is able to offer the highest advantages.

The Agricultural Department, inaugurated in 1910, is surpassing all expectations. Forty-three students were enrolled in this department during the past session. The college now owns farming lands amounting to 550 acres. The dairy barn is regarded as one of the best in the country, and the herd of Guernsey cattle, seventy-two in number, most of which are thoroughbred, is pronounced the best herd of Guernsey owned by any college in the country. The work of caring for this dairy, including the feeding, the testing, the keeping of records, and the marketing of products, is all done by student labor. No labor other than that of students is employed. This department enables a number of young men to earn their education, and, at the same time, gives them practical training in agriculture and dairying. The sales of dairy products for the past two years have averaged over $600 per month. Professor Hove, one of the most competent farm managers and dairymen, is the dean of this department.

The college has buildings, grounds and endowment amounting to about $900,000, and these are being increased constantly. The members of the Board of Trustees, at the recent annual meeting, by resolution, expressed themselves as highly gratified over the progress the college is making.

President Cramblet has been at the head of the institution fourteen years, and during these years this marked prosperity has come. The trustees, at their recent meeting, passed a resolution expressive of their appreciation of his labors, and, as a token of the love and esteem in which he was held, presented him a purse of $500 and a vacation, which will be spent in California in November.

The new $40,000 church is rapidly approaching completion. This will add much to the beauty of the college settlement, and will give the students the advantages of a modern church building.

HIRAM COLLEGE, HIRAM, O.

Miner Lee Bates, President.

The year 1914-15 closed auspiciously for Hiram College. Many were heard to say that the commencement address delivered by Professor E. E. Snoddy on the theme, "The College and the World Call," was the greatest address ever heard from the Hiram platform. It was a masterely setting forth of the mission of the open-minded, broad-visioned, consecrated Christian college.

The year brought high educational recognition. Second among the colleges of Disciples, Hiram was elected to membership in the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. The State Department of Instruction placed Hiram on the accredited list of institutions entitled to certify their graduates to teach high schools and elementary schools within the state without examination, at the spring meeting of the Ohio College Association, President Miner Lee Bates, was elected president of the association for 1915-16.

The year gave gratifying evidence of the determination of the friends of Christian education that Hiram College shall have adequate financial support. Forty-six churches contributed during the year a total of nearly $850, an increase over the preceding year of 475 per cent in the number of contributing churches, of 443 per cent in the amount contributed. Friends of the college contributed personally about $7,000 more for current expense and the endowment was increased by nearly $100,000 cash. In addition, gifts of above $2,000 were received for special purposes such as library books, the college automobile, the salary of the housekeeper, a program clock for the ringing of class bells, an office telephone system and the equipment of the Commons, a central boarding club for young men. By gift and purchase, some 850 volumes were added to the library.

It was a surpassing year in student activities. Representatives of Hiram won two state oratorical contests, a literary contest with Wooster, two inter-collegiate debates (with Heidelberg and Baldwin-Wallace), eight out of ten basketball games and six out of eight baseball games. The ladies' and men's glee clubs and the college orchestra and band had successful seasons. The Christian work of the students was unusually vigorous and effective. The Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A. Student Volunteer Band and the Disciples' Club all had a good year. The teaching staff for 1914-15 included an unusual number of new teachers in important positions. They made good and it is a pleasure to announce that but few changes will be made for the year 1915-16. Professor Shirley F. Stewart, a graduate of Indiana University, who is soon to receive the degree of Ph.D. in Education from Chicago University, has been called to the Chair of Philosophy and Education succeeding Professor George T. Colman, who has answered a call to missionary service in South America under the Presbyterian Board. Mr. Morton D. Adams, Jr., will study in Harvard next year and his place as instructor in English will be filled by Miss Jennie Tudor of the Graduate School of Indiana University. New appointments in the department of music are Miss Helen M. Hall, honor graduate of Oberlin Conservatory, to teach piano and organ and Mr. Rei Christopher, graduate of Dana's Music Institute and instructor in the Warren Military Band School, to teach theory and stringed and wind instruments and direct the college orchestra.

The outlook for the new year is highly encouraging. The year opens with a gift of more than 1,500 volumes and valuable manuscripts from the library of B. A. Hinsdale, beloved former student, teacher and president of the college, a gift of $7,500 to the endowment fund and a modest increase in the salaries of teachers amounting in some instances to 25 per cent. Indications now point to a good increase in the enrollment.

SPOKANE UNIVERSITY, SPOKANE, WASH.

I. N. McCash, President.

Spokane University is the youngest child in our educational family. It is two years old, and closed the second year with an enrollment of 120 students. It has a faculty of eighteen well-equipped, zealous teachers. The student body is made up of young people who were born or have spent most of their lives in the northwest; a few, however, are in attendance from foreign lands. India, Switzerland, the Dominion of Canada and Scotland are represented.

The outlook for attendance at the next semester is most hopeful. A girls' dormitory, three stories high, with modern equipment, has been completed, and the first story of the Science Hall erected. A complete printing establishment has been added to the university, and from its press is issued, bi-weekly, the Exponent, the annual catalogue, and Spokannual, the student yearly production.

DRAKE UNIVERSITY, DES MOINES, IA.

Hill M. Bell, President.

During the year large additions were made to the equipment of the university library and laboratories. We note that 2,634 books were added to the library. In the past five years nearly thirteen thousand books have been placed in the library, an average of more than twenty-five hundred per year.

The year evidenced the fact that the influence of the university is widening. There were 495 students admitted to the institution for the first time. More than 10 per cent of these came from other colleges, among which were the University of Wisconsin, the University of Iowa, the University of Illinois, Amherst College, Northwestern University, Bryn Mawr College and Iowa State College. Ninety-one of the ninety-nine counties in Iowa were represented in the enrollment. Students were in attendance from eight foreign countries and twenty-eight different states.

Readers will be interested in knowing that 429 students in Drake University were pursuing the study of English last year; 365, Biblical History and Literature: 280, Education; 241, History; 239, Psychology; 235, German.

At the close of the year 199 different students were graduated from the university: 62 from the College of Liberal Arts, 16 from the College of the Bible, 32 from the College of Law, 83 from the College of Education, and 27 from the Institute of Fine Arts.

The outlook for the year 1915-16 is most encouraging.

Many members have been added to the various faculties, so that nearly every department of the institution will be doing more effective work next year. Some of the instructors added are: Dr. Charles J. Hilkey, professor of law. Dr. Hilkey received his Ph.D. from Columbia University, and his degree J.D. from the University of Michigan. Dr. William Homer Spencer, professor of law, with J.D. from the University of Chicago. Miss Bonnie Andrews, Assistant Professor in Elementary Education, with her A.M. from the University of Minnesota. Mr. Walter Irving Easly, Assistant Professor of Commerce and Business Administration. Mr. Easly is a graduate of Miami University, receiving his A.M. from the University of Michigan. Mr. Henri Ruifrok, Professor of Piano. Mr. Ruifrok is regarded as one of the leading teachers of piano in the middle west.

KEUKA COLLEGE, KEUKA PARK, N. Y.

Joseph A. Serena, President.

The past year was one of the very best in the history of Keuka College. The student enrollment increased, especially in the number of students who come for the complete courses. We have more clearly and definitely drawn the lines marking off the preparatory school—Keuka Institute—from the college. In the former, courses in agriculture and home economics have attracted many students. In the college there has been an increase in the number of ministerial students, and one preaching appointment has been opened up in a country schoolhouse, while a new Bible school has been opened in another schoolhouse. Besides these activities, our students supply the pulpits of near-by churches. Through the activity of the Woman's Club, the endowment of the college is enriched by $2,300, while a bequest from Mrs. A. McKoon, a former trustee, has given us a house and two lots. Our fruit land has been enhanced in value several thousand dollars, so that in all we close the year with $5,000 more than we began it.

If we can open next year with one hundred students in Keuka Institute and forty Freshmen in the college, it will surely insure greater victories than we have yet experienced. Keuka bids fair to be a channel through which the Disciples are to make the larger impression on the Empire State and all the East.

BUTLER COLLEGE, INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

T. C. Howe, President.

Butler College has enjoyed a year of unusual prosperity. The attendance increased materially, the personnel of the student body continued high, the spirit of loyalty to the college and to religious truth deepened, and, as a fitting climax, the largest class in the history of the institution received their diplomas.

The total attendance in all departments reached 626; last year, 525. This increase came not in the course of a strenuous campaign, but through the normal channels of promotion. One gratifying feature of this increase in the attendance is the fact that it represented a larger return of former students than in any recent year.

In debate and oratory the college had a good year. The debating team won from Wabash College. Orators represented the college in the intercollegiate contest, the peace contest and the prohibition contest, and made creditable records.

The Christian associations had good years, handling the religious problems earnestly and ably. Each year marks a distinct religious gain. This year the associations and the ministerial students represented in the Sandwich Club, in co-operation with the faculty, had a short evangelistic series of chapel services, conducted by E. E. Violett. In addition to these plans, the college participated in the lectures offered at the College of Missions by Dr. Arthur J. Brown, of the Presbyterian Board; Stephen J. Corey, of our own Foreign Society, and Carey E. Morgan, of the American Board.

Commencement brought its usual good cheer. The classes of 1890 and 1897 met in a reunion, with luncheons and general celebration of imperishable events and memories. Prof. Jabez Hall delivered the baccalaureate sermon in his usual happy and forceful manner. The students, under the auspices of the Senior class, presented, in clever manner, Victor Herbert's "The Serenade," on the campus. The alumni had their usual reunion, lunch, and the presentation of plays on the campus. The commencement address was delivered by Dean Charles R. Brown, of the Yale School of Religion.

The outlook for the coming year is bright for substantial increase in attendance and deepening of interest.

TEXAS CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY, FORT WORTH, TEXAS.

Frederick W. Kershner, President.

The College of Arts and Sciences enrolled 254 students during the year, which is better than any previous record since the school was founded in 1873. The Freshmen class of ninety-four was much the largest in our history. The different constituent colleges of the university showed marked progress. The College of Fine Arts enrolled fully as many students as last year, which was a remarkable record in the face of existing conditions in the southwest. The College of Medicine was granted a standing in Texas for the first time in its history. The College of the Bible showed a steady increase in attendance despite the fact that ministerial students are usually the first to be affected by hard times.

The total enrollment of the university, in all departments, was 697.

The university added over $135,000 to its permanent funds the past year. Since the school moved to Fort Worth four years ago it has averaged over $100,000 a year in contributions to its capital funds. The material assets of Texas Christian University have passed the half-million, and are rapidly approaching the million mark. The chief benefactors the past year were Mrs. Ida V. Jarvis and Messrs. C. W. Gibson and H. W. Stark. These are all names which deserve to be written in imperishable letters with those who, like Abou ben Adhem, has chosen to serve their fellow-man.

The outlook for the coming year is most promising. A new department of law has been added to the university under the efficient direction of Prof. E. R. Cockrell. The courses offered will be given full credit at the University of Texas, and the school has the enthusiastic backing of the entire membership of the Ft. Worth bar, which has volunteered to lend its assistance in every possible way. Among the new teachers for 1915-16 will be Prof. E. C. Wilson, who has just received his doctors' degree from Clark University, and who takes charge of the department of Philosophy; Prof. Thomas Holt Hamilton and Louis Casperon, who come to the department of Music; Miss Aline Wilson, formerly director at Virginia Christian College, who comes to the same department, and Prof. E. Y. Freeland, of Vanderbilt, who takes charge of our athletic activities. Dean W. B. Parks, who has been absent on leave at the University of Chicago for the past year, returns to take up his work next September. Mr. H. M. Durrett, of Ft. Worth, becomes business manager in thee place of Prof. J. A. Dacus, and Professor Dacus transfers to his old position at the head of the T. C. U. College of Business.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, CAMDEN POINT, MO.

F. J. Yokley, President.

Though sixty-six years of age, Missouri Christian College is taking on new life. Fully accredited by the State University in 1913 in the high-school courses, she is now looking forward to junior college standing. To do this all teachers must meet the requirement of the Educational Committee at Columbia. No new teachers will be employed in the literary work who have not a master's degree from a standard university. This means a new day for the college. As the old teachers of the special departments leave, only graduates with experience from our best schools will be employed to take their places. Thus all departments of the work are being strengthened. Six thousand dollars has been spent on improvements and educational helps within the last two years.

The outlook for the future is bright indeed. The largest outright gift this year was 316 acres of land. Before this is in print another farm, worth at least $10,000, will be deeded to the college; another man has placed $5,000 to our credit; another has given, and others are planning for this glorious work. This is the work practically of the last two years; what a few years shall bring us God alone knows. All praise to Him for His rich gifts.

EUREKA COLLEGE, EUREKA, ILL.

H. O. Pritchard, President.

The student attendance for the year showed an encouraging gain over the previous years. In the student intercollegiate activities Eureka won important victories. In athletics Eureka stood near the top in all the major sports in the Illinois Intercollegiate Association and excelled them all in baseball. In debate Eureka won both the triangular debates again this year, thus adding another to the string of unbroken victories in this work. Above all, the spirit of the institution was never

Character Talks

By Rev. Charles M. Fillmore, Pastor of Hillside Christian Church, Indianapolis, Ind.

Rev. C. M. Fillmore

THE JOY OF BEGINNING.

There is a great joy that comes from finishing a task. An incomplete work haunts and harasses a true soul. A half-learned lesson, an unsolved problem, an unfinished education, a partly learned trade and all other forms of incomplete work—how they trouble the conscientious soul! What a satisfaction it is to say, "I have finished my course"; or "I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do."

But there is something to be said on the other side. When a man's work is unfinished at the end of his life it may mean that he had ideals too big to be completed in his own day. It really may be more of a cause for congratulation to undertake a work that will require several generations to complete, than to do a work that one may finish himself.

"Others shall sing the song,
Others shall right the wrong;
Finish what I begin
And all I fail to win.
What matters, I or they,
Mine or another's day,
So the right word be said,
And life be sweeter made."

Popular Ann Arbor Minister Marries in Detroit.

The marriage of Rev. George W. Knepper, pastor of Ann Arbor, Mich., church to Miss Grace Darling, took place at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, recently. Rev. F. P. Arthur, of Grand River View Church, Detroit, officiated. Only the parents of bride and groom and a few intimate friends were present. The honeymoon is being spent in California. Mr. Knepper's remarkable work in the strategie situation in which his church is placed —adjoining the campus of the University of Michigan—will take on increased significance by the setting up of a home of his own. The bride is a graduate of the university and an active worker in the church.

Summer Sunday Morning Sermons in Booklet Form.

A neat booklet preserving and extending the helpfulness of a summer series of sermons on "With Jesus the Nature Lover," by H. W. Hunter of Wellington, Kans., has just come from the press. The chapters are "By the Seaside," "On the Mountain Top," "Among the Flowers," "With the Birds," "After the Finny Tribe," "Afar in the Wilderness." Just a paragraph will give the flavor of the sermons: "We are going to Galilee, a beautiful lake that has been made sweet because of the memories of a recent visit we made to its beautiful waters. But wait—going fishing is no fun unless we have a good companion along. We do not want the crowd, just a friend. One who knows our moods and whims and understands all about us. One who can sit with us for hours in silence, if need be, and yet through these unspoken periods our hearts will be bound together. And, then, in the evening hours when the sun goes to rest for the day, when all is still save the call of the wild birds and the splash of the fish in the waters, we can talk over the experiences of the day, of the common ideals that have been ours, and while we talk this way by the flickering firelight seeing queer looking shadows, and as we talk our hearts will burn within us. This is the kind of a friend that we are to have go with us today. One that loves us and 'sticketh closer than a brother.'"

Historic Missouri Country Church Dedicates New House.

Ashland Church, seven miles southeast of Fayette, Mo., dedicated a new $10,000 house of worship last Sunday, Aug. 15. Arthur Lindsay, of Clinton, Mo., who is a candidate for governor of Missouri, preached the dedicatory sermon. Mr. Lindsay was at one time pastor of Ashland church. There is considerable historic interest attaching to this congregation. Old Salt Creek Church, the original Ashland, was organized Nov. 22, 1817, by one Thomas McBride, according to an entry in the old record which is carefully preserved, and the church is therefore the oldest Christian church west of the Mississippi river. The new house of worship is modern in all appointments and arrangements. Hard-wood floors, a baptistry built of concrete, steam heat, women's parlor, kitchen, stained glass windows, separate rooms for Sunday-school classes,—these are some of the features that make the house an ample instrument of service to the community. A high school supported by the farmers of the neighborhood meets in the basement. The old building which burned in 1913 was erected in 1849. Planes, saws and hammers were busy for a year. Old Aaron, a slave of Gerard Robinson, an expert at "hewing to the line," cut down the trees and hauled the timbers to the building spot with oxen. The shingles and sashes were made by hand. The pulpit was of solid walnut. An interesting contrast between the old days and the new is afforded by a paragraph from a history of the church recently written by Mrs. Nannie Payne, describing the dedication of the original house: "The paths leading to the church were often a mere trail or cow path and the forest so dense that the horsemen had to travel in single file," says Mrs. Payne. "The men came to church in their homespun, jeans clothes, often coatless. The ladies wore linsey or calico dresses and sunbonnets, unless a more fortunate sister possessed a scoop or poke bonnet. The elderly ladies often brought their tobacco bags, or reticules, with pipe to enjoy a quiet smoke and meditation between song and sermon. The topics most discussed by the ladies while the crowd was gathering were the wheel, loom, and poultry, and by men, planting in the moon and curing bacon. After meeting broke there was much shying around by the bashful swains till courbetter, and many have volunteered for the ministry and the mission fields during the year. The 1915 graduating class numbered twenty-one, and the personnel of the class was particularly strong.

The outlook for the coming year is most encouraging. A new gymnasium, costing over $30,000, is in the course of construction, and will be ready for use at the beginning of the school year. This building will be modern and complete, and will add greatly to the equipment of the college. The residence formerly occupied by ex-President Hieronymous has been purchased as a presirent's residenee, and is now being thoroughly remodeled. The library and laboratories have been made more valuable and serviceable by the addition of many volumes and new apparatus. The library now has twelve thousand volumes, exclusive of public documents. Eureka College offers better facilities than ever before to students.

Secretary Lehman and the college quartet have been giving a series of concerts, throughout Illinois since commeneement week. They completed the series on Friday, August 13, by giving a concert at Eureka; they report that they have been favorably received and that the interest shown by prospective students is very encouraging. People who have heard their concerts have praised the work of the quartet very highly. A number of communities have reported that their concerts were better than anything on their local chautuaqua programs.

TRANSYLVANIA AND THE COLLEGE OF OF THE BIBLE, LEXINGTON, KY.

R. H. Crossfield, President.

In addition to the tasks in which Transylvania College and the College of the Bible have been engaged in recent years, they are now entering two new fields of educational service.

Besides the B.A., B.S. and M.A. degrees, which are recognized by the leading institutions of the country at full face value, and which equip young men and young women with the most substantial foundation on which to build vocational, occupational and professional training, Transylvania is now conducting a department of education for the purpose of preparing high-grade teachers for the high school. Ten of the recent graduates will teaeh during the coming session, and almost all of them have secured satisfactory positions.

In addition to the English, Classical and B.D. course, the College of the Bible will offer for the first time next session a course looking toward the preparation of ministers and religious workers for the rural field. Of the ninety-nine hundred churches of the Disciples of Christ in America, 77 are said to be in small towns or in the open country, and this new course looks toward supplying the rural community with preachers and religious leaders, equipped especially for this particular task.

It is believed that this new course, which will be recognized by the degree of Bachelor Practical Theology, will take the place of the English course as now offered.

Indications point to a very large attendance in Transylvania and the College of the Bible during next session. The new dormitory—Ewing Hall—accommodating 129 students, will be entirely available. The new heating and lighting plant will be extended so as to serve all the buildings on the campus. These substantial improvements, in connection with many others being made, will enable Transylvania and the College of the Bible to render the largest measure of service to the eause of Christian education.

The faculty of the College of the Bible has been strengthened by the permanent addition of Prof. Geo. W. Henry, who served as a supply during the last session.

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE, FULTON, MO.

School for Girls and Young Women.

The present year marks a quarter-century of history, usefulness and progress in the life of William Woods College. For the commencement exercises, which closed the twenty-fifth year of the school, there gathered within the college walls teachers and officers who served the school even at its founding, scores of former students returning to renew old ties, patrons and friends in large numbers, such eminent orators as Peter Ainslie and Speaker Champ Clark, and such generous benefactors as Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Woods. The week held a continual feast of good things.

The event which distinctively marked the birthday of the institution was the pageant which took place upon the beautiful campus on the afternoon of May 25. It was the most elaborate pageant ever given by a private school in this section of the country, and was planned and presented with rare perfection of execution. In conception, coloring, action, it was transcendently beautiful. The words of the pageant, written by Miss Ethel Theodora Rockwell, outlined the history of the school, its progress and achievements, from the granting of the ground upon which the college stands to the present time. The cast comprised five hundred characters, among them members of the first Board of Managers, teachers of the first faculty, well-beloved friends and benefactors of the school. It was an occasion which will long live in the minds of all who witnessed it.

Owned by the Christian churches of the state of Missouri, the college strives to surround its students with the highest moral and Christian influences. The study of the Bible is strongly emphasized. The department of Religious Education is an essential and important part of the college curriculum. The school has educated the daughters of many of our ministers and missionaries, and has sent, from her own students, several missionaries into the foreign field.

The physical well-being of the students is carefully sought. The new McBride Gymnasium, gift of Dr. W. S. Woods, will furnish students of the college with the most modern and complete equipment for athletic training which can possibly be obtained. The building will provide for all forms of gymnastic exercises, indoor tennis, basketball, and other games. The tile-lined swimming-pool will render opportunity for aquatic exercises. Concrete tennis-courts have been prepared for out-of-door games. Believing that sound mental activity is dependent upon a healthful physical condition, the college places great stress upon the athletic phases of her student life.

age was found to ask the privilege of seeing the fair one home on horseback." The services of last Sunday filled the entire day. A basket dinner was served after the morning service.

Party of Eleven Missionaries to Start for Foreign Fields.

Eleven Disciple missionaries who have been attending the College of Missions at Indianapolis, are preparing for long journeys to eastern lands to take up their work. Two of their number will go to the Philippines, two to China and seven to India. The party going to India will, because of the European war, be forced to travel nearly 5,000 miles farther than usual to reach India. It is necessary for them to sail on the Pacific ocean by way of China, instead of going direct from New York. Their journey from San Francisco will take sixty days, twice the time it takes by way of the Atlantic ocean. The members of the party come from various states, several of them being from Kansas and Nebraska. All will leave soon for short visits with their relatives, after which they will gather at San Francisco and sail Sept. 11. Two women members of the party, Dr. Mary Longdon and Mrs. C. H. Thomson, are physicians and will minister to the natives in foreign lands. Mrs. Thomson is completing a course as interne in the Methodist hospital in Indianapolis. Those who will sail for foreign fields are Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Thomson, Ina Hartsook, Lucile Ford, Lulu Garton, Lena Russell and Dr. Mary Longdon, to India; Wenona Wilkinson and Lillian Collins, to China; Frank V. Stipp and Myrtle Wilson, to the Philippines.

Christian Women of Kansas City Oppose Liquor-Selling Grocers.

At a meeting of the Christian Women's Council of Jackson county, held in Wabash Avenue church, Kansas City, practical action was taken to withdraw patronage from grocery stores that sell intoxicants. A resolution was unanimously adopted by the council authorizing a committee to make a list of the grocery stores that do not sell intoxicants. The resolution urges the women of Kansas City to patronize only those that do not sell liquors. Mrs. Ralph S. Latshaw was re-elected president, Mrs. A. G. Sparks corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. N. Dye, recording secretary and Mrs. W. N. Wharton, treasurer.

Vital Up-to-Date Church Extension Facts.

At the July and August meetings of the Church Extension Board twenty-nine churches asked for loans aggregating $66,940. For want of funds only 12 loans were granted, which are as follows: Mountain Grove, Mo., $600; Fossil, Ore., $1,000; Vian, Okla., (First church), $250; Vera, Okla., $400; Bristol, Va-Tenn. College St. church), $200; Gate, Okla., (First church), $500; Harrisburg, Pa., (Fourth St. Church), $75,000; North Miami, Okla., (North Miama Church), $200 Lawrence, Kansas, (North Lawrence church), $300; Hereford, Texas, (First church), $5,000; Marshall, Okla., $600; Clovis, N. Mex., (First church), $1,500.

During the months of June and July the good friends of Church Extension have sent the following individual gifts on the Annuity Plan: Good friend in Newton Falls, O., $500; one in Des Moines, Ia., $800 and one in Galena, O., $500.

The board has closed the following loans recently: Wentworth, N. Car. (Coal Springs church), $200; Danville, Illinois, (Fourth church), $4,000; Burris, Ontario, Canada, $500.

The following churches finished paying off their loans in June and July: McRae, Ga.; Johnson City, Tenn. (colored); Moccasin, Mont.; Dahlgren, Ill.; Faxon, Okla.; Marcola, Ore.; Leeton, Mo.; Pecos. Tex., Hennessey, Okla.; Stratford, Tex.; Asotin, Wash.; Breckenridge, Tex.; Mt. Pleasant, Mich.; Pearsall, Tex.

The board, at the present time, is obligated with promised loans to mission churches to the amount of $187,900. Of this amount $66,400 will be called for within the next thirty days. To meet this demand, the board, according to Secretary Booth, has in sight $51,000. This leaves a balance of $15,400 which the board must raise somehow within the next four to six weeks in order to meet the demands of the mission churches whose loans have already been granted. It is hoped that the annual offering in September will bring the $15,400 so badly needed now.

Dr. Chilton Learns "Boosting" Lesson from Californians.

Returning from California Dr. C. M. Chilton preached to his congregation of First church, St. Joseph, Mo., on his observations as to the loyalty and enthusiasm of Californians for their state and their particular city. He said:

"I think nothing in the West impressed me more than the enthusiasm of Californians for California. At Los Angeles they talk of little else than their climate and their scenery, and of how comfortable and happy they are. I did not hear a single word of discontent. If oranges and lemons are unprofitable they say nothing about it. If there are ugly or barren places they will not look at them. When it is hot they say, 'This is very unusual weather,' or 'it always is cool here in the evening.' They convert most everybody who comes their way to their beautiful optimism. I found Missourians outdoing the natives in praising the climate. One cannot but wonder how it all began. Did some strange, cheerful soul start it in an early day? Is it temperamental? Or is it a deliberate commercial policy? We efind something of this same thing in Jewish history. In the 122d Psalm, which I have chosen for our lesson this morning, the psalmist is praising his city:

Pray for the peace of Jerusalem;
They shall prosper that love thee.
Peace be within thy walls,
And prosperity within thy palaces.

"The poets of Israel idealized Jerusalem till it is forever first among cities in the image life of mankind. Paradise is the New Jerusalem. Now there is a good Christian lesson for us Missourians in all of this. I fear we are a bit phlegmatic and in danger of falling into the habit of disparagement. We give our city a bad name; we complain of the weather; we grumble concerning the crops and the times, when, in truth, no people ever had better ground for cheerfulness. They talk about the climate in California—and it does have its advantages; but I like our seasons better. They cannot know the wonderful experiences of winter, spring, summer and autumn. Think of childhood without the snow! And Missouri is beautiful and fertile beyond measure. Here we have good, solid ground under our feet. I propose that we take up our fair land and greet it every morning, noon and evening with a smile. One is happier when he has made up his mind to live upon good terms with his city. Besides it pays. Los Angeles has prospered in spite of its waste of occan and desert. They have praised their city till the whole world comes to see it. See what Eugene Field did with a few lines upon 'Lover's Lane, St. Joe.' 'Praise is comely.' It is sound Christian doctrine to speak well of your city."

FOREIGN SOCIETY NEWS.

In the month of July there was a gain of $3,502.10 in the recepits. A number of churches are not only raising their full apportionment but are making special offerings to the end that there may be no retrenchment in the work and no reduetion in the missionaries' salaries.

The following named missionaries were at the Los Angeles Convention: M. B. Madden and Mrs. F. E. Hagin, of Japan; Miss Emma A. Lyon and Miss Kate Galt Miller, of China; Miss Josepha Franklin, of India; A. F. Hensey, from Africa. Miss Myrtle E. Wilson, who expects to go to the Philippines and Miss Effie B. McCallum, who expects to go to China, were both present and were introduced to the convention.

D. E. Dannenberg writes from Chuchow, China, that four Christian families have opened up their homes this summer for the preaching of the gospel. Meetings are held weekly in each of these homes. The neighbors are invited in and a Bible reading is given or a sermon is preached. At the meeting at Mr. Ko's house on Tuesday, the 13th of July, forty were present.

Miss Josepha Franklin, who has just reached home from India on furlough, is resting at Long Beach, Cal. Miss Franklin has given twenty-two years of service to India. Ramabai spoke of her years ago as one of the heroic characters of India.

Miss Kate Galt Miller, who has just reached home from China, is with her family in Louisville, Ky. Miss Miller is not certain that she will be able to return to China in the near future at least, although she is very anxious to do so.

Mrs. F. E. Hagin contemplates sending her children, Dan and Fanny, to Eureka College and to return without delay to the work in Japan. Mrs. Hagin came home that her children might enter school. Mr. Hagin needs her to assist him in the work in which he is engaged in Tokyo, Japan.

The Foreign Society believes it has found a medical man for Luchowfu, China, but is not at liberty to divulge his name. The friends of the work will remember that Dr. Paul Wakefield has been carrying on that work alone since Dr. Butchart went to Nanking to assist in the Medical College.

"WEIGHED AND FOUND—"

ural, both were dressed in long white robes. Each carried a large book under his arm. They sat down a few feet beyond her, with their backs to her, oblivious of her presence.

Sally turned to Jack, but he had gone. "For a walk while I snoozed," she thought to herself.

The strangers were talking, and unconsciously Sally listened.

"Seems too nice a day to be working, doesn't it?"

"Yes," answered the other; "but I'm in hopes the books will show good records, and then it won't be work, it will be pleasure.

For some moments there was silence, broken only by the rustle of the leaves. Then suddenly one of them looked up.

"Why, isn't this odd? I don't understand it. Everything was working out nicely, and all at once there began to be ever so many nooks and crannies left unfilled."

He turned several pages of the book, uttering an exclamation of surprise.

"All these pages have the same—and here's an especially large one."

"Whose work is it?" queried the other.

"Let me see—singing, preaching, mothering, writing, filling in—filling in—to Sara Brooks, one talent of filling in—talent so well used, another one was given to her. Two talents of filling in." He shook his head sadly, while the wind rustled the leaves of the books with a buzzing noise.

Sally, after the first start of surprise, lay very quiet, scarcely breathing.

"Too bad!" answered the other. "There are so few people who can use the talent of filling in. She's the girl who doesn't have to earn her own living, isn't she?"

"Yes," assented the first one gravely. "Good parents, nice home, lots of time. I hate to leave those places unfilled. That church was so strong because every nook was filled, but really I haven't any one to give her talent to. A new baby went to their church last week, richly endowed with the talent of filling in; but it will be a long time until she can do it. And by that time it will be too late to fill these up. Sara could fill up the most of these, if she began now. But that is the trouble; I'm afraid she won't."

Sara flushed guiltily.

"I hate to mark this down: 'Failed to use talent because of lack of appreciation. Weighed in the balance, and found——'"

"No, no," sobbed Sally, attempting to rise; but invisible hands held her down.

"'Wanting,'" concluded the recording angel, for as such Sara now recognized him.

He closed the book, and rose slowly.

"This bright day seems spoiled somehow. It's just such things that make the old world such a sad place. If people would only understand how much the little things meant——" their voices were lost in the distance as they moved away.

With a sudden movement Sally rose to her feet, and started after them.

"O, please, please, come back. I'll fill them all up; really I will," she cried, wringing her hands.

"Why, Sally," said Brother Jack's cheery voice in her ear as he shook her gently. "What makes you mutter so? Are you having a nightmare? Why, I do declare, you're crying."

"I don't know whether it was a nightmare or not," said Sally, looking in the direction where the strangers had disappeared, half doubting whether she had been asleep. "I guess it was a daydream. 'Twasn't a very pleasant one," she added.

"Don't think about it," he advised. "Come, it's almost supper-time."

As they entered the main street, the little town seemed strangely deserted. From the other side of the town came a low murmur of voices, with now and then a louder one that was raised in command.

"Must be an accident," comented Jack tersely. "You go on home; I'll be there directly."

He reached the house almost as soon as she did.

"An accident," he said gravely in reply to her questioning look. "Miller put up the new brick schoolhouse, and didn't fill in the cracks very solid. One whole side collapsed."

At the sudden whiteness of Sally's face he became alarmed.

"Don't look so scared. As it happened, there was no one hurt. Only a loss of several hundreds of dollars."

"But there might have been," said Sally.

"Yes, there might have been."

Sally went early to the Young People's meeting.

"I'll be there in time to play," she said to herself. "That nook sha'n't be left unfilled."

As the minister shook her hand, he retained it in his for a moment, his eyes resting on her face.

"We looked for you at Junior this afternoon, Miss Sally."

"Who led?" asked Sally, her eyes on the floor.

"Mr. Bailey. I had a funeral, so could only stop in for the last few moments. I don't know what we'll do. We really can't ask Brother Bailey to take charge of it."

"I'll do it," said Sally, raising her eyes to his.

"God bless you, Miss Sally. I thought we could depend on you. I said to Brother Bailey this afternoon that I thought you would surely be here next Sunday. We can always depend on you to fill in. An imposition, I suppose, but so few people have the talent and time to do so many varied things as you do."

Sally took the seat at the piano, with a strange sense of being uplifted.

"I wonder," she thought, "how many nooks the recording angel has filled, and whether he has rubbed out the 'found wanting.'"

THE FIRE OF YOUTH.

What is it that gives to young people and to all young animals their characteristic vivacity, energy and enthusiasm? Is there some chemical substance—an elixir of life, so to speak, which our bodies gradually lose as we grow older, and the absence of which leaves us sedate, conservative and even morose? These questions seem to be nearing solution for the scientists have already discovered an essential and significant difference in the chemical make up of the human body in youth and in old age. They find a much larger percentage of xanthin (pronounced zanthin) in the bodies of the young, and the quantity diminishes steadily with the advancement of age.

In this connection it is interesting to note that xanthin belongs to the same family of chemical group as caffein. Both are known to chemists as dioxypurins. Xanthin is found in the bodies of animals, including man, while caffein is found only in plants such as coffee, tea, cocoa, mate and in Coca-Cola. To make this family relationship closer and more interesting, the scientists now tell us that caffein, after being digested, is converted into a substance called paraxanthin, which is a twin brother of xanthin. But more interesting still is the similarity between the twins, xanthin and caffein in their effects upon the human body. If xanthin is in reality the substance which gives to youth its vivacity and alertness, then caffein, its twin brother, may be regarded as a vegetable substitute for, xanthin and we thus have a logical explanation of why the caffein-containing beverages refresh and invigorate the body. In old age when the fire of youth is burning low and the supply of xanthin is diminished, the caffein beverages such as coffee, tea and Coca-Cola find their greatest usefulness as a means of refreshing nerves and muscles and renewing the vitality as well as the sensation of youth. Coca-Cola, therefore, belongs to the same class of food products as tea and coffee. Though they differ in flavor, they are identical in effect for caffein is their common and only active principle. It is the caffein that relieves fatigue and refreshes mind and body, not by artificial stimulation, but by a natural process analogous to that of xanthin, the natural physiological stimulant. When caffein enters the body it becomes a xanthin and caffein beverages therefore have their counterpart in the normal human body.

Desiring that the general public shall thoroughly understand the composition and character of their product, The Coca-Cola Company has published a booklet containing the scientific opinions of the world's leading authorities bearing on Coca-Cola, tea and coffee. If you would like to understand how and why Coca-Cola is the nearest approach to a perfect solution of the world's great problem of fatigue write for a copy of this booklet. The influence of Garfield still lives at Hiram. The standards of his great life—thoroughness, sincerity and Christian character and service—are still the standards of the College.

Hiram College

A college of high rank, ideally situated for undergraduate work of the best type.

A college which strongly emphasizes the supreme value in education of intimate personal contact between teacher and student.

A college which attracts a choice body of students and commands the service of a group of teachers hardly excelled for ability, character and devotion.

A college which prepares men and women for effective leadership in Christian service, whether as ministers and missionaries, or as lay workers.

SOME NOTEWORTHY FACTS

¶ The College is recognized by the Department of Instruction of Ohio as a school for the training of teachers.

¶ Hiram a member list of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secon'-ary Schools and its work is given full recognition by Columbia University and other graduate schools of similar rank.

¶ Hiram is a great missionary center of the Disciples of Christ. The Wharton Memorial Home for children of missionaries is here, and more missionaries have gone out from Hiram than from any other school of the Brotherhood.

¶ Hiram offers a strong, well-balanced, and ably manned undergraduate course to students preparing for the ministry, for missions and for other fields of Christian service.

¶ Hiram offers attractive combined courts to students interested in engineering, agriculture, medicine and law.

¶ Thorough courses in English and public speaking, including argumentation and debate, are offered, and four strong literary societies give stimulus and practical training in both fields.

¶ A strong department of music with competent teachers offers high-grade instruction in voice theory, piano, organ, violin and other instruments.

¶ The College maintains no preparatory school, but offers special advantages to mature students who have not completed the high school course.

¶ Expenses are very moderate for the advantages offered and many opportunities for self-help are open to earnest students.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Volume XXXII AUGUST 26, 1915 Number 34

Christian Unity Made Ridiculous

NOT IN MANY A YEAR, IF EVER, has a document like the report of the "Committee on Fraternal Relations with the Berkeley Church" been given publicity among the Disciples of Christ.

The committee was appointed by the Northern California convention last year to put forth what effort it could to induce the Berkeley congregation "to so modify its position regarding the reception of members as to make it possible for this convention to receive said church back into the fellowship of the Christian churches of California."

It will be recalled by our readers that the occasion of the appointment of such a committee was the refusal of the convention a year ago to receive the delegates sent from the Berkeley church, on the ground that the church had by its practice of receiving unimmersed Christians into its fellowship, "ceased to be a Christian church."

The committee charged with the task of reclaiming a congregation guilty of so grave an offense against Christ! held many meetings throughout the year, some of them jointly with a committee representing the church. But it was compelled, sadly, to come up to this year's convention, held last month at San Francisco, and confess that "it has fully failed of accomplishing the purpose for which it was created."

What insurmountable obstacle lay between the two committees? It must have been something formidable, some egregious difference of conviction that could bring to nought an effort begun in such earnest and hearty fashion.

No, it was nothing of the sort. It was a difference so ridiculously insignificant that one can hardly work up any indignation over the un-Christian action that was based upon it.

The convention committee raised no objection to the receiving of unimmersed Christians into the Berkeley church. That practice it did not regard as disqualifying the church from fellowship with other Christian churches.

The Berkeley committee, on its part, disavowed any purpose to involve its sister churches in its practice of receiving unimmersed Christians, and therefore proposed that only immersed members of the church should be considered eligible to act as delegates to district, state or national conventions of the Disciples.

That is to say, the church, through its committee, conceived its fellowship with unimmersed Christians as a purely congregational affair and was willing to restrict the conduct of its inter-congregational relationships with other churches of Disciples to the immersed membership only.

A resolution covering this point, which the Berkeley committee agreed to submit to the congregation, was as follows:

> "Resolved by the First Christian Church of Berkeley, That hereafter when persons who have not been immersed are received into this congregation their names shall be placed upon a separate roll, and all such persons shall be ineligible to serve as delegates to the district, state, or national conventions of the Disciples of Christ. or other co-operative work of the Disciples of Christ; nor shall they be eligible to vote upon such matters. And, whenever such unimmersed persons shall leave the congregation, their letters of dismission shall show from what denomination or church the said persons were received into this congregation.

This resolution was at first approved by the chairman of the convention committee, who later, on reflection, decided that he had made a great blunder in approving it and that if he and his conferees submitted it approvingly to the convention as a basis for receiving back the Berkeley church they, the committeemen, would have to "take the crucifixion he knew would follow!" This was but one of the pathetically naive touches in the committee's report.

So the committee, rejecting this resolution as utterly impossible, prepared the following, which, if passed by the church, would be satisfactory.

> "Resolved by the First Christian Church of Berkeley, That hereafter, when persons that have not been immersed are received into this congregation, their names shall be placed upon a separate roll, and all such persons shall be ineligible to serve as officers of said church, or as delegates to the district, state, or national conventions, or other co-operative work for Christian Churches; nor shall they be eligible to vote upon such matters. And whenever such immersed persons shall leave the congregation, their letters of dismission shall show from what denomination or church they were received into this congregation."

Compare these two resolutions.

Word for word they are the same except for the introduction of the words in the latter resolution which we have indicated by the use of bold face type.

If, in addition to an extra-congregational restriction proposed by the church's committee, the church would consent to put upon its unimmersed members a certain intra-congregational restriction the reconciling committee would have gone up to the convention with a favorable report and the church would have been received back.

And what is this intra-congregational restriction proposed by the convention committee?

It is this: the reconcilers demand that the unimmersed be held ineligible for office in the Berkeley church!

That is everything that stands between the church and the convention.

The church's committee refused to submit such a proposal to the Berkeley congregation, assured that the congregation would not for a moment endorse it.

The congregation, said its committee, would not consent to the drawing of an arbitrary and un-

Christian discrimination within its own membership. Besides, it would resent, as any congregation of Disciples would resent, the ecclesiastical interference of any convention in matters that concerned only its intra-congregational life.

Therefore, the California convention will not recognize the Berkeley church as a Christian church.

It is all right to receive the unimmersed into your church, says the California convention, but you must not let them serve as elders or deacons.

If you let them serve as elders or deacons you are not a Christian church!

Speaking for himself personally, the chairman of the convention committee went a step farther and conceded with pitiable ingenuousness that he might make an exception of a deacon but must draw the line at an unimmersed elder!

His insistence upon this point is the only thing that, in the conception of the chairman, saved him and his fellow committeemen from an awful "crucifixion."

So this is what it all comes to, is it? that the Berkeley church is to be kept out of fellowship with its sister churches of Northern California for another year simply because she is unwilling to declare her unimmersed members ineligible to become elders.

Is that the vital point upon which the Disciples propose to make their stand for the practice of Christian unity?

Of course that makes the Disciples ridiculous.

And it makes Christian unity ridiculous.

And if anybody imagines that that position can long be maintained by a group of Disciples of Christ anywhere on earth he does not understand either the spirit or the wit of our people.

EVANGELISM AND THE SOCIAL GOSPEL

USUALLY one of the main reasons for calling an evangelist is a hope that the bad moral conditions of the town may be changed. But the conversion of a multitude of individuals does not obliterate even the illegal forms of vice unless there is an organized effort to do it. In several cases, right after a great revival, a city has elected a worse city government than ever before.

In an address to the Evangelistic Association at Winona the other day Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, pleaded for evangelism to adopt the double slogan of the Salvation Army:

> Change the man.
> Change the surroundings.

It will not be easy to correct the Church's supreme heresy of individualism, the theory that if men and women "get right with God" personally social wrongs will right themselves. The conclusive answer to this theory is Pennsylvania, with more "trail hitters" in the last two years than any commonwealth in the world ever had in an equal time, defeating local option in the legislature and giving a new lease of life to the worst bossism in the land.

If we waive for the moment the more fundamental criticism of current revivalism as a method of propagating religion, we must agree with Dr. Crafts that the evangelist must learn to preach a "full salvation" in the Bible sense, which is salvation of the whole man and the whole community, here and now, a salvation which begins but does not end in the individual.

The proposal to import a "civic evangelist" to supplement the message of the "individual evangelist" does not sound practical. The difficulty of turning over a successful meeting to another leader will occur at once to any one who has had experience in manipulating public assemblies.

The only way to get the social message into evangelism is to reconceive the evangelistic message. Any scheme like setting aside a week of the meeting for social preaching and organization, or importing a supplemental follow-up leader is artificial and foredoomed to failure.

Nothing will do the work save the preaching of the individual gospel with its social implications and the social gospel with its individual implications, and preaching it all the way through the meetings.

CATHOLICITY AND SECTARIANISM

THE Disciples of Christ have always striven to hold a catholic position in teaching and practice. The Episcopal and Roman churches also claim for themselves catholicity. Like the Disciples they too insist upon catholicity as the essential principle of Christian unity.

In this respect there is a certain theoretical kinship between the Disciples and these two historic communions.

But there is a radical difference between their respective conceptions of catholicity.

To the Episcopalian and the Roman churches catholicity inheres in their particular historic organizations. When the Protestant bodies separated from those historic organizations and set up new organizations, or denominations, they left catholicity behind. Their duty now is to come back to the historic body which has through all the Protestant centuries guarded and preserved the true catholic Church.

The Disciples have conceived the matter otherwise. To their way of thinking catholicity is not a treasure possessed and preserved by a single section of Christendom; it is the essential common denominator underlying all Christian bodies. Catholicity is not an institutional but a spiritual principle. Every Christian is a member of the holy catholic Church. The Roman hierarchy and the historic episcopate are, at best, but accessories of catholicity; they are not its essence.

In modern times the Disciples are not as clear-headed on this point as their fathers were. To the fathers one of the basic ideas was this: that whatever makes a man a Christian makes him also a Church-member, and whatever, in truth, makes him a member of the Church makes him also a Christian.

In the earliest days of the Disciples' movement one of the favorite ways of stating the Disciples' position was to say that it was their purpose to demand nothing for Church membership beyond what is necessary to make one a Christian.

That is true catholicity.

We need a revival and reapplication of the principle in our day.

It is this principle of catholicity, conceived in that fashion, that underlies the growing movement among Disciples to extend the fellowship of their churches to all Christians, without demanding the rebaptism of those who may not have been immersed.

This movement is actuated by sentiment, by the passion of Christian brotherhood, by deep loyalty to Christ and the clear teaching of the Scripture.

But it has its hard logic also.

And the hard logic of it is this: that you can't impose any condition whatever upon a Christian who desires to unite with your church without thereby sacrificing your catholicity.

When you refuse to receive into your church one whom Christ has received, your church is no longer catholic but sectarian.

A UNIQUE APPEAL

NOT among the records of Church Extension addresses delivered at the national conventions of the Disciples of Christ will a more adequate utterance be found than that of Rev. John M. Alexander, the South Bend, Ind., pastor, delivered at Los Angeles last month.

This is saying much, for the Church Extension board has a way of selecting the brightest particular "star" it can find to represent its mission at these annual gatherings, and some high records have been made. Dr. E. L. Powell, of Louisville, set the pace some years ago in an address which has held a classic place in the literature of this subject, and from which most subsequent speakers have drawn much suggestion.

Mr. Alexander seemed to have gathered up into his mind all the data the secretaries could furnish him, all the suggestive points of view of his predecessors on this particular convention platform, and with a rare sympathy and insight organized his material so as to convince the business sense and to quicken tse imagination of every one that heard him.

Church Extension has this unique advantage as compared with every other missionary appeal: it is a combination of both business and benevolence. Other missionary and benevolent appeals are out-and-out missionary and benevolent in their character.

But there's enough mathematics in Church Extension to hold the interest of a business man all night while the inner working principle of the thing is being unfolded to him.

It's as fascinating as life insurance.

And it is no less inspiring to the feelings than it is fascinating to the reason. It is as truly missionary as foreign missions, or home missions, as truly benevolent and human as an orphan society.

During this September month that is upon us the claims of Church Extension ought to be set plainly and appealingly before every congregation of Disciples in the land.

If a preacher likes to take a subject that he can argue, that requires a demonstration, that leads resistlessly to a Q. E. D., he can literally revel in Church Extension.

And if he likes to take a subject in which he can strike the deeper human note, and broaden the love of his people, and enlist their active cooperation, he can find such a theme in the service rendered by this agency to new-born congregations that have no other way to secure an abiding place.

If he wants to, if he will really master the data which Mr. Muckley and Mr. Booth will gladly furnish him, he can come into the pulpit on Church Extension Sunday literally dripping with eloquence.

And such painstaking and eager preparation will get a response in money and enthusiasm which will make that day one to be marked on the calendar as a day of great blessing.

TO FREE PALESTINE FROM THE TURK

ONE of the results of the present war, it is hoped by Lord Bryce, will be the internationalization of the Holy Land. The things that are happening to Turkey and the fate that awaits her as the war progresses will make it quite possible for the allies in the day of settlement to take Palestine from the Moslem hand.

Lord Bryce points out that the very smallness of Palestine increases the possibility of such an arrangement. Few people realize how tiny the land of our Lord really is. We are in the habit of studying it in maps that bring out its details, and therefore our eyes are unaccustomed to seeing it in comparison wtih other countries.

But the ex-ambassador points out that you might run around it comfortably in a day in a motor car, if the Turks had ever been guilty of building roads, for it is only 110 miles by 40 to 60. Even then a very great deal is being allowed, for the simple reason that the Jewish kings really never swung their scepters over even that diminutive district.

As Lord Bryce says, nearly the whole of the Old Testament was enacted in a space not bigger than the State of Connecticut; and King David, in the very zenith of his power, looked down from the hill cities of Benjamin, on the territory of his Philistine enemies only 25 miles off, on the one hand, and the land of his Moabite foes, no further off, on the other.

In such circumstances the dream of those who would internationalize the Holy Land, ought not to be so difficult of realization.

A NEAT LITTLE TOKEN OF YOUR GOOD-WILL

August and September, the last of the summer season, are the most difficult months of the year for all publishers. Many religious papers contain notices just now in which they frankly say that it is a very "critical" time with them.

Here is a neat little service you can render us, without cost to yourself: Just sit down now and send us your remittance for another year's subscription. Your subscription may not yet be due—it may be paid nearly a year ahead—no matter! Send a check and we will credit you another year ahead.

Of course, if you are in arrears you will be doubly glad to act upon this suggestion!

The Disciples Publication Society is greatly enlarging its business this fall. We are entering upon a development policy in several directions. The past year has been far and away the best in our history. In Sunday School patronage, in books and church merchandise and in the circulation of The Christian Century we have made very substantial gains. The number of our friends, too, who feel a personal responsibility to support The Christian Century with their gifts has been increased.

Our present suggestion that all subscribers who can do so, pay a year's subscription offers a way to have fellowship with us in this work in the most difficult season of the year.

Every such remittance will be regarded as a neat little token of the kindly feelings of the sender.

Observing Labor Sunday

Suggestions to Church Leaders For Bringing Church and Masses into a Friendly Understanding

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN

THE evangelical Church year has forgotten some of the birthdays of the saints, but it has a new series of red letter days in which the sacred interests of humanity get their innings. Probably no single anniversary has come to be more widely observed, of these new days, than Labor Sunday. From coast to coast, churches this year will sound forth the message.

The wisdom of observing this anniversary will be apparent to the most casual thinker in the Christian church. Half of our country is out of fellowship with the Church. Of those who do not worship with us, the great body are the hand workers. Christianity has been able to win back the intellectual classes, in large measure, which were lost in the period of criticism and unbelief. Until now, the chasm between the Church and the workingman still yawns. When the President of the American Federation of Labor asks that labor be considered in the churches on a given Sunday, that request alone should suffice to put the day into our calendar.

MOTIVE IS SERVICE NOT PROSELYTISM.

But we are not actuated by missionary motives alone. It is not only because we want to convert the workingman to our faith, but because, perhaps, we might be of real service to his cause, that we are to speak. There are controversial topics in the labor question about which there may be difference of opinion, but it is certain that some of the fundamental demands of labor are so obvious that to deny them, is sheer blindness or wickedness. The Church was founded by the Carpenter. Its scriptures have ever championed the cause of the weak. A Church true to Christ and the Bible cannot but give heed to the cry of distress. To plead that this is not "preaching the gospel" is to turn the back on the author of the Parable of the Good Samaritan.

First of all, it is certainly desirable to have the workingman present at the labor service. Why not send a letter to the labor unions of your city, stating that your church accepts the invitation of President Gompers to consider the labor question in the church on September 5, and that the union receiving the letter is invited to attend in a body and hear the sermon, so far as the men are not otherwise engaged in worship? It is hardly likely that a courteously worded invitation would fail to bring out the men in large numbers. It might be stated in the papers that such an invitation had been sent, and this would help to put the men on their mettle.

REACHING UNORGANIZED LABOR.

Of course, great portions of labor in the community are not organized. These must be reached man by man, and only an advertising campaign upon the part of the church will reach them. Windowcards, letters, small cards, and other devices may be used for such as these. In some cities, a permit from the mayor may allow the passing out of advertising matter on a Saturday evening. A certain amount of unconventionality may be pardoned a church which must make its welcome clear to men, some of whom have not been in a church building in twenty years.

What to preach about, is the problem of many a minister. The writer well remembers holding a labor service in the first year of his ministry. An intelligent, but rather brusque, workman said at the close of the service, "Young man, what you don't know about labor would fill volumes." This was only too true of course, but the man appreciated the effort that had been made any way. There is less excuse now, however, for abysmal ignorance on the labor question, for a great literature has grown up on the subject. The librarian in almost any good town can pull down more books than any preacher will be able to use for Labor Day this year.

BURNING ISSUES OF LABOR WORLD.

What are some of the burning issues of the labor world? There is the question of hours of labor. That is not a question in which the Church is uninterested, either from a humanitarian or from a selfish standpoint. In the steel country, men often work twelve hours a day, seven days in the week. How can men like these know their God, or even know their babies? They are only human machines. In an awful revolt, men like these drown their sorrows in drink, for the human brain is not able to endure such strains and fatigue.

Child labor is robbing childhood of its rights. The problem is not a sectional one, but the cotton mills of the south are now the chief offenders. The children lose the sacred rights of school and of play. They beat down the wages of their own fathers, and at last we see the sorry spectacle in many homes of idle fathers supported by these very children who have displaced them.

The rights of women in labor is also a great question. Illinois has limited hours of labor for women to ten hours a day. This is but the beginning for the protection of the women from factory exploitation. England recently noticed that recruits for the army were much below the standards of a generation ago. It was found that increased factory labor for women was robbing the nation of its virility. Legislation in England is rapidly remedying this dangerous defect in the national life. Sons of overworked women are not only unfit soldiers, but they are also below par in the great industrial army of peace.

PROTECTION OF WORKERS.

The protection of workers from accident is also a topic that demands attention. In the mining country of Colorado it was found that after hundreds of accidents the courts had never found the companies to blame, and accidents continued to increase. The companies had established an evil control over the legal machinery that not only allowed them to evade paying damages, but also made them criminally careless in providing the safeguards for human life that science has discovered. In striking contrast is the action of the steel corporation which has taken such elaborate pains to reduce accidents to a minimum by warning signs, coverings for dangerous wheels, and by other means.

Amos once raised the cry for justice to the oppressed. The Church may not hope for a hearing from working people unless she espouses the same sacred cause. A working man is entitled to what he produces. We are not unmindful that the brain workers, who are the allies of the handworkers, are also producers and have their rightful share, and that even the abused capitalist is often a brain worker as well as a capitalist. It is clear, however, that of the enormous increase of wealth in the world through factories, but a small share has gone to labor. This injustice will have to be righted sooner or later.

THE BIBLE AND LABOR.

Unbelievers have charged that the Bible is itself untrue to labor, as it represents labor as a curse imposed upon disobedient man. Taking the story at its face value, however, even the Garden of Eden had labor for man. It was irksome and needless labor that the story alleges is the punishment of sin. The Bible makes shepherds hear first the tidings of a Saviour for the world. It makes fishermen compose the greater part of the apostolic company. It alleges that Jesus himself was not only a carpenter, but the son of a carpenter. Paul makes tentcloth to support himself while he preaches the gospel. There is no support for any suggestion that the Bible is unfair to labor. It has ever been labor's great text-book.

Those who are minded to wander away from the stricter sociological meanings of Labor Sunday, will find a theme in Cabot's "What Men Live By." He insists that one of the great saving factors of life is labor. Certain dilettante young people nowadays who would scorn to know a trade, should be taught anew that life has but little meaning apart from labor. Most of us want to do more instead of less, and our talk of hours and wages is but in the interest of larger output and efficiency.

There are many other ways, but the live preacher and live men's class will see that Labor Sunday is a red letter day.

Religion and Character Building

BY J. LESLIE LOBINGIER

BY its best interpreters, education has always been conceived of as having a moral end primarily in view. Herbart makes morality the sole aim of liberal culture. Spencer has this partly in mind when he says, "To fit us for complete living is the function which education has to discharge." In the language of Munroe, "The question to be asked at the end of an educational step is not, 'What has the child learned?' but 'What has the child become?'" Says Dr. Thorndike, "The aims of education should then be, to make men want the right things, and to make them better able so to control all the forces of nature and themselves that they can satisfy these wants." And Professor Coe also bears witness to the same truth, "That education aims not at mere knowledge or mere power of any kind, but rather at knowledge and power put to right uses, is fully recognized by the educational thought, though not by the popular opinion of the day."

CHARACTER THE AIM OF EDUCATION.

No educational system is worthy of the name, that does not have character building as its primary purpose. Religious education seeks the same end. It does not seek to preserve an institution, the Church. Nor does it seek to give instruction in a Book, the Bible. These are means rather than ends. Religious education has an ethical aim, the building of right character. But that which differentiates it from the larger field of education in general — or shall we say, of secular education — is the method by which its aims are to be realized. It seeks to build character through the medium of Christian teaching. While it would utilize all other available media, it is not content to stop with them.

And what are some of these other agencies that educators esteem of value in moral training? Play is one. When rightly guided, it is bound to inculcate a sense of honor, a spirit of co-operation, a recognition of authority. Work is another. When rightly guarded from excesses, it will develop a feeling of responsibility, a sense of justice; it will afford an opportunity to live the moral life, for morality is no mere abstraction; rather does it manifest itself in activity. Environment is another factor. It must be the expression of that law and order which we seek to have reproduced in a child's life. Morality develops in part through imitation. Many, and among them the Herbartians, have counted the regular studies of an academic curriculum as agencies for the development of the moral nature. Thus mathematics trains one in accuracy, and love of truth; physiology in sex knowledge, and purity; literature and history present concrete examples of characters who have lived nobly or ignobly.

DIRECT TEACHING OF MORALS.

There is moreover an enlarging group of educators, who, not content with these indirect methods, are urging the introduction into the schools of direct and regular instruction in morals. In some cases a graded course has been introduced; often for those who have reached the adolescent age, there is the discussion of concrete ethical issues.

These methods and agencies are merely indicative of the fact that our supreme need is conceded to be character building and moral living.

The modern movement of religious education is based upon a recognition of this need. But its advocates feel strongly the inadequacy of such methods as those already mentioned, unless they be supplemented by one more factor, the most fundamental of all. And that factor is Christianity. Religion has even furnished certain restraints that appear from no other source. It produces an impetus toward right living, arising from motives that allure. It produces a nearer approach to the moral ideal, by means of a power that is sufficient.

MORE THAN BIBLE READING.

Religious instruction is infinitely more than Bible reading or Bible memorizing. And for that reason it needs its educational specialists, religiously trained. No one may hope to give what he has not first received. And if one does not feel that the roots of his own character run down deep into the soil of his own Christianity, he is not fitted to have a part in the work of religious education. For this reason, if for no other, our public schools are incapable of undertaking the task. For this same reason, as well as because of so limited ability frequently to do any educational work, religious or otherwise, the home too is usually unable to accomplish the task with satisfaction. But the Church through its school can do it, and must count itself the chief agency for building character by means of the Christian faith.

This teaching will include three elements, essential to the desired result. There must first be developed within one a sense of God. One must be conscious of a Supreme Being, personal, loving, caring, with whom one may enter into spiritual relationship. Surely such a belief has an instinctive basis. It does not need to be taught; it needs rather to be developed, and guided, and made to become a vital factor in one's daily life. Such a consciousness helps us to see life in its right perspective; a sense of unity appears; the feeling of accountability grows; and thus the sense of God acts as an inhibition against evil.

CHRIST'S SUPREMACY.

The second element in this Christian teaching will be the acknowledgment of the authority of Jesus in the realm of life. We must needs have some example and some teaching which we seek to approach as our perfect standard. Each is not a law unto himself. In Christ we have the final example in the realm of character, and the final word in the art of living. With a standard that is ultimate, therefore, we may approach our task with assurance, for we know what it is that we seek. Because we have an authority in the realm of life, our aim is to evoke from each and all the acknowledgment of that authority, confident in the faith that their lives will to some degree harmonize with their acknowledgment.

And the third essential at which we aim is the growth of the social conscience. Apart from one's fellows one is neither moral nor unmoral. Only in one's social relationships does true character appear. The social conscience must be not merely passive, satisfied with doing no evil; it must be active, seeking a positive expression for morality. Christianity teaches brotherhood, between nation and nation, between class and class, between cultured and uncouth. And Christianity tends also to develop this spirit of brotherhood to a greater degree than any other force in the universe. Only when one has accepted the social teachings of Christianity as his plan of life, may we expect him actually to live in right relations with his fellows.

Religious education then endeavors to cultivate the upward look, the inward look, the outward look — the sense of God that makes one live as in His presence, the authority of Christ that sets a standard for one's life, the social consciousness that makes one's heart beat in sympathy for his fellows.

Dr. G. Stanley Hall says that "morality is impossible except as it is rooted in religion." Because the church believes this, she is not satisfied with other methods of character building alone, but supplements them with the most potent method of all —the message and power of Christianity.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

"Billy" Sunday Loses Trainer

Preaching is violent physical exercise for "Billy" Sunday. He was early compelled to recognize this and engaged a prize fighter to "rub him down" after his sermons. Jack Cardiff, the ex-pugilist who has for several years been the physical care-taker of the well-known evangelist, has ambitions to be an evangelist himself and has attached himself to the company of Rev. Henry W. Stough. where he will be given an opportunity to preach occasionally. He asserts that he is concluding his service with Mr. Sunday in a perfectly friendly way.

Laymen's Conference a Success

The Laymen's Missionary Movement held a conference at Lake Geneva, Wis., from July 28 to Aug. 1t. There were three hundred people in attendance. The plans for holding conferences in the great cities of the country were brought to greater perfection of detail. Denominational groups held special sessions. There were daily Bible expositions by Dr. C. B. McAfee of the McCormick Theological Seminary.

Brass Band Draws Crowds

The summer slump is being avoided by a Methodist church on the west side of Chicago, in the immigrant district, by the use of a brass band out doors Sunday evenings. The minister, Rev. Alfred Peache, delivers a sermon at the close of the music.

Eastern Christians Being Persecuted

The Turkish government is driving Greek and Armenian Christians from their homes and dividing them up in small groups in Turkish villages where they are given the choice between adopting the Mohammedan faith and death by starvation. The Turkish government claims that these things are made necessary by reason of the war. The Patriarch of Constantinople has protested against this war of extermination but has found himself powerless.

Unitarians Make No Progress.

Judged by the usual standards, the Unitarians are going backward in America. Since 1913 they have stood still in point of membership and have suffered a decrease in ministers and churches. Their membership is 70,-542. So small a company has been able to cut a great figure in the religious world and the attacks upon them have made the term "Unitarian" the bogey of the churches. The movement has been rendered powerless by conservatism. Unitarians are conservative in nearly everything except theology.

To Secure Better Sunday School Teachers

Religious education cannot advance much farther without the improvement of the teaching force of the Sunday schools, is the conviction of many of the great leaders of religious education. The old teacher training movement was well enough as far as it went, but its hopeless inadequacy has long been apparent to men who know the field of religious education.

Last year a community school of religion was established at Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, following the earlier model of the City Institute of Des Moines established by Prof. Walter S. Athearn. This school enrolled six hundred pupils—more than the promoters really wanted—and was maintained through two semesters of twelve weeks each. The school had as its dean a public school principal, Professor Petticord, and secured as lecturers some of the most eminent educators of Chicago, among them Professor Soares of the University of Chicago. High grade teachers gave instruction in three general divisions of the school, those dealing with subject matter, psychology and method.

The idea has attracted wide attention in Sunday school circles and already eight different schools are planned for in Cook county and there may be as mnay as eleven. These schools will be interdenominational in character, serving sections of the city that lie contiguous. They will secure only the best instructors and lecturers. People who are admitted for instruction will be accepted only when they have a certain rank in general education, presumably high school graduates. The community schools of religion will do for Sunday school teachers what the normal schools have long done for public school teachers. They will endeavor to take away some of the reproach which has fallen upon the whole Sunday school movement, of not being respectable from an educational standpoint.

Still Looking for Naval Chaplains.

A new law was passed last winter doubling the force of chaplains on board the naval vessels of the United States. The secretary of the Navy wished to appoint young men who were spiritually minded who would be really helpful to the men on shipboard. A sufficient number of such men has not been secured. At least seven more must be found. The Federation of Churches of Christ in America is undertaking to find the men.

German Opposed to Race Hatred.

The statement of German theologians early in the war on the issues of the conflict, which were clearly partisan in tone, gave the religious world a shock. Now the old-time German independence of thought is asserting itself again. Professor Troeltsch, who is the author of a very strong essay on modern Protestantism, and who has written most acceptably on the social teachings of the Church, has written an article in the Frankfurter Zeitung in which he protests against a philosophy built on race hatred. He insists that "its influence on the moral and religious life is most dangerous."

Bible Society Progressive.

The American Bible Society is closing the ninety-ninth year of its operation. It has a number of plans for the enlargement of its work in the near future. Among these is the establishment of a Bible station at Panama. Bibles have long been distributed at Suez and the same work will be duplicated at the western canal. The society will also participate in the Latin-American Conference to be held at Panama with a view of planning Bible distribution in the southern continent.

Gideons Sound the War-cry.

The Gideons are an organization of Christian traveling men. They will hold their national convention in Des Moines during the week of July 18. There are 600,000 knights of the grip in America and until the advent of this organization, they were not practicularly noted for piety. Since 1908 the Gideons have distributed 300,000 Bibles in hotel bedrooms. In many other ways they have been a constructive religious force among the traveling public.

Catholics Hold Dry Meeting.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union is holding its national meeting at Pittsburgh, Aug. 8-11. This is the 45th annual meeting. It is in recent years that the society has come into prominence in the Roman communion. The president is Rev. Peter J. O'Callaghan of Chicago.

Here and There

Further Reflections on the General Convention

"As dead as a last year's bird's nest"—so rang the jubilant shout of the opposition at the close of the Toronto gathering concerning the General Convention. The two years which have passed since then have seen a vigorous discussion of this issue, probably the only instance on record of such a proceeding. For dead measures are not worthy of prolonged controversy, so that we are forced to conclude instead of death the General Convention has found Ponce de Leon's fountain of perpetual youth. The alleged death was father to the thought, and a few men inflated with the sense of their own importance had come to believe that their ipse dixit on this matter was synonymous with the obsequies and the oblivion of the departed.

The livest institution among the Disciples at this hour is the "dead" General Convention, and if it has been at death's door, no theological practitioner has been able to hold it there, even for mercenary purposes. On the contrary, if we may be permitted to speak after the manner of a certain Irish Parliamentarian, that Convention has rubbed the death from its eyes, stood upon its legs, defied all opposition, and has carried off the opposition on its horns. At Toronto the undertaker was on hand to assist with the burial; at Los Angeles it was understood he was not equal to the task which seems to be indefinitely postponed.

Dead at Toronto, taking the place of honor at the latest national gathering after sentence of doom had been pronounced upon it in lurid language, the General Convention is in prospect of being kicked into immortality by its foes.

It has been said that not a discordant note was sounded, and in a way that is correct. The exception is that of a worthy brother unknown to fame who was on the ground handing out a tract he had composed combining poetry and awful warning. The poetry would hardly measure up to the standard set by the late Lord Tennyson, yet he told me with his own lips that what he had written was poetry. I presume it was intended to make palatable the unpleasant ending which he predicted would be ours. To slide down gruesome ways with poetry scattered here and there along the route helps considerably, we must admit. But he had not done his full duty in sounding the alarm bell in cold type; nay, he must stand upon his feet on the floor of the convention and repeat in our ears the warnings he had sounded on the sidewalk.

He delivered his lament, was thanked for his timely effort by the presiding officer, and resumed his seat in silence. Thus the latest warning fell upon unheeding ears, another martyr laid himself upon the altar of his country for the general good, and is being preserved by us in this manner as an example to posterity, lest he pass from the earth unwept, unhonored, and unsung. Though the intention was worthy it was a feeble and ridiculous climax to our Armageddon war. Let us hope that this unknown and unheralded protestant is receiving the consolation reserved for those who stake their all upon one final and mighty effort and fail. For their sakes we ought to "Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea."

Say not that there was no opposition after this.

The Dangers of Religious Controversy.

Too much cannot be said in favor of the discussion of questions on which honest men differ. It is discussion that helps to sift falsehood from truth, brings the hidden truth to light from unexpected places, ennobles the spirit of all who engage in the search for it, and promises the amplest rewards.

Everything depends upon the spirit in which we seek for the truth. Truth sought for its own sake becomes the finest gold, while sought to gratify selfish or party ambitions degrades all concerned, and eludes the most vigilant.

Many things enter into the problem of religious controversy. There may be the desire to know, to be right, to feel the assurance that the possession of truth gives. Such assurance lifts us at once from the commonplaces of life to a fellowship in that glorious company of spirits who dwell in all lands, who are never sundered by the limitations of time or space, or poverty, or birth. The only barriers are falsehood and hypocrisy. Over against this noble company are those who resist all inquiry lest inquiry bring change, those who sit in the seats of the well-fed and who bid us rather to "bear the ills we have than to fly to others that we know not of," those who look upon the existing order as perfection beyond which none but fools care to go, and those ecclesiastical merchantmen who learn easily and early how to turn the disturbances of sect into ducats that will buy the patronage of the pickthank.

When the lovers of truth come into conflict with these self-seekers there is always a tragedy. It may be a martyr-fire, or it may be a bull from which the intelligence of the age has extracted all the venom. But the bull is as full of intended penalty as of old, even if it be dehorned.

ELIJAH'S FLIGHT AND RETURN.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 12.

Lesson I Kings, 19: verses 8-18

Golden Text: Be still, and know that I am God. Psalm 46:10.

(8) And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went in the strength of that food forty days and forty nights unto Horeb the mount of God (9) And he came thither unto a cave, and lodged there; and, behold, the word of Jehovah came to him, and he said unto him, What doest thou here Elijah? (10) And he said, I have been very jealous for Jehovah, the God of hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away. (11) And he said, Go forth, and stand upon the mount before Jehovah. And, behold, Jehovah passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before Jehovah; but Jehovah was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but Jehovah was not in the earthquake; (12) And after the earthquake a fire; but Jehovah was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice. (13) And it was so, when Eljiah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entrance of the cave. And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, What doest thou here, Elijah? (14) And he said, I have been very jealous for Jehovah, the God of hosts, for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenants, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.

(15) And Jehovah said unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus: and when thou comest, thou shalt anoint Hazael to be king, over Syria. (16) And Jehu, the son of Nimshi, shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel; and Elisha the son of Shaphat of Abelmeholah shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room. (17) And it shall come to pass, that him that escapeth from the sword of Hazael shall Jehu slay; and him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu shall Elisha slay. (18) Yet will I leave me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him.

Verse by Verse.

8. That food. The food he ate just before starting. He had no other food on the journey except what the wilderness provided.—Forty days and forty nights.—Moses had fasted forty days and Jesus fasted forty days. It is an expression used to gain attention.—Horeb. It was a journey of about one hundred and eighty miles from Beersheba to Herob. The mount of God. So called because here God manifested Himself, see Ex. 3:1 and 4:27.

9. He came thither unto a cave. Caves have always been chosen as places of shelter by travelers in the mountains. The cave was at Horeb.—The word of Jehovah. This form of expression expresses the prophet's consciousness of being a messenger of God. —What doest thou here, Elijah? The question seems to mean, "Why art thou cast down?" He was discouraged in the face of a seeming withdrawal of Jehovah's forces.

10. Jealous of Jehovah. He had defended the honor of Jehovah, but in spite of this fact he did not feel that his work had been effective. Many of us have the same feeling. Elijah's entire ministry is marked by his zeal for Jehovah.—Forsaken thy covenant. To forsake the covenant was to forsake Jehovah. The covenant referred to is Ex. 20:3.—And slain thy prophets. Elijah does not see much hope in a situation like this. —I, even I only, am left. Elijah thought he was the only man loyal to God in his land. Occasions come when every man feels as if he is making the fight alone.—They seek my life. The climax to a cry of despair; the covenant was broken, the altars were destroyed, the prophets were slain, and now they seek his life. The case is hopeless.

11. Go forth. He went to the mouth of the cave.—Stand on the mount before Jehovah. Jehovah must have his attention before he can teach him.—Behold Jehovah passed by. In the symbols of his power.—Jehovah was not in the wind, nor in the earthquake. These are not the chief forces by which Jehovah does his highest work with men. He does more by evolution than by revolution. The lesson Elijah had to learn was that the spiritual influences in life are the real forces in the molding of character.

12. Jehovah was not in the fire. He was not in the wind, nor the earthquake, neither was he in this constant blaze of lightning.—A still, small voice.—Hebrew, "a sound of gentle stillness," RVm. The harsh methods of Elijah were not Jehovah's methods. The storms of revival methods may be necessary at times, but they are not the forces to be relied upon in the work of salvation.

13. And it was so. With the stillness came the conviction that Jehovah was speaking to him, and his troubled spirit was quiet. Read Zech. 4:6—He wrapped his face in his mantle. An act of reverence and awe. See Ex. 3:6; 33:20.—And went out. He left his dismal cave a wiser man.

14. And he said. See comment on verses nine and ten.

15. Jehovah said. Elijah was conscious of God's leadership in his life.—Go. This is the word for every discouraged soul. Go, do something for someone else and you will forget your own trouble. It is the only word for the true servant. It is the great word of the New Testament.—Return on thy way. He had wandered from his task, and must now get back to the kingdom of Israel.—To the wilderness of. Or, by the wilderness to. RVm. This journey gave him time for constructive thought.—Thou shalt anoint Hazael to be king over Syria. Hazael was the confidential general of Benhadad's army, who was at that time king over Syria. See II Kings 8:7-15.

16. Jehu the son of Nimshi. He was the son of Jehoshaphat, the grandson of Nimshi, see 2 Kings 9:2. The word son is often used as we use the word descendant. He was an officer in Ahab's army.—Shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel. He caused them to be anointed directly or indirectly, see 2 Kings 9:1-6.—Elisha shalt thou anoint? See verses nineteen to twenty-one. —To be prophet in thy room. "God's workmen die, but the work goes on." Elijah was conscious that his work was to go on, though not immediately successful it was ultimately to triumph.

17. Shall Elisha slay? The sins of Ahab and Jezebel were to be punished by the three just anointed to places of power. Read 2 Kings 8:12; 13:3, 22; 9:14-10:25 in this connection.

18. Seven thousand. A round number. Many passages of scripture show this use of the word seven.—Every mouth which hath not kissed him. It is a common practice for idolaters to kiss their idols. It is a sign of devotion and regard. See Hos. 13:2. There are more good people in the world than we think.

A Despondent Prophet

The Lesson in Today's Life.

We all have our despondent moods. No one is exempt. The prophets and reformers, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the wise and otherwise, all pass through these trying experiences of life.

These moods, to be sure, do not arise from the same causes. Every condition of our life brings its own peculiar mood. If therefore we are rich, the status of mind belonging to the poor cannot visit us.

One of our difficulties is to see life from the "other fellow's" point of view. The saying, "None think the great unhappy but the great," is ever true.

The hardest thing the highly trained man has to face is the demon of discouragement. The more sensitive the the greater the reactions. Elijah was a man with strong likes and dislikes, and his life was full of extremes.

Many causes united to throw Elijah into the depths of despair. Too often we fail to find these before making up our judgment of a life. Elijah was living the strenuous life; his physical nature was at aa low ebb, and his nerves were overworked. He was exhausted in body and mind after the excitement and intense nervous strain on Carmel.

It is possible to live after this fashion for a time, but there is certain to be a reaction. There is a limit to endurance!

This is nowhere more clearly seen than in the mental reaction of Elijah. Strong men often collapse after hours of terrible excitement.

It was the reaction that inevitably follows moments of great exaltations. A sense of failure seemed to overtake him in his flight from the frenzy of Ahab and Jezebel. All his labors had been in vain. Jehovah had been defeated. The cause was lost. So dark seemed the night, that he wanted to die.

There come moments like this in most of our lives. We feel utterly defeated.

Elijah was lonely. The wild inhabitants of the mountain fastness were his mute companions.

This loneliness was no more depressing than the mental attitude toward the cause he loved. "I only am left," he cried in his utter helplessness. The whole cause was on his shoulders without a counsellor, a helper, or a friend. Few under such circumstances could keep the heart singing all day."

Elijah was in hiding. He was out of work, and had nothing to occupy his mind. There is nothing more fatal to spirits like Elijah than to have nothing to do, and nothing to hope for in this world.

Most of the evil of this world can be traced to idleness either of the rich or poor.

There are hundreds of people all over this world that are discouraged because they are hungry for bread.

There are still more who are hungry for the higher things. They do not always know how or when to get the satisfying food and hence go hungry. They are feeding on the externals of life. Like Elijah, they do not detect God readily in the common experiences of life, and must see the failure of the spectacular before heeding the "still small voice." They need time to take the proper view of Jehovah.

"What doest thou here, Elijah?" was tehe best tonic he could take for the discouraged state of mind that had come to him. He needed to look out upon the rest of the world, with its sorrow and disappointment, to realize properly his own condition. The quickest way out of his despondency was to get busy for some one else.

Where we have been despondent for a season, the best thing is to fill our minds with the desire to help others, and the star of hope will rise in the night of despair.

Disciples Table Talk

Evanston Pastor to Read Original Story to Sunday Night Congregation.

A continued story written by the pastor is to be a feature of the opening Sunday evenings of the new season in Evanston Church, Chicago. Orvis F. Jordan is the pastor and the title of the story is "Twilight and Dawn." The chapters—four of them—sound good: "Alvin Jones finds a Calling;" "Friendship and Courtship;" "The Use of Work and Play," "Dealing with Religious Doubt." It is safe to predict that the Sunday evening problem will be solved for those four Sundays at least.

Broadway Church, Los Angeles, Makes Good Annual Report

A very creditable annual report is that submitted by the officers of Broadway Church, Los Angeles, Cal., Charles T. Hutslar, minister. It shows that the minister made 635 pastoral calls during the year and the members 2,000. One hundred and thirty-seven new members were added with a net increase of 108. The pastor solemnized 63 marriages and officiated at 25 funerals. Funds raised during the year reached a total of $7,-329.50, of which $573 was for missions and benevolence.

Railroad Wreck on Return Journey from Los Angeles Convention

An incident of the Los Angeles convention trip of Mr. and Mrs. Austin Hunter, of Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, was a railroad wreck on their return journey near Del Reo, Tex., two miles from the Mexican border. The wreck occured at two o'clock in the morning and was caused by a switch which had been tampered with by someone (supposedly Mexicans) for the very purpose of causing a wreck. The engine and baggage car went into the ditch, a complete wreck. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter's sleeper was derailed but did not leave the right of way. They were badly shaken up, but no one was injured except the brave engineer who stuck to his post. They were delayed nine hours.

American Missionary Society to Send Evangelists to Alaska.

At the Los Angeles Convention W. F. Cowden, our honored pioneer evangelist to the northwest, made an earnest appeal in behalf of Christian work in Alaska. Arrangements were made for the entering of that great frontier field. Secretary Robt. M. Hopkins was instructed to go to Alaska at once and arrange for the first missionary to go this fall. Mr. Hopkins, accompanied by Mrs. Hopkins, Mrs. Harvey E. Shotwell of Seattle and Miss Sallie V. Ashbrook of Cynthiana, Ky., is now making the trip to Alaska. This Commission of the American Society will make an early report of the conditions in that mighty land of opportunity.

High Aim for Norwood Church Adopted by Congregation

Norwood Church in Cincinnati listened to a sermon by its pastor, C. R. Stauffer, on August 15, and at its close the congregation pledged itself to strive faithfully to realize certain definite goals during the new year. These goals were: Two hundred souls won to Christ, an average attendance of 1,000 at Sunday School and an addition of $5,000 to the building fund. Mr. Stauffer preached that day on "The Invincible Power of Faith."

Des Moines Church Banquets Former Pastor

H. E. Van Horn, pastor of Christ Church, Oklahoma City, preached at University Church, Des Moines, Ia., on Aug. 8, in the absence of Pastor Charles E, Medbury. Mr. Van Horn formerly lived in Des Moines where he was pastor of Capitol Hill Church. His old congregation gave a banquet in his honor on Aug. 10 at which 244 persons were present. The speeches made by T. F. Paris, present pastor, and others indicated the hold upon the affections of the people of his former parish Mr. Van Horn still has. Both Mr. and Mrs. Van Horn and Mr. and Mrs. Paris had just returned from the Pacific Coast conventions and expositions.

September for Church Extension

September is the great month for Church Extension. It is the opening month of the new season's activities. No better impetus can be given the new year than to take a good offering for this cause as soon as the church re-assembles from its vacation wanderings.

An Unwitting Practice of Christian Unity

Charles H. Swift, pastor at Centralia, Mo., fell into an accidental practice of Christian unity with the Baptist Church of Vandalia, Mo., recently that proved in the end to be an unusually interesting and happy experience. He was called on the long distance phone to go to Vandalia to speak at a big function given by a young men's Bible class, and went supposing that it was a class in the Church of Disciples at that place that had called him. On arriving he discovered that the Disciple preacher was out of town and nobody knew of "anything doing" at the church. On further inquiry it was learned that there was an affair at the Baptist Church and that they were expecting the Baptist minister, Rev. Mr. Smith, from Centralia to speak. Manifestly the long distance telephone operator had connected them with the wrong preacher and instead of the Baptist they had talked to the Disciple minister. The explanation was accepted all around and Mr. Swift treated as if he were their very own theological kith and kin. He made an address that captivated his large and enthusiastic audience and on leaving he was amply assured that there was no desire on the church's part to bring a suit for damages against the telephone company.

Bloomington Preparing for One Thousand Convention Visitors

The churches of Bloomington are making abundant preparations to entertain the Illinois state convention Sept. 20-23. The services will be held at First Church with one or two evening sermons held in the Second Presbyterian Church which has a larger auditorium. The program committee talks about an attendance of 1,000 this year, which, considering the fact that we have no national convention in October and the additional fact that Bloomington is one of the most attractive cities in the state, is not an unreasonable expectation. The Christian Century wished to publish the program in this issue but other interests have crowded it out. It will appear later. The program looks about the same as usual, however, the same topics and for the most part the same speakers, which insures a happy and helpful three days' fellowship.

—Wisconsin state convention will be held in Janesville Sept. 6-9. C. W. Cummings is pastor at Janesville.

—Ralph W. Nelson, a graduate of Phillips University, who recently distinguished himself by securing the $500 prize offered by the Church Peace Union with his essay, "Victims of Victory," was married on the evening of August 3, to Miss Edith L. Mathis of Enid, Okla., A. G. Smith, pastor of the First Church, officiating. Mr. Nelson was ordained to the Christian ministry on July 6, 1915, by Mr. Smith. and the elders of the First Church, Enid, and will be a power in that work. He and his bride will enter Kansas University for advanced work this fall.

—Dr. E. H. Long, well-known layman of Richmond Avenue Church, Buffalo, is sorrowing over the death of his son, Edwin, who passed away recently.

—L. J. Marshall, of Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City, spent his vacation of ten days in the Ozarks. Both he and Dr. Jenkins of Linwood Boulevard Church have been preaching throughout the summer, save for a very short excursion of this kind.

—Lee Tinsley, of Veedersburg, Ind., held a two weeks' evangelistic meeting at Mt. Pleasant Church, six miles from Williamstown, Ky., closing on August 16 with 13 accessories. Edwin Marx, a Transylvania student, is the minister of the church.

Church Extension Board Makes Report

This is only a nine month's report, from October 1, 1914, to July 1, 1915. The new receipts for the first nine months are $60,838.08, which is a gain of $1,518.96 from the churches,—a very encouraging report from the churches, We trust this is an earnest of what the churches will do in the September offering which is fast approaching. There is a falling off in annuities and bequests of $13,902.59. Annuities and bequests are always irregular receipts. The returns on loans for the first nine months are $94,663.72. This is a total for the first nine months of receipts for use in Church Extension work of $155,501.80.

Distribution of Funds

The Church Extension Fund amounting to $1,143,378.76 is divided as follows:

General Fund	$522,957.62
Name Funds	$198,479.87

The constitution provides that no part of the principal shall be used for current expenses of administration but that the interest of four per cent on the General Fund shall pay all expenses which it does and more, so that all gifts from churches and individuals may go into the permanent fund. The interest on the Annuity Fund which is loaned at six per cent to help build churches is used to pay the annuitants their interest. The interest on the Annuity Fund is six per cent and the Annuity is always loaned at six per cent so that this fund takes care of itself. The interest of four per cent on the Name Fund loans goes back into those Funds to increase them. There should be many people in the brotherhood creating these Funds.

Loans for Nine Months

During the nine months forty-nine loans, aggregating $125,678.48 have been made to that many congregations to assist them in completing their buildings in twenty-seven states. The most notable work of the year is a loan of $14,-000 to assist the Soniat Avenue Church in New Orleans to purchase a lot and complete a church building on St. Charles Ave., the finest location in New Orleans. This followed out the recommendation of the National Convention which met in New Orleans in 1908. The pastor, W. H. Allen, reported at the Los Angeles Convention a most prosperous work. The audiences at night are the largest of any Protestant church in New Orleans. The Board has now assisted 1776 churches to erect their buildings in twenty-seven years. During the nine months eighty-six other congregations were promised loans in thirty-two states, aggregating $183,600.

Returns on Loans

The churches continued to pay well on their loans. Fifty-two churches paid out in full in the nine months, making 1,142 that had paid out on their loans since the beginning of our Church Extension work. This proves that the Church Extension plan is working well. There has been returned on loans, in principal and interest, $1,830,524.67. This vindicates the Loan Fund idea in our Church Extension work and the success of our loaning money to build churches is commending itself to other religious bodies so they are either creating Loan Funds or adding to them. The Southern Methodists have just voted in their Convention to add $250,000 to their Loan Fund which will increase it to nearly $2,000,000. The Southern Baptists are creating a Loan Fund of one million dollars and are abandoning the Gift Fund feature. At the Los Angeles Convention it was voted to change the constitution permitting the Church Extension Board to create a Gift Fund made up of gifts from churches and individuals desiring such Gift Funds—the proceeds to be used only for the establishment and furthering of the work of the Disciples of Christ among foreign populations in our larger cities.

The constitution will also change allowing churches six years instead of five for the return of their loans, beginning two years after loan is made. On behalf of the Board

Country Church Must Cooperate or Die

From the Boston Transcript.

Coöperation in country church work has been tried in Missouri for a year with excellent results, according to a story from Kansas City. The man back of the idea is Rev. B. G. Reavis, Mexico, Mo., who has long seen the necessity for some sort of unity, having watched the decay of country churches in his capacity of an evangelist. In Rush Hill he found the typical condition — four Protestant bodies, three of whom had inadequate buildings and meagre salaries for pastors who gave part of their time to the pastoral duties. "There were times when a church member of that town falling sick would have to send 150 miles to get his pastor," he says.

In June, 1914, Mr. Reavis put the matter before the people in the Rush Hill Christian Church in the following manner: "The doors of the church are blocked. You have here a weak church, unattractive to non-members, unable to pay its preacher much of the time and gradually losing its influence. The rival churches of this place are in the same fix, and I want to say to you that the country church is doomed unless some remedy is found. That remedy, in my opinion, is not in union. I will not ask you to join these rural churches; their members will not join you; but if you will drop your church name and ask these other denominations to coöperate with you in 'a church,' and work together for the good of the community and the common cause of God, you will succeed and this community will thrive beyond your greatest expectation."

As a result a handsome modern church building, worth $7,000, since has been secured—a remodelled structure for the old Christian Church—dedicated and started without a cent of debt. Former members of various denominations sat together at the dedication, as well as persons with no church affiliation. The motto is: "I want to know you; I want you to know me, that we may love one another and thus make coöperation possible." The idea of love and brotherhood, it is said, already has reduced crime and kindred civic wastes. The formula for enlistment, not joining, is, "Are you a Christian? Have you been a member of any church before? Is your wish and desire to coöperate with this people toward solving the problem of the life of God in this community?" That is the whole creed, everyone being allowed to worship in his own way.

Last November Mr. Reavis was called to Princeton to conduct a gospel meeting. He asked for a conference of the business men, at which he said: "Business without religion is poor business and religion without business is poor religion. Let me make you this proposition: If you would give the increase of your business during the next five years I could out of this money alone build you a $25,000 church and take my salary and in those five years I could double the population of your town. More than that, by means of the coöperative church I could largely eliminate crime, reduce the number of 'dead beats' and do away with many wasting evils." The business men accepted the proposition and are building the $25,000 church.

When asked how far the plan will go, the founder of the movement said: "I do not know. But I will say that fifty years ago this plan could not have gone this far, and in fifty years from now, I believe, that it will not be possible for the church to live in its divided form. I think the country church must coöperate or die."

The Genius of Church Extension

By John H. Booth.

For twenty-seven years the Board of Church Extension, by its work of conservation, has been the handmaiden of all of our evangelistic agencies. The Board has followed the evangelist and missionary into all the new fields of North America and when its work of evangelizing has been completed the Board has taken its newly organized congregation which it left in an empty store room or a lodge hall and helped to put it into its first new church home. To write the history of the splendid victories won for our cause by the aid of Church Extension in 1776 different communities of North America, would be to write a modern Acts of the Apostles.

What Church Extension has done for Chaney, Washington, an educational center, is typical. It is told by Rev. Jas. Egbert, a few sentences being quoted from a recent letter. "Right back of the little church stands the buildings of the State Normal, having an annual enrollment of 1,000 young men and women studying to be teachers. These teachers when their work in the school is finished go out all over the state to wield a mighty influence. What a challenge to the Disciples of Christ with their magnificent plea. Many of the students who come here are from Disciple homes and it required on their part a great sense of loyalty to come to the little old church when the other churches in the city were so grand and inspiring. The people were eager to get a new church edifice in keeping with our plea and the college environment and the Church Extension Board solved the problem for us. On the strength of a $3,000 loan, the necessary amount of money was pledged for a new building. We now have a church as good as any in the city. Every body is pleased with the building, it is a perfect gem inside and out. The plant is worth easily $15,000 and is located on the corner of the Normal campus, about 300 ft. in front of the new $300,000 Normal building. The church has taken on new life in every department. We have had many additions since dedication. The good work will go on and Chaney will, through this student body, move the life of the whole Inland-Empire in an effective way, through the lives of the young men and women who come up here to school."

One of the best ways in the world to extend the whole Kingdom of God is to take an American congregation and assist it into a good house of worship. By doing this a base of supplies is established which according to the New Testament order, takes care of Jerusalem through the Bible School and the other social services which the church renders in the community, and through its offerings it helps to preach the Gospel in Judea, Samaria and the uttermost parts of the earth.

The need for a good offering from our churches in September was never greater in the history of the Board's work. The war has brought about such a financial condition that the greatest source of income of money, namely, the returning loans, upon which the Board depends largely to make its promises for future loans, has been greatly reduced, and the demands for loans have been unusually increased. Many churches that had started the construction of their buildings and had made arrangements with local banks to borrow money were compelled to turn to the Board of Church Extension for help, when the war began, because the banks refused to make the promised loans. To meet this alarming situation the Board has promised mission churches loans aggregating $187,900. Of this amount, $66.000 can be called for in thirty days. To meet this demand the Board has $51,000 in sight, however, this leaves a balance of $15,000 which the Board must raise in the next four to six weeks; and in the near future the whole amount of $187,900 will be called for. If all of our churches will respond to our annual appeal and send good offrings in September, the Board will be able to meet all its promises, which will mean the saving of many of many of our mission churches.

JUDGE A NATION BY ITS DRINKS

Some one has said that you can judge a nation by the character of the books it reads. As literature influences the intellectual development of the nation so food and drink influence its physical development and thereby promote or retard its civilization.

Every nation, civilized or uncivilized, has its popular beverage which leaves an unmistakable impress upon the character of its people. In this connection the following statistics for the year 1909 have a most interesting and significant bearing. In that year the total population of the world was approximately sixteen hundred millions. The combined population of Great Britain, Germany, and the United States, the three nations that lead the world in literature, theology, science, invention, commerce and industry, in fact, in almost every phase of mental, moral and physical development, was approximately one hundred and ninety-five millions, or slightly less than one-eighth of the total population of the world. In the same year the world's consumption of caffein in the form of coffee, tea, cocoa and Coca-Cola was approximately sixty million pounds. Of this Great Britain, Germany and the United States consumed thirty-one million pounds, or a little more than one-half of the total. Less than one-eighth of the world's population therefore consumed more than one-half of the caffein beverages. Figure it out for yourself and you will find that these three nations, the leaders in the march of civilization, use approximately seven times as much caffein per unit as the other nations of the world.

These statics clearly indicate the wholesomeness of the caffein in beverages upon which temperate people have relied for centuries for refreshment of mind and body. As compared with other beverages, they possess the special advantage of refreshing the tired nerves and muscles without stimulation and without intoxication.

Coffee, tea and Coca-Cola are identical in effect, though different in avor. By virtue of their caffein they relieve fatigue, refreshing both mind and body. Coca-Cola differs from the other two in that it contains less caffein, is carbonated, is avored with a combination of fruit extracts and is free from tannic acid. In the latter respect it is superior to tea and coffee, especially when they are overboiled, for the tannic acid which is thus dissolved is apt to disturb the process of digestion.

Desiring that the public shall fully understand the composition and character of its product, the Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet containing the scientific opinions of the world's leading authorities, explaining the wholesomeness and refreshing qualites of ths popular temperance drink. A copy may be had by addressing the Coca-Cola Company, Atlanta, Ga.

From Canada to the Gulf with Church Extension

1776 Church Buildings have been erected in the Mission Fields of 44 states of the Union, and in Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Ontario and Hawaii by the assistance of the Church Extension Board in loans amounting to $2,410,000. Place these buildings three quarters of a mile apart, they would reach from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. They are well distributed in the Mississippi Valley in proportion to the population of the states and the activities of the Disciples of Christ. A WALL CHART HAS BEEN SENT TO THE CHURCHES SHOWING THE DISTRIBUTION. PLEASE PUT UP THE CHART WHERE THE PEOPLE CAN SEE IT.

The Manner of the Doing

This great work was done by loaning the money to one church to complete its building, which was returned in five years to go out to help another congregation. By this plan the same money is building a church every five years in country, village or city community. Even by this plan we cannot house the new churches as fast as they are organized by our 127 City, County, District, State and Territorial Boards and the American Society. Forty per cent of the new organizations must have help in building. This is the work of the Church Extension Board.

Why Church Extension Started, and What is Yet Undone

At the National Convention held in Indianapolis, in 1887, Robert Moffett, Secretary of our Home Board, was asked to find out how many unhoused organizations there were among the Disciples of Christ and report to the Convention at Springfield, Ill., one year hence. He reported 1,628 mission churches without buildings that would build if they could borrow one-third or one-fourth of the cost, at reasonable rates, for a few years' time, from a friendly source. This report caused the creation of the present Church Extension Board.

An interesting fact about our growth is, that during the past nine years, the Board of Church Extension has had 2,412 appeals for loans in erecting mission church buildings. Of these only 787 have been answered during nine years, leaving 1,625 yet to be aided. Some of these have become discouraged and disbanded. But the fact to be remembered is that WE HAVE HAD AS MANY UNANSWERED APPEALS DURING THE PAST NINE YEARS as we had unhoused congregations in Robert Moffett's report of 1888, and therefore WE ARE NOT CATCHING UP WITH THE OPPORTUNITIES GOD GIVES US. We are answering but one-third of the appeals.

The September Offering

Therefore, a great offering is to be raised in all our churches during September, 1915. It will begin Sunday, September 5th, and last through the month. LET NOTHING SET IT ASIDE.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society is incorporated declares that whatever profits may arise shall be applied to agencies which work for the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its purpose is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational agency constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Volume XXXII SEPTEMBER 2, 1915 Number 35

Alexander Campbell and the Missionary Spirit

BY JASPER T. MOSES

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL lived and did his work at the time when the modern missionary movement was in its birth throes. That he did not have a larger, more constructive part in this important phase of American religious development is due not so much to any indifference that Mr. Campbell might have felt toward it, for he came to consider missions a vital part of the Church's program; but the smallness of his recognized contribution to missions came as the natural result of his supreme absorption in the theological phases of the Restoration movement, as well as in the large part he played in its journalistic, educational and practical development. On the other hand, Mr. Campbell made a most valuable, though perhaps unrecognized, contribution to the whole of American Christianity in the spirit of intelligent evangelistic fervor which was communicated to the whole body of the Disciples of Christ, and has been an admitted asset in their growth in numbers and in power.

MISSIONS EMPHASIZED AT THE BEGINNING.

In the very first document of the Campbells, the "Declaration and Address," we find a stressing of missions as the supreme end of the Church, for the accomplishing of which it should unite. How much of this idea was due to Thomas Campbell, and how much to his son, is hard to determine. This missionary idea recurs at several places in the document; but the strongest missionary passage is at the very close of the Appendix, where it may fairly be presumed Alexander Campbell would have placed whatever contribution he would make, if he were the author of any part of the document. The very effective anecdote of the difficulty of the Seneca Indians in accepting the Gospel is used as the climax for this appeal to the churches to unite. The strong and simple words of the old chief describing the dilemma in which the confusion and disagreement of the white Christians placed the Indians form one of the most interesting passages in the whole "Declaration and Address," and they render most effective the impassioned appeal for the restoration of the lost unity of the Church.

IN LATER LIFE AN ARDENT CHAMPION.

During the editorship of the "Christian Baptist," Mr. Campbell was striking right and left at the abuses of ecclesiasticism. He was not always discriminating in his attacks, as his attitude toward organized missionary work at this period shows us. No one seems to have recognized this mistake on his part more clearly than did Mr. Campbell, himself; for in after years, during the constructive part of his program, he becomes the champion of the American Christian Missionary Society, and the friend of Bible societies and other similar organizations.

Notwithstanding Mr. Campbell's later change of heart, his cordial support of the missionary endeavors of the Disciples of Christ, and his presidency of the American Christian Missionary Society, his earlier attitude of criticism and opposition did great damage. There were those associated with the Campbells who were far more legalistic in their bent of mind than even Alexander Campbell in his most iconoclastic moods. These men siezed with gusto on the anti-society utterances of the "Christian Baptist," enlarged upon them, and made this ultra conservative attitude part of their definite program. In the middle period of Disciple history, Benjamin Franklin was the leader of this element, and his paper, the "American Christian Review," was their organ. Their present day successors have largely withdrawn from the main body of the Disciples of Christ.

The discerning reader of the "Christian Baptist" will understand that what Mr. Campbell is hitting at is not so much the missonary ideal as it is the program for carrying this out, which he conceives to be very defective. In his "Remarks on Missionaries" (page 13 of Burnett's reprint of the "Christian Baptist") the then young reformer compares the missionary enterprise of his day to the Crusades of the Middle Ages in that they were outpourings of mistaken zeal, and in proportion to the money and effort expended yielded meagre results. Mr. Campbell quotes at some length from an account of the Jesuit missionary efforts inaugurated by St. Francis Xavier, and comes to the remarkable conclusion that the results of these noble efforts were perhaps worse than useless, since the heathen stood as good a chance of being saved from their idolatry as from Romanism.

COMMENT ON THE JESUITS.

But there is at least one thing about the Jesuit missionaries which meets with Mr. Campbell's approval, and in which he maintains that they surpass the modern Protestant heralds of the gospel. The latter part of his quotation from Buck's Theological Dictionary contains the following:

> In India they (the Jesuits) assumed the garb and the austerities of the Brahmins, and boasted on the coasts of Malabar of a thousand converts baptized in one year by a single missionary. Their sufferings were, however, very great; and in China and Japan they were exposed to the most dreadful persecutions, and many thousands were cut off with, at last, a final expulsion from the empires.

This is near enough to the rigorousness of Apostolic times to elicit Mr. Campbell's admiration; but there is still something lacking in the Jesuit propaganda beside their faulty doctrines. This is in the fact that they could not work miracles. In the first century, the unfailing attestation of divine sanction to the message of an apostle or an evangelist was his ability to work miracles.

Says Mr. Campbell:

The Bible gives us no idea of a missionary without the power of working miracles. * * * It is evident that it is a mistake to suppose that missionaries in heathen lands without the power of working miracles can succeed in establishing the Christian religion. If it was necessary for the first missionaries to posess them, it is as necessary for those of our time who go to pagan lands to possess them. Every argument that can be adduced to show that those signs and wonders, exhibited in Judea, were necessary to the success of that mission, can be turned to show that such signs and wonders are necessary at this day in China, Japan or Burmah to the success of a missionary.

THE FAILURE OF MISSIONS.

Mr. Campbell goes on to compare the labors of modern missionaries to the proselyting efforts of ancient philosophers, and adds:

But that anything can be produced, of a credible character, resembling the success of the divine missionaries, narrated in the New Testament, is impossible; or, that a church, resembling that of Jerusalem, Samaria, Caesarea or Rome, has been founded in any pagan land, by the efforts of our missionaries, we believe incapable of proof. Is, then, the attempt to convert the heathen by means of modern missionaries, an unauthorized and a hopeless one? It seems to be unauthorized, and, if so, then it is a hopeless one.

The natural question arises here, "How in the face of such a statement can you call Mr. Campbell in any way a supporter of the missionary enterprise?" Our reformer is trying to reason the whole thing out, applying his theory of Biblical legalism to the problem, and we see how lamentably his theories go wide of the facts. But we must remember that foreign missions was a new, weak and little exploited enterprise in the days of the "Christian Baptist." Now, having cleared the horizon of the mists of error and of human contrivances, which were usualy one and the same thing with Mr. Campbell, he proceeds to set forth his grand and unique theory for the proper conducting of missions in heathen lands.

THE METHODS OF MISSIONS.

"How, then, is the Gospel to spread through the world?" he asks. The reply comes true to his principles:

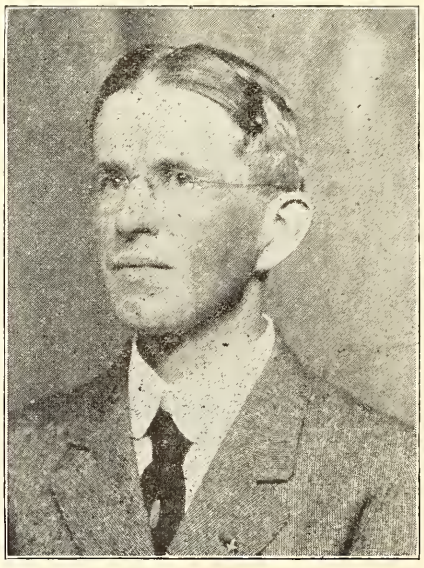
The New Testament is the only source of information on the topic. * * * The Christian religion is a social religion, and cannot be exhibited to the full conviction of the world, except when it appears in this social character. An individual or two in a pagan land may talk about the Christiau religion, and may exhibit its morality as far as respects mankind in general; but it is impossible to give a clear, a satisfactory, a convincing exhibition of it in any other way than by exhibiting a church, not a paper, but in actual existence and operation, as divinely appointed.

And now, as Mr. Campbell elaborates his argument for New Testament missions, we see his great central idea of the unity of the church coming into play:

Nothing can be done worthy of admiration by the Christians of this age, with reference to the conversion of the pagan nations, until the Christians separate themselves from all the worldly combinations in which they are swallowed up, until they come out from amongst them that have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof; * * * until they form themselves into societies independent of hireling priests and ecclesiastical courts, modeled after the forum, the parliament, or national conventions; until they cast to the moles and the bats the Platonic speculations, the Pythagorean dreams and Jewish fables they have written in their creeds; until they return to the ancient model delineated in the New Testament; and until they keep the ordinances as delivered to them by the apostles.

The culmination of Mr. Campbell's proposed solution of the missionary method is now given:

If, in the present day, and amongst all those who talk so much of a misionary spirit, there could be found such a society,



Rev. Jaspar T. Moses.

though it were composed of but twenty, willing to emigrate to some heathen land, where they would support themselves like the natives, wear the same garb, adopt the country as their own, and profess nothing like a missionary project; should such a society sit down and hold forth in word and deed the saving truth, not deriding the gods nor the religion of the natives, but allowing their own works and example to speak for their religion, and practicing, as above hinted, we are persuaded that, in process of time, a more solid foundation for the conversion of the natives would be laid, and more actual success resulting, than from all the missionaries employed for twenty-five years.

What an interesting mixture of the theoretical and the practical we have here! Some of Mr. Campbell's ideas have been tried out and found unworkable in the missionary experience of the nineteenth century; while others of them are only today coming to be the goal of the most modern missionary thought and practice. The editor of the "Christian Baptist" had a positive genius for seeing through shams, fads and mistaken enthusiasms, in other people at least. His one idea here that has not stood the test of time and of experience is that of missionaries going to foreign lands without regular incomes and attempting to live absolutely on the plane of the natives. Abundant and dismal failures have marked the pathway of the enthusiasts who have tried this plan, notwithstanding the fact that a distinguished Indian gentleman recently proposed it in an address before one of our Chicago churches, as the readiest method for overcoming the suspicion and hostility of his fellow-countrymen to the foreign missionary.

VALUE OF CAMPBELL'S CRITIQUE.

The real value of Mr. Campbell's critique of the missonary enterprise lies in his prophetic unfolding of the proper attitude of the missionary toward the native and toward his task in general. He utterly discards the purely evangelistic idea in missions, so far as this finds expression merely in preaching Christianity and making light of the oriental faiths. The missionary is to know the people he labors among, and to share in their interests. He is to be familiar with their language, customs and religion. Nor is he to treat their worship, idolatrous though it may be, with aught but respect and courtesy. The entering wedge of Christianity in the lives of these pagans is to be the influence of life upon life, the power of Christion living and helpfulness. The missionaries are to preach primarily through service, or as Mr. Campbell puts it, by "allowing their works and example to speak for their religion."

Mr. Campbell is profoundly right in his judgment that such a message will establish the Gospel on a firm base in the lives of the native converts. Shall not our missionary promoters of today, as they are trying to adjust themselves to what they see to be the need of the field, and at the same time satisfy the demands of their constituency for big returns in the number of conversions, as the measure of success, find much aid and comfort in pointing to the Sage of Bethany as the advocate of social service in missions? Surely, the most conservative among us cannot regard this as a dangerous innovation in our policy when it has such distinguished support.

LATER SUPPORT OF ORGANIZED MISSIONS.

D. S. Burnett, editor of the reprinted editions of the "Christian Baptist," takes pains in the preface to the eighth edition to inform us that Mr. Campbell's attitude of opposition to missionary organization into societies did not last into the later and more constructive period of his ministry. He quotes from "The Millennial Harbinger" two long paragraphs of enthusiastic support of organized missions from which the following sentences are taken:

When bodies of delegates are appointed and convened for such a purpose, to carry out the great aim of the commission, whether they spring from one small district and are called an "association," or from a still larger one and are called a "general convention," we believe that it may be truly said of them, in the language of Paul, "they are the messengers of the churches and the glory of Christ." May it be the lot of the present generation to see the churches of "our common faith" on this continent acting together to attain the end proposed by the great commission, * * * entering upon the moral conquest of the world, owning the antipodes as their neighbors, and hailing the latest news from the distant East and West with an eagerness akin to that which pervades the marts of commerce. * * * The brief annals of our American missions prove that there is no class of men so refined or savage, so high or so low, but that they may be made trophies of the Gospel, and be brought in to add lustre to its triumphs.

Surely, this splendid statement of Mr. Campbell, written at the height of his power, makes ample amends, to the seeker for his true attitude, for the cruder observations of his earlier years. From first to last, he believed in missions, and saw clearly the close association of Christian union with the evangelizing of the world.

How To Make a Mummy Fight

BY WILLIAM E BARTON

MR. KIPLING in one of his most interesting poems tells us how England said to Pharaoh:

"I must make a man of you,
Who will stand upon his feet and play the game,
Who will Maxim his oppressor as a Christian ought to do,
And so she sent him Sergeant What's-His-Name."

This inconspicuous and unheroic looking individual in his khaki kit and with his equipment of the odds and ends and leavings of a dozen Oriental tongues—

"Translated with a stick,
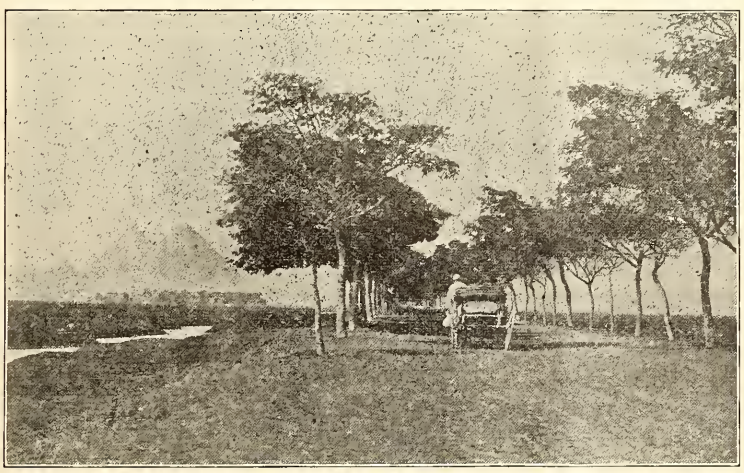
Which is really half the trick"— proved to be a capable linguist, a man of military genius, and hardly less than a magician. He lived and died unrecognized, but he made a fighting man out of a fellah.

"Though he drilled a black man white
And made a mummy fight,
He continued only Sergeant What's-His-Name."

He who visits Palestine requires as his most important equipment physical endurance and a pocket Bible, but the first requisite for sightseeing Egypt is a dress suit. In Palestine you rise at five, breakfast at half-past, and are in the saddle at six, and lie down at night on a cot in a carpeted tent, weary and happy. In Egypt you start at ten for a leisurely donkey ride, return for lunch at twelve, stroll about the shops until four, when you return to the hotel veranda to watch the snake-charmers and dancers, and then dress for dinner. He who returns from a journey in Palestine has a sunburnt nose and has lost about twenty pounds of flesh, but he is in good fighting trim. He who comes up out of Egypt, however, emerges like the patriarchs of old laden with the treasures of the Orient. He is sleek, well-fed and perfectly sure that the scarabs he has bought were not made in Germany, for the dealer told him so.



The Road to the Pyramids.

But before getting out of Egypt one must get into it. That is not, or, until the outbreak of the war, was not, a very difficult process. The American tourist had his choice of landing either at Port Said or Alexandria. In the former harbor one ties up at the dock, but at the latter large ships anchor out in the roadstead and passengers are discharged into small boats. I have seen some very sea-sick people in the harbor of Alexandria, ready to recite with Mark Antony:

"I am dying, Egypt, dying."

But none of them actually die.

Egypt was changing rapidly before the war broke out, and it will change still more rapidly when the war is over. Even now one may ride from Cairo to the Pyramids on a trolley and it is possible before we know, they will be equipping themselves with elevators. This latter improvement, however, would be strenuously resisted by the brigands whose business it is to help tourists climb the Pyramids. It takes a minimum of four of them for each tourist, two of them leap up on the next block of stone, almost as high as a dinner table, and the tourist puts one foot almost as high as his chin and extends a hand to each of his helpers. The third helper puts both hands firmly under the stern of the ascending adventurer and gives him a generous push up. As for the fourth attendant, he carries a water bottle. There are likely to be others who on one pretext or another are supposed to help an American to the top. One needs almost as much help going down, excepting there is no need to push. The great Pyramid rises at an angle of fifty-four degrees; that is to say, it goes up faster than it goes in. It looks very steep when one turns to go down, and it is a comfort to have two shoulders to lean upon as one jumps from block to block.

CAMEL AND DONKEY.

I have sailed up the Nile on a steamboat. I have come down the Nile in a sleeping-car. I fully expect to sail over the Pyramids in an aeroplane, but for genuine business in Egypt one still must have resort to the camel, and especially to the donkey. No trolley yet has desecrated the plan where once stood the hundred-gated Thebes. I have ridden all about Luxor and Karnak on a donkey so small that my feet almost touched the ground, and have ridden over the sands to more remote adventures upon the back of a camel.

When I first visited Egypt every primitive method of agriculture which had been in vogue from the days of the patriarchs was still employed there. Oxen and donkeys went round and round their never ending treadmill pumping up water from the Nile. Men whose labor must have given them a never-ending backache dipped their buckets, fastened on the end of a well-sweep, three times a minute as regularly as a clock, dipping up water for the shallow irrigating ditches, and never stopped to rest or look up no matter who or what passed. To some extent this will continue in years to come, but a new order of things is well under way.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF EGYPT.

Egypt possesses 6,250,000 acres of tillable land. Of this area, only 1,730,000 acres were irrigated by the ancient system, which has been in vogue 7,000 years. Where, however, perennial irrigation can be provided, two and in some places three crops can be grown. To provide in part for this great improvement the Assuan Dam has been built. It is a reservoir dam, which allows the early floods laden with deposits needed for the fertilization of the soil a free and unimpeded passage, but which captivates the comparatively clear water of the terminal inundations.

The English administration in Egypt, under the direction of Lord Cromer, developed a plan of the greatest magnitude and importance, involving the expenditure of more than $100,000,000 for the development both of Egypt and of the Soudan. The plan, whose inception we have seen, but whose larger development still remains to be accomplished, involves the utilization of the White Nile for the irrigation of Egypt and the Blue Nile for the irrigation of the Soudan.

When the British government, under the direction of Mr. Disraeli, then prime minister, purchased the Khedive's share of stock in the Suez Canal, England ceased to be a kingdom and became an empire. That clever, enigmatical Jew gave Queen Victoria a new title, which she greatly enjoyed, and gave to her successor new responsibilities and superb opportunities. The ineffectual revolt of Arabi Bey fastened England's rule still more firmly on Egypt. France has protested for years that the time had come for England to get out, but if England had any intention of getting out she has forgotten it some time ago. The government of Egypt has been a three-headed kind, the Khedive, the Sultan and the King of Great Britain have all had a finger in the pie. The Sultan is no longer to be reckoned with, but Great Britain is there to stay.

ENGLAND'S PURPOSE IN EGYPT.

All in all, Lord Cromer's administration in Egypt has been wise and far-sighted. It has made for prosperity and good government. It has put Egypt on the map, not merely as an ancient civilization, a land of tombs and mummies, but as a modern country, capable of producing immense crops of cotton and other marketable commodities. England intends to run her railroad from Cairo to the Cape, and the Union Jack is likely to wave pretty nearly all the way from the Blue Mediterranean south to the Cape of Good Hope.

To what extent will this system of improvements destroy the relics of ancient civilizations? Something will certainly be lost. The magnificent temple on the Island of Philæ already suffers inundation on account of the building of the Assuan Dam. But speaking in general terms, it is safe to predict that most of the ancient ruins that are best worth saving will be protected.

One is no longer permitted to carry smoking torches through the famous tombs of the kings. These are lighted with electric lights. It seems a most incongruous thing that it should be so, but I have deciphered the obituaries of dead Pharaohs by the light of Mr. Edison's invention. The British Museum and the other museums of Europe and the scholars of all the world represented in the Egypt Exploration Fund and similar organizations are united in their effort to protect the really valuable antiquities along the Nile.

The Great Pyramid.

Egypt has not suffered as Palestine and Turkey in Europe have suffered on account of the present war. To be sure, there are few tourists to bring in money, but there are soldiers, and they are good spenders.

TOURISTS DISPLACED BY OFFICERS.

Most of the chief hotels are closed. The two great hotel groups in Cairo are represented only by the Grand Continental and Shepherd's. The Luxor Hotel at Luxor and the Grand Hotel at Assuan are open for the benefit of a few old habitues, of invalids and of occasional officers on short leave or Anglo-Egyptian officials in need of a brief rest from what, owing to the general stoppage or curtailment of leave, has been a trying year for many of them.

Yet, if the season is nonexistent, there is animation enough in the European life of Cairo. The city has become militarized, for a very large army is quartered in or around it. Shepherd's and the Grand Continental Hotel swarm with officers of every rank and every branch of the imperial service—British, Indian, colonial and Egyptian.

In general, it may be said that the military have amply made up for the absence of tourists as far as Cairo is concerned. The dragomans, guides and venders of every species of rubbish, from inefficient fly whisks to stuffed crocodiles, have thriven exceedingly. There are no tourists at Mena House, but a large force of Australians is camped near the Pyramids, and that notorious tribe, the Pyramid Bedouins, are growing deplorably prosperous at the expense of newcomers. The venders of all sorts of refreshments, restaurant keepers, cabmen, carters, taxicab drivers, etc., are making money.

A Loaded Donkey Near the Pyramids.

Egyptian and Berberine waiters have taken the places of the Germans and Austrains in the hotels that remain open.

The Mouski bazaar is not doing badly, though there is naturally a falling off in the demand for the best classes of Oriental goods, and the best known venders of Egyptian and Greek antiques have comparatively few clients. Book shops and tea shops are doing an excellent business, and one still wonders why no English bookseller has begun operations, now that the Germans have left us, and why none of the many London establishments have not thought of opening tea-rooms in Cairo, if only for the benefit of the Australians, the tea drinkers par excellence of a tea-drinking race.

THE WORLD'S DEBT TO EGYPT.

It is only in upper Egypt that the cessation of the tourist traffic has really been felt. In Cairo and its neighborhood not only are the troops, a majority of whom receive at least $1.25 pay a day, spending large sums, but considerable orders for provisions, forage, etc., are given by the military authorities. It is difficult, of course, to make any but a general estimate of the amount that is being spent in the country by the garrison, but there is good reason to believe that it does not fall far short of $1,250,000 a month. Egypt has another good reason for being grateful to the Turk.

Great things have come out of Egypt in the past. We are indebted to her for the birth of many of our sciences and most of our fine arts. To her we owe not only the hieroglyphs which are our earliest literature, but also papyri with their unexpected light on the early Christian centuries and their new texts of Greek classics. To Egypt we owe the Greek Version on the Old Testament and much of the literature of the early church fathers. The men of the Old Testament looked back upon Egypt as "the house of bondage," and so it was to them, but Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, all severally, went to Egypt and were saved in time of famine. Again and again Egypt proved the granary that saved ancient civilization as well as the source of its literature and art. The Tel-el-Amarna tablets have afforded us a perfectly amazing knowledge of surrounding countries, including Palestine in the times preceding the exodus, and recorded in a language other than the Egyptian and easily legible by modern scholars.

Yes, Egypt has done much for the world, and the world has done something for Egypt. Ever since the days of Joseph and down to the time of Lord Cromer, Egypt has needed foreign prime ministers to tide her over her great crises. Whatever the future has in store for Egypt, there is no present indication that the war will do her permanent damage. She has nothing to lose in the departure of the Turk and she has something to gain in the growth of modern industry and agriculture.

Why I Do Not Believe in Foreign Missions

By Bromide Smith.

From the Congregationalist.

1. I have a friend who once met a man who said his wife's second cousin had been on a tour round the world and he said the missionaries were doing more harm than good.

2. The religion of other peoples is as natural for them as ours is for us and just suits their need. We have no right to go out and disturb the beautiful faith and customs of such people as the cannibals bring them Christianity which is, of course, purely an American invention and happens to suit us.

3. There is so much need at home, so many hospitals and schools that need to be supported that I do not believe in sending thousands of dollars to the ends of the earth where there are no hospitals and schools. Besides, the people are accustomed to dying out there and do not feel it as we do at home.

4. The money you subscribe to missions does not go out to the foreign field at all, but pays for secretaries and big offices at home. One mission board I know has three treasurers, whereas the bank in our town that handles over $25,000 a year has only four men in its office force.

Besides I do not think the men in charge are capable of looking after such sums of money as they get; this mission board, for instance, handles over a million dollars every year, I understand.

5. It would be much better if the money used on foreign missions were used for the immigrants of the United States. They get so hard and spoiled after they have been here for a while that something ought to be done for them immediately on arrival, seeing that unfortunately so little has been done for them in their own homes before they got here.

6. Many of the young missionaries sent out to the foreign field lose their lives there and I feel sure God does not mean human life to be risked in this foolhardy way. It is another case of the modern carelessness as to human life about which I was talking to my wife when out in our car last Sunday afternoon which fills the Monday papers with awful accounts of auto accidents.

7. Foreign missions are not interesting and I freely confess I know nothing about them.

SHAM PREACHING.

By George Wharton Pepper.

I HAVE heard many sermons which were obviousy delivered primarly for the satisfaction of the preacher. He had become interested in a certain line of thought. He had happened upon what seemed to him a bright idea. Or, perhaps, he had been reading a book which pleased or pained him. Forthwith he was eager to ease his mind. Sunday was at hand and the pulpit was his. He never seriously asked himself what were the needs of his flock. What followed I can best express by setting over against that tragic picture of the sheep in the snow one of those unreal Arcadian scenes in which the shepherd, playing upon his pipe, holds the center of the picture while the sheep, more fortunate than the congregation, wander listlessly away.

The preacher must be convinced that he has somewhat to offer which, if received, will mean light and leading to his hearers. It is charged sometimes against the physician that, when his power of diagnosis is baffled, he prescribes a useless but harmless concoction in order to give himself time for a further consideration of the problem. Whether the charge is true in the case of physicians, I know not. It might be made with justice in the case of some preachers. A sham sermon is an offense to God.

The sham may take any one of several forms. A detestable species is that in which the preacher gives glib and conventional answers to questions which have never troubled him, and offers hearsay solutions of problems with which he himself has never wrestled.

Perhaps the most common sham is the appeal to experiences to which the preacher is a stranger, or the proclamation of beliefs upon which he has a slender hold. It is extraordinary how quickly the man in the pew can distinguish between that which has its source in the recesses of the preacher's being and that which comes only from the lips. A proposition announced by a man convinced of its truth and power may carry the preacher's conviction to many a heart, when the same words will be utterly ineffectual if spoken by one to whom they mean little or nothing. It is just because the man counts for so much that his elocution and fluency count for so little.

All that is, at all,
Lasts ever, past recall;
Earth changes, but thy soul and God stand sure:
What entered into thee,
That was, is, and shall be:
Time's wheel runs back or stops: Potter and clay endure.
—Browning.

MARY PHAGAN SPEAKS

By Mary White Ovington, in the New Republic.

YOU care a lot about me, you men of Georgia,
now that I am dead.
You have spent thousands of dollars trying to learn who mutilated my body.
You have filled the columns of your newspapers with the story of my wrong.
You have broken into a prison and murdered a man that might be avenged.
But why did you not care for me when I was alive?
I was a child, but you shut me out of the daylight.
You held me within four walls watching a machine that crashed through the air,
Endlessly watching a knife as it cut a piece of wood.
Noise fills the place—noise, dust, and the smell of oil.
I wish some of the thousands of dollars that you spent on the trial might have kept me in school,
A real school, the kind you build for the rich.
I worked through the hot August days
When you were bossing the girls, or shooting birds,
Or lounging in doorways cursing the nigger;
And you never paid me enough to buy a pretty dress.
You sometimes spoke coarsely to me when I went to and from my work;
Yes, you did, and I had to pretend I liked it.
Why did you despise me living and yet love me so now?
I think I know. It is like what the preacher told me about Christ:
People hated him when he was alive,
But when he was dead they killed man after man for his sake.

THE HAMMOND CONGRESS

UP to this time, The Christian Century has had no word to say about the gathering together of a considerable company of Disciples at Hammond, Ind., this week. Our reticence is due to two or three reasons:

We attended a similar "Congress of Efficiency" at Davenport, Iowa, some two years ago, promoted by the same interests that are back of this gathering, and while fellowship of the brethren was, as it always is, a satisfaction and delight, we felt that the dominant notes emphasized by the gathering were, if not misleading, at least not vital to the interests of the Kingdom of God.

The program announced for Hammond is much the same as the Davenport program, only, perhaps, more pronounced in its emphasis upon things that confuse and misdirect the thought and activity of the churches.

A second reason, more theoretical than the first, is our firm belief that the last thing the modern Church needs is efficiency. We have too much efficiency now—too much method, too much mechanism, too much rattle and clang of machinery—and too little sense of religious reality. It is a well-seasoned conviction with us that in the so-called "efficiency" of the modern Church is betrayed her pitiful weakness more clearly than at any other point.

As the Church becomes conscious of its mechanism it tends to lose its consciousness of what the mechanism is for. We believe the "schools of methods" and "congresses of efficiency" common in our day indicate a deplorable lack of spiritual vitality.

We therefore have little interest in furthering such a congress as that gathered at Hammond.

A COVER FOR HOSTILE ACTION

IN spite of these inhibitions, however, it is very unlikely that we could have maintained our silence or withheld our sympathetic interest toward this gathering were it not for a third reason, more concrete and more decisive than those above indicated. This third reason refers to the auspices under which the congress is held and to the purposes which, with more or less subtlety, have been set forth as actuating those responsible for it.

At this point we can do no otherwise than speak plainly.

In its genesis, its aim and its character, the Hammond congress is fathered by the Christian Standard. In its later advertisements it was sought to invest the pastor of the Hammond church with a semblance of initiative and invitation. But every one knows that to be a mere promoter's trick.

The Christian Standard is the foe of the organized work of the Disciples of Christ. It is at this hour doing its utmost to break down and disintegrate the slowly and hardly wrought unity of our missionary and benevolent activities.

Its unconcealed purpose is to use this gathering for the furthering of that sinister design.

Under cover of mere formal patronage of our missionary societies it is lending its active and real influence to the fostering of competing and irresponsible agencies the inevitable effect of whose success would be to confuse the purposes of the churches and to bring chaos into our missionary organizations.

It has excited interest in its congress by contrasting it with the General Convention of the churches to the discredit of the General Convention; by keeping up an unholy agitation against the missionary societies on account of their participation in the General Convention; by creating the impression that the issues it has raised against men and policies will be fought out at Hammond; and by subtly connecting its congress with the iniquitous effort it is now making to divide the Christian forces of our churches in Chicago and vicinity.

Of Mr. Sharp, the vigorous and capable pastor at Hammond, we have no word save one of admiration and affection. It is regrettable, however, that he and Mr. Kindred of Chicago and a few others have lent their personalities as instruments of the Standard's wicked purpose to bring division into the Church of Christ.

IMPOLITIC AND UNDIGNIFIED

NOR is it an admirable spectacle that certain of our national missionary secretaries present in lending the attraction of their names to this congress.

There was advertised scarcely one name of a man with a vital message or one representing active leadership, until the announcement of the secretarial group appeared. It would have been far better for the missionary and benevolent societies to have allowed the congress to draw its own type of attendants and proceed to carry out its purpose in its own way without rendering its character ambiguous by the presence of those attracted by the secretarial leaders.

The secretaries were wanted to give caste to the congress while the thing which the secretaries represent was being undermined.

In like manner would we characterize as weak and puerile the eleventh-hour friendliness manifested by our third national journal in an editorial last week. Coming so close on the heels of its recent tirade against the Cincinnati paper for the very same offences which we have suggested above, its words, to all thoughtful and robust-minded readers, sounded shallow and insincere.

We hold that the net effect of the influence of the Christian Standard upon the Disciples of Christ is banal and sinister. It is coarse and vulgar. It is unscrupulous. It creates false issues for the sake of its own aggrandizement. It seeks to divide asunder those whom Christ hath joined together, and it is our conviction that to aid and abet it in any of its purposes is to aid and abet it in all.

THE FOOLISHNESS OF PREACHING

PREACHERS of this generation never had occasion to feel so inwardly the meaning of the phrase, "the foolishness of preaching," as in these days of world war and world-wide hatred.

The whole end and purpose of preaching is to bring righteous peace among men, to establish a brotherhood of love in the earth. And yet after twenty centuries of the gospel, here is Christian civilization itself involved in a chaos of hatred so virulent that a complacent scholar like Sir William Ramsey of England, asked concerning the outlook for re-establishing intellectual and scientific fellowship with Germany after the war, declares deliberately that "it will be impossible for us ever to work together with the Austrians and Germans."

Sir William is a Christian scholar.

If hatred so elemental and consuming can dwell in his soul what is to be said of the rank and file of men?

And so the preacher, in the presence of this contradiction of all the preaching of the past cannot help feeling the impotence of his own words. A sensitive minister said to us the other day:

> "I never felt the weakness of my message as I feel it these days. My sermons seem to me like mere words, words, hollow and inept. To plead for peace is like spitting into the wind. The world has gone mad."

No doubt this is a common feeling among teachers and moral leaders. The forces that are creating war are so immeasurable; they spring out of ancestral and racial depths, they are the very elemental brute forces of nature—how follish then, to oppose them with the weapons of words or ideas or ideals!

That is the way it seems. And no doubt that is the misgiving that has always been in the soul of every great idealist. The idealist who utters his message in normal times of peace against any great social wrongs, like the wrongs of the industrial order, for instance, is vividly aware of the power of the brute forces that oppose him. But his little word, his vision, his ideal, somehow has a way of growing in the hearts of men until it fills their hearts and casts out the evil.

Browning's dynamic view of human nature should comfort the moral teacher, and he should strive to possess himself of it.

> "Man is not man as yet," says the poet. He is becoming man; he is battling his way to his true humanity. The unleashing of the forces of war do not represent sheer relapse from a static position but mark an episode in the upward climb of mankind.

A relapse it is, but it is more than a relapse; It is nature's way—God's way—of carrying humanity toward far goals that otherwise could not be attained.

In every fall there is ever the perilous possibility that it may be a fall upward!

And it is the moral teacher's supreme glory to guard and foster this possibility and make it the ultimate reality.

That task is the eternal meaning of Redemption.

A GREAT MISSIONARY

F. E. MEIGS died at Nanking, Aug. 25. He was a pioneer of the foreign socity, having gone to China nearly thirty years ago. He was an able, untiring missionary and an ardent advocate of Christian unity. He led in establishing Nanking University.

A. M'LEAN.

This telegram from President McLean will bring sadness to all hearts and homes throughout the brotherhood. The name of F. E. Meigs is a household world wherever the work of the Foreign Missionary Society is known. He went out in the early days when it was a lonely and perilous thing to be a missionary.

With a faith remarkable for its sanity and constancy he has toiled in season and out of season for the highest ideals of Christian character and Christian propaganda.

To him as to no other man it is said the church is indebted for the founding of the University of Nanking, the union school now supported by Methodists, Disciples and Presbyterians. He was the dean of its theological faculty and exercised great influence among his colleagues and students as well as in the whole missionary situation in China.

We have no other information as to his death save what is contained and implied in Mr. McLean's telegram. Later and fuller advices will be passed on to our readers.

What is meant by "our neighbor" we cannot doubt; it is every one with whom we are brought into contact; he or she whomsoever it be whom we have any means of helping.—Dean Stanley.

If we ask the Spirit to come and dwell within us, we shall find that he is indeed a comforter. For he teaches us of God's infinite love. . . . The Comforter will teach us not to please ourselves, as we are all trying to do, but to forget ourselves, and live in Christ and for each other.—F. D. Maurice.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Italian Methodists Go to War.

The Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal church has received tidings that Methodist work in Italy is being much interfered with by the war. Among the ministers of Italian Methodist churches to go to war are Rev. Carlo M. Ferreri, Felice, Caccipuoti, L. Schird and F. Spini. Mr. Ferreri is superintendent of the Naples district and one of the outstanding evangelical leaders in Italy. Methodist laymen have answered with the greatest enthusiasm their country's call.

Vacation Bible Schools a Success.

The Presbyterian churches of Chicago have made a concerted effort this summer to further the vacation Bible school movement. These schools hold daily sessions and help to solve the problem of the city children turned out on the streets in the summer when the public schools are not in session. The schools are not all devoted to book study but include in their programs athletics and story-telling, besides many other features. The Presbyterians had hoped to have four thousand children enrolled this summer but they have actually succeeded in enrolling 4,700 in 28 churches and missions.

Commencement at Moody Institute.

Moody Bible Institute takes men and women of less than the usual preliminary training and gives them a two-year course in preparation for religious work. The summer commencement was recently held at which Rev. Henry W. Stough gave the principal address. Seventy-two young people received diplomas for the two year course and they represented twenty-five states of the Union and three foreign countries.

Dr. Campbell Morgan Goes to Soldiers.

Dr. Campbell Morgan spent his vacation this summer in visiting the trenches in Europe. He is being sent by the Y. M. C. A. in England to give spiritual comfort to the soldiers. His great popularity in England will make him a welcome visitor among the millions of enlisted men.

Plans for Methodist Reunion.

The plans for the reunion of Methodism continue to be discussed in the journals of the denomination. In case they were brought to a successful culmination, there would be one Methodist church in this country with eight million communicants which would be the largest single ecclesiastical body in the country. The plan provides for four provinces, the colored Methodists of the South, the white Methodists of the South, eastern Methodists and western Methodists. These provinces would be united in one central body yet to be created. The missionary and benevolent agencies of the denominations would be united. It is thought that the colored Methodist churches that are now independent would come into the union, as well as the Methodist Protestant denomination with 350,000 members.

The Church Periodical Club.

The Church Periodical Club is a society in the Protestant Episcopal church, organized for the purpose of providing religious literature to those not able to secure it. There are locals in the different parishes and these co-operate to furnish papers, magazines and books to the poor, to missionaries, and clergymen in small parishes. They also send literature for missionary distribution. The society states "Books do really clothe the naked and feed the hungry as no other food and clothing can do."

Clergyman Heads Consumers' League.

The Consumers' League is an organization to protect the workers in large stores. The branch in Cincinnati is headed by an Episcopalian clergyman, Rev. Guy Emery Shipler, rector of the church of the Epiphany. He reports that eight dollars a week is the minimum on which a single woman can live in comfort in Cincinnati. There are 48 per cent of the women who are receiving less than this wage and only 38 per cent were getting over nine dollars a week. The stores that are fair to their help are commended in a "white list."

Would Secure a Down-town Religious Center.

The Federation Council of Chicago, representing Chicago Protestantism, is seeking to secure the erection in Grant Park of a stadium where religious meetings can be held, as well as other public gatherings. Grant Park is land which has been made, east of the loop in Chicago by filling in the lake. Should the project carry, at certain seasons of the year great Protestant leaders would have opportunity of speaking at the stadium.

Students of Prophecy Meet.

The world war has given impetus to millennial drawn, adventism and other forms of prophetic interpretation. The premillenarian movement within the circles of evangelicalism is also cheered by what it regards as evidences of the "end," for the premillenarianist regards most of the progress of the world as coming after and not before this "millennium." The Prophetic Conference met at Stony Brook the week preceding Aug. 15 and studied the application of prophecy to modern conditions, according to the older method of procedure. Dr. Ford C. Ottman presided at the meetings. James M. Gray, of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, was prominent in the proceedings. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman made an address on "The Blessed Hope."

World Conference Selects Secretary.

The World's Conference on Faith and Order promoted by the Protestant Episcopal church, issued a call early in the summer to Dr. George Craig Stewart, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal church, Evanston, Ill., to become secretary of the conference. Dr. Stewart has been a very strong parish worker and preacher, making an obscure church prominent in his city and building a beautiful Gothic building for its worship. He has been very extreme in his high church attitude however, not favoring federation nor having much fellowship with evangelicals. His decision is not announced.

Growth of Vacation Bible Schools

It was in 1901 that Rev. R. G. Boville started in New York City the first daily vacation Bible schools. The first year he had five schools. In 1907 he inaugurated national plans. That year he had nineteen schools. He has just made a report to the directors of the National Vacation Bible Schools Association for 1915 showing 348 schools this year in over seventy cities and centers of the United States and Canada. These 348 schools had in them 77,502 children, all creeds and races. In their six weeks' course they received the equivalent of Bible teaching of a whole year's attendance in a Sunday-school. Schools this year were held in churches of many communions. Presbyterian, Baptist, Episcopal and Methodist led. Instruction was uniform in method and provided for manual work, music, and organized play. Sunday-school, modern settlement, the church, the college and street child came together. The banner schools of the country were Bradford, Pa., 928 boys and girls; Homewood, Pittsburg, was second; Aitken's Institute, Chicago, was third, and Malcolm Memorial, St. Louis, was fourth. There were 2,332 earnest college students and volunteer assistants. These gave splendid help and got invaluable experience. Sixty per cent of the instructors gave their services free. Churches gave through these schools wage-earning homes a practical exhibition of Christian helpfulness that brought nearer a better understanding between the church and labor than mere pamphlet could accomplish. They gave the children a happier summer, and to students a saner view of life, showing them how helpless negations and criticisms were. The churches recognize that these schools have given them new and valuable openings to the masses of children beyond the reach of Sunday-schools. The association has rendered a natural service to the missionary societies. It has prepared and furnished them with vital methods of meeting new situations. It is encouraging every Christian body to organize and support schools. The Presbyterian Home Mission Board led the way and now the Baptists and Lutherans have national societies in the field. These bodies are responsible for eighty-seven schools this year and in most cities are co-operating loyally with the inter-church movement. Russell Colgate of New York, is president of the association. J. Adams Brown is national treasurer, and Rev. R. G. Boville is national director.

Here and There

Ecclesiasticism and Autohypnosis

In a journal which devotes its energies to the task of keeping us all in the straight and narrow way, under the learned title of "Autohypnosis," a popular pastor makes some observations on an article of mine which dealt with the issues involved in the general convention. At first sight I thought to discover something that would help to reduce the upkeep of automobiles, a subject in which the country at large is greatly interested, but as I read I saw that my hopes were vain. I, and not automobiles, was the subject of the learned discourse, if such it might be called. The disappointment turned out to my profit, for I found myself classed with Napoleon, the Pope, "the bishops of other communions, statesmen, scholars, scientists, and philosophers,"—a fact which made the criticism delightful to me; for after weary years of anxious waiting and hope deferred, I found one appreciative reader whose vast learning and unbridled vocabulary enabled him to put me in my proper class.

I have suspected that there was something wrong with me, but I could never find out what it was. The greatest physicians of the land have been baffled by my symptoms. The crowned heads of Europe have heard my sad complaints, and retired to weep. The case seemed hopeless. But I have "autohypnosis." Those needing any will apply to me in person only. As it is a disease confined to the great and immortal, such as myself, Napoleon, the Pope, and the wisest of all time, philosophers, etc., those of the plebian class need not apply. Like radium, the supply is certain to give out in view of the demand which the information of this article will create. I can understand now why I have always been an admirer of Napoleon, and the learned classes generally. It is because we have so much in common. Birds of a feather, etc. When the Pope hears of this he will invite me in to take tea. What a time we would have in comparing notes on our common infirmity, the infirmity which denotes true greatness. The thrills which I have felt running up and down my spine in other days, and which I attributed to nervousness, causing me and my physicians and the crowned heads grave apprehension, I now know to be the stirrings of greatness, such as the noble and the ambitious alone can feel, but which I can never well express, nor can I well conceal.

I feared for a time that my complaint was ecclesiasticism, but now I fear no more. The trouble has been diagnosed, and I have to hold myself down to keep from being translated, so great is my joy. If the trouble with the great of the earth is "autohypnosis," let us hope that we all may be afflicted. If I couldn't get it, I wouldn't be peeved at those who have been more successful in their quest, and act as if I had greenappleitis. Let's keep smiling in the midst of misfortune. We all can't be great. Napoleon and I and a few others are in a class by ourselves. Little did he dream of the fame that would be thrust upon him by succeeding generations in being admitted to the society of the Pope, of the bishops of other communions, of philosophers, statesmen, etc., to say nothing of one other luminary whom modesty forbids me to name.

I shall endeavor to maintain a becoming humility under the circumstances, knowing that many more dangers beset me today than last week. The higher we rise the more disastrous will be the fall when it comes, and so I say:

"O, why should the spirit of mortal be proud!"

Never have I known a critic in all my wide and critical studies who conferred such honor upon the subject of his displeasure. In addition to the aforementioned honors, I am referred to as a "young brother." Think of that! True the winds of adversity and hard work, to say nothing of early piety, have almost shorn to the scalp those beautiful auburn locks of my earlier years, leaving my expansive brow bleak and bare, while the thatching that remains gives promise of becoming a dull grey ere long. Then I am fast approaching the half century mark. I indulge in these personalities to prove that the sweetness and light which have breathed and shone through all my writings have deceived the very elect into the belief that I have not reached the years, according to the calendar, where all learning ends, and the decay of confidence in one's brethren begins, as well as the now proverbial practice of taking up the trusty weapons of war which are the delight of a crusty old age. If my critic knew my real age, or maybe my friends, I might be set down as a "war horse," or as one of the "old guard." But I have maintained my beautiful spirit, so that even those who are inclined to scoff are constrained to set me down as a "young brother." Right you are in thus referring to me. The velvet is still on the peach, no matter how many days have seen it swept by storms! Never was complaint more worthily, even if unintentionally, bestowed.

Once more my critic possibly errs when he refers to my "limited" vocabulary which I had "exhausted." I felt a little peeved over that, not because it may not be true, but because I had never heard it before. I had always been complimented on my copious and Shakesperian vocabulary. When I make quotations from Will, I have to pause a few moments to untangle my speech from his. People tell me that he and I have the gift of speech perfected to such a degree that the vocabulary of each has to be branded to be identified. My friends have forced the fact upon my attention so constantly that I have almost been compelled to believe that they know what they are talking about.

I have observed that the world of writers is divided into two classes, viz: Those like myself who have grand and noble thoughts which, unfortunately, can be but imperfectly conveyed to the multitudes because of that "limited" vocabulary; and those who have puny and puerile thoughts which, fortunately, for the world are lost in a Dead Sea of words.

In conclusion, let us sing:

"My head is humbled in the dust,
When folks tread on my toes,
And so I'll seek for comfort,
Where the weeping willow grows."

OUR SUBSCRIPTION PRICE

One of the tokens of good-will which the publishers of the Christian Century have many times been prompted to acknowledge is the increasing number of our subscribers who in paying for their paper remit at the full two dollar rate.

It was a sorry day for journalism among the Disciples when, some fifteen years ago, the papers let themselves get started on a cut-rate competition for enlarged circulation. For a time most if not all our papers were sold at one dollar a year. Repenting of this, it was with the greatest difficulty that the rate of $1.50 was re-established. No religious papers in the land are sold at so low a subscription price as the Disciples' newspapers. Other papers range in rate from two dollars to three and a half dollars per year, and some of them no larger and many not so expensive to produce as our Disciple journals.

The Christian Standard has recently raised its subscription price from $1.50 to $2.00. This is a move in the right direction. Limited as is the religious press in the volume and character of its advertising it is not right that its subscribers should desire their religious newspapers to be published below cost.

Some seven years ago The Christian Century established its rate at two dollars and offered a concession of 50c when the subscription was paid in advance. We have consistently billed our subscribers ever since in accordance with this rate and have at last gotten them pretty well trained to expect the $1.50 rate only when their remittance is sent in advance. Even ministers to whom is made a special advance rate of one dollar now expect to pay and do pay two dollars when their subscription is delinquent.

Of late, however, a large number of our subscribers, both ministers and laymen, have been paying the two dollar rate even though they are not delinquent. This is a token of good will which we would like to acknowledge in a personal letter to each one if that were not impracticable, so we take pleasure in making this general acknowledgment through the columns of the paper.

It is not our intention at this time to change our policy of accepting $1.50 when payment is strictly in advance but we dare to cherish the hope that the voluntary attitude of our subscribers will effect the change without any action at all by the publishers.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 19.

DEFEAT THROUGH DRUNKNENESS (TEMPERANCE LESSON.)

Golden Text: Wine and new wine take away the understanding. Hosea 4:11.

I Kings 20:1-21. Memory verses 11, 12. verses 11, 12.

(10) And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, The gods do so unto me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me. (11) And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his armor boast himself as he that putteth it off. (12) And it came to pass, when Ben-hadad heard this message, as he was drinking, he and the kings, in the pavilions, that he said unto his servants, Set yourselves in array. And they set themselves in array against the city.

(13) And, behold, a prophet came near unto Ahab king of Israel, and said, Thus saith Jehovah, Hast thou seen all this great multitude? behold, I will deliver it into thy hand this day; and thou shalt know that I am Jehovah. (14) And Ahab said, By whom? And he said, Thus saith Jehovah, By the young men of the princes of the provinces. Then he said, Who shall begin the battle? And he answered, Thou. (15) Then he mustered the young men of princes of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty-two: and after them he mustered all the people, even all the children of Israel, being seven thousand.

(16) And they went out at noon. But Ben-hadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings, the thirty and two kings that helped him. (17) And the young men of the princes went out first; and Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him, saying, There are men come out from Samaria. And he said, Whether they come out for peace, take them alive; or whether they come for war, take them alive. (19) So these went out of the city, the young men of the princes of the provinces, and the army which followed them. (20) And they slew every one his man; and the Syrians fled, and Israel pursued them: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria escaped on a horse with horsemen. (21) And the king of Israel went out, and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with a great slaughter.

Verse by Verse.

10. Ben-hadad. This was Ben-hadad II, king of Syria. He was the son of the one spoken of in I K. 15:16-22.—The gods do so unto me, and more also. This was a kind of formal oath.—Shall suffice for handfuls. Ben-hadad said if each soldier would take one handful of dirt from Samaria the entire city would be carried away. This boast indicates his vanity, and shows the strength of his army.

11. Let not him that girdeth on his armor, boast. Ahab's reply was very becoming to the king of Israel, and would be becoming to any truly brave man. Read Prov. 27:1.

12. As he was drinking, he and the kings. They were so confident of victory that eBn-hadad was giving a banquet to the princes that were with him.—Pavilions. Or huts, RVm. These were temporary booths.—Set yourselves in array. Or, place the engines, RVm. They were to make ready for an attack. Get the army ready.

13. A prophet. There is nothing more known about him.—Hast thou seen all this great multitude? Read verses 25-30 for the number of the army.—Thou shalt know that I am Jehovah. This is the purpose of the whole narrative. The Syrian army had grown strong, and threatened Ahab. The victory over them was to be so evident that there would be no mistaking the bad of Jehovah in it.

14. By whom? Ahab could see no way of overcoming such great odds. His own forces were small and he did not expect any allies to assist him.—The young men of the princes. These young men were the attendants of the chief officers of the different districts of the kingdom of Israel, and were in Samaria because of Ben-hahad's invasion.

15. Seven thousand. It is quite probable that this number represents the garrison of Samaria. The small number of men in the army was intended to enhance the power of God.

16. At noon. At this time of day the besiegers would be resting because of the heat.—Was drinking himself drunk. To drink at such a time as this is the height of folly. Drinking makes thinking impossible. The drinker is the first man discharged and last man hired. What other king lost in a similar way? See Dan. 5:1.

17. Went out first. They went out of Samaria toward the Syrian camp, leading the way for the rest of the army.—Ben-hadad sent out. He sent out to learn the cause of the sally from the besieged city.

18. Take them alive. In the folly of his drunken insolence Ben-hadad thought they could be taken without fighting.

19. These young men. See on verse 14. It is probable that the young men were to begin the unexpected attack and the rest of the army was to add to the confusion by coming later.

20. They slew every one his man. Not only were Ben-hadad's men unprepared for the attack, but the leaders were drunk. The young men of Israel's army had a definite purpose which they carried out. God helped because Israel was on his side; and so will he help any worthy cause.—The Syrians fled. The sudden attack caused a panic.—On a horse with horsemen. Or, with horse and horsemen, RVm.

21. The king of Israel went out. Ahab's courage seems to have been stirred at the sight of victory, and he went out to make it as great as possible. There are hosts of people today who want a part in the victory, but who do not want to do any of the fighting.

The Demon of Intemperance

The Lesson in Today's Life.

Intemperance is one of the most powerful enemies of humanity in all the world. It commands all the evil forces in the community. It robs the people of their treasures to fill the coffers of the traffickers in strong drink at the expense of a frugal and temperate community. The welfare of the people is entirely disregarded in this greed for gold.

The home of this arch enemy of humanity is the saloon. Without this recruiting station his army would rapidly vanish. More men join the army of drinkers because of the attractive environment than from a real desire to drink.

Jack London says that the availability of liquor makes men drinkers, and that a normal young fellow does not have a natural appetite for strong drink.

Drinking men agree with London.

So men who make and sell liquor fight to maintain the saloon, but they say as little about it as possible.

These men do not mention the saloon if they can in any way avoid it. It is their purpose to keep the people from thinking about the saloon. In their campaigns they talk about taxes, revenues, personal liberty, and everything else except the saloon, which is the only thing they care anything at all about.

They are driven to this method because they know that the saloon has no real merit, and cannot live in the open.

The people are not going to be deceived much longer, for the light of the better day is on the horizon.

It is nowhere more clearly seen than in the industrial world. Everywhere men in big business are coming to see that results and strong drink do not go hand in hand. They must choose the one or the other, and they have chosen results. One after another, in rapid succession, the great industries and business houses are taking their places on the "water wagon."

The summarized account of a document in the Railroad Trainman dedicated to the "well being of the general public" reads like a prophetic message. It is as follows:

"Alcohol is bad company and unsafe to be with. It throws switches wrong; it reads and sends orders wrong. It receives orders wrong, and calls red signals white. It makes caution orders without effect, and makes slow flags without color. It makes one meeting point another, and wakeful men sleepy. It makes hot boxes cold, and rough journals smooth. It makes widows and orphans, and new made graves."

Science has demonstrated that alcohol is a poison for the soft, plastic material which is the essential constitnent of every one of the minute cells that make up living organisms, whether animal or vegetable.

Large numbers of psychometric experiments under conditions of the greatest accuracy prove that alcohol in small dietetic doses exercises a distinctly paralyzing effect on the working of the brain.

Careful nerve and vitality tests now prove that a single glass of alcoholic liquor very perceptibly reduces vital efficiency.

In a recent test of candidates for a certain government position four-fifths were rejected as being physically unfit through alcoholism and other narcotics.

Col. Maus, of the U. S. army, recently wrote an article appearing in the Medical Record in which he said: "It is the constant, habitual, moderate, 'social' drinking which is the deadly and destructive thing, because it is always at work, lowering the fighting power of the white blood corpuscles, and thus taking away from the race half its power of defense."

There is no question in any observer's mind but that alcohol is a home wrecker, and soul destroyer. The people are coming to see that they are better off without it.

An editor of note said recently. "It would seem just now that about all the world is drifting pretty steadily toward total abstinence."

"When this sentiment is full grown it will register itself in the United States as it did in Kansas in 1881: 'The manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor shall be forever prohibited in these United States of America.'"

Illinois Moves Forward.

By practically a wet and dry vote, the Illinois House has passed the Gregory bill, which prohibits candidates for the legislature from making pre-election pledges. The wets favored the bill. The author of the measure declared that the seven weeks' deadlock over a choice of a speaker was due to pledges made by members who were forced to act against their better judgment.

Disciples Table Talk

Liberty Church Grants the Loan of its Pastor.

The church at Liberty, Mo., has occupied a unique position among its sister congregations in that for two years it has given up a portion of its pastor's time to serve the general convention as secretary. Graham Frank, the pastor, felt that he should not ask his people to do this for the third year and went to the Los Angeles meeting prepared to relinquish the secretaryship. But the convention insisted upon re-electing him and passed a resolution asking the Liberty church to continue its generous attitude toward the general work for another year. Rev. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, the new president of the General Convention, presented this resolution to the congregation at Liberty last week, and a vote by ballot resulted in 94 ayes and 6 noes. While there has been some difference of opinion among some of the members of the congregation as to the wisdom of Mr. Frank's serving longer in this work, there is unanimous sympathy with the purposes and work of the General Convention. The entire brotherhood which has already expressed its appreciation of Mr. Frank's services in many ways, will feel that the Liberty church has put it under very positive obligation for its willingness to make so substantial a contribution to the welfare of the general cause.

Dr. Medbury Returns to Great Ministry After Summer of Chautauqua Work.

Dr. Charles S. Medbury, of University church, Des Moines, Ia., spent nearly two summer months on the Chautauqua platform. He returned to his pulpit Aug. 29, and was welcomed by a large and enthusiastic congregation. The interior of the church building has been redecorated in his absence and a pipe organ is being installed. The auditorium of this church is the largest in Iowa. The congregation that assembles there twice on Sunday to hear Dr. Medbury is the largest in the state and with but two or three exceptions is the largest Protestant church congregation regularly gathered anywhere in America. Dr. Medbury is maintaining the affection and loyalty of his people in a remarkable way and is himself growing with them in vision and strength.

J. A. Barnett to Hold Two Special Evangelistic Meetings.

James A. Barnett, pastor at Moline, Ill., has received a number of calls for evangelistic meetings this fall. By shortening his August vacation Mr. Barnett has arranged a leave of absence with his church to get away for two meetings. On Aug. 30 he began with the Antioch church in Vermilion County, Ill., assisted by C. H. Altheide, Lost Spring, Wyo., as leader of song. Following this meeting he will begin with the Eminence church near Atlanta, Ill., Sept. 20. About Nov. 1, he will begin a meeting with his home church assisted by Wm. Leigh, singing evangelist of Akron, O. On Aug. 15, the men's class took charge of the Sunday evening service rendering a program that attracted a large attendance and proved most helpful. Three of the organized classes will render special programs on as many Sunday evenings during the pastor's absence.

Pennsylvania East and West to Hold Joint Convention at Altoona.

Altoona, Pa., W. Graham Walker, pastor, will entertain the joint convention of the Eastern and Western Pennsylvania Missionary Societies, Sept. 13-16. A very attractive program containing the names of J. R. Ewers, Wallace Tharp, T. E. Winter, Irving Chenoweth, W. W. Sniff, S. W. Traum, and many other equally well-known leaders of Pennsylvania Discipledom, as well as Dr. Mary Longdon, R. A. Doan, Alan B. Philputt, Robert M. Hopkins and F. W. Burnham from outside the state.

Good Work at Lawrence, Kansas, During Mr. McFarland's Pastorate.

The resignation of E. T. McFarland from the pastorate of First church, Lawrence, Kans., is announced. Mr. McFarland spent three years there, going from Rock Island, Ill. During his term of leadership the Lawrence church has doubled its membership which is now more than 800, paid a substantial part of the debt on the building, and provided for the remainder. In the same period the enrollment in the Sunday-school has risen from about 250 to more than 1,000. The basement under the entire auditorium has been finished at a cost of nearly $1,500 and the cost has been provided for. Mr. McFarland's successor has not been selected.

The Idealism of Religion is Practical, Says Evanston Pastor.

Orvis F. Jordan, pastor at Evanston, Ill., insisted in a recent sermon that the idealistic side of religion is in truth its practical side: He said: "Many people have been treating religion as a luxury instead of a necessity. They have talked about finishing their education, or of 'making their pile,' after which they would give some consideration to the question of the larger relations of life. Can it be that the church herself has so interpreted religion as to make it possible for men to treat the subject in that way? The word 'practical' is sometimes used in a narrow and visionless way. A practical religion will fill our homes with joy and peace. It will provide the leaders of our political life with ideals. It will make the industrial leaders humane and their men loyal. It will give men motives for right living and courage for peaceful dying. Such a religion will not fail in winning the respect of all men."

Austin Hunter Utters Optimistic Message.

Preaching at Jackson Blvd. church, Chicago, Austin Hunter, the pastor, said on his first Sunday after vacation: "Jesus was not born for defeat, but was born a King. There is a fine optimism in the statement of Paul that should hearten all souls. Nothing can possibly stand in the way of his final victory. When Pilate asked him if he was a King he replied, 'Thou sayest it, for to this end was I born.' There are men who are born to win, who have in them the elements of success. Nothing can keep them down. In spite of his unofficial character, of the fiercest criticisms of his life and words, of the dark periods of church history when it looked like the end of Christianity was near, in spite of the pessimistic philosophy of those who say the world is growing worse, in spite of the half-hearted support of multitudes who bear his name, still he must reign and he is reigning increasingly in the hearts of men. God pity those pessimistic little souls who think the world is rapidly going to the bad."

Automobiles Harm Church, Says Columbus Pastor.

W. H. Book, pastor of Tabernacle church, Columbus, Ind., made the statement to his Bible class, that automobiles are doing more harm to the churches and Sunday-schools than any other single influence. "Sour grapes," said one of the members of the class. "It's not so," the minister declared. Then he said he would not have an automobile if it was given him. He says people who own automobiles start out early Sunday morning and spend the time riding that formerly was spent in worship. He cited the case of a minister he knew who bought an automobile, declared he would not use it on Sunday, and then got the fever so badly he cut his sermons short in order to get to the wheel of his car.

A Religion of Service for Practical Life.

T. F. Paris, speaking at Capitol Hill Church, Des Moines, Ia., said on a recent Sunday: "The Christian religion is the religion that reveals the life of God in the hearts of men. It is the religion that filters through all the sorrows and threads itself through all the problems of life. It is the religion that translates itself into human conduct, that issues in service, that makes brotherhood the common denominator of the human race, and fits the soul for the home that awaits it. Christianty is the religion the world needs today."

Ft. Wayne Pastor Run Down by Jitney Bus.

E. H. Clifford, pastor East Creighton Ave. church, Ft. Wayne, Ind., was struck by a jitney bus on the streets of his city two weeks since and badly hurt. The accident occurred at 8 o'clock in the evening, both Mr. Clifford and the chauffeur being blinded by a heavy rain that was falling. A deep gash above the right eye, a lacerated face and a twisted foot make up the list of his injuries. He is making a good recovery.

Andrew Scott Accepts Call to First Church, Davenport.

A unanimous invitation from the congregation of First church, Davenport, Ia., to Andrew Scott, of Hoopeston, Ill., has been responded to favorably by him, and the new pastorate will be entered upon in a few weeks. The Davenport church has suffered considerable commotion in the past several months and it will be gratifying news to the brotherhood to learn that a man so well fitted for the peculiar task awaiting him has been called, and unanimously called.

Andrew Scott was born at Melrose, Scotland, where the Melrose abbey, famous in history, stands in magnificent ruins. He was educated in the public schools of Ontario, near London, Canada, and at Hiram college, Ohio. He has served as pastor at Niagara Falls, N. Y., and at Saginaw, Mich., for five years, at Danville, Ill., for seven years, and is closing the fourth year of his pastorate at Hoopeston, Ill. In all these fields he has been successful in building up his church. He has raised and paid four church mortgages during his ministry. He has not missed a service for 25 years.

Suit to Break Will Giving Large Sum to First Church, St. Louis, Fails.

First church, St. Louis, John L. Brandt, pastor, was left a bequest of $70,000 by Randall R. Gordon, a wealthy farmer of Pana, Ill., some two years ago. The will was contested by a man claiming to be the son, legitimate, though not acknowledged, of the church's benefactor. His claim was denied in the Illinois court which had jurisdiction over $40,000 of the bequest and it is expected likewise to be denied by the St. Louis court which had jurisdiction over the remaining $30,000. Proceeding on the assumption that the bequest was valid, First church purchased a beautiful property at Euclid and Delmar boulevard. The long delay in the court process has embarrassed the church financially and had it not been that the pastor, Mr. Brandt, advanced $10,000 of his own funds the property would have been lost. It is now expected the congregation will move into its new home Sept. 5. The edifice was formerly a Baptist house of worship.

Story of Forty Years of Woman's Missionary Society Told in New Book.

Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison is the author of a neat little volume of 160 pages outlining the history of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. The book is very readable. It traces the development of this great enterprise of woman's organization from the original impulse given by Mrs. C. N. Pearre in 1874 to the far stretching influences and complex activities of the present body of over 87,000 women. The first year of the society's life they raised $430.

Steadily the income has increased until the annual gifts amount to $414,000. The book is an enshrinement of the noble personalities that have figured in these forty years of history—the office-bearers of the organization and the missionaries on foreign and home fields. Probably it is intended to serve as a manual for study purposes in the local auxiliaries. No indicaton of this purpose is given in the book, but it would manifestly lend itself to such use admirably.

Military Preparedness Urged by Dr. Jenkins as a Means of Peace.

Preaching from the text, "Be ye also ready," Burris A. Jenkins, of Kansas City, told his Linwood Boulevard church that it was the duty of this nation to be prepared "that, conditions being what they are, we should be prepared to resist aggression from any direction. It is apparent the overwhelming majority of American citizens are in favor of preparedness. We should make military preparation for the sake of peace. The fact of being prepared is a resistance against aggression."

BRIEFER ITEMS.

—Freeport, Ill., church, after a long and difficult struggle to secure a property has been able to raise the amount necessary and with the assistance of the Church Extension Board will proceed to remodel a building recently purchased. The resignation of the pastor, J. H. Clark, leaves the congregation leaderless at a critical time, but they hope to call a pastor soon.

—Roy Rutherford of Elizabethtown, Ky., who was called to the pastorate of First church, Paducah, Ky., declined, and has accepted instead a call to the church at Russellville.

—On his way to Pentwater, Mich., for his holiday, George A. Campbell, of Hannibal, Mo., spent a Sunday with his former congregation at Austin, Chicago, preaching morning and evening. Mr. Campbell organized the Austin church and was its pastor for nearly fifteen years.

—Metropolitan church, Chicago, was the scene of a popular meeting on a recent Sunday evening to memorialize the victims of the Eastland disaster. Lloyd H. Miller, the pastor, spoke, as did also the Coroner, Peter Hoffman.

—Roger T. Nooe, pastor at Frankfort, Ky., who suffered a serious accident to his foot several weeks ago when the buggy in which he was riding overturned, has found it necessary to return to the hospital.

—John R. Golden, Illinois state secretary, preached on a recent Sunday at Memorial church, Chicago, supplying for Dr. Willett. The congregation speaks in the highest praise of his practical and encouraging message.

—Dr. Royal J. Dye spoke in Monrovia, Cal., church Aug. 8, and the church became a living link in the Foreign Society, raising $660 for that purpose. Several young people volunteered for the missionary field. Clark Marsh is pastor.

—Chester B. Grubb, who has been supplying the pulpit for South Side Church, Kokomo, Ind., since graduating from Eureka in June, was ordained Aug. 15, by David H. Shields and the elders of Main St. church. Mr. Grubb enters Yale this autumn.

—C. R. Piety who ministers at Greenville, Ill., while on his vacation preached on Aug. 8, at his Hoosier boyhood home, Graysville, Ind., and on Aug. 15 at Tamalco, Ill.

—The corner stone of the new house of worship for First church, Galesburg, Ill., was laid Aug. 22, H. A. Denton, the pastor officiating. The house will cost $75,000.

—Wisconsin state convention meets Sept. 6-9, at Janesville, C. W. Cummings is the pastor.

—Kentucky state convention meets at Madisonville, Sept. 20-23. S. S. Jones is pastor at Madisonville.

—President-emeritus E. V. Zollars, of Phillips University, Okla., is now living at Warren, O. He has recently been quite ill but is recovering sufficiently to attend church services.

—Kansas state convention is to meet at Lawrence, Oct. 4-7.

—The Men and Millions Movement will begin work in the state of Missouri in the early part of September.

—F. B. Sapp, state secretary of the North Dakota churches, spent his vacation in the mountains of West Virginia, resting, fishing and visiting the old home folks.

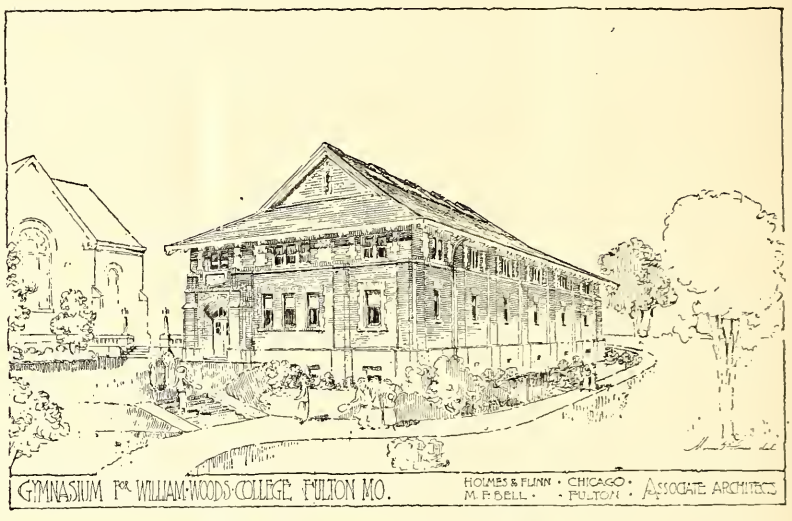
—The School of Methods at Bethany Assembly in Indiana, closed Aug. 25. There were nearly 50 graduates.

—The new church edifice recently dedicated by South End church, Houston, Tex., W. S. Lockhart, pastor, was damaged during the recent big storm in the Gulf country. Repairs will be made at once.

—W. E. M. Hackleman was elected president of Bethany Assembly for next year. The assembly suffered materially from the unpropitious weather this season.

—Ground has been broken for a new $30,000 edifice for Second Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

—K. F. Nance of Hutchinson, Kans., after attending the General Convention at Los



The new gymnasium for William Woods College, Fulton, Mo., erected by Dr. William Woods at a cost of $30,000. The building is made up of pressed brick, the inside walls being lined with white glazed brick. It is complete in every way, containing swimming pool, 16x60 feet, which is made of ceramic tile. Dr. Woods has invested more than $200,000 in this institution.

Some Figures That are Anything But Dry

By John H. Booth, Associate Secretary.

Are figures dry? Not when they tell the story of a live subject. I challenge any person who loves the Kingdom of God and wishes to see it permanently built and its borders continuously extended, to read the following Church Extension facts and figures and not be interested in taking the Church Extension Offering in September.

Original Investment.

The following study is based upon 26 years of operation to October 1, 1914, during which time the board helped to build 1,717 churches throughout the United States and Canada. To do this the brotherhood gave to the Church Extension Fund to be loaned, $1,115,475 as an original investment. By the wise and wonderful plan of the board of "Running the mill with the water that has passed," this original investment has done the work of $2,700,377 and has also encouraged the congregations to raise on the local fields nearly $6,000,000 to be given to the Kingdom of God and put in permanent form for future service. Marvelous dividends are those which are being paid to the Brotherhood's work on its original investment, but ths is only half the story. The other half and the better half of the story is what these 1,717 Church Extension Churches have done for World Wide Missions.

Church Extension Churches Loyal to Missions.

During these 26 years while building their homes at a cost of nearly $9,000,000 returning their loans aggregating twice the sum of the Brotherhood's Church Extension Fund, they have given an estimated amount of $1,095,000 to missions and benevolences or a sum nearly equal to the Brotherhood's original investment.

Last Year's Record.

These churches gave last year to missions and benevolences last year, while 24 per cent $82 each. Out of 1,717 churches helped by the board, 1,563 gave to missions and benevolences last year or 91 per cent. Out of the other 6,807 churches of the Brotherhood, 5,221 gave to missions or 76 per cent: that is, only 91 per cent of the Church Extension Churches failed to give to missions and benevolences last year, while 24 per cent of all others failed. This count, let it be understood, does not include our anti-missionary or non-progressive churches. This record goes to show that a church assisted by the Board of Church Extension becomes at once, and is always thereafter, a supporter of missions.

Lost Opportunties.

During the past nine years, 1,625 appeals for loans have gone unanswered. If the board had had sufficient money to grant loans to these churches and if these churches had prospered on an average as well as the ones the board has helped, they would have given up to the present time over $600,000 to missions and benevolences and would be giving this year $133,250 for the work of World Wide Missions, aside from what all these churches would be doing in the 1,625 local fields. But these are past opportunities, a majority of which will never return to us. Now what of 129 churches at the present time are appealing for loans with which to build. Wouldn't it be a wise policy to assist these congregations into good homes at once, not only for their own sakes but for the sake of World Wide Missions. These loans aggregate about $200,000. Of this amount $66,000 can be called for in thirty days. To meet this present demand the board has about $50,000 in sight, leaving a balance of $16,000 which we hope our churches will contribute in the September offering.

The Present

Angeles and the expositions on the coast was taken ill with ptomaine poisoning at Calgary, Can. He has recovered and is just returning to his church work.

—First church, Beaumont, Tex., suffered considerable damage to its building in the recent storm. The pastor, H. R. Ford, was instrumental in having it put in condition to be used the following Sunday.

—The corner-stone of a new $20,000 church edifice was laid at Thorntown, Ind., Aug. 22. O. E. Kelly, of Terre Haute, and L. C. Howe, of Noblesville, made addresses. R. E. Calithan is the pastor.

—Wabash County, Ill., Disciples had an annual basket meeting at Allendale, Aug. 29. Lee Tinsley and W. W. Weeden made addresses.

—A new house of worship for the church at Albuquerque, N. M., will be dedicated next Sunday, Sept. 5.

—E. M. Barney, of Indianapolis, is preaching for several Sundays at First church, Anderson, Ind., until the coming of the new pastor, John Underwood, of Pittsburgh, who will take up his new duties Sept. 19.

—Prof. W. C. Morro, of Butler College, occupied the pulpit of First Congregational church, Indianapolis, for a month during the summer.

—Dr. H. L. Willett completed a two months' Chautauqua season in the larger cities of Ohio, West Virginia and western Pennsylvania last week and is spending a vacation period with his family at Pentwater, Mich.

Birds Eye View of Disciples Colleges

The following is a brief summary of the annual report of the Acting Secretary of the Board of Education of the Disciples of Christ made at the Los Angeles Convention. Absolute accuracy is not claimed for every item submitted, since some of the reports made to me by the colleges were incomplete, requiring the use of approximation in a few instances.

The Board of Education consists of the following members:

President Hill M. Bell, Drake University.
President Miner Lee Bates, Hiram College.
President Thos. C. Howe, Butler College.
President T. E. Cramblett, Bethany College.
President F. D. Kershner, Texas Christian University.
President E. V. Zollars, Phillips University.
President H. C. Pritchard, Eureka College.
President R. H. Crossfield, Transylvania and College of the Bible.
Chancellor Wm. Oeschger, Cotner University.
President Earle M. Todd, Christian University.
Dean Herbert L. Willett, Disciples Divinity House.
President Joseph A. Serena, Keuka College.
The President, Virginia Christian College.
President Jesse C. Caldwell, Atlantic Christian College.
President H. B. Abernethy, Southern Christian College.
Dean G. D. Edwards, Missouri Bible College.
The President, William Woods College.
President Luella St. Clair-Moss, Christian College.
Dean P. H. Welshimer, Phillips Bible Institute.
President I. N. McCash, Spokane University.
President C. T. Carlton, Carr-Carlton College.
President E. C. Sanderson, Eugene Bible University.
Dean W. J. Lhamon, Drury College.
President F. J. Yokley, Missouri Christian College.
Dean J. C. Todd, Bloomington Bible Chair.
President Josephus Hopwood, Milligan College.
President F. G. Jones, Midland College.
President Ella Johnson, Kentucky Female Orphan School.

Upon analysis the institutions represented by the members of the Board fall very naturally into the following groups:

I—Those doing no work below college grade—Hiram, Butler, Bible College of Missouri, Drake University, Disciples Divinity House of Chicago University, Transylvania and the College of the Bible.

II—Those doing both college and high school work—Eureka, Milligan, Cotner, Bethany, Texas Christian University, Keuka, Virginia Christian College, Christian University, Phillips University, Spokane University, Atlantic Christian College, and Eugene Bible University.

III—Junior colleges—Christian College, Southern Christian College, Midland College, William Woods College, and Hamilton College (the Junior College of Transylvania).

IV—Academies—Missouri Christian College, Carr-Carlton College, and Kentucky Female Orphan School.

V—Bible Chairs. (Not supported and and controlled by a missionary society.)—Bloomington Bible Chair and the Bible School of Drury College.

VI—Unclassified—Phillips Bible Institute.

These twenty-eight institutions employ 259 professors, twenty-five assistant professors, and 243 instructors.

They enrolled last session 5,506 students. Of this number, 2,669 were in the college, 1,337 in profession schools, and 1,526 in the academy. The college students were grouped as follows: Freshmen, 998; Sophomores, 439; Juniors, 324; Seniors, 303; Graduates, 121; Special and Unclassified, 495. Four hundred and thirty-four degrees were conferred.

These institutions have a combined productive endowment of $3,563,909, an unproductive endowment of $605,831; total endowment $4,169,740. Their buildings and equipment are valued at $4,811,671, and other resources $200,112; total resources $9,181,523.

They received from student fees last year $412,600, from endowment $199,401, from other sources $167,066, making a total income of $779,067.

They expended for teaching $403.361, for administration $218,395, and for buildings, equipment, etc., $344,602. The combined deficit of these institutions for the year was $91,131, and their total indebtedness $420,888. They received from Education Day $12,337.

The report shows that these institutions enrolled 971 ministerial students, and 166 students preparing for home and foreign fields.

An imperative need of our colleges is more adequate financial support from the churches for current expense and larger gifts from individuals for endowment. The churches are asked to raise on Education Day, the third Sunday in January, or through the budget, $75,000 for Christian education. Up to the present time only about one-sixth of this sum has been realized. A total endowment of $4,169,740 is by no means sufficient. This amount should be increased to ten million dollars in the near future.

By and large, the past year has been most satisfactory and encouraging, and with the churches aroused to the primary importance of a leadership prepared in our own institutions, and with the individual conscience quickened by a deep sense of the opportunities for service through such leadership, it is confidently believed that there will be a great increase in the student body and a much more adequate financial support given our colleges in the near future.

R. H. Crossfield,
Acting General Secretary Board of Education.
Lexington, Ky.

The Slump in Booze.

From Collier's Weekly.

According to the Wall Street Journal, of Kentucky in January was 1,980,000 gallons against 6,102,452 gallons in 1914; production in Pennsylvania was 1,073,808 gallons in January against 1,552,445 a year ago, and in Maryland, 506,919 gallons against 918,582 last year. Whisky bottled in bond, January, was 691,508 gallons, compared with 928,187 in January of 1914.

The decrease in Kentucky's production of whisky amounts to 66⅔ per cent; in Pennsylvania, it is about 33 per cent; in Maryland, more than 40 per cent. These figures and others for February, March and other months available indicate that the distillers, who can look ahead like anyone else, see that within a few years the commercial demand for whisky will fall off at an unprecedented speed. The distillers are buying newspaper space in more than one city to argue that prohibition doesn't prohibit, that more liquor than ever is being drunk in this country; but this is a bluff. They are meanwhile curtailing production and quietly discontinuing their own funeral. Better times are ahead for these United States.

FOREIGN MISSION NOTES.

Dr. George W. Brown, of Jubbulpore, India, writes that the commencement of the Bible College there was held on May 10th. Three men completed the four years' course and received diplomas. One of these men was sent to Damoh, one to Mandaha, and one remained at Jubbulpore. The wives of these men have also had special training. Two of them will do Bible women's work and one will teach school.

M. B. Madden reports nine baptisms in and around Osaka, Japan, in the month of May. He writes that the opportunities in Osaka are wonderful. After a baptismal service at one of the out-stations, the Lord's Supper was observed. This is the first time the ordinance was ever observed in that town of 5,000 people.

Bruce L. Kershner, of Manila, P. I., writes: "This has been a banner month in Manila for our work. All the congregations have good reports. At Central Church the attendance at the preaching service was above the average and on the third Sunday in the month the entire enrollment in the Sunday school was present at the service.

An Appeal from the Los Angeles Convention to

Churches of Christ of North America

August 30, 1915

Dear Brethren:—We have just closed at Los Angeles one of the most harmonious and successful conventions in our history; but its sessions were saddened by the apparent failure of the churches adaquately to support our organized work. In its closing hours the Convention, unwilling to permit the continuance of a policy of retrenchment, adopted the following:—

"Whereas This Convention has heard with profound regret and humiliation the reports of deficits and enforced retrenchments on the part of our several missionary, benevolent and educational agencies:

Therefore Be it resolved; that, with prayer and supplication, we advise the several boards of the societies to unite in an urgent appeal to the churches to raise their full apportionments, and if possible to make a special offering to meet this great emergency; and be it further

Resolved, that the churches everywhere be requested to observe the week beginning Lord's Day, September 12th, as a season of daily prayer and intercession on behalf of this appeal; and be it further

Resolved, that we appeal to our entire religious press, to all our State, Provincial, District, County and City Mission Boards, to our educational institutions, and to our evangelists, pastors, and secretaries to join in furthering this appeal."

The joint apportionment of your church at_____is

Total Church Budget	Foreign Christian Missionary Society	American Missions	State Missions	Christian Woman's Board of Missions	National Benevolent Association	Board of Church Extension	Board of Ministerial Relief	Commission on Christian Union	American Temperance Board	Board of Educatiou
$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$

By so much as any church falls short of its apportionment it defeats the ends of this appeal. It is to be hoped that, in view of the urgency of the need, many churches will greatly exceed their apportionments.

In case your offerings exceed your apportionments it is recommended that the division of such funds be made upon the percentage basis of the above apportionment.

We beg you to remember that the books close September 30th, and that this appeal demands immediate action. Will you please read this to the official boatd and the congregation of your church and ask them to take prayerful action upon it.

Yours in His name,

Secretary American Christian Missionary Society.

Secretary Board Ministerial Relief.

Secretary Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Volume XXXII SEPTEMBER 9, 1915 Number 36

A Union Worth Talking About

Congregationalism's leading western newspaper, The Advance, reproduces a goodly portion of an article that recently appeared in The Christian Century from the pen of Rev. Frank E. Boren, pastor of a union church in Hydesville, Cal., in which Mr. Boren argues for a union of Disciples and Congregationalists. He asserted that those Disciples who do really care about Christian unity and who do really take their own plea for its practice seriously would find a line of less resistance in the direction of the Congregational group of churches rather than in any other direction.

The Advance takes Mr. Boren seriously and responds with hearty good will to his suggestion and proposes, if the Disciples are in earnest about it, to open its columns for a discussion of the case from both Congregational and Disciple sides of the house. Commenting on Mr. Boren's article, it says:

> Now this a really sensible word. There was not much use in Congregationalists discussing union with United Brethren, for our polity was too dissimilar. And as for Disciples discussing union with the Episcopalians, that is just a good joke. But Disciples do not practice close communion, and they cannot hold logically or practically to close baptism apart from close communion. And they are Congregational in polity. They are weak where we are strong, and strong where we are weak. A new spirit would have to come into the discussions of some parties in that communion, and we are far from holding that we Congregationalists would have nothing to concede. But when we really get ready to talk about church union, and the Disciples get ready to talk about it, it is sheer waste of time for them to think of union either with Baptists or Episcopalians. If they do not know, we do. Close communion is an absolute bar in the one case, and the differences of polity and ritual and temperament are insurmountable in the other. If the article in The Christian Century really represents the feeling of the Disciples as a whole, The Advance is interested, and is ready to do something to promote that sentiment. This would be a form of church union worth while, and it is one we feel competent to discuss.
> We feel reasonably sure of the position which our good friends the editors of The Christian Century would take with reference to such a discussion. They would say, as we suppose, and properly, that they have no right to put their denomination on record, but that they believe the matter is worth discussing in good faith. But what would the editors of The Standard and The Evangelist, the other two Disciple papers, say about it? If they would say so, too, The Advance, which has no right to commit the Congregational denomination, but which knows fairly well its mind, is ready to open its columns to what might be a very fruitful discussion.
> For this would be church union worth talking about.

Never has there been a more inviting opening not only for a discussion of Christian unity but for action.

Probably no denominational newspaper has ever before held out so cordial a hand to the Disciples of Christ as The Advance now does. The words quoted above are a simple, frank and hopeful utterance, constituting a challenge which the Disciples cannot pass by without laying themselves open to the charge of insincerity in all their talk about Christian unity.

The Advance is not mistaken in its reading of the mind of The Christian Century. We believe with Mr. Boren that there is more hope of getting somewhere in a discussion with Congregationalists than with any other Christian communion.

There is a certain streak of perverseness in all Christian bodies that makes them prefer to discuss Christian unity with those with whom there is only the remotest likelihood of effecting actual union. Such is the Episcopal-Roman Catholic negotiation. Such also is the Disciple-Episcopal courtship which The Advance calls a joke.

We do not agree in calling it a joke—the Disciples are striving to hold a position that makes Christian unity a possibility with any group of Christians that really desires to practice it. But it is clear that some groups are nearer to the position we are striving to attain than others.

The Congregationalists, probably, come more nearly attaining the ideals which Disciples have historically held than any Christian denomination. It is therefore logical that the discussion of the ground of union should begin between them before it begins anywhere else.

If they can unite, their action will open up more remote doors of unity.

If they cannot unite, their discussion will be more likely to reveal the essential difficulties in the way of unity than would a discussion between bodies having less in common.

With Disciples and Episcopalians each side is under inhibition when it comes to dealing with the weaknesses of the other side, because each side is guilty of precisely the same sort of sectarian practice. Disciples hesitate to expose the the essential sectarianism of a closed ministry (the episcopate) because they are conscious of the essential sectarianism of a closed membership (the fellowship of the immersed only). And the Episcopalians cannot freely attack the closed membership practice of the Disciples because they have their own sectarian point to gain for their closed ministry.

Hence the conferences between Disciples and Episcopalians consist in an unbroken series of complimentary remarks from Disciples who admire the venerableness and orderliness of the historic episcopate, and from Episcopalians who admire the historic precedence of immersion and point with affected unction to the fact that the prayer-book mentions immersion first in its rubric for the baptism of babies!

And there you are. It is a plain deadlock—not a contentious and irritating deadlock, but one fraught with all courtesy, and in which there are implicit endless possibilities of further discussion from which neither side hopes to achieve any result save to increase its emotional satisfaction in "working at the problem of unity."

But between Congregationalists and Disciples a discussion would not need, fortunately, to be so ineffectively gentle. Our differences are not so co-ordinate, so analogous, and therefore so well-balanced. We would probably speak in a more natural tone of voice, and deal with each other's sectarianisms in a more robust and virile fashion.

And, after all, that is what the cause of unity stands most in need of.

The Christian Century speaks for itself now, and we believe the leaders of the Disciples, as well as other Disciple papers, will join with us in hoping The Advance will "start something" looking toward a union of these two fellowships or at least a discovery of the essential reason why we may not be one even as our Lord prayed.

Visiting at "Old Aunt Mary's," a Spot Made Famous by Hoosier Poet

BY F. K. KOCH

There is "poetry"—and there is also poetry. That is, there is a good deal of composition being printed in magazines and books today which is called poetry. Then there is another kind of writing which is not only called poetry; it IS poetry. The former brand of composition, which includes much of the so-called "New Poetry" —verse libre, etc.—the people do not like. The other kind of poetry the people do like, for it is of them, the people. The patron saints of this kind of verse are such writers as James Whitcomb Riley and Eugene Field. To the "new poets" and their supporters the work of these poets is "drivel." But, be it said, these "old-fashioned poets" can afford to be deprived of the commendation of a few supposedly intellectual readers, if they can have, as they do have, the sincere friendship of the great common people, whom Lincoln said God must have loved, because he made so many of them! It is with pleasure that we reproduce this brief article concerning Mr. Riley and his poem, "Out to Old Aunt Mary's." The article first appeared in the United Presbyterian.

ALMOST on the verge of the season when "the frost is on the pumpkin and the fodder is in the shock," there comes the annual exodus of country-folk from the broad Indiana farms to Kokomo—to sell and buy for the winter. Many of the farmer-folk as they ramble the streets of the little town, are prone to stop and relate incidents of the Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley. What Longfellow and Whittier were to New England, Bret Harte to the Golden West, and Joel Chandler Harris to the South land, that, between the Alleghanies and the Rockies, people seem to find in Whitcomb Riley. Riley's fame hangs on many things, of course, but country-folk and city-folk, both, seem to base it mostly on his poem, "Old Aunt Mary's."

Where, then, was Old Aunt Mary's? We set out to investigate.

Many, many years ago—though he may not have boasted of the fact—James Whitcomb Riley was a country ad-painter. Country merchants in Indiana, even today, make use of the primitive form of bill board by sending men all along the turnpikes, decorating the fence-rails with, "Buy your shoes at Roosa's," and "your drugs from Gordon's," and so on. So Riley used to "hoof it" at this work.

Then he struck Kokomo. That was his first love. Mr. Kautz, editor of the Daily Tribune, looks proudly at the early columns of his paper, which is still the leading publication of the county, and points out poems, which Riley wrote in those days for the pure love of the thing—"pride of craft," his biographers might call it—and for no more pay than possibly a few complimentary copies. It was in those days that Riley received his real insight into the Indiana type. Until then the callow Indiana youth had hardly set himself to work to gather impressions. Later these impressions were fixed and could not be altered.

With Editor Kautz we sped by auto "Out to Old Aunt Mary's!"

> "Way out in the country, where
> They's but woods's an' pigs an' cows;
> An' orchard, swing, an' churry trees,
> An' churries in 'em. Yes, an' these > Yere red head birds steal all they please
> —An' tetch 'em, if you dare!"

The soft loam 'pike, one of those interminable Indiana highways, went in billows down and up. At one point it bore onto a palisade, where we dismounted, to look down between the tall sycamores, far down to Wild Cat creek, winding at the edge of a vast plain of waving corn. Among the trees the red-headed wood-pecker, that Riley wrote about, was "knocking;" and down the road ripening wild cherries threw visions of winter's cherry-bounce in the air.

Here were the pigs the poet wrote about out in the open field.

Then, as we sped along, the little girl began to recite, as every child in central Indiana does, as soon as the delightful old two-story frame, far from the 'pike came into view:—

> "Wasn't it pleasant, Oh brother, mine,
> In those old days of the lost sun-shine
> Of youth, when the Saturday's chores were through
> And the Sunday wood in the kitchen, too,
> And we went visiting, me and you,
> Out to old Aunt Mary's?

"Aunt Mary," the editor explained, "has been a feature here for who knows how long! She is a dear old lady—and every one, young and old, calls her 'Aunt Mary!' They own that farm and it is as typical a farm of the Hoosier-land as you can find."

We stopped beside the road. Auntie and Uncle came out to meet us, and discussed the weather—in that inimitable Indiana brogue. "An' won't you come in an' have something?" they asked. Meanwhile any Indianian of the third generation ran up the drive to the house:—

> "It all comes back so clear today,
> Though I am bald as you are gray
> Out by the barn-lot and down the lane
> We patter along, in the dust again,
> As light as the tips of the drops of the rain,
> Out to old Aunt Mary's.

No, we couldn't tarry; we had more to see. The auto went the way of the dust. We, too, crossed the pasture, where now the iron-weed was bursting with purple and the wild carrot ran riot. Then, "through the wood," a curious grove of walnut trees, densely set and each trunk as clearly cut as a pole to the top.

We could see, just beside the road, where "the old grey snag of the poplar stood," and where "the hammering red-heads hopped awry," for the woodpeckers were out perforce. A quail piped at us and once a squirrel darted across the auto's path.

Over yonder a farmer, a picturesque Dunker, had left a dead chicken in the road, and high above it.

"The buzzard raised in the clearing sky,
And lolled and circled as we went by,
Out to old Aunt Mary's

Meanwhile our friends talked Riley. James Whitcomb Riley, they said, was a prankster in his Kokomo days. Folk here in mid-Indiana recall the sensation he caused, years ago, by publishing a "lost poem of Poe's," and then, when the reviews had discussed it and the critics had praised it, Mr. Riley politely told them it had been penned down here, by "their's very truly," in the land of old Aunt Mary!

We swerved into another country turnpike.

Then in the dust of the road again
The teams we met and the country men."

bowed to the editor, for out here in Indiana "literature" is respected.

"And the long highway, with the sun-shine spread
As thick as butter on country bread,
Our cares behind and our hearts ahead—
Out to old Aunt Mary's.

"Over that way lies Greenfield, Riley's home," Kautz said. "In the old house the Montgomery's, editors of the town paper, live, and Mrs. Montgomery relates how, again and again, Riley comes down to the old house and asks just to be let alone.

"We just let him be," she says, "and he putters about, and then, by and by, he goes." With Riley the sentiment is expressed in the lines:—

"Why, I see her now, in the open door,
Where the gourds grew up the sides and o'er
The clap-board roof. And her face—Ah, me—
Wasn't it good for a boy to see!
And wasn't it good for a boy to be,
Out to old Aunt Mary's?

An old log-cabin stood at the 'round where we wound back to Kokomo. A whole crowd of merry boys and girls were playing ring-round-rosy in the grass beneath the poplars. One was a little shaver, just the kind who might advise:—

"You better not fool with a bumble-bee—
If you don't think they can sting you'll see!
They're lazy to look at, an' go
Buzzing and hummin' around so slow."

Riley's land is changing a trifle. Kokomo, for example, has grown t oa town of 18,000. Autos are speeding down the streets, and in the town they make rubber tires and plate-glass, and there's a huge brass works. But the country remains that of Riley's poems. Miles and miles of open rolling land, diversified, attractive, the kind of country that holds a lure and makes man yearn for an outing and a chance to get back to "old Aunt Mary's!"

LEARN TO RIDE THE HORSE THAT THREW YOU

The latest address which the late Silvester Horne gave was to six hundred school boys and girls. His words upon that occasion have not been preserved, but we have the text upon which he spoke: "Learn to ride the horse that threw you." To look at an accomplished horseman trotting gracefully along, riding would seem one of the easiest and most pleasant of pastimes. But it is no easy matter to ride a horse, especially some horses, as those who have tried know very well. An inexperienced rider on an inexperienced horse is almost certain to have a fall. Riding a horse is much like riding a bicycle, and where is the bicycle rider who has never taken a tumble?

There is no serious disgrace in being thrown, but it evidences much weakness if we are continually being thrown. The horseback rider must learn how to sit fast, how to control himself and his horse. The bicycle rider must master his muscles, his nerves, and his machine. We may make mistakes, but we must guard against making the same mistake over and over again. It is only by persistent effort that we learn to ride the horse that threw us.

There is that furious steed, difficult to manage, which threw us, perhaps, yesterday—temper. Not a bad horse, but we must learn to ride him. Keen sensibilities, deep feelings, capacity for swift action, strong indignation against wrongdoing are all elements of strength; and if properly reined and skillfully ridden may be of immense service to the world in the work and welfare of life.

Our appetites may throw us, our selfishness may tumble us to the ground. Many who can ride well on horses and bicycles are unable to manage themselves. Determination and perseverance, and also divine help, are essential if we would master ourselves.—Onward.

BELIEVING GOD DAY BY DAY

By George Muller

Just in the proportion in which we believe that God will do just what He said, is our faith strong or weak. Faith has nothing to do with feelings or with impressions, with improbabilities or with outward appearances. If we desire to couple them with faith, then we are no longer resting on the Word of God, because faith needs nothing of the kind. Faith rests on the naked Word of God. When we take Him at His word, the heart is at peace.

God delights to exercise our faith, first for blessing in our own souls, then for blessing in the Church at large, and also for those without. But this exercise we shrink from instead of welcoming. When trials come, we should say, "My Heavenly Father puts this cup of trial into my hands, that I may have something sweet afterwards." Trial is the food of faith. Oh, let us leave ourselves in the hands of our Heavenly Father.

But trials and diffiiculties are not the only means by which faith is exercised, and thereby increased. There is the reading of the Scriptures, that we may by them acquaint ourselves with God as He has revealed Himself in His Word. And what shall we find? That He not only is God Almighty and a righteous God, but we shall find how gracious He is, how gentle, how kind, how beautiful He is—in a word, what a lovely being God is.

Are you able to say from the acquaintance you have made with God that He is a lovely Being? If not, let me affectionately entreat you to ask God to bring you to this, that you may admire His gentleness and His kindness, that you may be able to say how good He is, and what a delight it is to the heart of God to do good to His children.

Now, the nearer we come to this in our inmost souls, the more ready are we to leave ourselves in His hands, satisfied with all His dealings with us. And when trial comes, we shall say, "I will wait and see what good God will do to me by it, assured He will do it." Thus we shall bear an honorable testimony before the world, and strengthen the hands of others.

DO IT NOW.

"The time to do a kindness,
To speak a word of cheer
To ease another's burden,
To drive away a tear,
To soften down a sorrow
That clouds a sister's brow,
Is not, oh friend, tomorrow,
But now, now, now."

The Kaiser Talks to His Army

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT *

Tremendous Spectacle Before Smoking Ruins of Russia's Fallen Stronghold.

LAST autumn the writer had the good fortune to be able to give a detailed picture of the German emperor at church with his troops. Luck stays with me, and I can now give you a description of the emperor on the battlefield.

At church he was grave, intent, motionless. On the victorious field of Novo Georgievsk he was buoyant, active, jovial, and simple. He stood leaning slightly on an old fashioned, curved handled cane of bright yellow wood (a cane that may have cost as much as $1), and he spoke to the soldiers with the simple heartiness of a brother in arms.

In the last year I have seen many a bitter sight and many a splendid one, but this afternoon brought the supreme thrill of them all, for it brought to me a view of what is at once the stateliest and most austere of ceremonials—that of the kaiser parade—and the setting for it was enormous in its extent and overwhelming in its pictorial value.

RESPLENDENT STAGE SETTING

Some master of ceremonies with a genius for setting the stage must have selected the location for the ceremonies of this heroic day. The resplendent pageantry of war was unfolded against a background of most frightful desolation.

There was seen the glare from the exploding powder vaults in the ordnance depot of the fortress of Novo Georgievsk and the smoke of the burning villages shimmered and rolled against a sky that was heavy with rain clouds.

The troops that the emperor was to greet and thank were massed on one of the grandest stretches of the great Warsaw plain. For leagues around the ground was treeless and swept in soft undulations toward the dark, distant lines of forest and ravine. A broad highway, along which thousands of Russian prisoners were marching, skirted the scene of the kaiser parade.

A little after 1 o'clock the mouse colored lines came streaming up to the summit of the plain from the woods and formed lines that made miles of long vistas of bayonets and shrouded helmets, and behind them were squadrons of hussars.

WAILING OF BUGLES HEARD.

Throughout the formation the wailing of bugles drifted from forest to forest, from village to village, and from fort to fort. The horses of the uhlans responded to that wailing with ecstatic neighing, and the long, hoarse cries of command blended with the bugle notes.

A silence absolutely churchlike began to the field to the highway and spoke some words there, and instantly the clamor of soldiers who were dragging the captured Russian cannon out of the mire with eight horse teams was stilled.

A silence absolutely churchlike began to envelop the plain, and the only sound was the snapping of the pennants in the summer breeze. The men talked in whispers, not because an imperial ceremony was shaping but because the vastness and beauty of the picture made loquacity an impertinence.

But there were moments in the slow co-ordinating of certain gigantic details of the picture that compelled whispered admiration of even the men who hated themselves for uttering banalities in the face of a big proposition.

NEW FORMATION IS STARTED.

There was a cry of command, then a scuffling of many feet that was hardly more than a soft brushing sound. It rose to a rustle and became a trampling, then a great rumble and a roar.

It made the plain tremble as battalion after battalion swung themselves into new formations and behold! a vast hollow square lined with rank upon rank of gray had in a twinkling been formed.

The swiftness and precision of the movement and the effect created by the acres and acres of bayonets bristling against the sodden sky were staggering. Men whispered more to themselves than to one another and with a pause at every syllable of the words, "Donnerwetter, ist es nicht wundeschoen!"

It was like having one of Adolff Menzel's glorious Frederick the Great pictures touched to life and then stepping into the middle of it.

GRAY LINES BECOME RIGID.

The dark gray lines became rigid. A man in gray stood in the middle of the hollow square. The ground around him was strewn with cartridges, belts, and such like discarded equipment. Before him the rolling smoke of Novo Georgievsk, behind him the afternoon sun showed pale through the west clouds.

To his left rose the parapet of fort No. 16, letter A, of the outer works of Novo Georgievsk fortifications, its bowlike interior strewn with Russian cannon. To his right was fort No. 16, letter B, of this chain of defenses. In front of him was an intermediate fort that was taken by storm the day before yesterday. Its parapet was thickly strewn with bits of rifles the Russians had had time to burn or to break before surrender or death.

The man's spiked helmet was the central point of the mighty picture. The only touch of bright color in it was provided when the wind blew back the scarlet lining of his long gray overcoat. He wore reddish brown gloves. His revolver holster hung from a belt of brown leather.

The man was the German emperor.

Beyond doubt he was this afternoon the happiest man in Europe.

RUSSIANS LOSE LAST FOOTHOLD

Von Beseler, the battering ram of Antwerp and now of Novo Georgievsk, last night swept the Russians from their last foothold in Poland. The victory was of tremendous significance. It meant that now the Vistula was open from flank to flank of the mighty German offensive against Russia.

Beseler's aim had been fulfilled, and he had put the Vistula to work for Germany. No more now of killing horses of German ammunition columns on the vile Polish roads, no more now of the destruction of the rubber tires that were more precious than gold chariot wheels; the Vistula was open.

No man knew better than the emperor what all this means, and last night's army bulletin announced that he was rushing across country to meet and thank the troops.

His face was radiant, and his manner eager as he stood there in the hollow square. I never saw a look of more profound content on any human countenance.

The music of the band that had been playing while the troops were forming round died away. Amid churchlike silence he began to speak. Occasionally he made a thrusting motion into the ground with the yellow cane upon which he leaned in a familiar attitude. (This is done when he wishes to emphasize words.)

He spoke very slowly, in a firm, clear, far carrying voice; every word dropped clean cut from his lips. He made frequent pauses between sentences, and when he paused he looked sometimes to the right, sometimes to the left, his eyes traveling slowly along the ranks, and sometimes he let a gaze rest on the blazing fortress that Napoleon founded 108 years ago.

He spoke so clearly and slowly that, remote as I was from him, I began to catch some of the sentences.

WORDS OF EMPEROR.

"I have hurried here," he said, "to give you the thanks of the fatherland. God has been with us and today you wear the undying oak leaves of victory.

"God being still with us, you will go on to more victories. The thanks of my heart I give you and we all give thanks to the Lord of Hosts.

"My comrades, the fatherland thanks you, and its prayers go up to God for you."

Then there were several sentences of the fact that the enormous works of Novo Georgievsk had been in the main taken by the landstrum. That made him very happy and with his eyes fixed on the blazing citadel of the fortress he paused to dwell on the fact.

Then I caught the words: "Farewell, my troops; farewell comrades."

In response a long crashing roar broke from the line that shaped itself into the words, "Adieu, your majesty."

RESPONSE OF TROOPS.

The roar died away and the far carrying voice of an officer came crackling across the plain in the command:

"Three cheers for the kaiser."

The cheers went surging from battalion to battalion like the throb of artillery and blended grandly into the strains of the kaiser anthem from the massed bands.

All through the anthem the emperor stood at salute, all alone in the mighty hollow square of bayonets, and all the bulwarks of the empire—Hindenburg, Beseler, Falkenhayn, and Mueller—stood at salute, too, and everybody from the humblest Pomeranian grenadier to the general whose breast was blazing with decorations was very still and had to set his jaws hard to keep from letting go.

Like a brother the emperor had spoken and like brethren his troops had received his thoughts. It had all been more a rite than a parade, and the keynote of it was an intimacy so tender and so sacred that finer fibered foreigners present felt almost a sense of shame in looking too sharply on.

AMERICAN LIGHTS CIGAR.

Nevertheless the inevitable brash American was present, and no sooner had the strains of the kaiser anthem died away than one of them lit a long cigar and started puffing. A Roumanian did the same.

"This is not correct, not correct, decidedly not correct," whispered an Argentine correspondent, and a Dutchman added,

"No one does not smoke at the kaiser parade."

The American glared and then dropped his cigar.

The bestowal of honors followed the anthem. The emperor gave iron crosses for fifteen private soldiers into the hands of Hindenburg, and Hindenburg pinned them on the soldiers' breasts. There were honors for certain generals, too, but I was too far away to catch the drift of all that.

After the bestowal, the emperor visited with animation with many officers, devoting much of his time and solicitude to Hindenburg, who towered beside him. Many officers also came to pay respects to Hindenburg, and it seemed to me that they bent lower over his hand than they did over the emperor's, partly, perhaps, because the emperor has a way of shaking hands in a thoroughly upstanding manner that gently but firmly prevents an overobsequious attitude. He is a man.

KAISER'S VOICE STRONG.

The emperor appeared to be in splendid condition. His voice was strong and his bearing that of a much younger man than his grandfather. The officer who followed him with a cry for three cheers had to roar like a bull, yet his words hardly came as clearly to the ear as had the emperor's.

A Spaniard who stood next to me said: "His majesty seems very joyful, but excellenz Hindenburg looks very serious."

Well, at that instant my Spanish colleague, Senor Dominguez, was having a better glimpse of the party than I was, and so I quote him.

When the emperor left the hollow square the yellow imperial standard, bearing an iron cross embroidered in black and the words "Gott mitt uns," was borne close behind him by a soldier.

He crossed the field to the highway, where an open automobile stood, with swinging steps. Beseler walked beside him. The emperor swung himself into the auto, a military servant wrapped a rug around him, and he lit a cigaret, threw himself back in the car, and smoked luxuriously.

He then called Sven Hedin to the side of the car, shook hands with him and chatted with much gusto, laughing long and heartily.

Falkenhayn soon joined the kaiser in the auto, and the car swept down the road amid the cheers of the troops that lined the way for more than a mile.

CHRISTIAN UNION THROUGH HUMAN SERVICE.

A book which leaves a good taste in the mouth of us Disciples is Paul Moore Strayer's "Reconstruction of the Church," which has recently come from the Macmillan Press. It concerns itself with the message and program of the church in face of the present struggle for economic justice, and closes with a stirring appeal for Christian union as the only possible means by which the church may realize its mission in the modern age. "In view of the church's social task our sectarian differences are insignificant. That task is driving us along toward union. We have been hampered and retarded by denominationalism until it is unendurable, and the great throbbing, social passion which is now felt throughout the church not only makes our differences contemptible, but is pointing out the way for us to unite."

The present estrangement of trades-unionists from the church is disastrous both to the cause of labor and of religion. The church cannot live without the spirit of heroism and self-sacrifice which is ever springing up anew in the ranks of toil.. It is this class which furnished the ancient prophets and the first disciples, and from which the reformers of the church have come. On the other hand, labor has won about all it can hope to win without the aid of the religious spirit. There is among many non-religious union men a hopelessness regarding the future of organized labor, while the optimistic are inspired by the belief that the time of co-operation with the distinctively religious forces is at hand. In the words of Keir Hardie: "My friends and comrades, I am often sick at heart with politics and all that pertains thereto. If I were a thirty years' younger man, with the experience I have gained during the past thirty-five years, I would, methinks, abandon house and home and wife and child, if need be, to go forth among the people to proclaim afresh and anew the full message of the gospel of Jesus of Nazareth."

In the conflict between labor and capital the church has generally been content with platitudes. It has pleaded for generosity when the workers have asked for justice, and talked weakly of magnanimity while they were struggling for fundamental human rights. Mr. Strayer believes that the church has the true message of reconciliation for today, which will triumph only by the adoption of a vigorous social program such as he sets about to construct.

The book is timely and inspiring, as the passing of Labor Day brings home to the heart of every forward-looking minister the poignant sense of the estrangement which exists between the church and the masses of those who toil.

HOWARD E. JENSEN.

CHAPTER AND VERSE.

We have all heard him, and we've been sorry for him, and for ourselves, too. I mean the man who inflicts upon the audience chapter and verse for every passage of scripture he quotes, and with an unction that rivals the enthusiasm of the old-time auctioneer. He prides himself upon being able to tell where every passage is found, and the logical consequence is that the location of the passage receives considerably more emphasis than the Word of God itself. It is Acts 2:38, for instance, that is the important fact, more so than the words contained within it; and you may be certain that that particular passage is a part of the sermon.

As the speaker progresses, if movement can be said to be a part of such sermonizing, we begin to wonder when he is going to take up a passage of scripture, in its true historical setting and give us from it the true meat and drink of the Word; but we are disappointed, for he never does. He is so bent upon exploiting his theory, and so determined to enforce every point by proof texts, always making his text fit his proof, that he forgets to give us spiritual food for our souls. The argumentative tone becomes deep and insistent, and we wonder how any can stand before such an onslaught.

He warms to his theme, especially if there be those present whom he hopes to win to his especial way of thinking; and the air of satisfaction as he approaches his climax is wonderful to behold. And as he closes with one grand flourish, we wonder why the walls are able to stand, for certainly they have been bombarded with enough figures to satisfy the most mathematical; and our idea of the Bible, for the moment, is of a vast array of figures and arguments, cold blooded and logical, which hedge humanity about and compel it to think thus-and-so. The figures, and not the words, have compelled; and the array of individual verses of scripture would stagger any scholar to interpret in connection with any one theme.

When we get out of the building, away from the atmosphere of battle, we ask ourselves what good came of it, after all. And the reply, nothing. We have been bombarded, but to no purpose. Instead of the Book of God appealing to us as a Book of Life, it was presented as a huge compend of figures; and in place of a sermon that lifted us up and made us feel the very presence of God in the sanctuary, we have listened to something that made us feel the hard lines of living and that brought on rebellion in our hearts.

The man, and not the message, we have listened to; the logic of proof texts, and not the living truth of God's Word, have dinned our ears, and where we had hoped to receive uplift and spiritual benefit, we have come away with a feeling of depression and dissatisfaction. No more "chapter and verse" sermons for us, please.

THE MIRROR AND THE WORLD.

Same glass—why is it?
In the same world one sees hopes; another fears.
Same world—why is it?

The glass reflects the features of him who looks therein. Smile is returned for smile or tears for tears. With the world, as with the glass, one finds what he brings to it. Is a man suspicious and looking for evil? He will meet it on every hand. Does he seek goodness? He will find it all about him, lurking in unexpected places. The traveler intent on watching for obstacles or enemies misses the wayside flower, the song of the bird, the music of the brook, the smile of a child. If he is on the lookout for evil, it comes to meet him and the good is unseen. Are you possessed of fear? You see danger in every shadow; you hear threats in the wind. Smile on the glass. Smile on the world. Hope and fear not. Believe in good and expect good in others and you will find it. Look for sunshine, look for joy, look for love and kindness. Do not miss the good while repining over wrongs, real or fancied. Be yourself what you would see in the mirror. Be yourself what you would find in the world.—Milwaukee Journal.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

SIGNS indicate a sort of revival of county conventions in the past two years, especially in the states of Indiana and Missouri, both of which have a more orderly district administration of church affairs than other states.

This is a very favorable development. Our convention system must be made to reach down to the last church in the brotherhood. This cannot be done by state and national gatherings with their comparatively unwieldy masses.

The superintendents of districts in Indiana and Missouri make it one of their chief duties to create a group consciousness among the churches of each county in their several districts, gathering representatives of these churches together in annual conventions and engaging them in the work of fostering the weaker churches and planting new ones.

This method of organizing the churches on the basis of the county unit is the only method by which the wasteful individualism of the Disciples can be overcome. Until the congregations of a county, or of a district as small as a county, come to have missionary fellowship together there will always be a certain proportion of churches in that county which have no missionary fellowship with their sister churches at all, but continue to lead an isolated and visionless existence.

Let the development of county organizations with their annual conventions go forward with the active encouragement of all who have upon their hearts the care of all the churches.

MISREPRESENTING THE DISCIPLES.

THE most remarkable piece of printed matter that has appeared among the Disciples of Christ in in the memory of the present generation is the Christian Standard of August 28.

It is not the custom of The Christian Century to make allusion to our Cincinnati contemporary with which we have little in common, which very few of our readers ever see and which exercises a rapidly decreasing influence upon the thought and practice of the Disciples of Christ.

But this particular issue that lies before us shows with such vulgar frankness the inevitable outcome of the attitude of the Standard's sectarian bigotry that the lessons implicit in it should be brought to the attention of the brotherhood.

It is called a "special evangelistic number." Most of the space is occupied with a discussion of the question whether churches and ministers of the Disciples should engage in union evangelistic meetings. All of the articles contributed on this subject, as well as the editorial comments, are against participation in such meetings. The reason given is that a "full gospel" cannot be preached, by which is meant that baptism by immersion cannot be preached.

The leading contributed article abounds in talk like this:

> The only way to deal with a rattlesnake is to cut its tail off just back of its neck. The only way to deal with sectarianism or denominationalism is to annihilate it. It has sent martyrs to the stake, it has retarded the progress of the church, it has divided the church into warring factions, it has rent homes asunder, and the only way to deal with it is to abolish it. The farmer would not keep anything among his hogs or cattle that caused confusion or disease; we always try to eradicate the plague, the mosquito, the yellow-fever germ, etc.; why not get rid of the pest—sectarianism—in the church?

The editor says:

> The so-called "union evangelism," now in vogue, is related to New Testament evangelism as is sectarianism to the church of Christ. The evangelist who gives up the one for the other, therefor, whether he so designs or not, is turning from the well-established principles of a New Testament faith and practice to the temporary and insecure foundations of a tottering denominational regime.

And again he approves of this description of an ideal evangelism for today: "to baptize sinners and to capsize sectarians."

Another contributor closes his article on union evangelism with this tolerant and open-minded utterance:

> To crack a joke at its [the Disciples' movement] expense is a sin. I thoroughly believe that the message we proclaim contains the whole truth. The evidence is all in. Nothing can be added, nothing must be taken away. New methods, new plans and ways of proclaiming the divine message may come, but the message will stand unchanged until Jesus comes.

We have selected only certain of the milder utterances which indicate the type of thinking upon which the movement of reactionism bases itself. The coarse and contentious spirit revealed in certain other utterances, the legalism, the unbrotherliness, the vulgar personalities indulged by the editor and permitted in his contributors, those we have not quoted because our readers will not care to see them in our pages.

As an illustration of what the Disciples do not believe and as an object lesson of the spirit that does not possess them in their advocacy of Christian unity there has not appeared a better statement since the vitriolic days of Benjamin Franklin and the American Christian Review.

The Disciples are embarrassed and hindered in their work of preaching and practicing Christian unity by the preposterous claim made by the Standard that such teaching represents them. It is the duty of every man of right feeling among us to repudiate the claim that such a spirit actuates us and either to reclaim the Standard from its unspeakable course or compel it definitely to go to its own place.

There are other things even more significant occupying space in this issue of the Standard upon which we will comment next week.

ILLINOIS MUST NOT LAG.

IT WOULD seem that the time has fully come for the Disciples of Illinois to provide their work in this state with a more adequate type of organization. Progressive in most points, and awake to the call of new duties, the churches of Illinois have allowed the churches of other states to outstrip them in the matter of efficiency in articulating their congregations together in a self-conscious and effective unity.

Missouri, Indiana and perhaps Ohio are ahead of Illinois in this respect. What has been lost by delay may be gained, perhaps, by taking account of the experience of these states that have pioneered a new day for state organization.

Notably successful has been Missouri in bringing the organization close to the churches by means of the district plan. There is a closer fellowship among the churches of that state, large as the membership is, and geographically isolated as many congregations are, than in any other state of the union.

In Illinois there is still in vogue the same worn-out one-center system which Missouri and Indiana have definitely discarded. In the nature of the case it is impossible for one man, the state secretary, to bring the organization close to all the churches of the state. District evangelists of the old style help but little.

What is wanted is an administrative officer, a superintendent, for the various sections or districts of the state. The central officer, or state secretary, would still serve a useful function if the funds could be provided to support both him and the district leaders.

But if the funds are insufficient for all, the expenses of the central office could be greatly reduced by dropping from it the administrative function and keeping it as a clearing house for correspondence between the workers in the various districts, in which event it would require only a part of one man's time. This is the method which Missouri has demonstrated beyond question to be the most economical and fruitful way to spend its funds.

The Illinois state convention cannot afford longer to disregard the wisdom learned by other states. Positive steps should be taken at the Bloomington convention this month to put the administration of the work in this state on the most effective basis that can be devised.

ONLY CHURCH MEMBERS COULD VOTE.

WHILE the world has been evolving toward free and unrestricted franchise for all adults, there have been many haltings on the way. There have been property tests, educational tests, ancestry tests and many other devices of limited suffrage. One city in the United States preserves the memory of a time when church membership in the Presbyterian church was the test.

The First Presbyterian Church of Newark, N. J., recently celebrated its 250th anniversary and it is said that the church is much older than the city. In the early days of Newark, only members of this church were given the right of the ballot. Though the congregation no longer enjoys this unique distinction, it is still very prominent in the community life and is by no means bowed down by the weight of its years.

A NEW ACADEMIC DEGREE.

ON academic innovation was introduced by the Utah State Agricultural College recently in the conferment of the degree of "Master Farmer" upon five citizens of that state.

Speaking of this departure, the Abilene, Tex., Reporter voices a widespread sentiment in America when it says that, whenever and wherever a constructive man is found tilling the soil in a way to make two blades grow where only one grew before, he should be sought out and honored, and it adds, pointedly: "We say let the schools of Texas honor our worthy men of the soil by conferring upon them the degree of master farmer . . . a degree that if deserved should rank with . . . any of the rest of them."

This new degree is no more unacademic than many other degrees to which we have grown accustomed. Why should we grant the title of Bachelor of Music, or Doctor of Medicine, or Bachelor of Civil Engineering, or Doctor of Jurisprudence, and not Master of Farming?

The movement to bring education into vital relation with life, to test it by its adequacy to meet the issues of life and to make life richer, gives a philosophic justification for conferring upon an intelligent master of the science of farming a degree appropriate to his achievement.

CASTE AND LABOR.

A SUGGESTIVE and luminous article by John Macy recently appeared in the New Republic on the subject of "Dirty Work." The writer's purpose was to show that it was not the "dirt" that made work objectionable, but the suggestion of inferiority that went with it. Remove that, and give interest in the work, and the dirt carried with it not the slightest objection.

Mr. Macy's first illustration was a wealthy friend who had bought a farm and was surprised by five "sons of luxury" who drove out to see him and found him carrying a dung fork and begrimed with the soil. Yet he was "proud of his Tolstoyan picturesque uncleanliness."

The next illustration is from the letters of a French scholar who is in the trenches. He "is now simply Corporal X, up to his waist in filth," which he describes with no sense of shame, and with no indication of loss of any of his finer qualities. "If our professor survives, an exquisite lady will kiss him without waiting for him to wash. His mother . . . may be breaking her heart at the thought of his danger, but she is not grieving because her son is a failure, sunk to the low levels of labor."

The third illustration is "an aristocrat in blood and intelligence, rich by inheritance and by his own efforts. For his services to humanity governments had hung his breast with stars, and universities had strung letters after his name." Yet "that morning he had thrust his hands up to the elbows in the diseased bowels of a man. He had been doing something which the ordinary layman cannot witness without nausea. A dirty job, but the greatest surgeon in England."

The illustrations might be multiplied indefinitely where skill and brains and culture are doing things that involve the personal doing of dirty, repulsive mal-odorous work not only with no sense of inferiority and lessened dignity, but with pride and pleasure.

It is not the dirt or the effort, it is the artificial social judgment which has branded one work higher than another. How little better our caste system is than that of China or India is disclosed only when we cut into a subject like this.

"All service ranks the same with God" sang the poet. But men have made silly and false distinctions. There is hope of raising labor to its due dignity only by raising the social conception of labor to the level of the poet's conception.

This can be done, slowly but effectually, by the state's use of the principle of conscription, setting every young man and woman for a period of one or two or three years at some task of manual labor, just as European young men are given military discipline, as a part of their education.

By this device the state would get its dirty work done and remove the "dirt" from the doing of it.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE. — By Orvis F. Jordan

Dr. Shaw Called to College Presidency.

Dr. John Balcom Shaw, formerly pastor in Chicago, and now pastor of Immanuel Presbyterian church of Los Angeles, has been elected president of Elmira College for Women, Elmira, N. Y. He has not announced his decision yet with reference to the call.

Baptist Secretary Goes Through Orient.

The Baptist Foreign Missionary Society has a foreign secretary to whom the problems of administration are in considerable measure entrusted, Rev. J. H. Franklin. Last January he went to the orient and ever since has been engaged in inspecting the mission work of Japan and China, attending annual conferences and conferring with individual missionaries. He has just returned from his interesting trip.

Northern Presbyterians Prosperous.

The northern Presbyterians have issued a very creditable report of their work for the past year. They have had a net gain of 55,000 members and now number more than one and a half millions. Both the home and foreign missionary causes of the church are now receiving well up to two million dollars annually. The local expense budgets of the churches amount to nearly twenty millions a year.

Evangelize the Jews by Mail.

A novel plan to evangelize the Jews has been devised by Mr. Leopold Cohn, who is in charge of a department of the Williamsburg Mission to the Jews, 27 Throop avenue, Brooklyn. He says: "If you want to evangelize the Jews of your own town all you need to do is to get a list of the Jewish families there. Do not include more than one person in a family. This can be done by you as an individual or by some church or society in a church. Then you may forward to us the names as frequently as you like and send with each name a remittance of fifty cents. We will immediately enter the name in a special card index file and send to each a copy of our seven Jewish tracts and a New Testament either in Yiddish or any other language desired. In addition we will mail a special letter which we will use for such work. This letter is the result of the following process: We first made up a dozen forms of personal letters and submitted them to our staff of workers. These were sifted down to four. These four were sent out to a total of 10,000 names and an accurate record kept of the returns from each letter. The letter which secured the most inquiries and expressions of interest is the one we have adopted for the national campaign which we are now proposing."

To Reverence Name of Christ.

A movement for the suppression of profanity has arisen in the circles of the Roman Catholic church. The societies of the Holy Name in Detroit, have secured a membership of 12,000 young men. These are pledged to "reverence the name which is above all names, the only name in which we claim salvation, the name of Jesus Christ." It is claimed that the new order has a membership of over a million in the United States.

How the War Affects Religion.

It is inevitable that so outstanding an event as the world war should have an effect upon the religion of England. Dr. A. C. Dixon, formerly of Chicago, who is now a successor to Spurgeon in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, says that his church and its missions have had 800 men go into the army. When the Germans are winning, people crowd into his prayer meetings, but when the English win, people stay at home and enjoy the good news! The sermons of the pastors upon war themes attract a large hearing, but otherwise the attendance upon preaching is about the same as before the war. The established church is much agitated to provide an adequate supply of chaplains for the army. An army bishop will be appointed, in charge of these chaplains. The place was offered to the popular Bishop of London, but he has declined it and another nomination has not been made.

Seventh Day Adventist Progress.

The Seventh Day Adventists have increased from a handful of 5,440 members in 1870 to 104,526 in 1910 at home and abroad. These people are tithers and their average per capita giving in America is $28.93. This denomination has made the development and operation of sanitaria a specialty. In 1910 it was operating seventy-four of these health-resorts with 1,989 employees.

Oriental Languages at University of Chicago.

The new missionary usually spends from a year to two years on the field, doing nothing but studying language. Often the facilities are bad for the scientific teaching of language, the new missionary depending upon native tutors. The University of Chicago will soon be teaching the leading Asiatic languages in a newly-formed school of oriental languages. Professor Samuel N. Harper, son of the late President Harper, will teach Russian. Professor Ira M. Price and Professor James H. Breasted will be on the faculty of the new school. Courses in Chinese and Japanese will soon be added.

Hostility Within Denominations.

The problem of Christian union is not only that of bringing now separate denominations into unity, but to prevent existing denominations from splitting over inconsequential questions. In a city of ten thousand near the Mason and Dixon line—on which side, we do not say—there is a situation illustrating this. There are twelve church buildings located within the limits of three city blocks. There are four varieties of Presbyterian church, two each of Methodists, Baptists and Disciples. The Presbyterian and Disciple churches split over the question of the use of the organ in public service. The Baptist church split over the use of a spittoon in the meeting-house—for which there was doubtless no scriptural precedent found! We are not told the reason for the division in the Methodist camp, but it was probably an outgrown sectional matter. It would appear, then, that the cause of unity in the Christian world depends not only upon the work of the theologians, but also upon an agreement with reference to the proper accessories of worship.

Mohammedanism's Call to the Holy War.

A call to holy war in Persia has been an excuse for certain evil minded Mohammedans to kill the men and outrage the women of the Armenian population. The call to the holy war is a reversion to the earlier ideals (?) of Mohammedanism. The call in part is as follows: "Kill them: God will punish them in your hand and put them to shame (Text from the Koran). How often have the savage Russians, the traitorous English, the Frenchmen, born of impure blood, yet proud in their baseness, planted their unclean flags upon your pure and holy mountains? Behold! God has bestowed upon you a greater favor. The tears of the faithful for centuries past are bearing fruit. Your enemies are trembling under your hand. Attack them from every side. Whenever you meet them, kill them. Quicken the failing proclamation of the unity by the fire of your rifles and cannon, and by the blows of your swords and knives. Cause the minarets and mountains and wilderness to resound once more with the cry. 'Allah! Allah!' If you desire honor and glory, houris and damsels, behold all are waiting for you. Eternal joys, the shade of green trees, houris, angels are in the grasp of your sword."

Activities of the Y. W. C. A.

The Y. W. C. A. is doing a world-wide work for women. They have been much interested in the Japanese women of America and have issued a post-card giving the pictures of the first five to come to this country. Three of the five are now of national fame in Japan. One is a principal of a school, one a baroness and the other a princess. In Ft. Wayne, Ind., the association is waging a war against Saturday evening shopping. They have given great publicity to the question, "Have you ever thought, when making purchases on Saturday evening after 6 o'clock, what this privilege is costing hundreds of clerks in the retail stores of our city?"

Smaller Crowds at Northfield.

The Northfield conference was much reduced in size this year by reason of the rain. Among those who spoke were Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and Dr. Zwemer, the expert upon Moslem lands. This conference was founded by Dwight L. Moody and has a most interesting history.

Is South America a Mission Field?

The extreme high church wing of Episcopalianism is much agitated over the suggestion that Catholicism has failed in South America and that the continent is a proper field for missionary work. They have used up much ink to prove that the Roman Catholic forces in that country have met with success. Meanwhile the Roman Catholic writers speak in pessimistic terms of the same matter. Cardinal Vaughan, after visiting South America, writes as follows of what he saw in Columbia: "The monks are in the lowest state of degradation and the suppression of them would be an act of divine favor. . . . Priests scandalize the people much by cock-fighting. I have been several times told of priests taking their cocks into the sacristy, hurrying disrespectfully through their Mass and going straight from the altar to the cock-pit. They are great gamblers." Father Sherman, when a member of the Jesuit Order, visited Porto Rico shortly after its annexation. The low tone of moral life seemed to have oppressed him and he spoke pessimistically of the decreasing influence of religion: "The ethical status of the Roman Church sunk lower, oftentimes, than the atheism which surrounds it. Such are the dark lines which portray the condition of that portion of America which is under undisputed Roman sway."

Change of Name for Conference.

The Latin-America Missionary conference to be held at Panama next winter has had a change of name and is now the Congress on Christian Work in Latin-America. This change has come about doubtless to meet the criticism of one of the participating denominations. In order to further define its attitude, the leaders of the Congress have issued the following: "Resolved, that this conference strongly recommends that those who are making arrangements for the Panama Congress, as well as all writers and speakers at the congress, bear in mind that, if the best and most lasting results are to be obtained, while frankly facing moral and spiritual conditions which call for missionary work in Latin America, and while presenting the gospel which we hold as the only adequate solution of the problems which those conditions present, it shall be the purpose of the Panama Congress to recognize all the elements of truth and goodness in any form of religious faith. Our approach to the people shall be neither critical nor antagonistic, but inspired by the teachings and example of Christ and that charity which thinketh no evil and rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth. In the matter of Christian service, we will welcome the co-operation of any who are willing to co-operate in any part of the Christian program. We should not demand union with us in all our work as the condition of accepting allies for any part of it."

Colored Methodists to Federate.

There are several families of colored Methodists and they recently met in conference in Cincinnati. Very favorable sentiment was foud among the different groups to unite the millions of colored Methodists in this country. Immediate steps are being taken to eliminate competition in their work.

Here and There

THE PLIGHT OF THE EVANGELISTS.

Though not numbered with the fathers in Israel, I well remember the day when the man who essayed to speak lightly of an evangelist of prominence took his pen in one hand and his life in the other. I recall the efforts of a few bold spirits to correct abuses similar to those which are now being spread before us in solemn warning, and how the few were written up as wanting in those qualities of mind and heart which mark the sane from the insane and the faithful from the felon. They were put on the editorial rack and if any kinks remained in their thinking or their theology after the rackist had done his work, they could be attributed to the faults of the machine, and not to the merciful disposition of the machinist. Whatever latitude a victim had was converted into longitude. Time was when we discussed the vices of evangelistic methods sub rosa, and if we could conveniently retire to the cellar to do so we felt half a league further removed from danger. All hail to the men who braved the charge of unsoundness because they condemned unsane evangelistic methods ten years ago.

But the evangelist, not his critics, is on the rack today, and when he gets off he must go way back and sit down—if he can find a pillow. Otherwise he must content himself with leaning against the fence.

We remember the day when our evangelists were assets. Now their influence among us can be appreciated if you will kindly drop the "t"—that is, if we may trust the record.

The newspaper organ that more than any other helped to make the evangelists just what they are is now ashamed of its work. It fawned, flattered, and boosted, ad infinitum. Now the fawn is forgotten, the flattery has flattened out, and the boosting has gone up in a balloon.

I see no difference between the methods of today and those in vogue before our men went into union evangelism. Why this heat now over what were always questionable, if not unpardonable performances? Can it be that union evangelism has become flat, stale, weary, and unprofitable?

As for myself, I can truly say that with all their faults I love the evangelists still. They are human beings, and flattery in large unbroken doses has made them more human than ever. We have made them what they are. Year after year our journals insisted that the number of noses counted was a sure proof of zeal and efficiency; and while we "whooped" things up in a sort of "let 'er go Gallagher" spirit, it was natural that noses should be counted even in the dark, and at times when there was no nose to count. We seemed to say, "Blessed is the man who can make two noses grow where one grew before." We took it for granted that the churches would make a path to that man's door, while the man who dissented from this undiscriminating method was compelled to see the sage brush take possession of his lowly dwelling. And the green grass grew all around. Even the coyote sniffed the taint of heresy on his clothes.

We have been creating a demand for numbers, lo these many years, and the evangelists have been supplying the demand without any particular pangs of conscience as to the manner. Of course, we do not forget the exceptions. And while the church roster bulged with prosperity the wonder grew at the disproportion between its dimensions and the spiritual life of the congregation. The giants on paper were pigmies in the pew. In the long ago many were called and few were chosen, but under our modern evangelistic era it was discovered that many were cold and more were frozen. But the numbers showed up handsomely in print. They told their stirring tale, none daring to molest or to make afraid. To suppress, revise, or curtail was regarded as the work of those whose dry baptistries eloquently told of their departure from the faith. Now the tail is being squeezed in the door, hyperbolically speaking, while the demand for greater curtailment cries aloud to heaven. Hereafter when we read evangelistic extras and specials we shall exclaim with the prophet, "Lord, who hath believed our report!"

But we do not complain. Forgive us if we seem to. Rather than complain we ask the critics to be merciful to the erring, to go slow in correcting errors which we ourselves have encouraged. Thanks for all the aid given by those who eventually have come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Even China changes, and we are glad to note the recent change of front on the part of some of our friends. This is not the first retreat from Moscow we have observed in recent years.

A final word to the victims. Brethren, you have done wrong and should repent. Whenever you need our help or our handkerchief on which to shed those tears now long overdue, please apply. We have always been your friend. Your real enemies played the part of friends even while telling you that those who criticized were "sore," or something worse. Now you know that the man is not a true friend who cuts your acquaintance when you refuse to take your grist to his mill. So when in trouble call on us. The latch string is out. We will see that you get turkey in season, and old country ham at any season. We never kick a man when he is down. So polish up your halo, lubricate your scars, throw away all useless baggage and get down to business, and all your troubles will come out in the wash as surely as they have come out in the press.

The Kingliness of Obedience

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

Life is a series of choices. The world is filled with the material out of which to build character. It is our part to choose the kind of material from this treasure-house of our Father which will form character after our ideal and his image. In the past quarter's lessons we have a series of contrasts. Obedience and disobedience, kingship and slavery stand over against each other in striking and impressive contrasts. Disobedience to God and neglect of the laws of righteousness spell the ruin of nations as well as men. The great men of the past who have fallen with seeming suddenness have been paving the way by their small choices in previous life. The great nations of the past collapsed in form after they had died at heart. Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Persia, Greece, and Rome are eloquent testimonies to the truth that "the soul (or nation) that sinneth, it shall die."

The divided kingdoms stand in history as an object lesson to modern nations, of the withering effect that follows national sin.

The past quarter we have followed also the fortunes of some of the great leaders in Israel's life. We have found them following the higher ideals of their day, and as a result walking in the paths of peace. On the other hand we have seen them neglecting the higher values, and consequently sailing in troubled waters.

Part of our observation had to do with the united kingdom under the brilliant reign of Solomon. In this reign many of the seeds of dissension were sown. Solomon's ambition led him into entangling alliances with other nations who knew not the God of Israel. Their ability to appreciate the spiritual realities was not highly cultivated, and hence we are not surprised to find them worshiping forms and ceremony rather than the higher ideal of Jehovah.

The kingdom of Judah situated as it was in the most rugged part of the country resisted the approach of the foreign religions longer than the northern kingdom where the approach was more favorable. Its rigid exclusion, however, was in the end impossible. Contact with idolatrous nations, the presence of an active pro-heathen party, the influence of a too liberal king, the tendency of baser natures to turn to any sensuous worship, beat back the ancient faith, and sapped it of its vigor. Under the cold and worldly priesthood favored by the court, a superstitious ceremonial and dead ecclesiaticism gradually threw the people into a spiritual sleep, in spite of the watchful and earnest care of the prophets. There is grave danger of our pleasure-seeking, money-making, age losing its spiritual eyesight.

Nothing but a closer walk with God can keep our pleasures pure and helpful, and our money from being "tainted." Our God is as ready to help us now as he was on Mount Carmel, if we will but trust him.

The kingdom of Israel was more accessible, and hence came in contact with the manners and customs of the other nations. This caused a breaking down of the old ways, as the new people came to the kingdom. At the same time many of the most religious of the people went to Judah; among them were the priests. To them in large measure was confined the education and refinement of the community. They were the representatives of art, law, religion and general knowledge. When the nation lost the elevating and strengthening influence of a living faith it was unable to resist the external forms of worship. This is the great danger confronting the church in our day. Sensitive souls are perfectly aware of this tendency, and are calling the people to a larger faith than could be enjoyed by any form of legalism. We need prophets rather than business managers in the pulpits of our churches. Men who have a spiritual vision, rather than men who count success by mere numbers. Men who call the congregation to worship rather than to enjoy the program. Teachers who teach the spirit rather than the letter of the word of God. Paul said that God made him sufficient as a minister of a new covenant; "not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." 2 Cor. 3:6.

"God is a kind father. He sets us all in the places where he wishes us to be employed; and that employment is truly 'Our Father's business.' He chooses the work for every creature which will be delightful for them if they do it simply and humbly. He gives us always strength enough and sense enough for what he wants us to do. If we either tire ourselves or puzzle ourselves, it is our own fault. We may always be sure, whatever we are doing, that we cannot be pleasing him if we are not happy ourselves."—Ruskin.

Bowling Green Church Gives Good Signs of Growth and Efficiency.

Under the ministry of Arthur Stout the church at Bowling Green, Mo., has made gratifying gains in the nearly two years of his pastorate there. One favorable index is the fine increase in the membership of the woman's auxiliary from 55 members to 107, or 85 per cent of all the women of the congregation. The Sunday-school has grown from 110 to 250. Through the activity of this church in co-operation with other Christian forces, Sunday baseball has been banished this season for the first time in many years.

Sells Old Church Edifice and Begins Plans on New.

The congregation of First Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa., of which W. Scott Cook is pastor, sold its church lot the other day for $25,000, paid their debt, purchased a fine new lot and have a nice balance in the treasury with which to begin the erection of a splendid new house of worship. The architect is already at work on the plans and it is hoped the house will be ready for occupancy in the spring. Mr. Cook took no vacation the past summer, save for one Sunday which he spent in visiting his father, Dr. S. M. Cook, who at 70 years is still preaching with a finer enthusiasm than ever. The son reports his father as reading The Christian Century, The Christian Evangelist, The Christian Standard, The Congregationalist, The Christian Work, the Homiletic Review, The Literary Digest, The British Weekly and books like those of Jefferson, Horne, Jowett, King, Clark, etc. He has preached for the Old Munger's church for over ten years. Such mental habits and physical power would outmatch many a younger minister.

The Farises in Texas and Chicago Going on to New Success.

A new $25,000 church building at Hereford, Tex., is approaching completion. G. A. Faris, for many years editor of The Christian Courier, of Dallas, is pastor of the church. Mr. and Mrs. Faris spent three weeks during the summer in a visit to their son, Dr. Ellsworth E. Faris, of the University of Chicago. Dr. Faris has been called to a professorship of Philosophy in the University of Iowa and will move to Iowa City this fall. He spent the year before last in that institution supplying for Professor Starbuck, who was on a leave of absence. His call to a permanent position there is a strong testimony to the respect created for him by his one year's instructorship.

A Service that Makes Increased Demands as it Attains New Successes.

The partial report made by the National Benevolent Association at the Los Angeles convention showed that during the first eight months of this year a larger number were cared for in the six homes for children than were ministered to by those homes during all of the previous year. The new building at Dallas, Tex., which has been so greatly needed, has more than twice the capacity of the old one. All the association's homes have been heroically striving to meet the heavy demands made upon them. The secretaries point out that the enlargement of the association's equipment for the care of children, the increased cost of supplies, and the high standard of service that must be maintained in these homes, all mean that the expense of properly conducting this important ministry is, of necessity, increasing. And, as the years pass, the number of homes that will be required, if the Disciples are to accept their share of the gracious opportunities for Christian service offered by the needs of the unfortunate "little ones", and if we are not to fail of our duty, will be considerably larger. Already other communities are demanding that homes be established in their midst. A day of very great opportunity and obligation is upon us, and every church and Sunday school should be responsive to the urgent call. If your church or school has not yet sent an offering for the "fatherless and the widow" under the care of the association, see to it that a generous offering is sent before the closing of the books for the year, September 30. Address: The National Benevolent Association, 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Dr. Idleman's Home Coming Sermon on Human Brotherhood.

Returning from his trip to the Pacific coast and a vacation in Minnesota, Dr. Finis Idleman preached to his congregation at Central church, Des Moines, on "Our Father." He dwelt on the simplicity of Christ's way of salvation and deplored the complexities that have grown up in the faith of the Church through the historic creeds, to the mystifying of men's minds. He declared the necessity of casting aside dogmas and coming into the kingdom as a little child. The world will be redeemed he said only when the sense of brotherhood shall so fill men's hearts that they will together say "our Father." "When the church at home identifies itself with filthy pagan peoples and prays, 'our Father,' when wealth goes with gracious intrusion into the stifling tenements of the poor and prays, 'our Father,' when culture learns to kneel besides ignorance and say, 'Our Father,' when nations now at war come to stand by broken cannon with uncovered head, while Frenchman, German, Russian, Austrian, Englishman, Italian and Turk repeat together, 'our Father'—then will be the brotherhood of man." Dr. Idleman is beginning an aggressive year's work at Central church. He addressed a city-wide meeting recently on the 1916 General Convention.

Pastor Brings Strong Condemnation Upon the Wastefulness of Denominationalism.

In a strong sermon on Christian unity J. W. Darby, of First church, Tulsa, Okla., declared: "Just think of it. In a little town of 1,200 population there are thirteen churches, with 600 members in them all together. At lowest estimate there is invested in those churches $50,000, while only three maintain a preacher full time, and they are weak men on small salary teaching people religious prejudice more than religion. While that same community with one good church costing half that money could support at their present outlay of salary a good

Christian Unity in Actual Practice

By Oscar Sweeney.

The Imperial Valley in California is famous for her alfalfa, asparagus, barley, bees, butter, cotton, corn, cantaloupes, dates, and earthquakes, but a thing of greater significance to the religious world is her illustration of practical Christian union for small communities.

In Seeley, one of the newer cities of the West Side, the people said, "Let's have a union church." And the people did it. Members of eight different denominations banded themselves together in a union church for the furtherance of the Master's work in their community. These include Methodists, Presbyterians, Disciples, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Baptists and a Quaker. Each esteems the other better than himself. There is no jealousy. I never have seen finer fellowship anywhere. There is no question as to loyalty or as to how any came to be Christians. The simple pledge is the acceptance of Jesus as Savior and the "promise to obey him in all things according to the measure of my knowledge of his will."

And the movement has grown. Starting with twenty-five there are now seventy-five members. Every one is interested and almost every one in the community who had been a member of any organization united with the Union Church. There is something in it which makes an unusual appeal.

A denominational representative who came to town to start another church was met at the depot by almost the entire membership of the union church and told that the people had what they wanted and did not care for any more churches.

Mr. R. W. Gray, the capable Sunday-school superintendent, said: "You ought to come and worship with us and see how fine it is for members of eight denominations to worship together. We don't want our union broken up. There must be a beginning. We will make it succeed in Seeley. We want to get so full of the spirit of union that the plan will be carried into effect everywhere."

There is a splendid Sunday-school which has an excellent attendance through the hot weather. Of course there is a live Christian Endeavor Society. Through the hot season the attendance on all the services is unexcelled in the county. The church commands not part, but all the talent of the community.

Communion service is held the first Sunday of each month. It is a beautiful sight to see all partake of the emblems together. In faith and love they come so close to the Master's feet that each desires only to know his will and to serve Him.

The splendid auditorium of the school house is used for all services. When the congregation is ready it will build a commodious house of worship—and pay for it. There is no difficulty about finances. All being united instead of divided it is easy to raise money for anything they want.

George A. Ragan, a Disciple minister who also engages in business affairs, preaches for this interesting church. He says: "We are just doing what it seems to me should be done everywhere, instead of dividing the Lord's forces till each body is too weak and insignificant to accomplish anything worth while. We are trying to practice Christian union instead of just talk about it."

Mr. Ragan is held in highest esteem by the church and the entire community. Business men, professors and ministers are delighted with the opportunity which occasionally offers for them to address the model congregation. For me it is a red letter day when I am "drafted" into that service.

The Seeley church is an illustration of what might be done in thousands of places if the Kingdom of Heaven were put first instead of denominational pride. The increasing desire of communities to be permitted to work unitedly for the Master should command the co-operation and support of every organization interested in the advancement of the Kingdom of Heaven.

preacher, have fine music and teach the people the broad principle of religion. Then these other men with more training to qualify themselves could fill three other pulpits or go as missionaries to carry the gospel to someone who has no chance to get it."

Enthusiastic County Convention in Indiana.

Two hundred members of First church, Bedford, Ind., attended the Lawrence county convention at Heltonville, the last week of August. This number was swelled to 500 by representatives of other churches, only two of the fourteen congregations in the county failing to send delegates. Business was transacted in the morning, a picnic dinner served at noon and the feature of the afternoon was a sermon-lecture by E. R. Edwards, of Martinsville, on "Christian Brotherhood and Patriotism." The day was a happy one and productive of great good for the cause of Christ.

United States Judge for China Visiting the Homeland.

Judge Charles S. Lobingier, of the United States court for China, a frequent and interesting contributor to The Christian Century, is visiting in this country at present spending some time in his boyhood home at Hebron, Nebr., and visiting in Lincoln and Omaha, Nebr., in which latter city he was practicing law at the time of his appointment to the United States court for the Philippine Islands. In filling his present position in China he resides in Shanghai. His jurisdiction includes the entire country of China, all United States citizens being amenable to his court. Judge Lobingier is a Disciple by heredity and stout conviction.

Saloon Keepers Turn the Other Cheek to Pastor Sharp and His Congregation.

"Turn the other cheek to them and let them smite it hard," said W. J. Herrington, president of the Hammond Saloonkeepers' Association at a meeting of that body recently in speaking of one of the bitterest opponents of the saloon, Pastor C. J. Sharp and his congregation of First church, at Hammond, Ind. The business men had been asked as a mark of respect to the visitors at the "Efficiency Congress," which met in Hammond last week, to decorate their stores and the city was a riot of color. It was then that Herrington called a meeting of the saloonmen and it was decided to decorate. They did, and welcoming signs, bunting and colors were emblazoned from the saloons to greet the astonished ministers and President Sharp. "We are good fellows," said Herrington today. "If they want a little wine for their stomachs' sake, we will give it to them."

Prominent Christian Merchant of St. Louis Dies.

Mr. James H. Allen, prominent layman of the Disciples' fellowship in St. Louis, died Aug. 29. Shortly after an operation he suffered a stroke of paralysis from which he never rallied. Mr. Allen was a member of Compton Heights church, and the funeral service was conducted by his pastor, C. A. Cole. Prominent in all the work of the Disciples in St. Louis, Mr. Allen's personal and financial support will be missed from many Christian activities. He was president of the Allen-West Commission Company. He was born in 1844, and served throughout the war in the Confederate army.

Baptists and Disciples Practice Unity in Letting Church Building Contract.

The Baptist and Christian churches of Princeton, Mo., let contracts for new houses of worship to the same contractor, both buildings to be constructed simultaneously. The Christian church will spend $2,300 on its house which, with its Baptist neighbor, will be ready for occupancy in the spring.

It would seem that the co-operation in letting the contract would have suggested forcibly the question, Why not combine the two houses in one house and the two congregations into one body?

News from the Benevolent Association.

News of the death of S. Thornberry recently called to the management of the Juliette Fowler homes at Dallas, Tex., has just reached the National Headquarters office. Mr. Thornberry was manager of the Christian Old People's Home at Jacksonville, Ill., for several years, where he rendered valuable services.

Charles E. Smith, for two years and a half pastor of the Tuxedo Christian Church, St. Louis, has been employed as N. B. A. field man for Iowa. Mr. Smith did excellent work as financial secretary of Bethany College a few years ago.

Belt White has been called to succeed John H. Wood as field representative of the Association in the Southeast. He will probably make his headquarters at Atlanta, the location of the Southern Christian Home. Mr. Wood and his competent wife have served the Association faithfully and profitably.

BRIEFER ITEMS.

—Sterling, Ill., church raised $10,000 in pledges on a recent Sunday morning as the first installment on the cost of a new church edifice.

—Dean Vernon Stauffer, of Hiram College, will be the speaker at the annual meeting of Allen County, Ind., churches at Foster Park, Sept. 12. Ft. Wayne, with its West and East Creighton Avenue and West Jefferson street churches, is in Allen county.

The Passing of F. E. Meigs

By F. M. Rains.

F. E. Meigs, of Nanking, China, a missionary of the Foreign Society since September, 1887, has gone home to God. The cable that brought the news was dated August 24, and he probably died the 23rd.

He was appointed January 12, 1887, and sailed September 1 of the same year. He went out from Missouri. For twenty-eight years he worked faithfully and successfully. Few missionaries have been permitted to do a more enduring work. He was stationed in Nanking. When he went out he joined Dr. W. E. Macklin, who had already preceded him and located the mission. The Chinese did not give him a cordial reception.

Wondrous changes have come over China during the period of his services. He has witnessed uprisings, and political and social revolutions, dire famines and pinching want. Not only so, but he has been an eye witness to the rise of a young, growing, vigorous church, and a new and better social order. The whole life of the empire has been changed, and new ideals and fresh hopes now dominate the people everywhere. How Mr. Meigs rejoiced in the transforming power of the gospel!

It did not require many years to convince the new missionary of the absolute necessity of hospitals and schools. He led in providing for our hospital in China to be conducted by Dr. Macklin, and really this was our first hospital on heathen soil. It opened a new era for all our missionary work. It set a new standard on all the fields. It can be truly said of Mr. Meigs that he had vision reinforced with practical business knowledge. No missionary could make a dollar go farther than could our own F. E. Meigs. Many are still living that can recall the first appeal at one of our national conventions for the first hospital. The voice that is now hushed in death rang out clear and strong for China's suffering millions. The lamented A. M. Atkinson gave $1,000, or about one-fifth of the whole cost.

F. E. Meigs was a business man. He purchased all the land for our mission in Nanking. After the organization of the university in that city, he bought all the land for that institution. The whole campus includes about seventy-five acres. It is said of him that he was the best land purchaser in China. The task was far more difficult in that land than in America.

Soon Mr. Meigs came to feel that we could not do an enduring work without Christian education. He began in a very modest way by starting a "boys' school." This grew into a college, and the college made rapid progress. He educated or trained practically all the Chinese evangelists we have in China. The idea of a great union educational institution fastened itself upon him. He could not get away from it. It was his dream by night and the topic of his conversation by day. He agitated it in season, out of season. By and by the proposal began to take root in the minds of others. The results are seen in the present splendid University of Nanking. This is one of the greatest institutions in all Asia, and one of the finest union movements in the whole world-wide mission field. It gives ideals and inspiration to all the missionary workers throughout the world. It also helps to blaze the educational path for the whole empire of China. No man did more for the institution than did F. E. Meigs. But for him it would probably not exist today. At the time of his death he had charge of the Bible department for the whole institution, a position of honor and of far-reaching influence. He also conducted the Middle School.

He knew the heathenism of China thoroughly. He knew what paganism does for a people. No man knows so well the meaning of heathenism as he who comes in contact with it every day. Prof. Meigs knew how to interpret the gospel to the Chinese. His constant and over-mastering purpose was to make them see and know Jesus Christ. One of the best tracts we have ever read on heathenism, Mr. Meigs penned nearly a quarter of a century ago. In that document he made the light flash over the whole dark and hideous system, and revealed the hopelessness of its people, and the whole nation in the grip of its power.

How cheerfully he bore heavy burdens is known only to those who were close by his side. He had not been well for some time. The particulars of his death have not reached us. He leaves a wife, who stood faithfully by his side during all those laborious years. His daughter, Ruth, is the wife of our beloved David W. Teachout of Cleveland, well known to a large number of our brethren. Earl, the only son, is now here in America, preparing, we understand, to enter college.

A mighty man has fallen. The dauntless leader will be sadly missed in the councils of the China mission. His faith was firm and practical, and optimistic for the future good of the Chinese people. His name and spirit will be missed in the mission rooms here in Cincinnati. This is one of the heaviest blows the foreign society has ever received. His body will sleep in Chinese soil and beneath its miry sod, but the work he did for the Chinese people will endure to the end. Under God the agencies and influences he started will never cease.

—Charles E. Smith, who has just resigned the leadership of Tuxedo church, St. Louis, to take up the field superintendency of the state of Iowa for the Benevolent Association has been the president of the Christian Ministers' Association in St. Louis, during the past year. He went to Tuxedo church from Du Quoin, Ill., and has doubled the membership of his congregation during his two years of service.

—Three hundred persons attended the home-coming exercises of the Manilla, Ind., church the last Sunday in August. Addresses were made by Walter S. Smith, of Indianapolis, a former pastor; C. M. Yocum, of Rushville and W. R. Jinnett, pastor at Manilla and at present representative from his district in the Indiana legislature. The Manilla church was organized in 1850.

—Charles E. Cobbey, pastor of Omaha's First church, is the chairman of the personal work committee of the Billy Sunday revival which is to begin soon.

—Prof. W. C. Bower, of Transylvania College and director of religious education of Central church, Lexington, Ky., officiated at the dedication of a new Sunday-school department building recently erected by the congregation at Stamping Ground, Ky. The beautiful annex to the main auditorium is the result of the labors of the women of the church who last winter appeared on the tobacco market at Lexington with a large offering of tobacco which they had solicited from the men. The sum received for this tobacco was the nucleus of the building fund.

—President A. McLean, of the Foreign Society, recently preached for M. M. Garrard at Battle Creek.

—Neweastle, Ind., congregation is about to build a church home. Bids are now being received from contractors.

—The convention of the southwest district of Texas will be held at Yoakum, Oct. 18-20. Many prominent pastors of the state are announced to speak.

—Robert E. Henry, of Havana, Ill., who recently accepted a call to First church, Decatur, Ill., went to his new field of labor last week to attend and participate in a farewell reception given by the church to its retiring pastor, E. M. Smith. Mr. Smith becomes pastor at Carthage, Ill.

—The members of the Sunday-school and congregation of First church, Marion, Ind., gave a farewell reception recently in the social rooms of the church, complimentary to Rev. and Mrs. Rollin A. Bennett, their departing minister, who leaves them soon to enter the evangelistic work.

—Perry J. Rice, returning to his pulpit at El Paso, Tex., from his summer vacation preached on this novel and suggestive theme: "Preachers that Have Preached to Me." He named Nature, the work of God untouched by the hand of man; The City, the work of God moulded by the hands of men; and The Crowd. These all had spoken to him their messages of the divine.

—A. J. Bradshaw, who resigned recently from the pastorate at Galena, Mo., has begun his new work at Columbus, Mo.

—William Barth, who recently came to the Disciples from the Congregational fellowship, uniting with First church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., supplied the pulpit at Cedar Rapids, during the six weeks' absence of Pastor Walter M. White the past summer. Mr. Barth is described by Mr. White as a man of rare ability. His sermons greatly delighted the congregations that heard him. He will no doubt soon be called to the leadership of a church.

—The two Washington, D. C., pastors, Earle Wilfley and George A. Miller, have returned to their pulpits, the former having spent his vacation on his farm near Petersburg, Va., the latter at the seashore.

—The congregation at Uhrichsville, O., will vote on a proposition to build a new house of worship. J. A. Canby is the pastor.

—Prof. A. W. Fortune of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., received the degree of Ph.D. at the summer convocation of the University of Chicago last week.

—R. A. Doan, the new secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, has removed with his family from Nelsonville, O., to Cincinnati, where they have taken membership in Norwood church.

—Wallace Tuttle, the singing evangelist, will make a short concert tour under the management of a Chicago bureau in November and December. Miss Mary Tuttle of Springfield, O., will accompany her brother as pianist and soprano soloist. Mr. Tuttle gave several concerts at Bethany Park in August which were favorably received.

—Ellis B. Barnes of Richmond, Ky., held a short evangelistic meeting at Macedonia, Ky., resulting in 24 additions to the membership.

Let the Deficit Be Wiped Out

An Appeal for Worthy Gifts in September.

At the beginning of September the loss in the receipts of the Foreign Society in comparison with last year is more than $25,000. Every effort should be made to wipe this entirely out during the month, before the books close for the year. We believe it can be done. Early in June when retrenchment became necessary, the deficit for the year was almost $30,000. A small gain has already been made but it will take a loyal and self-sacrificing response during this critical month in order that the receipts may be brought up to those of last year.

September is the most important month of the year. Last year the Society received $134,000 during the month; this year we must go far beyond $150,000. During the closing month of the year the income is watched with the keenest anxiety, both from the fields and from the office.

It is hard to realize how deep is the suffering on the fields because of the necessary retrenchment which went into effect two months ago. The missionaries bravely bear the cut in their salaries without complaint, but they speak with the keenest anxiety about the suffering of the native work and workers. We must have such a rally in September as will hearten these loyal toilers at the front.

In Japan our native churches out of their deep poverty have assumed the amount of the reduction in payments to the Japanese preachers. At Jubbulpore, India, the native congregation has pledged a tithe of the income of all its members to help in these times of need. These people are extremely poor, some of the students only receiving three or four dollars a month. In other fields like sacrifices are being made. Surely with our great abundance we can practice real self-denial and make a worthy showing in December. Every resource should be enlisted. The churches, the Sunday-schools, Endeavor Societies, and individuals should rally as never before. If the offering has been delayed, by all means take it in September. If the church has not yet taken an additional emergency offering, now is the time to do it. It would be almost a crime at this critical moment to allow any offering, or a part of one, to lie in a church treasury unremitted. The prayers of nearly two hundred missionaries will be ascending for the supporters of the work at the home base during this closing month. The native workers in their anxiety and suffering will be waiting for news from our churches in America. Let us make this the greatest September in our history. Let us wipe out the deficit with offerings worthy of the great work we have undertaken and thus gladden and encourage the hearts of those at the front who depend upon us for support.

A GREAT YEAR IS OPENING

For the

BETHANY SYSTEM

of Sunday School Literature

Many New Schools are now sending in their orders for the graded year, which begins October 1. They have carefully examined other graded literature and discovered that the Bethany System is absolutely supreme. There is nothing published that compares with it.

The past year has brought us the largest patronage we have received--about 40 per cent increase over our best previous year. We are expecting another fine increase in our volume of Sunday School patronage in the coming year.

Made For Each Other

THE DISCIPLES AND CONGREGATIONALISTS SEEM TO BE MADE FOR EACH OTHER.

They have enough in common to afford a sure basis for congenial fellowship, and their dissimilarities are of such a nature as to stimulate and instruct without irritating and inhibiting each other.

I.

Both bodies are evangelical. They accept the Bible as the Word of God and strive to follow its teachings. Both own Jesus Christ as their divine head and savior and hold his will supreme in their lives. What he commands, Congregationalists and Disciples stand ready to do.

The two bodies do not understand the Bible alike, or Christ's commands alike, in all points, even as the Disciples do not among themselves understand them alike or the Congregationalists among themselves.

But neither communion is more loyal to Christ and the Scriptures than the other.

Given this fundamental like-mindedness there are certain outstanding contrasts which suggest the possibility of mutual enrichment through union.

II.

There is first the obvious fact that in territorial position in the United States these bodies supplement each other. The Congregationalists are an eastern people; the Disciples belong to the middle west. In the six New England states the Disciples have a membership of only 2,780, while the Congregationalists have 267,377. In the five states of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Missouri, and Illinois, the Congregationalists number 115,546, while the Disciples number 681,000. Of the Congregationalists' membership in these five states Illinois alone holds 57,000, mostly in Chicago and the northern third of the state where the Disciples are but little more numerous than in New England.

In the states of Tennessee, Texas and Oklahoma, the Congregationalist membership is 8,500. In the same states the Disciples number 217,000.

In Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota the Disciples number 13,000, the Congregationalists 83,000.

In Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado and the Pacific states there is no marked difference in strength.

The Disciples, moreover, are in large part a rural people. The Congregationalists are strong in the cities.

It is apparent that the union of these two bodies besides emancipating each from its provincialism would create an instrument capable of rendering much greater service to the Kingdom of God than they can render as separate communions.

III.

A second point to consider is the respective ecclesiastical organization of the two bodies. Both are congregational. No elaborate reconstructions would be necessary. We have no need to wait long for machinery to be put into operation. No ecclesiastical authority from above need be invoked. Our common Christian democracy makes it possible to begin the union whenever two congregations are disposed to unite.

IV.

Congregationalist religious thought has always gone out along the lines of political and social justice. Her scholars and preachers have ever set the Kingdom of God ahead of the Church. As a consequence Congregational effort has been expended more upon the community than upon itself as a church within the community.

With the Disciples, on the other hand, the church consciousness is intense and militant. Disciple history nowhere touches vitally a social or political crisis. The civil war, for example, found their churches on both sides of Mason and Dixon's line and passed without making a breach in their fellowship.

The Disciples have a passion for building up the Church. Their devotion to the Church takes precedence of political or social interests. If in the Church their social and political problems are not solved they are at least transcended.

These two ideals—that of a redeemed society and that of a redeeming Church—need each other. Congregationalism needs the institutional feeling so strong with the Disciples. The Disciples need the vision of a Christian social order and a vital connection with civil progress which is Congregationalism's glory.

A united communion of over two million souls such as Disciples and Congregationalists together would comprise, would make the most potent instrument for personal religion and social justice which our American life affords.

V.

Closely related to this consideration is the contrast in the respective methods of propaganda charactertistic of the two bodies. Congregationalists emphasize culture; Disciples emphasize evangelism. The Disciples are by instinct propagandists. Every pastor is an evangelist. The ingathering impulse is fundamental.

Weak in its evangelism, the Congregational fellowship is stronger and richer than the Disciples in its cultural ideals and resources. It has been the greatest educational force of all the Christian denominations in American history. And its religious growth has been carried on in the quiet and steady ways of instruction and nurture rather than in the more spectacular ways of the evangelist.

Here again Disciples and Congregationalists need each other. One needs the dynamic of evangelistic passion to keep its culture religious, the other needs trained insight both to refine its evangelistic methods and to conserve and perfect its evangelistic results.

These are some of the more salient considerations that suggest the peculiar desirability of union between Congregationalists and Disciples.

A union of two such groups of Christians involving differences, disagreements, contrasts, and rejoicing in them as a positive enrichment of the united body, would be a clear and beautiful demonstration of the kind of unity for which our Lord prayed.

It is to be hoped that both Congregationalists and Disciples will continue the discussion until substantial and measurable progress toward unity shall be actually begun.

Marion Preserves Neutrality

BY FRANCES BARING

In the Christian Register.

ARCHIBALD BOYCE, ESQ., United States consul at Hong-Kong, leaned back in his long rattan chair, and as he looked across the veranda at his daughter his face was troubled.

"You are such a dear silly girl," he remarked sorrowfully. "I am sure when I was a boy of eighteen I should have known better than to make such a ridiculous suggestion."

They were both resting after "tiffin" during those terribly hot, depressing hours of early afternoon for which the tropics are famous. Hong-Kong heat in August is known to the English residents and there is a saying that only fools and Americans stay there in the summer months. This month, however, matters were quite different. The European war had changed many things.

"All I can say"—Marion Joyce, immaculate in white linen, shrugged her shoulders impatiently—"is this: America is supposed to be strictly neutral, and if I want to give a party for Elsa von Weissenbach before she and her father return to Bremen I can't see why the war will make the slightest difference. I had thought of giving a picnic supper over by the new fortifications, but you say that is impossible. Why?"

"Quite impossible, because the British government has put the whole district under martial law. Then don't you see, Marion, that the English residents won't mind meeting the Russian, French, or even the Italian consuls and their families, but they'll draw the line at the German consul?"

"It's ridiculous." The American girl's blue eyes grew indignantly bright. "We are all just the same human beings we were before this hideous war broke out. Pierre Ravi was quite devoted to Elsa all last spring; and the Marovitches and Signorina Pologna and Elsa have always been very intimate." With a certain charming irritation of manner Marion Boyce pushed back the chair in which she had been sitting, and stepped into the inner room. "It's much cooler indoors, father," she called a moment later. "I'll turn on the punkah, and you can take your nap in here on the sofa. Let's not talk about the party any more. The German mail-boat doesn't come until next Friday, and I can arrange everything with two days' notice."

The American consul, a tall man of about fifty, climbed out of the chair. "No sleep this afternoon, dear," he responded quickly. "I have had the work of six men to do in my office since August 1. Do you mind ringing for the bearers? I'm afraid I shan't get back for tea. You think over this 'neutral party' carefully. I wish I could make you see that in times like these each man, German or English, must be loyal to his own country first, and that friendships must take a secondary position. No matter how fond Herr von Weissenbach is of the French consul or of some of the Englishmen here, he knows, and we know, that his first duty is to his country. And our duty to ours is to be strictly neutral."

Two shadows darkened the windows. Moey Sat and Ci Wong had brought the sedan chair in which they were to carry the "Melican Master" to his office in the town below. Mr. Boyce, taking his sun-hat from the table, gave one searching glance about the room; but so swift was that glance that he overlooked the fact that the heavy door of the safe marked "Consulate of the United States of America" was slightly ajar. Then giving Marion a farewell kiss, which was heartily returned, he left the room, and in a few moments the soft pad-pad of the barefooted Chinamen could be heard, as they descended the path to the town.

With a little discontented sigh Marion, languidly holding a volume of Kipling, stretched herself out on the sofa underneath the whirling electric punkah. It was shameful, she decided with the impulsiveness of youth, that her father should imagine that Elsa's old friends would not come gladly and eagerly to wish her a "bon voyage." In the eight months she and her father had been in Hong-Kong she had had many such merry informal parties, sometimes picnics, sometimes for tennis, and occasionally sailing expeditions, within the confines of Hong-Kong Harbor. Eventually Marion fell asleep, lulled by the monotonous whirring of the punkah, and she woke only when roused by the sound of voices on the veranda outside. As she tumbled off the sofa, and gave a hasty poke and pat to her neatly coiled hair, she recognized first the gutteral tones of Herr von Weissenbach, and then the clearer, more modulated voice of the French consul, M. Ravi.

"Do come inside," she exclaimed, rushing hospitably to the door. "I'm so sorry father is still at the office, but come right in, and I'll ring for tea."

Both men bowed low with continental courtesy.

"Apres vous, monsieur!" cried M. Ravi, politely, pointing to the door.

"That I vill not allow." Her von Weissenbach stood aside for the other man to enter first, with a suavity of demeanor matching his.

"Such good manners!" cried Marion, merrily, drawing up two of the most comfortable chairs. She liked both men very much in a friendly way. Pierre Ravi was a bachelor of about forty, with a delightful sense of humor. The German consul, a stocky little gray-haired man with shrewd eyes and a warm heart, was almost as good a friend of her father's as his daughter Elsa was of hers. So after sending the houseboy Loo for tea and muffins Marion chatted guilelessly along for at least five minutes before she began to be conscious of a certain atmosphere of constraint surrounding the two men.

"What a beautiful day!" announced Pierre Ravi.

"It is good," exclaimed von Weissenbach unenthusiastically.

"Ravissant, superb!" continued the French consul, placing his cane and Panama hat on a neighboring chair.

"Ja, ja," said the German, rather grumpily.

Marion, feeling a trifle uneasy, caught her breath, and then started to talk further, about the new chemists' shop, of the work in the mission hospital, of the repairs on the English church, of anything, in fact, that had no relation to war. Somehow she felt increasingly and surprisingly uncomfortable. Why did Pierre Ravi wear that very inscrutable smile? Why did Herr von Weissenbach wriggle so nervously in his chair? Could it be really true, as her father had said, that these terrible devastating conflicts in Europe would put an end to friendships between men of different nations, friendships which had lasted indeed many years in this land of Hong-Kong?

As Loo slipped quietly into the room with the tea-table, Marion heard the well-known measured tread of the sedan chair bearers. For a moment she jumped to her feet, thinking that her father had returned. Instead of the American consul, however, the tall, broad-shouldered Russian consul stepped through the doorway.

"Good-afternoon, Miss Marion," he said in excellent English. "I hope you and your father will let us stay for tea. My wife and Captain Stevens are in the garden, but they'll appear in a second." He had been speaking in a brisk, light-hearted manner. Suddenly he noticed the sturdy figure of the German consul. His expression became a shade less friendly.

"Do sit down, Mr. Marovitch." Marion began to feel even more uneasy. There was something increasingly antagonistic about the German consul's attitude, though he greeted the new-comer in the most deferential of tones.

However, Marion made the tea. Mme. Marovitch and the English captain came in and completed the circle about the tea-table, and M. Ravi, almost as if he perceived the American girl's embarrassment, passed cream and muffins, with his best drawing-room manner. In fact, a change gradually crept over the group. Whereas previously the German consul had been more at ease than the rest of the party, he now looked more uncomfortable than any of them. He wriggled, and shuffled; he dropped two lumps of sugar and then a large muffin butter-side down upon the floor. With an ejaculation purely German he snatched his handkerchief from an inner coat pocket. Out came the handkerchief, and something else with it. A packet of papers fell out, dropping first on von Weissenbach's knees, and then slipped to the floor. Oblivious of muffins or his teacup the German consul bent down to seize that packet. Quick as he was, another man was quicker, namely, M. Ravi. Marion Boyce, busily engaged in consuming her muffin, tossed a smiling glance at the Russian consul's wife. Both of them appreciated M. Ravi. With a bow the French consul was about to hand the little packet to its owner. Suddenly a strong hand was laid on his arm, and the quiet, drawling voice of the English captain said in his ear, "Let's have a look at those drawings."

Instantly Herr von Weissenbach sprang to his feet. "I beg of you," he cried. "I am in a gentleman's house: restore to me at once my private property." His face grew crimson with determination and anger. Marion leaned forward, her lips parted. Then Mr. Marovitch spoke; he had always been a warm friend of the German consul.

"Come, now, Captain Stevens," he said, "this won't do at all. War or no war, this is an insult to Herr von Weissenbach. Until he sails he is under the protection of your own government."

"That's all very good." The English officer was glancing at the papers even as he spoke. "But I decline to return to Herr von Weissenbach these drawings. They are complete plans of our new fortifications!"

"What!" Mr. Ravi and Mr. Marovitch spoke in a single breath.

Herr von Weissenbach threw back his head. "Still they are mine; and I insist on their being returned immediately."

"You'll be jailed for this," said the English captain, curtly. A second passed, and no one spoke. Suddenly Marion Boyce stepped forward and held out her hand to the English captain.

"Give me those papers," she said. The officer laid them in her hand. Clasping them tightly the American consul's daughter faced the assembled company. "This is neutral ground," she said slowly and distinctly. "You have no right to take possession of these papers, Captain Stevens, under the roof of the American Consulate."

"If you return those drawings to him," the English captain now broke in on the girl, "you are giving to Germany a complete set of plans of the Hong-Kong forts. These gentlemen here," and he turned to M. Ravi and the Russian consul, "are, I feel sure, with me completely in this matter."

"Yes, Mademoiselle." M. Ravi nodded gravely. "You must give them up to us. This matter is no longer a game."

"It is no longer a game. Nein." Herr von Weissenbach interrupted the Frenchman. "But I claim those papers as my own. Fraulein Marion, whatever that packet contains I have only done my duty to my government in obtaining it. This is, as you say, 'neutral ground.' Therefore I say that my property should be restored to me without delay; otherwise your American government will be answerable. Ach, my dear child!" For a moment tears glistened in his kindly eyes. "War is a dreadful thing. But each of us must first of all do his own duty toward his country."

Mme. Marovitch whispered a few quick words to her husband at this juncture. The Russian consul began to speak in a voice like steel.

"Return that packet to him if you like, Mademoiselle, but he will not get far from this house with it in his possession. The plans of the new fortifications are not trifles."

"This is neutral ground," Marion repeated; and as she did she stepped back a little distance toward one corner of the room. "It would be unfair to return them to Herr von Weissenbach," she went on, her voice a little unsteady. "And it would be useless, too. I see that you intend to take the plans from him, at all costs. But it would be equally unfair to give them to you, Captain Stevens. There's just one thing for me to do." M. Ravi, ever quick in his intuitions, sprang for her like a cat, but Marion with a single leap had thrust the packet into the safe of the United States Consulate and slammed the door fast.

Bright-eyed, almost weeping, yet triumphant, she turned to her guests. "At the end of the war," she said softly, "your papers will be returned to you, Herr von Weissenbach." Discomfited yet curiously satisfied, the individual members of the tea-party took their leave. Last to depart were the Marovitches.

"You are a diplomat," said the Russian consul's wife, with a laugh. "You should be a Russian."

Marion with a weary little smile shook her warmly by the hand, not trusting herself to speak. An hour later, half-laughing, half in tears, she recounted the afternoon's events to her father. "I've thought it over," she concluded, "and I have decided. One neutral party of this kind is enough for me!"

THE NEED OF THE HOUR.

Great is our heritage of hope, and great
The obligation of our civic fate.

Fling forth the triple-colored flag to dare
The bright, untraveled highways of the air.
Blow the undaunted bugles, blow, and yet
  Let not the boast betray us to forget.
For there are high adventures for this hour—
Tourneys to test the sinews of our power,
For we must parry—as the years increase—
The hazards of success, the risks of peace!

What need we, then, to guard and keep us whole?
What do we need to prop the State? We need
The fine audacities of honest deed;
The homely old integrities of soul;
The swift temerities that take the part
Of outcast Right—the wisdom of the heart;
Brave hopes that Mammon never can detain,
Nor sully with his gainless clutch for gain.

We need the Cromwell fire to make us feel
The public honor or the public trust
To be a thing as sacred and august
As some white altar where the angels kneel.
We need the faith to go a path untrod,
The power to be alone and vote with God.

The Questioner

BY JOSEPH FORT NEWTON

> "In that day ye shall ask me nothing."—JOHN 17:23.

WITH this text St. John of the Cross reaches the top of that Ladder of Love built by the genius of his faith, after the manner of Bernard and Aquinas before him. Ten steps must be ascended on the mystical staircase and the last is beyond this world. The soul that attains the top of the secret stair possesses the clear vision of God and is made one with him. It is a hidden way, but as we climb up step by step the outlook is wider and the vista longer. "But until that day," adds the saintly writer, "although the soul moves ever upward, something remains concealed." If this be true of one of the finest and purest minds, how much more must it be true of the many who walk the low levels of life in this dimly lighted world.

What wonder, then, that man is ever a Questioner, and how deep must be the meaning of that dark, cryptic word among the unrecorded sayings of Jesus, "They who question shall reign." Our mortal life is divided, like ancient Gaul, into three parts—the known, the mysterious, and the unknown. Kant saw the field of human knowledge as a tiny island in a lonely mourning sea, surrounded by vast unfathomable waters. Others have thought of our humanity as a band of pilgrims landing upon a strange shore, slowly making their way inland. Only the coast-line is known, and the hinterland remains unexplored. Whatever the figure, all admit that the known is small, the mysterious vast, and the unknown stretches away into the shadowy distance.

QUESTIONS COME TO THE THOUGHTFUL.

Such is the human situation, and for the thoughtful man questions come early and stay late, as witness my dear dead friend whom some of you may know as the author of that noble story, "Under Pontius Pilate,"—one of the few tales of the time of Christ that is true to the ideas and atmosphere of that age. Late in March, during his serious illness, he composed a little poem which death gave him time to retouch, and he purged it of everything but the most essential feelings of his heart, leaving only the deep sincerities of his soul. Those who knew him will discern in the poem a faithful self-portrait, even in the order of its elements—first his Work, then his Friends, and last of all his Soul ever yearning toward perfection. And those who loved him, reading this, his last message, will find in the man the answer to his questions:

If I should die—
How would it be with this, my work
That I have builded here so nigh
Completion, and would never shirk
For any pleasure floating lightly by
To tempt me from my purpose?
Would it fall
Into a hopeless ruin, incomplete?
Or would some other man my thought repeat,
Building it higher still—using my all
And adding his—achieve my aim so high
If I should die?

If I should die—
How would it be with those I loved
And who loved me? Ah! would they ever sigh
Their sorrow at my loss so far removed—
And in their day-dreams would they even try
To make my image live again? Or would the world
Hurry them onward by its ceaseless flow
Of joy and sorrow ever new; and so
They would forget me wholly—blindly whirled
On toward that dark abyss, so distant, yet so nigh—
If I should die?

If I should die—
How would it be with this, my soul—
This vague, unseen, evasive I,
That strives, in spite of countless failures, toward the goal
Of infinite perfection? Is the ceaseless stress
Of my soul's upward struggle meaningless?
A bitter mockery?—and my very soul
Naught but a chance assemblage—no true whole—
Mere clustered sparks that swiftly upward fly
For a few glowing moments? Would this be I
If I should die?

About all thought of personal fate rise all those old, haunting questions which have so long baffled our race. Why do we live this fleeting life amidst such risk and peril? Why the turbid ebb and flow of human misery, the so frequent victory of injustice, and the triumph of ruthless cruelty in nature and in human nature? Why is it that truth comes so slowly, and the best causes are so often wrecked by foolish friends? Why is it that after great cost and hazard a step is made in advance, only to be followed by reaction which leaves it open to debate whether any advance has been made? Why are splendid gifts given to those who make such poor use of them, or, like Oscar Wilde, sink down in unutterable disgrace? Why are some lives pursued as if by a Nemesis of ill fate, unmerciful disaster following fast, and following faster? Why should virtue be clad in rags and vice flaunt itself in robes of silk or fur? Why is the cup of death pressed to the lips of youth, and young love crushed in the budding? Why should fell disease seize a child and work its hideous will, apparently to no purpose at all, and night come in the morning? Why should war ravage the earth, and the prospect of its end be so dark and doubtful?

LET US BE HONEST.

Let us be true to our own ignorance and say honestly, that we do not know why such things should be. Surely it need not surprise us that there are so many unanswered and seemingly unanswerable questions, it would be stranger were it not so. No, the wonder is that such questions should ever have arisen in the mind of man. The animals do not ask these questions. The fact that man is troubled by them shows that they are put to him as well as by him, and mayhap, as Plato thought, it is the pressure of the answer that puts the question. There must be an answer to all these questions, else man would never have asked them. Since an interrogation point is a symbol of human life, everything depends upon our attitude toward the questions that baffle us. What shall that attitude be? First, let it be one of confident assurance that there is an answer in the back of the book, lest we come to think of ourselves as greater than the universe—that will enable us to work at the problem with hope. Second, let us face the questions of life squarely, measuring our full length against them, grapple them with all our strength, knowing that by struggle we shall become the better able to receive an answer when we are ready for it and worthy of it. Third, let us refuse to accept an answer, no matter how seemingly complete and convincing, which leaves us morally impotent, or which tends to justify moral indolence. And fourth, let us look into our hearts and make sure of the reasons why we ask such questions, that so we may not mistake an idle curiosity for an earnest desire to add to the power and raise the quality of our life.

THE ROOT QUESTION.

Now the root of the whole matter, the first question and the last, is this: What is the character of God and His spirit and purpose toward mankind? Answer this ancient question and all other questions are answered. Until that question is answered, no other question is of any great consequence. Agnosticism may give it up, idealism may seem to ignore it, but evermore it returns to haunt us. Face it we must soon or late, if our human life is to have worth or meaning, much less epic nobility and prophecy. Only a lack of imagination can enable men to say that duty and ideals will retain their hold upon us if the Universe is indifferent to us. Thanks to the human heart by which we live, integrity will maintain itself for a time by the momentum of the past, but not for long. Pain and Sin are tiny words, but they involve terrible issues, not to be dismissed by a few remarks about the excellence and the glory of moral victory. No, there must be real sympathy for suffering and real conquest of evil by the grace of Another than ourselves.

THE AGE LONG QUEST.

Hence the age-long quest for a Lost Word — some great comprehending Word believed to exist, and which will give us the clue, if not the key to the answer, to all our questions. For some of us that master Word is Christ, for that he lets light through all the shadows that haunt our human way, transfiguring the immemorial tragedy of nature and history, even the old backward and abysm of a groaning creation and the slow climb of evolution. He did not simply suggest an answer to the deepest of all questions: He is an answer to it. There is no theoretical answer to the riddle why sin and evil exist. Who by thinking can find out God? What we need is not to find out God, but find God —not a dogma about God, but the reality of his presence and the mystery of his mercy. Jesus revealed God, not in theory, but in the actual unveiling of a Love which heals suffering, cleanses sin, and makes sense out of what else would be a tangled maze of mysteries and of shadows. He is the supreme historic disclosure of that in God which most concerns humanity—his character, his moral purpose, his self-giving love, his beauty, his pity. Such capacity for sacrifice, such self-forgetting, all-embracing love must be in God, because they were in him. On any conceivable theory, that must be true. Since that is so, suffering has an eternal sympathy to redeem it, because in all our afflictions God is afflicted. In the same way when we sin there is an eternal Passion of God, the depth and meaning of which we know not nor can even dream, which conquers evil by cleansing man from it—making him what he could not have been without the risk and peril and pain of it.

JESUS UNVEILS WORLD'S HEART.

How did Jesus become an unveiling of what lies at the heart of this dark world, and thus the answer to all our questions, as he is the satisfaction of all our needs? Not only by what he said, but also and much more by what he was and what he did, he wrought out the answer to the riddle of life. He faced the ultimate tragedy beyond which we can imagine nothing more horrible—Love crucified by Hate, Purity put to death by cunning Baseness, Justice slain by brutal cruelty—and found an ineffable light hidden in the blackest mystery which can shake the soul of man. Thus, by an incredible paradox, the darkness of the Cross becomes "the master light of all our seeing." Beyond the power of Love there revealed no man has ever yet been able to imagine anything more Divine, nor will any one ever be able to do so. What that Love means in the height and depth of it, no one may ever hope to tell in our poor, stammering human tongue. It means everything, more than tongue ever said or sung, and all the Christian ages together have not fathomed the wonder of it. Every exclamation with which St. Paul punctured his Epistles is more than justified by the far-reaching reality of it.

Stated in the fewest words, the Life of Jesus would have been impossible unless eternal Love and Truth exist. He revealed that Love which bends low under the burden of another, which bears sins and forgives them; that Pity which suffers with the woe of the world; that heroic Faith and Courage which go steadily to the end, for the sake of the light at the end of the road—what more can any mortal ask to know, or need to know? Once a man knows the God revealed in Christ, what question remains without hope of an answer? We may not be able to state the answer in so many words, but we have the assurance that there is an answer, and that it is wise and just and true. Also, the questioning instinct, the perplexity and pain at the mystery of life in which we find ourselves, is seen to be our point of contact with God. It is He who troubles us and will never let us rest till we know him, and find our rest and reason in him.

EVEN DOUBT TESTIFIES.

Even our doubts of God bear witness to Him, since we could never doubt that which has no basis in existence, for the thought of it would never disturb our minds. Then how much more do our desires bear witness to Him? When once we learn that not only is it "He that is desired," but also "He it is that desireth us,"—he himself the source and inspiration of our heart-hunger for him—then the way is plain for we find ourselves on a path in which Another, not ourselves, has set our feet. We discover, with Pascal, that we already possess, or rather are possessed by, that which we desire. Instead of seeking the satisfaction of our highest desires, we learn to interpret them differently, to rejoice in their vehemence, and to stir them to ever fiercer hunger and thirst after holiness. At last we come to know what Matheson meant when he wrote that strange and flashing line, "O Joy that seeketh me through Pain!" When a soul seeks God passionately, fearlessly, lovingly, it is common to feed upon the fires that once it feared, to rejoice in the pain that once it fled, until it gives a new name for what it once called pain—and calls it life; a new name for what it once called fire—and calls it light. Truly, the life of the spirit is wonderful, and there is no romance half so enthralling as the way of God and the soul.

HOW CAN THESE THINGS BE?

How can these things be, how can we make this deeper life our own, finding that secret stair leading to where, having learned the truth as it is in Jesus, we shall ask nothing else? By communion with him, by fellowship in his life and faith, by following in his way; communion with the God Christ revealed by the method Christ followed—humility, love, sacrifice, prayer, service, obedience. Speak out your desires, your doubts, your failings; do not repress or dissemble them; then you will learn, if you listen, that prayer is answered in its utterance. Commune much with God and you shall know, as Job came to know, that in his presence there is Truth, in his will there is Peace. If your questions are not answered, mayhap you will learn that life was not meant to minister to our curiosity, but to train us by trial till we shall be worthy to hear the answer to the questions our hearts have asked. Life will become a blend of agitation—a deep, thankful grace in the love and mercy of God, and a passionate hunger for more of God.

Always the perplexities on one level of life are solved when we climb to a higher level. Questions which puzzled us at fifteen are forgotten at twenty-five, and at fifty we look back with a smile at the problems of thirty. By the nature of the case, we know the truth only as far and as fast as we can grasp and understand it. Some questions can never be answered upon this earth, but we can know the Answerer and walk humbly before Him all our days, the while we journey toward that day when we shall ask him nothing. For that day will come at last, when all the dark questions which pierced our hearts shall be made plain, every riddle unraveled, every wound healed. Never doubt it, never fear it, since it is the sure word of him who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we are able to think, or dream, or ask. "In that day ye shall ask me nothing!"

Appreciations of F. E. Meigs, Missionary

The following fitting testimonials of the great service of F. E. Meigs will be read with interest. They are penned by those who knew him well. His rugged faith and clear judgment and warm attachments for men close to him gave him great influence.

A GREAT MAN.

When I attended the annual meeting of the Board of Managers of Nanking University last spring, Dr. Bowen, the president of the university, stated to the board that the best organized and most constructive work of Nanking University was being done by Mr. Meigs in his department. He commended the work of Mr. Meigs in the very highest terms, and his death leaves a place which it will be very difficult to fill. Our brotherhood can rejoice in the fact that Mr. Meigs contributed not only in a large way to our mission work, but that he was a factor in the whole Christian work of China. Because of his long, devoted service, when he spoke, others listened. He was a great man.

Cincinnati, O. R. A. Doan.

A CONTINUOUS PURPOSE.

When the news came to me that F. E. Meigs had gone into the great beyond my first thoughts were: "What a persistent and continuous life." More than any man I have ever known he followed the motto: "This one thing I do." He was broad and cosmopolitan in his sympathies, but he realized that God called him to one task. This call found a continuous and varying expression, but it was all to one end. God made him a great teacher and called him to be one of those who believe in the union of all Christians. This talent and this belief he united and made them the passion of his life.

He was willing to put his great talents into the smallest beginnings and to labor across years that would have been discouraging to many men. No matter how difficult the task he felt that God was with him and things must come right in the end.

The very day the news of his death came, I was talking with a traveler who said, "One day I asked: Mr. Meigs, how can you go on in the face of these discouragements?" and he said, "By looking back, twenty-five years. We have gone forward a little every year."

When he first talked of union in educational work every one laughed. When he proposed a better educational association for China, men doubted. When he proposed sweeping reforms men questioned, but today these and a multitude of other things have been accomplished in which he led and helped.

We are saddened at his going but in looking back we marvel at what a single life like that of F. E. Meigs can accomplish when it is consecrated to God and dedicated to a holy service.

A. E. Cory.

A CONSPICUOUS PLACE.

F. E. Meigs occupied a conspicuous place among our missionaries in China. It was largely through his efforts that the union was formed in making the University of Nanking. He was a prominent factor in every onward movement in planting Christianity in China. He was made dean in the university and had the oversight of all Biblical instruction. His worth in the councils in every department of missionary propaganda was fully recognized. When he was compelled to be away from the field on account of a critical surgical operation, it was a great cross to him. He returned to his place of labor as a true missionary hero and wore out what remained of his life.

Hiram, O. O. G. Hertzog.

THEY WORKED TOGETHER.

When I saw the announcement of the death of F. E. Meigs, I sat down and cried. We were in the Sunday school work in Missouri for two and one-half years. I knew him. He was a good and a capable man. The work in China has met with a great loss—first James Ware and now F. E. Meigs.

He was teaching school in Holden, Missouri, or near there, when he united with the Christian church. I think this was under the preaching of J. A. Lord. I was in the State Sunday-school work in 1882. He

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

DR. SCOVILLE UNDER SERIOUS CRITICISM

EVANGELIST Charles Reign Scoville is made to appear in a very unfavorable light by the Christian Standard which publishes in a recent issue an expose of the inner side of two or three union evangelistic meetings led by him and his party of assistants.

The Standard and its reporters are opposed to participation of Disciple evangelists in the leadership of these union meetings on the ground that the subject of baptism by immersion and what they call the "way of salvation" cannot be presented in the way many Disciple evangelists have been in the habit of presenting them.

Dr. Scoville's union meetings are offered as a convincing illustration of the alleged compromise of conscience involved in his leadership of such meetings and also of the hollow and deceptive character of the reports of final results.

A lengthy article written by the pastor of the Disciples church at Aurora, Mo., where one of the most conspicuous union meetings of Dr. Scoville's career was held, goes into considerable detail to show that the meeting was neither an aid to the spirit of unity nor a practical help to the churches.

With this feature of the article we are not now concerned, except to say that if the pastor's querulous and finical attitude as disclosed in his article was possessed by but one or two other participating pastors it is no wonder that the meeting, instead of furthering the cause of unity, was characterized by just such contention behind the scenes as this "inside" report now reveals.

For such ungodliness on the part of Christ's ministers the evangelist and his meeting cannot justly be held responsible.

But our present and deeper interest lies in the moral question raised on Dr. Scoville. No more serious charge can be laid at a minister's door than the charge of insincerity in his fundamental teaching. The Christian Century is a frank opponent of Dr. Scoville's kind of evangelism. We believe it is, in its net result, inimical to the ideals of Christianity. But we have never raised the question of the evangelist's sincerity in his work.

The Christian Standard now raises that question and reiterates its reporter's innuendo in its editorial columns.

The following is taken from the body of the pastor's report:

> After the meeting closed, and as people were making inquiry as to the plan of salvation, and as Scoville had failed, in all five weeks' preaching, to instruct the people in the plain teaching of the Scriptures as to what the Lord would have them do, we went about the task to give them this information. I knew many believed in Scoville, and would have heard him gladly on these fundamental principles, but his mouth was sealed: he could not give out this information and conduct union meetings.
> As other tracts had been put out during the meeting, I thought I would send for Scoville's tract on "One Lord, One Faith and One Baptism." So after the meeting closed I sent to the Standard Publishing Company for one hundred copies. We put these in the hands of people whom we knew to be interested, and such a howl you have never heard come from denominational preachers! They got together and decided something must be done at once. They wrote Scoville (then at Akron, O.) that his tract was being distributed, and that they would head him off from his other appointments if these tracts were not disposed of.
> He denounced me and the church here for our action, when writing to them, but in his letter to me not one word of condemnation comes from his pen. They had him up a tree and begging for mercy. He writes them he would not have had that "old tract follow his union meetings for $1,000 in cash" (not that the tract is not true, but it will keep him from holding union meetings).

Here is an exact quotation from his letter to Rev. Mr. Willis, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of this city:

> "You all know mighty well I gave the churches a square deal, and no one will ever have a chance of doing such a thing again as was done after I left there with this old tract which was born in a hot contest nine years ago when I was holding individual meetings entirely, and which has not been used by me since. It is certainly no fault of mine, and it would not be right or Christian to make me suffer because of some one else's sins."

Thus Bro. Scoville regards it as a great sin to contend for apostolic baptism after a union meeting, even by use of his own tract.

In a footnote the editor adds the information that Dr. Scoville has taken the tract referred to off the market. Editorially, he comments as follows:

> In such a case as that reported from Aurora, Mo., where a New Testament evangelist deliberately repudiates his past teaching and refuses to permit the circulation of his own (and unquestionably Scriptural) setting forth of fundamental Christian truth, the offense is more than a mere preferce for interdenominational work.

What this "more than a mere preference for interdenominational work" may be is made clearer in a subsequent statement as follows:

> Our present confusion is due to two things: First, a good many preachers among us never knew the beauty and power of the plea: and, second, a good many more find that the rewards of evangelism (whether in cash or converts) may be increased by salving sectarianism.

Dr. Scoville, of course, could not be classed with those who never knew what the Standard calls the plea of the Disciples,—his tract is evidence enough on that point—so the editor evidently classes him with those who subordinate their convictions to the rewards attaching to union evangelism.

IS DR. SCOVILLE INSINCERE?

THIS is very serious business. Dr. Scoville has been for many years the most conspicuous evangelist among the Disciples. He has introduced methods that have been widely imitated by the evangelistic craft. He has been put on convention programs and has otherwise made himself conspicuous on convention occasions.

In Disciples' revival meetings he has preached that faith, repentance and immersion in water are the three acts scripturally essential to becoming a Christian. But in union revivals he makes Christians without any reference to immersion at all! and when confronted in a union revival situation with his own published teaching on the "scriptural place" of immersion in the "plan of salvation" he makes the astonishing admission that he would rather lose $1,000 than face the results of the circulation of "that old tract."

We hold with the Standard's editor that Dr. Scoville's course subjects him to the gravest criticism on moral grounds. The public has the right to know whether his union-meeting preaching or his Disciple-meeting preaching represents his real conviction.

If he still believes what he published in "that old tract," he justly rests under the condemnation suggested by the Standard that mercenary or other equally reprehensible motives lie behind his union revival engagements.

If he does not longer believe the teaching of the tract he owes it to the cause of truth and his own integrity to frankly announce his changed conviction.

His apology for the tract in his letter to the Presbyterian minister and his subsequent withdrawal of it from the market leave no doubt in our mind that Dr. Scoville no longer believes the teaching of the tract. This is why we feel that we are doing no unkindness in thrusting home the issue as pointedly and searchingly as we can.

IT is not our purpose to make of Dr. Scoville a scapegoat for others, as the Standard undertakes to do. We do not believe he is a sinner in this respect above hundreds of others.

Our acquaintance with the change that has come over the thinking of the Disciples in the past generation warrants us in saying that there are at least as many as one thousand ministers among the Disciples who no longer hold the view held by Alexander Campbell and most Disciples of a generation ago as to the importance of immersion in the process of becoming a Christian. In their own hearts and in confidential conversations as well as in their practical attitude they freely concede that Congregationalists, Presbyterians and the rest are not unbaptized even though they have not been immersed.

Such men, representing the actual leadership of our movement, have come to think of baptism as a much larger and more meaningful category than the physical act of immersion in water. We believe Dr. Scoville to be among these men and we believe it is his plain duty to declare the change of conviction that has come to him.

Equally plain, it seems to us, is it the duty of every man who holds the larger view, the truly Scriptural view, to declare himself and thus to help free the Disciples of Christ from the hardening and unfraternal legalism that has for so long made our plea for union a contradiction not only in the eyes of our Christian neighbors but in our own hearts.

The hour has come for the Disciples consciously and purposefully to set themselves right with the Word of God, with the will of Christ and with their own souls on this issue.

Dr. Scoville and all men of like mind can no longer afford to rest under the imputation of insincerity with which their work and their consciences are continually disturbed.

AN INDEFENSIBLE PRACTICE

AT THIS season of the missionary year when the books of all the societies are soon to close, the anxiety in the missionary and benevolent offices is mixed with an impulse to sharply rebuke a certain type of church treasurer. The secretaries call our attention to him, but we are certain their words are spoken under inhibition of more than nine-tenths of the feeling that clamors for expression.

He is the church treasurer who allows missionary offerings put into his hands to trickle through his fingers into the current funds of the local church.

We are informed by the secretaries of all the societies that literally many thousands of dollars each year given by the people to the various missionary and benevolent causes are turned from their intended channel into the channel of local support.

This, though actuated by no unamiable purpose, is as bad as it can be. The treasurer is human, of course. The needs of the local church are pressing—coal bills, choir salaries, pastor's salary, interest on mortgage, what not—and the missionary money lies here in the bank. What simpler and more natural thing for the treasurer to do than to temporarily use the mission funds for local needs? Besides, it is easy to reason, is it not all the Lord's cause anyhow?

This habit compels the societies to borrow thousands of dollars every year waiting for these mission funds to be paid back from the current expense treasury. And, a shame it is to say it, too often these funds are never paid back at all.

There is one good remedy, and only one that is absolutely safe. There should be a separate treasury for all mission funds and a separate treasurer to receive and pay out such funds.

Where the budget plan is used there should be a separate budget for missions rather than a division between local and missionary interests on a percentage basis. This percentage plan is nearly always disastrous.

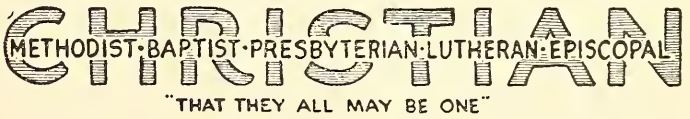
We do not believe that the churches have yet reached the stage where a level offering for all Christian work is possible. Offerings must still be made for this cause and for that. The budget plan, dividing between the home church and the mission field, is a business like co-ordination; but this should not, in the average church, do away with the dual treasurership.

A missionary treasurer can be trusted to see that all funds committed to him are appropriated to the agencies for which they were intended.

And he ought to be trained to see that they are forwarded promptly, for the need is always acute.

A SUGGESTIVE SYMBOL

IRVING S. Chenoweth, pastor First Christian Church, Philadelphia, heads his weekly parish paper with the name of the church, using this bold and suggestive line for the word "Christian:"



This is a singularly happy and instructive way of symbolizing the thing the Disciples advocate and strive to practice. It means, obviously, that First Church in Philadelphia intends to be not a sectarian church but to transcend sectarianism.

It seems to say that those named Methodists, Presbyterains, etc., are Christians, just as truly as those who call themselves Christians only.

It seems to plead that that they who now wear sectarian names should allow their sectarian names to be swallowed up in the great common name Christian.

And finally it seems to declare it to be the purpose of the particular church that bears this mystic symbol to maintain a fellowship as wide and catholic as the Christian Church itself—receiving into its membership any and everyone upon whose forehead Christ has written the new name.

The Christian Century does not go in much for mottoes and slogans and pat devices of words—often these have misled the churches and injured the cause of truth. But here is one which preaches a constant sermon, mystical enough not to lend itself to dogmatism, and yet obvious enough to make vital contact with reality.

Perhaps our readers see in it other suggestions besides those we have pointed out. If so, we will be pleased to hear from them.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Winona Assembly Saved After Going Into Bankruptcy.

The Presbyterian assembly at Winona, Ind., which has attracted large crowds year after year, fell into financial troubles recently and it seemed for a time that it might have to cease operations. A re-organization has been effected with William Jennings Bryan as president. It is prophesied by the friends of the institution that the assembly will have no further troubles.

Russian Methodists Hindered by War.

The Methodists have made a beginning of work in Russia and Dr. George A. Simons is the superintendent of the work in that country. He reports that a reactionary movement in Russia since the war began has subjected all free church movements to close scrutiny. One Methodist preacher has been killed in army service. The annual conference was recently held with a good attendance.

Archbishop of Canterbury, Ill, But With Good Chance to Recover.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is the leading figure of the Episcopal church through the English-speaking world. It is reported that he has had a recurrence of an illness with which he was troubled two years ago. The prognostications of his recovery are reassuring.

Colored People Are Mainly Baptists.

At the present time it is stated that the Baptists have a great preponderance in their hold upon the colored people. Sixty-one per cent of all colored Christians are of this faith. Roman Catholic propaganda among the negroes has made headway in recent years.

Study Urban Following of Various Denominations.

Various denominations appeal to the cities in different ways. It is stated that only five percent of the Methodists are in cities of over three hundred thousand while the Chirstian Scientists have sixty per cent of their members in such cities.

Methodist Bishop Would Restrain Pastors from Entering Evangelistic Field.

Bishop Berry has contributed a striking article recently to the Methodist Times on the tendency of pastors to rush into the field of professional evangelism. He deplores this tendency and takes an attitude favorable to pastoral evangelism. This attitude is characteristic of the great leaders of the denomination at the present time. Methodist journals are suggesting that the unrest among pastors who seek the evangelistic field is largely due to the financial rewards attached to this kind of service.

Hold County Fairs in Interest of Rural Church.

The rural church movement has taken new form in Nebraska where Rev. J. C. Wilson, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Raymond, has led in the holding of religious county fairs. There are addresses on agriculture, exhibits of farm products, and discussions of the interests of the rural church. The attendance at these gatherings has grown until it has reached the thousands.

Great Leader is Spared After Long Illness.

It is now possible to announce the recovery of Dr. Francis E. Clark, head of the Christian Endeavor movement of the world. He is sixty-four years old and has gone through a siege of typhoid fever, but his exemplary life has left him reserve strength to conquer his disease. Christian Endeavorers all over the world will be cheered by the good news from the bedside of this great man.

War Interrupts Relations of Old Catholics and Episcopalians.

The Old Catholics of Europe are those who broke fellowship with the Vatican at the time of the declaration of infallibility of the pope. They recognize the pope as "primus inter pares" though they are not now in fellowship with him. They reject the doctrine of the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary. These Old Catholics are mostly in Germany and Holland. The war has largely interrupted the friendly relations between them and the Established church of England.

Investment Harms Great Preacher, Who, Nevertheless, Determines to Make Good.

The preacher has even been attracted to far-away investments like a moth to the flame. This time the victim is a shining mark in the person of Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, of Brooklyn. He backed a timber enterprise on the Pacific coast which went bad. Unlike many ministers who have been involved in such an enterprise, he proposes to reimburse every person who lost money through the ill-starred enterprise and to this end he will devote the proceeds of his lectures, books, and other work. Like Walter Scott, and Mark Twain, he must work for many weary years with a burden on his shoulders.

Dr. MacArthur Resigns After Eighteen Months in Baltimore.

Dr. R. S. MacArthur, president of the Baptist World Alliance, has resigned the pastorate of the First Baptist church of Baltimore after eighteen months of service. He is going to England and Scotland soon for an extended trip visiting churches.

Ex-President Taft on "Billy" Sunday

Speaking before the national convention of "Unitarian and Other Christian Churches" at San Francisco, Former President Taft, who is president of the convention took occasion pointedly to refer to current popular revivalism and its most outstanding leader, Billy Sunday. Mr. Taft said: "During the last two or three years we have witnessed the work of a revivalist who has spoken to thousands and thousands and aroused many to a profession of orthodox faith and conversion to a better life. It is said that the good he has done in cities he has visited is evidenced by the permanent betterment of their moral tone. I am not prepared to deny that he has stirred many to more useful lives, but I venture to think that the good he has done has been neutralized by the detrimental attacks he delivers against ministers of all faiths. There is great danger in the growing lack of respect for authority, based on character, intellect, office and experience, and an uplifting movement finding its chief attraction in confirming that lack of respect can not be permanently useful. Nor can a coarseness of speech, a vulgarity of illustration, a shocking irreverence, be justified as a necessary means of reaching the hearts and fastening the attention of an audience of persons, however untutored or unrefined. There is a difference between such a style and the simplicity of language and homeliness of illustration and the force of direct appeal to the plain people like that which Moody used with great power and effect. Moody spoke in the language of the psalmist and the prophets, and the sermon on the mount. It would be difficult to find anything in common between these fountains of language, pure and undefiled, and the slangy aphorisms and violent epithets reported to have fallen from the lips of this latest revivalist. Revivals of this kind can not permanently affect the religious and moral progress of the country. Individual instances of good results will doubtless occur and persist, but on the whole they are to be treated as an ephemeral manifestation of religious excitement, in a muckraking period now passing, which in the coming decade will seem bubbles in retrospect."

Lesson for October 3.

ELIJAH IN NABOTH'S VINEYARD.

Golden Text: Be sure your sin will find you out. Numbers 32:23.

Lesson I Kings 21. Verses 11-20. Memory verses 17-19.

(11) And the men of his city, even the elders and the nobles who dwelt in his city, did as Jezebel had sent unto them, according as it was written in the letters which she had sent unto them. (12) They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people. (13) And the two men, the base fellows, came in and sat before him; and the base fellows bare witness against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did curse God and the king. Then they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him to death with stones. (14) Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, Naboth is stoned, and is dead. (15) And it came to pass, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money; for Naboth is not alive but dead. (16) And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth, the Jezreelite, to take possession of it.

(17) And the word of Jehovah came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying, (18) Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, who dwelleth in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to take possession of it. (19) And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith Jehovah, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith Jehovah, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine. (20) And Ahab said to Elijah, Hast thou found me, O mine enemy? And he answered, I have found thee, because thou hast sold thyself to do that which is evil in the sight of Jehovah.

Verse by Verse.

11. His city. Jezreel, about twenty miles north of Samaria.—Elders and the nobles. Those in authority in the city.—Did as Jezebel had sent. The ready submission of the elders and nobles shows how well she had them under control.

12. Proclaimed a fast. They proclaimed a fast to cover up their misconduct.—Naboth on high. They made the case as public as possible.

13. Two men. Under the Mosiac law the testimony of two witnesses was necessary to condemn one to death.—Naboth did curse God and the king. Had he been charged with cursing the king alone, he could have been put to death, but the other charge gave a pious appearance to their zeal.—They carried him forth out of the city. This was according to law, for the city must not be polluted with blood.—And stoned him to death. The prescribed manner of inflicting the death penalty.

14. They sent to Jezebel. They had yielded to her plot and are making their report. They had been instrumental in murdering an innocent man.

15. Jezebel said to Ahab. The influence of Jezebel is clearly seen here. A woman's influence is for good or ill.—Take possession of the vineyard. The vineyard cost among other things the sin of covetousness, lying, perjury and murder.

16. Jezreel. It is on the Plain of Esdraelon. It may have been the summer residence of Ahab. The modern name of the city is Zarin.—Take possession of it. It may have been that Ahab took possession because there were no heirs, and it reverted to the crown.

17. The word of Jehovah. A common expression in the Old Testament, which indicates the prophet's consciousness of the messenger of God.

18. To meet Ahab. Elijah met Ahab at the beginning of the drought, and here at the close. When the prophet met him it was as sudden as the first meeting.—In the vineyard of Naboth. The prophet was given explicit directions as to where Ahab was at the time.—To take possession of it. The satisfaction he expected out of it was soon turned into bitterness.

Covetousness

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

A more vivid picture of national depravity could scarcely be painted than we find in our lesson. We have drawn for us the picture of an unscrupulous magistracy, a demoralized people, a cruel and treacherous despotism, almost unparalleled in history The tragedy here presented was opened with a fast, proclaimed ostensibly to avert from the nation the judgments of Jehovah, supposed to have been provoked by the alleged blasphemy and idolatry of Naboth. It was cruel murder in the name of law and religion, under the guise of zeal for the offended majesty of God; the cause of which was covetousness. Jezebel was the real instigator and executor of the crime. Ahab was just as evil at heart as his wife, although not so daring in public life. His rebellion against Jehovah had been long and obstinate. Many causes led to this type of life. No single act or line of influence could produce characters like Ahab and Jezebel, however powerful it might be; but a multitude or rather insignificant acts give the startling result. For this reason a very large number of men and women go astray.

One of the great words of Jesus was "Take heed, and keep yourselves from all covetousness." It is a sin common to all ages and all peoples. Tolstoi tells of a man who had received permission to possess as much land as he could get around from sunrise to sunset. He started at the moment of sunrise and walked leisurely along. Soon he reflected that the faster he walked the more land he would receive. He quickened his pace, then broke into a run. The fever burned in his veins. The word with him at that time was more! more!! more!! With tremendous energy he forced his body to the last possible exertion, and, just as the sun was setting, he reached the goal—and dropped dead. His men made a hole in the ground just long enough and wide enough to hold his body and buried him. The world is filled with men and women who, in one way or another, might have their life histories written in the language of this story.

Ahab's enemy was not the prophet, but the sin he sheltered in his own heart and life. How common it is for people to blame the preacher, Providence, or their neighbors for the sins for which they themselves are responsible! Ahab tried to hide his own sin by making someone else responsible for it. Sin is the great troubler and enemy of man. It was his own troubled and tortured mind that was haunting him. Elijah said, "Thou hast sold thyself to do that which is evil in the sight of Jehovah." We have within and around us the elements of heaven or hell if we choose to make them such. We have our future very largely in the hands of the present. Ahab, Judas, Nero and Herod all were once innocent children in their mothers' arms, and by their own choice they made their names in history. The sin of covetousness is responsible, in a very large measure, for the misery of this world.

The graft, the dishonesty, the liquor selling, the bribery, the fraud of every kind, the letting of abominable tenements to the poor, selling honor and uprightness to get rich, grinding the face of the poor, dwarfing the children by overwork, all these and many more flow from the polluted fountain of covetous hearts.

The dictagraph is a little instrument which can be placed in any unseen place and through a receiver carry to a person in an adjoining room every detail of a conversation being carried on in supposed secrecy. Every sound is recorded and may be made to confront us at some future date. Job cried, "Oh, that my words were graven with an iron pen!" But who knows on what sensitive plate our every word is being recorded and our deeds stamped to face us at some later date. "Be sure your sin will find you out." Your sin may never be found out, but it will find you out, for you cannot sin without suffering in character, though you may be able to sin without suffering in reputation.

"Who is it knocks so loud? A little lonely sin.
Slip through, we answer—and all hell is in!"

Disciples Table Talk

Keuka College President Sought for Headship of Missouri College for Women.

Joseph A. Serena, president of Keuka College, New York, has been invited by the trustees of William Woods College in Missouri to accept the presidency of that institution. Mr. Serena has the matter under advisement and is expected to announce his decision shortly. The possibility of his going has stirred the friends of Keuka College to vigorous activity on its behalf. At a meeting of the trustees, Mr. Ball of Muncie Ind., hitherto the largest contributor to the support of the college, offered to give $50,000 if other friends would give an equal amount, and to double his gift if others would raise $200,000. The finances of Keuka have not been easy since the college came to the Disciples from the Free Baptists, but all friends believe President Serena is the man to work out the problems and hope that he will remain .

Later: As we go to press a telegram comes from Mr. W. E. Jameson, president of the board of trustees of William Woods College, saying that Mr. Serena has accepted the call to the presidency of that institution.

To Project Midweek Services on More Worthy and Attractive Lines.

Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City, is taking its midweek service out of the chapel room and establishing it in the main auditorium for the coming season. It is the intention of L. J. Marshall, the pastor, to give a new dignity to this service, to make it attractive with enjoyable music and to make it bring a religious message to every one present. His plan suggests that the reason many midweek services are a dull failure is because they are not projected and prepared for with any consciousness of their dignity and importance. It is announced that W. N. Briney of Louisville, Ky., will hold an evangelistic meeting for Wabash Avenue Church beginning Nov. 1. Mr. Marshall entered upon his sixth year as pastor of this congregation with the first Sunday in September. The Sunday school and church congregations are growing steadily in attendance, and new accessions to the membership are continually being received.

Aggressive and Enterprising Church Work in Theatre at Auburn, N. Y.

It is certainly an enterprising ministry carried on by E. W. Allen and his Division Street Church of Auburn, N. Y. They have rented a theater for an evangelistic campaign to begin early in October, and another theater, some larger, in which their Sunday night services will be held throughout the winter. This is in part repeating the work of last year which proved very productive of results, especially in bringing Mr. Allen's message to the attention of the whole city. A large chorus leads the singing, and Mr. Allen chooses popular topics, but not sensational.

Long Chautauqua Tour by Southern California Evangelist.

Bruce Brown, state evangelist for Southern California traveled 15,000 miles in Chautauqua work in Iowa, Wisconsin South Dakota, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas, during the past summer. He lectured twice each day for twelve weeks. He has now begun an evangelistic meeting at Highland Park Church, Los Angeles, Cal., of which Dan Trundle is pastor.

A Sunday Morning School of Religion.

Here is a conception of the Sunday school that stands impressively over against the noisy, number-mad and "efficient" institution that many pastors and churches are developing. It is set forth in a little leaflet prepared for distribution by the First Church, Philadelphia, Irving S. Chenoweth, pastor. It is so significant that we reprint it entire, and its lesson is so plain that it needs no comment:

"Beginning the first session on Sept. 12, the First Christian Church, Berks and Marvine Sts., will conduct a School of Religion on Sunday mornings at ten o'clock. While many of the features of a regular Sunday school will be retained, it will be the aim to introduce new methods and new courses of study in order to make this an efficient educational institution. The aim of the school will not be primarily to learn facts about ancient Israel nor early Christianity, Professor A. W. Fortune of Transylvania College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., who received the degree of Ph.D. at the University of Chicago this summer with highest honor.

but through a study of the Christian religion, to develop character, to educate in morals, to produce better lives. The education given by our public schools must necessarily, because of our different sects, exclude education in religion; and morals and ethics cannot be well taught apart from religion. This task belongs to the church, and through this school, the First Christian Church hopes more perfectly to meet its responsibility. There will be classes for everybody and the character of training offered may be shown by naming some of the fine corps of teachers:—Dr. E. E. Montgomery will have the men's class and Mrs. J. W. West will conduct a class for women. There will be classes for young men, young women, a young peoples' class for both men and women and classes for younger boys and girls of all ages. The Primary and Beginners' Departments will be under the supervision of a teacher of ability and wide experience, Mrs. Katherine Beasten, who will be assisted by a corps of trained teachers. The school will be led by a staff of capable officers, so that each session will be interesting and well-conducted. We expect a large number of our church members, hitherto not connected with our Bible school, to become members of this new organization, and we most cordially invite all friends in the neighborhood and city to share with us its advantages.—Francis J. Longdon, Jr., superintendent; Wm. A. Guhr, Secretary.

Gains and Losses in Offerings to Ministerial Relief.

Regular receipts of the Board of Ministerial Relief to Sept. 1, were $1,471.15 ahead of the corresponding eleven months of last year. But the necessary increase of the pension roll has been so much greater that the payments have had to be reduced by 20 per cent—a humiliating way says Secretary W. R. Warren, to celebrate the 20th anniversary of this work. The situation is made more critical by the falling off of $4,508.06 in irregular receipts. This means, Mr. Warren points out, that September must bring in $11,500 to fully meet the 20 per cent proposition which will bring a check of $6,000 from Mr. R. A. Long. All churches not yet having taken an offering for the aged and deserving ministers should take prompt action before September closes.

Every Member Canvass Proves so Successful Another One Will Be Undertaken.

A continual demonstration of the effectiveness of the Every Member Canvass is given by the reports of the collections for Central church, Warren, O. Quite often the treasurer of the church reminds the congregation of the increase in their offerings, both to current expenses and to missions, by publishing in the parish weekly a comparative statement of collections on recent Sundays

Foreign Society Makes Big Gain

The friends are being stirred over the deficit in the receipts of the Foreign Society. They are coming up in a wholehearted, noble way to wipe out the shortage. This is very encouraging. All that is needed is a widespread appreciation of the real embarrassing situation on the mission fields. A 10 per cent reduction on a large salary does not work as great a hardship as the same percentage in a smaller salary. The single missionary who receives only $600 feels keenly the effect when he receives only $540.

Our brotherhood ought not to permit itself the humiliation of this reduction. Every loyal Disciple in America should feel a personal responsibility in the present emergency and come up to the help of the Lord's work.

The receipts for the first nine days of September amounted to $31,476.32. Last year the income for the corresponding time was $22,086.68, showing a gain this year of $9,389.64. That looks good! It is a big gain! It is not, however, too great. Now, let us keep up a similar gain on until the day the books close, September 30th.

The time is short, and yet there is time for every loyal New Testament missionary church to swing itself into the aggressive campaign and help to wipe out every cent of the deficit. There is no one thing our people can do just now that means more, that will count more, that will speak louder to the world, and send a more thrilling cheer to the missionaries on the field, than to remove the stigma of this embarrassing shortage. It is not creditable to our churches. It is a hindrance to the work both at home and abroad. The wings of the churches are clipped. They cannot well rise to larger tasks until this weight is removed.

Every individual member who reads this may do something practical before the books close. If your church is not gathering funds to be forwarded at once, you may send a personal offering and suggest to others to do the esame. A personal check will be satisfactory. If your personal pledge has not been paid, please attend to the matter at once.

If your Sunday-school pledge has not been sent, do not defer it another day.

Do all you can to enlist every church. Bring every Endeavor Society into line. They need the fellowship of unselfish service in supporting the workers in the forefront of the battle line.

Please send at the earliest possible moment to the undersigned and a proper receipt will be promptly returned.

and the corresponding Sundays of last year. It always shows a great increase, often more than 50 per cent. The congregation will have another Every Member Canvass in October, this time without reference to finances at all. The purpose, according to Pastor E. A. Hibler, "is to make the church family better acquainted and to arouse a more vital interest in one another and the whole work of the church."

Pastor Advocates Moving Pictures for Use in Churches.

The use of moving picture machines to increase the attendance in churches, especially on Sunday nights, was endorsed in a sermon at First Church, Little Rock, Ark., by R. O. Rogers of Third Street church, who was supplying the pulpit in the absence of the pastor, J. H. O. Smith. Mr. Rogers declared that much good may be derived from the proper use of this marvelous invention, and decried the tendency in some quarters to condemn moving pictures. He said that Biblical stories may be made more impressive for both young and old, and that there are innumerable subjects of educational value that cannot be shown so effectively in any other way. He said that he would have every Sunday school equipped with a moving picture apparatus, and guaranteed that it would double the attendance and in nowise detract from the spirituality of the churches. Properly used, it would greatly add to the reverence the world must entertain toward the marvels of divine workmanship which the ingenuity of man is now making known in the moving picture, the graphophone and other wonderful inventions.

Central Church, Buffalo, Welcomes Pastor With Flowers and Enthusiasm.

B. S. Ferrall, pastor Central Church, Buffalo, N. Y., returned home from his vacation on Sunday, Sept. 5. His people received him with a house beautifully decorated with flowers. A. F. Hensey, missionary to Africa, was present at the services and spoke and there were many visitors from out of the city in attendance. Central Church is surrounded by a large and inviting field from which to build up a congregation and in which to render Christian service. The church and pastor are making good use of their resources. A good year is before them.

Recognizing Men Who Labored to Decorate and Repair Church Edifice.

The house of worship of the church at Altoona, Pa., was decorated and considerably repaired during the summer. At the service re-opening the building the pastor, W. Graham Walker, invited all the workmen who had had any part in the work of repair and decoration to be present and sit in a body. He preached a sermon using a fresco behind the baptistry as a text, the sun representing the Sun of Righteousness who is the light of the world; the green tree suggesting the fruitful life; the sun's rays the pathway of life and the steps to the water's edge suggesting the steps to the higher life. The discourse was greatly appreciated by all those who heard it. This church is entertaining the joint convention of East and West Pennsylvania this week.

Dr. Willett Recovering From Operation at a Chicago Hospital.

Dr. H. L. Willett came home from his short holiday at Pentwater, Mich., to undergo an operation in Hahnemann Hospital, Chicago. He came out from the operation in satisfactory condition and is making an encouraging convaleseence. It is expected that he will be confined to the hospital for perhaps two weeks longer. Dr. Willett preached for Dr. Ames at Hyde Park Church the first Sunday in September and C. C. Morrison supplied Memorial pulpit for Dr. Willett last Sunday.

Youngstown Sunday-school Planning to Open a Great Year.

W. D. Ryan and his great Central Church, Youngstown, O., are planning for a record-breaking day, Oct. 25. They have set their eyes on an attendance of 1,000 at the Sunday-school and are announcing Mr. R. A. Doan, of the Foreign Society, as a drawing feature for the day. A sort of preparatory Sunday for the new season is set for Sept. 19, which is called "Ryan Day," in honor of the pastor. The church rooms will be especially decorated for this post-vacation rally and a great reception to Mr. and Mrs. Ryan will be a glad feature.

A LOYAL SERVANT.

He was not a genius. He was not a brilliant preacher; but he was better than either. He was a loving and loyal servant of Jesus Christ He was a born teacher. He delighted to teach to others the things which he had learned of the kingdom of God. He believed in the Bible and was its faithful student. He loved the cause and he loved his brethren. When the call came to him from the far away field of China whose miliions knew nothing of Christ and his gospel, with charaeteristie courage and loyalty he responded, "Here am I, send me." His fine work in that field is known to all who read our journals. Much credit is due to him for the union work in the Nanking University where his latest work was done. He has heard another call, "Come up higher," and has gone from us leaving behind him as a precious legaey for his children and his brethren, the heritage of a noble life dedicated to the service of Jesus Christ. STOOD FOR UNION.

On hearing of the death of Mr. Meigs, the first thought that came to me, was, that the man who most perfectly represented Christian Union in China had gone to his well-earned reward. Mr. Meigs was a man of great vision. For years he had seen and contended that if the church was to do the work for which it was established, it must be done by a united church. To this end Mr. Meigs worked untiringly. His was no narrow view of the program of missions; but he saw God's work from all angles. It was he who years ago agitated for union in school and medical work in Nanking, arguing that efficiency demanded it; that a right use of the funds entrusted to us demanded it; that it was a sin for the several missions engaged in schools and hospitals to be overlapping one another, when the need was so great. Through all Mr. Meigs' work the making of Christ known was his incentive. Schools for the sake of educating the Chinese were needed. Hospitals for the healing of the sick were a necessity, but schools and hospitals must be the means of bringing students and sick ones into vital contact with Christ. That was his passion, and never did he let down the bars in his school in order that it might become more popular or easy. He stood for efficiency, he worked for efficiency, and his name will go down in the annals of Christian missions in China as one of the best and most untiring missionaries that that great and needy land has yet seen. Alexander Paul.

A MISSIONARY STATESMAN.

"Through labor to rest, through combat to victory."—Thomas A. Kempis.

The light of a great life has gone out in the Yangtze Valley, but the shining afterglow will long abide. In the passing of Frank Earle Meigs, the Foreign Society has lost one of its wisest, most efficient, and most honored missionaries; the cause of missions in Central China is bereft of an eminent pioneer and leader; the Church of Christ on two continents will miss a voice of counsel and inspiration; a host of associates and acquaintances, Chinese and American, will be tenderly moved by the sudden and supreme call which has taken to higher service so dear a brother and so true a friend.

Mr. Meigs was a man of commanding personality, strong of frame (until smitten by disease), keen in intellect, fearless in danger, resourceful in difficulties, at home with great issues, capable of immense labor—a born leader, organizer and administrator. His frank, positive and aggressive temperament was mellowed by a wistful tenderness and warm depth of feeling. Firm in his personal convictions, he knew how to be generous to others. In the bosom of his sturdy manhood beat the loving heart of a child.

The quality and range of his missionary work may be briefly summarized under two of its outstanding characteristics:

(1). Mr. Meigs wrought with unswerving fidelity. For twenty-eight years he devoted himself to the Christian redemption of China. He spurned all voices which sought to lure him from his task. From the day in 1887 when with Dr. Macklin he took up his abode at Nanking in the old temple of Lai Dzan, till the day in 1915 when he was laid to rest, his service was unbroken except by sickness and furloughs. No man was ever more certain of a divine call to China than he; none with greater diligence ever sought to be worthy of the call. He was one of those ardent souls

"Whose high endeavors are an inward light
That makes the path before him always bright."

During the hard pioneer years in Nanking, when prejudice, mob violence, epidemics, and all the "heartless weight of heathendom" beat against him, he stood in plodding perseverance at his post. When there was dearth of results he was not discouraged and dismayed; when success came he was not surprised. His faithfulness was rooted in the conviction that he was doing the will of God. The Chinese soon read the meaning of his devotion. Of their response to it account will be given otherwhere. What greater tribute could be paid to any man than that of a young Nanking scholar, one of Mr. Meigs' former students, now in America, who said a few days ago—"We Chinese all knew that he loved us."

(2). His service was marked by statesmanship, even his earliest labors. He worked with prescient insight toward epoch-making movements. He saw the strategic importance of education, and built up a strong school, which later became a college, and was finally merged into the University of Nanking. He was one of the founders of that institution, which seems to some to be the greatest center of Christian edueation in China. In interdenominational committees and assemblies, planning for the spiritual welfare of the whole republic, his influence was felt. He was too good and too great a Christian to be a sectarian. His horizon was wide with the catholicity of Christ. He grasped the problems of the rising Chinese Church and was close to the native leaders. He thought in large terms, worked for great objects, and moved in strategic directions. Under his influence and instruction Christian teachers and evangelists were equipped for leadership in the new China. To one goal, the legitimate aim of Foreign Missions, all his activities tended, namely: the creation of an indigenous Chinese Christianity, organized and efficient for the evangelization of the Republic.

He sleeps in the ancient city of the Mings. He lives in an apostolic succession of young Chinese leaders. His is an enduring place in the affectionate memory of his brethren, and in the annals of modern missionary achievement.

family they have been years of much happiness and of many delightful friendships, which have added much to the enlightenment of life. For the church they have been years of peace and growth. With a new church home replacing the old one, and a new parsonage, now being remodeled and made thoroughly modern and commodious, the church has greatly improved its material equipment. The life of the church has enlarged in many ways. The missionary offerings have greatly increased, so that the church now supports a missionary in China and gives largely to all forms of American missionary work. The membership has increased somewhat and the various departments of the work have grown. If the Liberty church has taken a backward step in the past twelve years, the pastor has failed to become aware of it. With gratitude for the Father's guidance thus far, let us look forward to a future which will be brighter and better than the past has been."

Large Group of Missionaries Sailing September 15.

On the S. S. "Persia" sailing from San Francisco on Sept. 15 is one of the largest groups of missionaries ever going out together from Disciples' boards to the foreign fields Including children there are in the party twenty people. Ten of these go out for the Foreign Society and ten for the Woman's Society. Those under the Foreign Society are as follows: Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Saum and two children to India; Mrs. C. E. Benlehr and three children to India; Miss Emma Lyon and Miss Effie McCallum to China; Miss Myrtle Wilson for the Philippine Islands. Under the Woman's Society Mr. C. H. Thompson, Dr. Bertha Thompson, Miss Leno Russell, Miss Lucile G. Ford, Miss Lulu E. Garten and Miss Ina Hartsook to India; Miss Lillian Collins and Miss Wenona Wilkinson to China, Miss Rachel Garst is also going out on this steamer to join her sister, Gretchen Garst, for a year at Akita, Japan. Four of these missionaries are those who have seen service and are returning from their furloughs. The others are new workers who go out to strengthen the forces at the front. In the midst of the financial distress which now burdens the missionary societies, it is not intended that the work shall go backward. It takes faith and courage to launch out in these days. The workers at the front will be greatly cheered by the coming of this additional force. The church should make it a special object of prayer that these workers reach their fields safely and that they may be guided by divine wisdom during the days of their preparation for the task. As their ship plies the sea bringing them from America to distant lands, our hearts will be linked to them very closely and our congregations will feel that these go out as their representatives to the ends of the earth. It would be fitting to make the voyage of these workers a special object of prayer in both prayer-meetings and church services, as well as in the homes of the supporters of the work.

BRIEFER NOTES.

—C. F. Stevens, pastor at Beatrice, Nebr., preached on a recent Sunday at Lawrence, Kan.

—Ernest Rigdon and the Fairview church near Milford, Ill., were assisted in an evangelistic meeting by W. F. Shaw of Chicago during the threshing season. There were several confessions of faith. Mr. Rigdon will enter Yale School of Religion this fall.

—E. E. Violett is supplying the pulpit of Independance Boulevard Church, Kansas City, during Geo. H. Combs' vacation. Mr. Violett will begin an evangelistic meeting at Central Church, Pueblo, Col., W. T. Hilton, minister, Oct. 3.

P. H. Welshimer and Percy Kendall, of Canton, O., will hold an evangelistic meeting for First Church, Massillon, O., beginning Sept. 27. H. E. Stafford is the pastor.

—John P. Sala has begun a series of evening sermons at Richmond Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y., on "Our Modern Civilization, the Men and the Book Responsible for It." For the first four sermons he announces the subjects as follows: "At the Roots of Our Modern Civilization;" "Finding the Bible —John Wyclif, the Scholar;" "Defying the Ecclesiastics—John Huss, the Martyr;" "Purifying a Great Church and City—Savonarola, the Martyr;" "Reforming the Church —Martin Luther."

—Kentucky and Illinois state conventions will be in session next week, the former at Madisonville, the latter at Bloomington.

—The Federated Church, of Urbandale, Des Moines, Ia., of which W. J. Lockhart is pastor, was given an illustrated writeup in the Advance, the Congregational organ recently. The church includes members of all denominations in its membership and is the only Christian organization in the community.

—Mr. and Mrs. John H. Le Grand held an evangelistic meetings at Tolleston, Ind., with twenty additions to the church. They are now in Ingraham, Ill.

Bloomington Welcomes You!

Bloomington will entertain the Illinois State Convention of Disciples of Christ, September 20-23. A great and good convention is confidently expected. The homes of our people are wide open to the hosts that will soon be gathering here. There will be room for about one hundred delegates at the Hills Hotel, at the special rate of one dollar apiece for lodging and breakfast where two occupy the same room. Reservations for these rooms should be made direct to the Hills Hotel.

Mr. W. D. Deweese is chairman of registration and assignment. A better choice could not have possibly been made. Mr. Deweese knows Bloomington and he knows Illinois from Freeport to Cairo, and from Danville to Quincy.

The middle west in autumn possesses a peculiar charm. Already the glory of the autumnal colors is beginning to appear in field and tree; it is the best time in all the year to visit the heart of the Corn Belt. All former Bloomingtonians might well take advantage of the occasion to come back home.

As for program, it is all that could be desired, with Dr. Peter Ainslie and Prof. Walter Athearn as the out o' the state talent. With the exception of two great evening sessions, all the meetings will be held in old First church. The two great evening meetings will be held in the auditorium of the Second Presbyterian church which will seat comfortably fifteen hundred people. We are expecting a thousand delegates. Bloomington welcomes all.

Edgar DeWitt Jones.

Closing A Year of Benevolence

The Disciples' missionary year of 1914-15 is nearly gone. The books of the Benevolent Association close with the end of this month. The record is nearly complete. It is one that causes much of joy and yet the joy is not unmingled with sorrow. We rejoice greatly because of the large measure of service we have been privileged to render. We sorrow because we were compelled to turn deserving, needy ones away whom we wanted to help. We rejoice greatly over our new building at Dallas, and the great new hospital nearing completion at Kansas City. We sorrow because our Atlanta family of children is housed only by an adequate rented building, and because other of our homes are cramped and hindered by the lack of adequate equipment. We rejoice because the association's income is the largest thus far of any like period in its history. We sorrow because this income is not increasing as rapidly as are the urgent needs of the motherless little ones, the homeless aged, the friendless sick and the dependent widows of the church who look to us with longing eyes and with anxious hearts for sympathetic Christian help and care. We rejoice because more and more the responsibility of ministering to the "fatherless and the widow" is being laid at the door of the church. We sorrow because the church is yet partially delinquent, because so many have thus far looked to her in vain and because, therefore, she is not yet receiving the measure of blessing and power she should enjoy.

Brethren, let us not be restorationists of the primitive gospel in word only, but in deed as well. Let us bring into the storehouse of the Lord the richest treasures of our hearts and of our hands. Let us replenish the church's treasury of benevolence. Let us fill her hands with cordial and bandage for the destitute sick, with bread and garments for the hungry and the naked, with shelter for the homeless, with blessing for all. Do not turn a deaf ear to this appeal. Lay the needs of this work and the opportunities it offers before your church, your Bible school, your young peoples' society, your Ladies' Aid, or your Bible class.

We thank you in advance for the offering we most earnestly hope you will send before the close of this month. Address all offerings to The National Benevolent Association, 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no am-

NEWS OF THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

On the fifteenth of this month the following missionaries will leave San Francisco for the field: Miss Emma A. Lyon and Miss Effie V. McCallum for China; H. C. Saum and family, and Mrs. C. E. Benlehr and children for India; Miss Myrtle E. Wilson for the Philippines, Miss Wilson and Miss McCallum are going out for the first time. The India missionaries are going by way of the Pacific on account of the war in Europe and the danger of delay in passing through the Suez Canal.

Dr. C. C. Drummond, of Harda, India, expects to leave the United States for his field about the first of November. His departure has been delayed by his own physical condition and by the condition of Mrs. Drummond and one of the children.

The Foreign Society is arranging for a series of rallies, beginning about the middle of November and lasting until the first of March. There are to be two series—one conducted by R. A. Doan in the East, and one to be conducted by Bert Wilson in the West.

Frank V. Stipp left San Francisco for the Philippines on Saturday Aug. 21. He will be associated with Dr. C. L. Pickett at Laoag. Mr. Stipp is a graduate of the University of Illinois. He spent two years in Phillips University at Enid, Okla., and about six months in the College of Missions at Indianapolis. He is well equipped for the work in the Philippines.

Herbert Smith, of Lotumbe, Africa, writes: "We have some fifty evangelists now at work, but they cannot begin to cover the field. The last term there were seventy baptisms. Some of these came for more than 250 miles to obey their Lord."

The church at Bolenge, Africa, now reports about 2,000 members. The Lotumbe church, where the work began only seven years ago, now has more than a thousand members. At Tumba, a distant village where the body of Ray Eldred lies buried, there were recently 300 baptisms.

OUR SUBSCRIPTION PRICE

One of the tokens of good-will which the publishers of the Christian Century have many times been prompted to acknowledge is the increasing number of our subscribers who in paying for their paper remit at the full two dollar rate.

It was a sorry day for journalism among the Disciples when, some fifteen years ago, the papers let themselves get started on a cut-rate competition for enlarged circulation. For a time most if not all our papers were sold at one dollar a year. Repenting of this, it was with the greatest difficulty that the rate of $1.50 was re-established. No religious papers in the land are sold at so low a subscription price as the Disciples' newspapers. Other papers range in rate from two dollars to three and a half dollars per year, and some of them no larger and many not so expensive to produce as our Disciple journals.

The Christian Standard has recently raised its subscription price from $1.50 to $2.00. This is a move in the right direction. Limited as is the religious press in the volume and character of its advertising it is not right that its subscribers should desire their religious newspapers to be published below cost.

Some seven years ago The Christian Century established its rate at two dollars and offered a concession of 50c when the subscription was paid in advance. We have consistently billed our subscribers ever since in accordance with this rate and have at last gotten them pretty well trained to expect the $1.50 rate only when their remittance is sent in advance. Even ministers to whom is made a special advance rate of one dollar now expect to pay and do pay two dollars when their subscription is delinquent.

Of late, however, a large number of our subscribers, both ministers and laymen, have been paying the two dollar rate even though they are not delinquent. This is a token of good will which we would like to acknowledge in a personal letter to each one if that were not impracticable, so we take pleasure in making this general acknowledgment through the columns of the paper.

It is not our intention at this time to change our policy of accepting $1.50 when payment is strictly in advance but we dare to cherish the hope that the voluntary attitude of our subscribers will effect the change without any action at all by the publishers.

THOMAS CURTIS CLARK, Editor

It tells of the big things doing in the fields of the Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor society and the Church.

It puts its readers in touch with the ideals of social service, and keeps them informed of the latest achievements in temperance and missions.

It provides the best aids to the study of the International Uniform Sunday-school Lessons, and of the Christian Endeavor topic.

It makes a special feature of brief articles and talks that are certain to build character in young people.

It is filled with spicy science notes and items of current history.

It prints the best poetry it can find, both serious and comic, and abounds with bits of wisdom from great men and women of the world.

It gives delight each week by its apt pictures of the lighter side of life—in "Chuckles."

It prints in each issue attractive and helpful short stories.

It is the ideal weekly paper for adult and young people's Bible classes.

Are the Disciples Sincere?

ONCE let the note of sincerity and profound conviction drop out of the statement of principles for which a religious body stands, and that body's power in the world of spiritual forces is gone.

The Disciples of Christ are being challenged today at this very sensitive point of their simple sincerity in preaching certain traditional doctrines. It is no blatant enemy that issues the challenge; there is no defiant animus back of it. The challenge does not arise outside of us at all, but utters itself in the still small voice of our own conscience.

We are a people with a divided mind.

Traditionally and by historic momentum we have been committed to certain doctrines about whose validity our own souls now entertain most serious doubts. But the pressure of custom and the demands of tradition avail to keep us reiterating these doctrines and to forbid our free utterance of the newer and fairer truth that has come to make its abode in our hearts.

The charges recently made by a newspaper among us gravely calling in question the sincerity of a certain evangelist whose work has been particularly conspicuous suggests that there ought to be a widespread and deep searching of heart with respect to the sincerity of the rest of us in the points wherein his sincerity was impugned.

This evangelist, it was said, preached one way of salvation in Disciples' revival meetings, and another way of salvation in union revival meetings. Evidence was brought forward which seemed to show that he was fully aware of the contradiction between his two gospels, and considered it an exceedingly embarrassing thing to have his own published interpretation of the Disciple-meeting gospel circulated in his union-meeting communities.

The tendency of our human nature will be to follow the lead of the newspaper that brings forward the criticism and to single out this particular case and regard it as quite individual and isolated, and judge it as such. But The Christian Century earnestly desires to guide its readers away from that un-Christian fallacy. We believe that this evangelist's case is really the disclosure of the self-contradiction that lies in the soul of our brotherhood as a whole.

Specifically, this self-contradiction has to do with the question of baptism by immersion. The Disciples early in their historic movement took on the unscriptural doctrine that immersion was one of the scriptural essentials in becoming a Christian.

The evangelist above referred to espoused that doctrine in a published tract and preached it in his Disciple evangelism. But in his union evangelism he made Christians without mentioning immersion at all, preaching only that the penitent believer should unite with some church, and making no distinction between the churches that initiated their converts by immersion and those that initiated them by affusion.

Now before any one casts a stone at Dr. Scoville, let him search his own mind and examine his own practice to see whether he is not himself equally guilty of this same conscious or unconscious insincerity.

In an editorial last week we declared our belief that there are fully one thousand ministers among us who no longer believe that immersion in water is a vital or important act in the process of becoming a Christian.

While still adhering to the practice of immersion their reasons for so doing are not that Christ commanded it or that the scriptures give it a place co-ordinate with faith and repentance, but reasons of a different kind altogether.

The truth of the matter is that not one thousand ministers only, but the main body of the Disciples of Christ no longer hold with Alexander Campbell that immersion and baptism are equivalent terms.

How, then, can they continue to preach the traditional argument as to the essential place of immersion in the way of salvation without a challenge of their sincerity arising in their own souls?

Or if they do not continue to preach it—as hundreds do not—how can they continue to allow the Christian world to impute to them so unethical and unscriptural a doctrine without making honest and positive declaration of the change that has come into their convictions?

As a people the arm of our strength will inevitably become a withered arm if this contradiction between our belief and our preaching, or between our real belief and our reputed belief, longer continues.

God's enterprises are moving fast. In many hearts the serious inquiry is being asked whether or not the Disciples have already let pass their day of opportunity to serve the cause of Christian union.

In the opinion of The Christian Century the day has not passed: it is at high noon.

But of this we are sure, that no people with a divided mind or a parroted testimony or an insincere conformity can be used of God for any great thing.

The duty of the hour is for every teacher and minister and editor and secretary and every layman in the ranks to re-think his convictions through and to resolve that henceforth he will declare what seems to him to be the truth, cost what it will, and nothing but the truth.

Do not be fidgety and restless about what shall come on the morrow. You have enough to do each day, enough of evil to bear each day. You need not make yourself so many trials by fancying what you may have another day. Let that alone; only trust God.—F. D. Maurice.

Why Do Ministers Want Billy Sunday?

Is their Approval of Him Paradoxical?

BY GEORGE A. COE

Professor in Union Theological Seminary

From the "Congregationalist."

THE most astonishing thing about Billy Sunday is not his popularity with the masses but his power over ministers. The people like to have religion preached robustly, with strong ethical accent. If such preaching has the added advantage of picturesqueness, surprise, the arts of suggestion, humor, skillful advertising and masterly organization, the masses follow after it without caring about niceties of matter and method. The ministers are connoisseurs of religion. The traditions of their calling are supposed to guarantee the making of distinctions where differences exist. In this case, however, distinction-making seems to be in abeyance. It is true that many ministers approve Billy Sunday because he proclaims reactionary views—because he opposes the whole modern movement in the churches, and insists that practical religion depends for its very life upon a return to the old positions. But ministers of progressive type support him in spite of the fact that he is endeavoring to tear down the things for which they are known to stand. These clergymen are therefore in the position, at least prima facie, of being on both sides of questions which they themselves have heretofore regarded as religiously important.

That there is in this attitude something more than a closing of eyes to merely minor matters of taste and policy, something more even than silence upon denominational differences for the sake of a common cause, will be clear to any one who makes a careful comparison between the regular ministrations of these clergymen and the special type of ministry that they are recommending to the people. The following sketch of such a survey is not an estimate of Billy Sunday; it is simply an attempt to understand the paradoxical situation in which certain ministers stand. When the items are contemplated in their entirety the paradox will be seen to be by no means a superficial one, and the need of explanation will be acute.

SCHOLARSHIP AND ETHICS.

To begin with some of the more obvious factors in this paradox, here are ministers who accept the results of historical biblical scholarship, yet invite an evangelist to use the arts of popular appeal to close the minds of the people against such results, and against the men who teach them. Here are ministers who teach that the Christian religion and the theory of evolution are not incompatible, yet do not protest when Billy Sunday, for whose coming they are responsible, publicly consigns Darwin to hell. In their ordinary attitudes toward Sunday observance and certain forms of recreation, many of these ministers follow a principle of Christian ethics that is flatly contradicted by the evangelist in his treatment of the same topics. What are these pastors going to say hereafter when their young people ask about the higher criticism, evolution, Sunday observance and amusements?

Even if these issues could be treated as secondary, there are others that cannot be so treated in any intelligent church policy. At points that are utterly vital Billy Sunday is instructing the laity contrary to the teachings of their own churches and pastors. Child religion is such a vital point. The Methodist Episcopal Church, to take a single example, holds that all children are members of the Kingdom of God. Upon this basal conception a close-knit scheme of Christian nurture is prescribed which every preacher, upon his admission to the annual conference, agrees to administer. Yet Methodist pastors are prominent among the supporters of an evangelism that teaches the exactly opposite view of childhood, and manipulates audiences of thousands of children in a manner diametrically opposed to the official Methodist system of nurture.

THE THEOLOGICAL ISSUE.

More mystifying, if possible, is the revival of the "odium theologicum," largely through the tacit assent of liberal-minded ministers. It is some time since the regular clergy have shut us up to the alternatives of orthodoxy or hell, or doomed any of our good neighbors for none but theological offenses. Yet our pastors are backing up this thing in one of the irregular clergy. This is more than a matter of taste. The character of God is involved, and with it the whole of Christian morals. Our clergy in their ordinary ministrations tell us that God is too much like Jesus to condemn any one to torment for an error of belief. Are they shifting their position on this point?

Circumstantial evidence makes it appear that they are. For they seem to accept Billy Sunday's assumption of the role of censor of the clergy. They sit at his feet with apparent docility while he tells them what to believe and what not to believe, what to preach and what not to preach, and just why they are not having greater success in their churches. They permit him to excoriate their brethren. At Columbus a minister who has done as much as any living man to ennoble the office of pastor, having opposed inviting Billy Sunday to the city, was assailed by him in scornful terms, yet the mass of the clergy of Columbus did not rise and demand a retraction! Billy Sunday's conduct in this case is not hard to understand. Plans of his, based upon his sincere beliefs, had been opposed, and he attacked with such weapons as he possesses. What is mysterious is that our clergy accept for evangelism standards of conduct that they would never think of practicing in their pastoral office or fail to condemn in a parishioner.

TWO KINDS OF RELIGION.

This, then, is the astounding fact that confronts us: The people are being offered two kinds of religion, both bearing the same pastoral stamp. But only for a time. After the witchery of the revival is over, these pastors will return to their habits of liberal thinking, and to the fine and courteous ways that had begun to prevail among us after ages of theological bitterness. They will pick up again the threads of denominational loyalty, and even in so doing they will recover their respect for the loyalties of other men. There can be no doubt of it! How comes it, then, that they have temporarily lent themselves to a propaganda so at variance with their permanent tendencies? The answer must be made up in part of surmises concerning the subtle interplay of thought and motive, of individual mind and social forces. But ground for such surmises exists.

Possibly ministers have yielded further than they suppose to the popular notion that "Theology doesn't count." Is it because theology is of no account that they back up Sunday in the proclamation of doctrines that they do not believe? Is this the reason why they even submit to his censorship? Is it because theology doesn't count that they look with indulgent amusement upon Sunday's savagery toward the unorthodox? Do these ministers really believe that such things are outside the main issue? If this is the subtle way in which enlightened clergymen slip from tolerant courtesy toward illiberal thought into illiberal thought's discourteous intolerance, then one might recommend a little more bone-forming material in the mental pabulum of the modern minister.

MINISTERS AT THEIR WITS' END.

Another contributing factor is the fact that so many ministers are at their wits' end with regard to religion as an effective community force. Said one of them, "I do not accept Sunday's theology, and the families of my church will not accept his standards of Christian living, but this city needs to be stirred up." The motive here is not shallow, for the medicine is bitter. Ministers invite Sunday knowing that he is likely to "roast" them for their inefficiency. This is a self-sacrificing effort to solve a hard problem. But are our ministers leading us out of the church's plight, or are they themselves floundering? Do they contemplate a permanent reconstruction of church work in accord with the Billy Sunday program? Are they themselves really among the converts, or do they expect to go back to their old ways? Community conditions surely prove the need of reform in the churches, but nothing will meet the case short of a comprehensive policy based upon some real understanding of the social significance of the Christian gospel and of the known laws of solid social construction.

"GETS RESULTS."

"But this evangelism gets results! Look at the reclaimed drunkards, and the bands of lay evangelists!" Such facts must certainly have weight in any plan for Christianizing society. Our question is whether our ministers are weighing facts in a just balance. What method have they adopted for getting the whole truth? City should be compared with city, church with church, the five years before the revival with the five years after, and especial scrutiny should be given to changes in the tone and methods of the churches, as in the care of the young, the demands of the congregation upon the preacher, and the rapidity and the causes of changes of pastors. Negative results belong with positive. And when such facts are all in, the interpretation has still to be made. The most objectionable evangelism urges that it converts sinners. What we have to find out is how to get the largest, most far-reaching results at the least cost. It is entirely possible to miss the best because we like the good. Pumping water into a leaky reservoir may, indeed, raise the level of the water, but does not repair the reservoir.

Why do our clerical leaders think that this particular sort of evangelism is the most effective of all means now within our grasp? Again I ask, Upon what principles do our ministers rely in the determination of policies? No doubt we are becoming pragmatic, but pragmatism has no magic wand that enables one to see without looking. The results of Sunday's evangelism, whatever they are, are purchased at high cost of things that Christians have held dear. The world will not be saved cheaply, of course, but must it be saved at this cost? And, once it is thus saved, in what sense is it really saved at all? To what extent are ministers following the Zeitgeist into a shallow pragmatism, missing the pragmatic depths?

SOCIAL CONTAGION.

One wonders, finally, whether suggestion and social contagion have not a large part in this whole matter. The hypothesis, if it were admissible—and we know of no class of the population that is exempt from such influences—would make certain strange facts luminous, such as the change in ministers' attitudes toward sacred things after they enter the evangelist's presence. Ministers on the platform laugh and applaud in response to sentiments that they never laughed at before, and probably never will laugh at again. Social contagion can do wonderful things with one's opinions, too, such as causing one to hold two contradictory views of the same thing.

My theme has been the relation of certain of the regular clergy to their own work rather than the relation of Billy Sunday to what he regards as his work. Since, however, I have expressed disapproval of some of his doings, I must now, in fairness, declare that he is not seriously blameworthy for what I cannot but regard as his serious faults. He is doing his best to promote the Christian religion as he understands it. He did not invent his conception of our religion—he got it from his ecclesiastical teachers. As to the offensive elements in his methods, perhaps he invented them, but their vogue is due chiefly to the regular clergy.

How it Seemed To Be "Excommunicated"

Mr. Loken's impressions of the Northern California state convention which for the second time excommunicated the Berkeley Church from participation in its fellowship and proceedings.

As I sat in the little auditorium on the first morning of the state convention and watched the gathering of the little group of people representing our various churches and listened to the proceedings of the forenoon, many conflicting feelings passed through me. I write them down here, not because I believe that my own feelings have any peculiar significance as opposed to any one else's feelings, but rather because I believe I am a normal individual and therefore these moods of mine may be typical of what an average man would think and feel under the circumstances. For these excommunication proceedings have become too common by this time to arouse any unusual excitement.

And shall I confess that the first emotion of the hour was one of mirth. It was probably irreverent but I could not help being amused at the extreme care which the chairman and each speaker took to stick strictly to the technical aspect of the question. Every one shied at the real question involved like a young colt at an automobile. We got into deep water occasionally as the hours wore on but it was never the depths of spiritual insight or moral convictions. It was ever a deeper plunge into "Robert's Rules of Order."

I would probably be ashamed to confess that the occasion struck me more like a comedy than a serious religious gathering were it not for the fact that the rest of the audience evidently shared this feeling with me. When at last the motion came to seat the Berkeley delegates and when all discussion of this issue was ruled out of order in the assembly as irrelevant and impertinent to the occasion the state secretary arose and with a broad smile and a very dramatic attitude urged the people in a few pungent sentences to screw their courage up to the tremendous undertaking before them. The next moment the victorious vote was recorded and there were the lusty handclap, jovial expressions of glee and a spirit of sangfroid that refused to be calmed down even for a last word of prayer and a benediction upon the action of the morning.

Yet the feeling of merriment was not the dominant emotion. I thought, and still think, what a pity to bring these good people from all over the state to an occasion like this! My good friend and fellow-Disciple, whatever you think of the program of the Berkeley church, whatever you think of the people who compose that church, in your sober moments and away from the influence of the crowd, do you really, away down deep in your heart, believe that such a procedure as that at the state convention is a piece of Christian service? Can you arise from your knees after a season of earnest prayer, of face to face communion with God, and in that hour of spiritual exaltation rejoice at the thing that was done and the way it was done?

Surely the offense the Berkeley church is guilty of is not great enough to merit any one's utter contempt. Surely the act of reading into the record of the brotherhood such an unfraternal expression as that manifested both in the spirit and the letter of this resolution is too serious a matter to be enacted in a spirit of coarse hilarity.

We shall never be able to settle the problem before us in such a spirit. As long as we approach this matter from the standpoint of our mutual rights, as long as we think of a reconciliation in terms of compromise or in terms of victory for ourselves and of defeat for an opponent, as long as we approach this matter in an unfraternal spirit we are not on Christian ground. The occasion is a mighty challenge to the heart life of the Disciples. Let personal animosities and resentments be burned out by a baptism of the Spirit of God. In such a spiritual revival all our conflicting opinions would be swept on and caught up into a more precious and vital unity and fellowship than any political compromise can ever effect. We need, not primarily a wise head to devise a compromise that shall prove a temporary armistice, but a spiritual revival that will cleanse us and humble us into a spirit of prayer and sympathetic brotherhood.

WORK OF THE COUNCIL ON CHRISTIAN UNION.

Out of the stormy session of the general convention in Topeka, in 1910, the Council on Christian Union came into being. It was asked to do three things; namely: (1) to create and distribute literature bearing upon Christian union among the people of our own and other religious bodies, and to solicit and hold in trust funds for this purpose; (2) to seek and arrange conferences with various religious bodies upon the subject of Christian union; (3) to seek cooperation with other Christian communions in calling and providing for a world conference on Christian union.

The Council on Christian Union has accomplished all these things. They have distributed hundreds of thousands of pages of literature on Christian union throughout America and all parts of the world, so that they have touched the life of all nations and all communions. They have held conferences with various religious bodies as they have had opportunity, and all these conferences have been satisfactory, indicating a desire for closer fellowship. They have shared in arranging for a world conference on Christian union, and as a preparatory step it is now proposed to hold the North American Preparatory Conference at Garden City, January 4-7. The committee is at work on the plan for this preparatory conference and everything is being done to make it the most important gathering of Christians that has convened in North America to plan for definite union of Christian forces. This gathering has particular significance to the Disciples. As a people we arose in a desire for the union of the divided Church of Christ. Through the years we have contended for this ideal and now nothing should be of greater interest in our church circles than this preparatory conference, in which we have shared so largely in its preparation.

To carry forward the work that the council is doing requires funds. The president of the council, who has the directing of all the correspondence—and this includes thousands of letters—receives no compensation for his services, nor does the council have to pay anything for office rent in Seminary House, and we do feel that the great brotherhood of the Disciples ought to make possible the larger service of the Council on Christian Union by liberal offerings to this cause. Churches that are not giving should give, and many that are giving should increase their offerings. Individuals should contribute to this cause. It comes closer to the heart of the spirit and genius of the Disciples than any movement among us.

We have a membership in the council of about seven hundred. It ought to be seven thousand, and even that is a small figure by the side of a membership of more than a million persons. You have doubtless read the annual report of the council written by Bro. Frederick D. Kershner, the secretary. It calls for a response. These are the days of our opportunity and the conditions challenge us to a new enthusiasm for service in the appeal for the union of the divided House of Christ.

The Feast of Fellowship

A Sermon Preached on the Occasion of the First Communion Service in the United Church of Hydesville

BY FRANK E. BOREN

BROADLY speaking, there have been three views of the Lord's Supper prevailing in the Church and which are also held in some sections today.

First, there is the magical view. According to this view there is some mysterious power inherent in the emblems themselves, after the blessing by the priest. To partake of them, even in utmost ignorance, is to receive some benefit. A similar view of baptism is represented in the doctrine of baptismal regeneration. "This is my body," and "except a man be born of water," are interpreted with the utmost literalness, and with an utter lack of literary insight or spiritual appreciation. Intelligent Protestantism repudiates this view though vestiges of it may linger in the minds of the ignorant.

Second, there is the legalistic view. This represents a narrow, cramped and unspiritual conception of religion. It is a religion of rules and ceremonies rather than of life and freedom. Jesus is thought of as a law-giver, and the New Testament as his law book. Forms and ceremonies are to be observed, not because of any intrinsic value we find in their use, but because Jesus has commanded them. It is enough that he has some inscrutable reason for his commands. It is even supposed that his commands sometimes are pretty purely arbitrary—that he commands us to do things intrinsically irrational, in order to test our loyalty. A thing whose reasonableness and value are apparent, would not test our loyalty to Jesus. The supreme test of our loyalty is in obedience where we can see no reason. It is not ours to "reason why," it is ours "to do and die." Jesus has all authority in heaven and on earth. He has a right to command whatever he pleases. I have heard preachers say that they could see no reason for either baptism or the Lord's Supper, but it was enough that Jesus had commanded them.

"THE AUTHORITY OF FRIENDSHIP."

What a caricature this is of the authority of Jesus and of the spirit of his religion. He said to his disciples, "I no longer call you servants—I have called you friends." His authority was the authority of friendship. He seeks to rule by the winsomeness of his personality, the sweet reasonableness of his doctrine, the persuasiveness of his love. The influence which friend may have over friend is the only authority which he seeks. He staked his whole hopes of moral and spiritual leadership on the ability of his followers to partake of his spirit, appreciate his life and words, and to grasp with their own minds his doctrines and ideals.

Paul warns the Galatians lest they "become entangled in a yoke of bondage." He reminds them that Christ had called them to freedom. It is possible for us to-day to become entangled in a yoke of bondage in the use of ceremonies approved by Jesus, however conformable to his spirit they may be when rightly observed. Legalism is the same, whether ancient or modern, whether its characteristic marks be the modern usages of the church, or the rites of Judaism. When any compulsion enters into our religious observances, they are thereby robbed of their value. As a symbolic language through which we can express the freedom of the gospel they have an abiding value to our religious lives. As legalistic observances they belong to an un-Christian order.

CEREMONIES AS SYMBOLS.

The third and saner view is that rites and ceremonies are symbols. They are valuable as they express the fulness of our religious life, our hopes, our aspirations. There are thoughts, feelings, aspirations which cannot be adequately expressed in words. Symbolism has entered into the very marrow of human life, and it is doubtful if ever it will pass away. The flag is valuable, not in itself, but because of its symbolism. And the value is not merely in the more explicit symbolism, such as the colors, and the number of stars, but in the larger and richer suggestiveness which grows out of association. Symbolism is the language of poetry and not of commonplace prose. It speaks only to those with the spirit of the poet within them. The unfurling of the flag sends a thrill through every patriotic soul, which cannot be explained by terms of magic or law. Likewise the handclasp, the kiss, the tipping of the hat, and a thousand other things speak a language and express a meaning without which life would be robbed of the richest part of its meaning.

It is my own conviction that we shall have more rather than less use for symbols as we become more spiritual. I know that the contrary thought is frequently expressed. But it seems to me to be based upon a misconception of the place of symbols in our life, and is a protest against the magical and legalistic views. We may as well dispense with dictionaries as with symbols. Dictionaries expand as human thought grows richer, and as poets dream and lovers build their castles in the air. It would be a very prosy sort of religion without its symbolism. Baptism and the Lord's Supper are indeed cheap in very much of present day usage; but when baptism becomes an initiation into a united Church and expressive of a fellowship as wide as Christendom, and when the Lord's Supper becomes expressive of a communion which knows no creedal bounds, I feel that they will have a value that we will be loath to lose.

THE COMMON MEAL A SYMBOL.

In all ages the common meal has been the symbol of fellowship, of brotherhood, of friendship and loyalty. It is expressive of our common humanity. The superficialities of language, dress, custom, profession, or interest, tend to emphasize class distinction. But rich and poor, learned and ignorant, philosopher, physician, farmer, mechanic, have this in common, they all become hungry, they all must eat. Distinctions of class or profession fade away when men sit down to a common meal. One of the highest marks of friendship is to be invited to share another's bread. Compacts and treaties have been solemnized by a common meal. Community enterprises are generally launched at a banquet. There comes a sense of comradeship on such occasions which promotes the work in view.

One of the greatest breaches of loyalty is when one who has broken bread with another arises from the table to betray. The baseness of Judas' betrayal lies in the fact that he arose from the table to carry out the diabolical plot which had matured in his heart amid such holy associations. And then, to think that Judas betrayed his Master with a kiss! What pathos in the words, "He that dippeth with me in the dish, the same shall betray me."

WHAT THE LORD'S SUPPER SYMBOLIZES.

The Lord's Supper is valuable because of its universal symbolism. Most of the symbols which rule human life represent class distinctions. Even our flag emphasizes our distinctness from other nations. Every college has its own colors, as the blue and gold of our State University. Lodges have their own badges of distinction. Every profession has its own dress or mark. But the supper is the symbol of our common humanity. It is an outreach after a larger fellowship. It emphasizes that which we have in common rather than the things in which we dfffer. To observe it rightly is to put away from the heart that uncharitableness and self-righteousness which so often characterize the legalist. Its observance should be a prayer for the coming of the day when class distinctions shall fade away, in actual life, and when life shall be dominated by the sense of human brotherhood, and society organized accordingly. It should look forward to that day when all life shall be a sharing such as the supper symbolizes. When human society is organized on the basis of friendship, and every law shall be a channel through which love runs, then the symbolism of the Supper will be realized.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF MAN.

There is the more particular symbolism of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord. But when we seek the meaning of his broken body, we find it in this outreach after a larger fellowship. His ideal was a brotherhood of man. For this he lived, nor did he give up his efforts when face to face with death. His death then becomes the supreme expression of his love for men, and the power by which men shall be drawn unto him. "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." "Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." It was the utter loneliness of a selfish life that Jesus would have us avoid. In losing our lives we find them.

I am peculiarly happy this morning in the observance of the first communion service in the Community Church. Never has the Lord's Supper meant quite so much to me. A denominational observance necessarily loses its meaning and value. Especially is this true when the idea of close communion prevails. To draw a circle around a particular group, and to desire or permit no other fellowship, is to rob the Supper of its real significance. It should be in its nature an outreach after a larger fellowship.

Even when we do not exclude others, but earnestly desire their participation, as a matter of fact the observance is usually denominational. It should always be so under protest. But this morning we recognize no denominational barriers. We are representing many denominations and have purposed to be actually and forever one body. Though few in numbers, we are one in spirit and in life, and our participation in this Supper is expressive of our desire for the largest possible fellowship.

May our breaking of bread together this morning be a prayer for the strengthening of those bonds of love which bind us, and a prayer for the speedy realization of that unity in the Church everywhere which will fulfill the prophecy of this feast of fellowship.

Four Weeks in the Trenches

A Book Review from "Unity."

BY FRITZ KREISLER.

Fritz Kreisler is renowned the world over among musicians as a violinist of great skill. It was a shock to art lovers to think of this Master of the Bow wallowing in the trenches as a lieutenant in an Austrian Regiment. But his little book of less than a hundred pages, published by the Houghton, Mifflin Company, plays upon the heartstrings as the master of the violin never could with his bow. The book is a literary masterpiece, not because the author has mastered the sentence or has become an expert in rhetoric but because in the high art of unconscious frankness he tells the awful story of war in brief.

This violinist found himself suddenly in the place assigned to him in his regiment, the commanding officer of fifty men, among whom was a famous sculptor, a well-known philologist, two university professors, a Prince and a civil engineer; here was a painter, a singer of repute, a banker and a post official of high rank. But nobody seemed to care for these titles or talents. Here is at least one blessed fruit of war. He writes: "A great cloak of brotherhood seemed to have enveloped everybody and everything, even difference in military rank was not so obvious for the officers made friends of their men and in turn were worshiped by them."

LITTLE HATRED BETWEEN SOLDIERS.

This artist by temperament, training and habit, spent twenty-one days without taking off his clothes, slept on wet grass, in mud, in swamps with nothing but his cape to cover him. He was now drenched by torrential rains, waiting for the sun to dry him out again. He was without a toothbrush. He ate with his hands, without even a thought of the ludicrous extension of the same with knife and fork. But though thus reduced to the simplest terms the man is still a gentleman, and what is more there is an imperishable element of the gentleman in all of them. Russians and Austrians joked across the lines and after three days' fighting there was an extraordinary lack of hatred. In fact, it is astonishing how little actual hatred exists between fighting men.

A giant red-haired Russian persisting in exposing himself, at last jumps out of the trench shouting wildly, waving his cap. His good humored jollity and bravado appealed to the "Boys" in the Austrian file and none attempted to shoot at such a splendid target. At length an Austrian not to be outdone, jumped out of the trench and presented himself in full sunlight. No one shot on either side. All fighting suddenly ceased and these two men gesticulated wildly at each other, with "come nearer" gestures. They are almost within hand reach. The Russians urge their man with shouts and laughter. He makes a jump forward. The Austrians urge their man until at last they nearly touch each other. They had left their rifles behind. Was it going to be a battle of fists, a test of strength? No the big Russian held out his hand. There was a package of tobacco in it. The Austrian seized it and offered in exchange a long Austrian cigar, which was ceremonially presented.

"It was indeed a funny sight to see the small, wiry, lean Austrian talking in exaggerated terms of politeness to the blond Russian giant, who listened gravely and attentively, as if he understood every word."

HELPING HUNGRY ENEMIES.

By this time all thoughts of fighting had been forgotten. The unofficial truce lasted twenty minutes and succeeded in restoring more good humor and joy of life among soldiers than a train load of provisions would have done.

But next comes the same truce from the pathetic hungerland which always abides somewhere along the line of an army with the most efficient commissariat. From half a mile east of his position, this accomplished violinist was hurriedly called to serve as an interpreter to two Russian officers who could speak only broken French. These two officials came under a flag of truce to say to their supposed "enemies" that their men in that neglected point had had no food for two days, and were actually on the point of starvation. Without authority from headquarters they had taken the bull by the horns and had brought with them a little barrel of water and a supply of tobacco, begging in exchange some provisions. The Austrian Major in command was at first undecided but real chivalry asserted itself, the emaciated faces of their guests testified to the truthfullness of the story. Those two were so exhausted and on the verge of collapse. Of course it was humanity in the presence of human suffering, not well fed "Austrians" in the presence of starving "Russians." Messengers went flying through the trenches making a collection of food. Officers scrambled over each each in their contest of reducing their supper in the interest of their guests and they were seated, and feasted on canned beef, cheese, biscuit and slices of salami. The proud contribution of our fiddling Lieutenant consisted of "two tablets of chocolate, part of a precious reserve for extreme cases."

"It was a strange sight to see these two Russians in an Austrian trench, surrounded by cordiality and tender solicitude. The big brotherhood of humanity had for the time enveloped friend and foe, stamping out all hatred and racial differences. It is wonderful how the most tender flowers of civilization can go hand in hand with the most brutal atrocities of grim warfare."

TO THE SCRAP-HEAP AT FORTY?

The Kansas City Times recently printed the following question from a subscriber, and added thereto a sensible reply. Here is the question:

"To the editor: I am forty years old, and feel that I am just getting started in life. But all this stuff about 'old age' getting Johnson at thirty-eight, and the antarctic explorers regarding men of thirty-five as decrepit, sort of gets me. Am I on the way to the scrap-heap?

"R. T."

And here is the sensible reply:

"You are, you are! You wouldn't have the slightest show on earth to lick Jess Willard, or to the record in the 100-yard dash, or to win a tennis championship (though Larned was a champion after forty), or to do spectacular pole-vaulting, or to get a job on the Packers, or to do any one of a hundred things you had in mind to do when you were twenty. You might as well admit it and make up your mind to it. You are on the way to the age of lean and slippered pantaloon.

"The only thing left you is to make the best of it. There are a few trifling opportunities still open. Men have been known even above the advanced age of forty to do a little something in medicine, the law, business, and such.

"The framers of the Constitution thought enough of the aged and infirm to bar persons below thirty-five from the presidential office. This may have been due to the fact that most of the members of the convention were well on in years and were jealous of youth.

"At the same time, it has to be admitted that a modicum of fame is still possible even at the age when one can no longer hope to become champion pugilist of the world and wear an American flag about one's waist. E. H. Harriman was hardly heard of before he was forty, and he began his great work, the reorganization of the Union Pacific, at fifty-two. Cromwell never saw an army until he was forty-three. Grant was a clerk in a store at thirty-nine. Woodrow Wilson became president of Princeton at forty-six. Sir William Osler himself would never have been heard of if he had died at forty, while Gladstone did not introduce the first Home Rule bill until he had reached something like maturity at seventy-seven.

"If you can reconcile yourself to letting the youngsters win the athletic championships, starve at the north pole, and get killed in the trenches, you may still find the opportunity to live a fairly useful and happy life for thirty or forty years longer."

STAY WHERE YOU ARE!

In Farm and Fireside an Indiana reader who says he has small capital writes to the question department that he is hesitating between taking a homestead in western Canada and buying some Texas school land at $1.50 to $5 per acre, on very easy terms. He asks for advice, and the editor answers:

"It might be wiser to stay in Indiana than to go to either place. There are no good homesteads left in the United States, and lands selling at from $1.50 to $5 per acre must have something the matter with them. All things considered, they are probably no cheaper than Indiana land at its selling price. If cheap lands are not paid for in money, they must be paid for in labor or hardship if they are productive lands. The thing to decide is, 'Am I willing to pay the price in hardship, isolation, and the like?' This is a question which every man must decide."

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

TO PRACTICE OR TO SENTIMENTALIZE

CHRISTIAN unity is in danger among the Disciples of becoming a theme for sentimentalizing. We are hearing our leaders talk about the "far-off goal" toward which the Christian denominations are slowly making their way.

The Disciples, too, are assumed by these leaders to be slowly making their way toward that same goal. They must take their part in the general progress, watch the concessions that others are willing to make on behalf of unity with equivalent concessions on their own part. They must "meet the Christian denominations half-way," engage with them in diplomatic parleys, and so forth, and so forth, until in some distant day unity arrives.

Our fathers did not talk so.

And it is a betrayal of the cause which they have committed to our hands for us to talk so.

The fathers said that the essential task of the Disciples was to go ALL THE WAY, not half way; that it was their business to see to it that they had nothing attaching to their practice that any Christian would ask them to "concede" or sacrifice.

The great endeavor of the Disciples' movement as conceived by the fathers, was to occupy a position in which they could feel that, so FAR AS THEY WERE CONCERNED, they were actually practicing Christian unity here and now.

They must be a thoroughly undenominational people—that was the ideal that determined the Disciples' historic position.

They always felt that when it came to interdenominational negotiations they could stay on the outside—the negotiations must inevitably end, if they came to anything at all, in the attainment of the position they, the Disciples, were already striving to occupy.

Oftentimes, no doubt, the tone of voice in which this sentiment was spoken was over-sure, dogmatic, even conceited. They did not always say "striving" to occupy. They sometimes claimed absolutely to occupy the final position. This manner of speech was unfortunate. It put the Disciples in a false light in the eyes of their Christian neighbors. It made them seem bigoted and boorish.

Had they stated their attitude as one of endeavor, of striving, rather than in the static terms of a goal already attained, they would not only have gained a more cordial response from other Christians but would have left open their own door for self-criticism, improvement, progress.

The genius of our movement for Christian unity inheres not in any particular forms or practices or beliefs, nor in the sum total of these, but in the faith that there is a way to practice unity and in the purpose to find it and walk in it.

This is where the Disciples are distinctive in the religious world. It is not in our creed, nor our mode of baptism nor our polity. Others share all these things with us, and, in some points, preceded us in adopting them.

But the Disciples are the only group of Christians in Protestantism who have set out with the purpose to practice Christian unity. They MUST practice it—or cease to be Disciples. If they find themselves making any test of fellowship in their churches that excludes from their fellowship any soul whom Christ has included in his Church the Disciples are in duty bound to change their practice at that point.

The sentimentalists recognize no such duty. They have more or less unconsciously fallen back into a denominational conception of the Disciples' movement, and they feel no urgency to practice unity themselves until all the denominations are ready to practice it. Hence they dream and sentimentalize on the remote ideal, and regard with impatience those who would practice unity here and now.

These complacent Disciples are not true Disciples. They have not yet learned what manner of spirit they are of.

FINANCING RELIGION

PASSING a new building in process of erection the other day we asked a storekeeper near by what sort of building it was to be.

"A Y. M. C. A. building," he replied.

"And how much is it going to cost?"

"Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars," he said, and added significantly, "But if it had been built by the city of Chicago, it would have cost over a million. If the city and the state would administer its affairs as economically and conscientiously as the Y. M. C. A. is administering the erection of that building our taxes would be reduced one-half. The fact is, I would like to see the municipal government of Chicago turned over to the Y. M. C. A."

This enthusiastic commentary on the business-like way in which Y. M. C. A. money was being spent holds good all the way up and down the line of Christian enterprise.

The local church gets more for the money it expends than any other institution in the community. One of the commonest remarks heard at the dedication of a new church building is an expression of surprise that so good a house could be built for the money.

Senator Sherman, of Illinois, in discussing the scandalous waste of public funds the other day declared that out of every dollar paid by the tax-payer sixty-six cents was wasted in uneconomical administration or in graft.

Among Philistines there used to circulate the silly talk against foreign missions to the effect that of every dollar given to that cause only a fraction went to the heathen and the main bulk was consumed for administration right here at home.

Of course, the untruth of that has been many times demonstrated, but even granting the truth of it, there could be, in the light of Senator Sherman's estimate, a big waste of such funds before it would constitute an argument against foreign missions.

The fact is that no enterprise in the world is run with such economy and efficiency as the great missionary societies. It is easy to demonstrate that out of every dollar given to missions at least $1.20 goes directly to the foreign field! The missionary enterprise has reached the point where the gifts from the young churches on the foreign field itself more than take care of the administrative expenses of the society. When to this consideration is added the plus value attaching to a Western dollar in the Orient it is conservative for the giver of a dollar to credit himself with a gift of at least $1.20.

The frequent criticisms passed upon the financial methods of churches may perhaps apply to the methods of getting money, but they cannot hold for a movement against the methods of administering it.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

In the matter of raising money the children of this world are often enough wiser than the children of light, but in its expenditure the children of light put the children of this world to utter shame.

DEMOCRACY AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE

ONE of the latest objections raised to equal suffrage is that it will, if adopted, double the time, double the energy, and practically double the outlay of money devoted to elections and primaries and to running the machinery of government.

Perhaps the best possible answer to this is that in states where equal suffrage obtains today no such conditions exist. But if the objection were based on fact, that would not affect the main proposition, which is that, over and above and beyond every other consideration, women are entitled to the same political rights as men.

If economy is to be a governing factor in the situation, then the fewer the men voters the cheaper the election expense. It is not difficult to see where this kind of reasoning, if pursued, would land democracy.

A HINT

THIS is both an editorial and an advertisement; we do not know whether it is conceived predominantly from the editor's or the publisher's point of view.

We wish it could be said into the ear of all ambitious story-writers among the Disciples, that there is a great theme for a novel in the spiritual experience through which thousands of persons among the Disciples of Christ are passing in these days of radical transformation of their thought life.

Recall the success of D. R. Dungan's little book, "On the Rock." A story dealing intimately with the religious problem as it relates itself particularly to a soul born and bred in the atmosphere of Disciple ideas, who now discovers a larger meaning for those ideas than was conceived by the past generation, would be certain to far outdo "On the Rock."

Such a book should do for the typical Disciple consciousness what Winston Churchill's "Inside of the Cup" did for the general orthodox consciousness of our time.

It should be thoroughly human, not too discursive, broadly tolerant in its sympathies both for the conservative and modernist, and of course, well put together.

There is a sale for such a book. It would go immeasurably farther than anybody's editorials or theological treatises. It would not only sell; it would lead, and create opinion and open the way for further progress.

It would help to clear the air.

We have heard of two books now in manuscript form approaching completion that look in this direction. Dr. Edgar DeWitt Jones, it is reported, is engaging his Ian Maclaren-like pen in the production of a human story of a country church. Rev. A. D. Harmon, of St. Paul, has produced a story whose action turns on the theme of Christian unity. His manuscript is now in the hands of the critics.

We do not know that either of these manuscripts utilizes the pathos, the dramatic tension, the disillusionment and re-discovery, and the deep human interest that inhere in the modern movement for a reinterpretation of the Disciples' principles, but it is clear to our mind that some one will be stirred some day to make a story that will utilize them.

And when that story is written we believe we can say for the Disciples' Publication Society that it would like to publish it.

AN ODE TO FREEDOM.

Here in the forest now,
As on that old July
When first our conscript fathers took the vow,
The bluebird, stained with earth and sky,
Shouts from a blowing bough
In green aerial freedom, wild and high.
And now, as then, the bobolink,
Out on the certain brink
Of the swaying alder, swings,
Loosing his song out, link by golden link;
While over the wood his proclamation rings;
A daring boast that would unkingdom kings!

Even so the wild birds sang on bough and wall
That day the Bell of Independence Hall
Thundered around the world the Word of Man,
That day when Liberty began
And mighty hopes were blown on every sea.
But Freedom calls her conscripts now as then—
Calls for heroic men:
It is an endless battle to be free.

As the old dangers lessen from the skies,
New dangers rise.
Down the long centuries to be,
Again, again, will rise Thermopylæ—
Again, again, a new Leonidas
Will hold for God the imperiled Pass.
As the long ages run
New Lexington will rise on Lexington;
And many a Warren fall
Upon the endangered wall.

Yet the black smoke of battle, it will pass—
Sometime, sometime—like vapor from glass.
There will be rest for all the weary flags,
And rest for bugles on the battle crags.
Still there will be no rest for man's strong soul;
Before him shines an ever-flying goal.
Still must he seek for freedom evermore:
No halt for any soul on any shore.
Man is the conscript of an endless quest,
A long divine adventure without rest.
Each hard-earned freedom withers to a bond:
Freedom is beyond—beyond!

—Edwin Markham.

One evening a church bell was heard ringing vigorously. The family seated around the tea-table looked up in surprise. "What bell is that?" they asked in chorus. No one seemed to know, until at last one exclaimed, "Oh, I remember now! That is the Episcopal bell ringing for the Baptist revival that begins at the Presbyterian church tonight."

To believe that we have Christ as our helper and deliverer; to believe that he is stronger than all our enemies—this is comfort and joy, this assures us that the sin which seems so near us is really divided from us; that we shall trample it under foot.—F. D. Maurice.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Dr. Grenfell Receives Additional Equipment for Work in Labrador.

Dr. Grenfell, of Labrador, is known all over the Christian world. He has been waiting anxiously for the arrival of his supply ship which was greatly delayed on account of fog. This ship will carry the largest cargo in the history of the country. The equipment for the operating room of a hospital has been given by the Congregational church of West Newton, Mass., and a company of Yale students have gone to Labrador to help Dr. Grenfell in taking charge of the mail and hospital yawl.

Great Preachers Visit Army to Encourage Troops.

The leading ministers of England are taking their turn in army service on the continent under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Dr. R. J. Campbell has been laden to an embarrassing extent with gifts for the soldiers presented by the City Temple members of London, and sent to the front. Gypsy Smith, who has been holding services for new recruits, will go to France a little later. His daughter, Zillah, has a Sunday-school class of which sixteen members have volunteered for special Christian work.

Great Preachers Come From Farms, Says One of Them.

Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, pastor of Central church, Chicago, which meets in the Auditorium theater, was speaking recently before the Minnesota Farm school. In that address he not only claimed the farm as the place of his own boyhood but asserted that of the twelve most prominent preachers in Chicago, every one of them was raised on the farm. He gave further statistics with regard to the farm origin of many of the other professional men of the city that were startling in character.

Methodism Forging Forward in Recent Years.

In 1911, the rate of gain for the Methodist Episcopal church had dropped to the low water mark. It was only .006 per cent. It has been making a steady increase ever since until in 1914 the percentage was .044. In 1901 the gain was 23,351 while in 1914 it was 167,376. The Methodist goal is now to secure a gain of 250,000 in one year. They are endeavoring to enroll a half million members in the Time Legion to work for this goal, and they hope to secure 1,000 young people to give themselves to special Christian work.

The Inner Circle, a New Organization.

John H. Nicholson was the founder of the Gideons, and now he believes that he has founded another organization of even larger significance which he calls "The Inner Circle." The Inner Circle is a praying band of twelve men with one reserve and one friend, making fourteen in all. Members of the circle are to pray each day for each other, for their pastor and their church, and for the world-wide spread of the gospel. They are to read the Bible every day and help support every prayer service of the church. A circle may be composed of either men or women, but not of both.

Work for North American Lepers.

At two places on the North American continent, lepers are gathered together for Christian worship. There is the Louisiana Leper Settlement on the Mississippi river not far from Baton Rouge. Here a little church has been built seating 120 people. The Protestant Ministers' Association, of New Orleans, has been especially interested in the services held in this church. There is also a leper colony at Palo Seco, Canal Zone. This colony was recently visited by Bishop Knight, of the Protestant Episcopal church and a number of the lepers were confirmed.

Laymen's Missionary Convention.

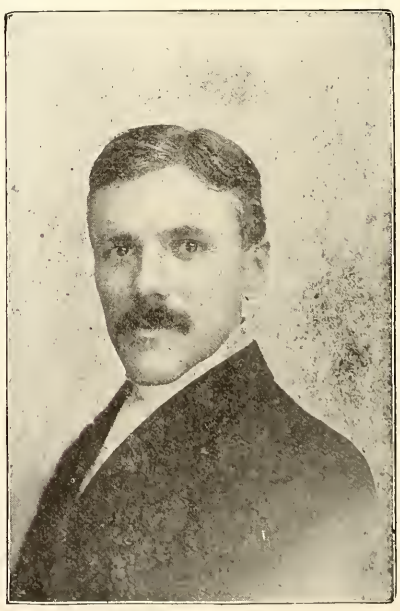
The convention of the Laymen's Missionary Movement to be held in Chicago October 14-17 in Medinah Temple is the beginning of the greatest nation-wide campaign ever undertaken by the various boards of Evangelical Christianity in America. The purpose of the convention is to consider the new world conditions and America's responsibility; to project plans looking toward the accomplishment of our whole missionary duty; to emphasize the adequacy of the gospel; to meet modern social conditions and to enlist the laymen to take their part in the extension of the Kingdom of Christ. As the Chicago convention is to be the first in this campaign, some of the best speakers of the various denominations have been secured for the program. The following men have already been engaged: Bishop Homer C. Stuntz, Methodist Episcopal Bishop, South America; Bishop A. O. Kinsolving, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, South America; Bishop C. P. Anderson, Chicago; Colonel Elijah W. Halford, New York; Dr. Cornelius H. Patten, Boston, Home Secretary of American Board; Dr. Cleland B. McAfee, McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago; Dr. Fred B. Fisher, General Secretary Methodist Episcopal Laymen's Missionary Movement; Dr. Rudolph E. Tuesler, Japan; Rev. James McNaughton, Turkey; Mr. W. G. A. Miller, Purchasing Agent American Bridge Company, Pittsburgh; Mr. Chas. Trumbull, editor Sunday-school Times, Philadelphia; Mr. Fred B. Smith, New York. The denominations are cooperating as never before and this fact insures the success of this greatest of campaigns. All the leading boards are setting apart many of their best speakers and have called home large numbers of the best missionary speakers from the field.

Clergy Club a Success.

The organization of a club for the clergy of New York has proven to be a feasible enterprise. There have been 380 applications for membership to date. The home of the club will be in the Fifth Avenue building.

Brooklyn Divine Asks Forgiveness

The financial troubles of Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis have been heralded abroad this year by the secular press of the country. An incident in the old Plymouth church on Sept. 19th was the most interesting since the trial of Henry Ward Beecher. The great preacher who is second on the American Chautauqua platform only to William Jennings Bryan, confessed that he had fallen from his ideals. He said that his ambitions for wealth and power had crushed his life, brought him to the brink of poverty and he was not worthy to unloose the shoe latches of a poor worker of the slums.



Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis.

This statement, however, is not to be interpreted as a confession of any illegal or even dishonest practice. The great preacher feels that it is not the business of a prophet to be a money-maker. His confession is that he turned aside from the ministry of the word to commercial activities.

He has been sued for libel by a nephew whose name has been prominent in connection with the reports of the financial troubles on the Pacific coast.

Among other things, Dr. Hillis said: "The day sometimes comes when we praise God for the thing which breaks our heart; we know that all is for the best. For the man who has stumbled, who has lived below his ideals, as I have lived and you have lived, there is always left the mercy of God.

"The great test of a philosophy is how it treats the fact of sin. Gladstone said: 'Our people are beginning to think that there is nothing in sin and to cease to worry about it.' There is the tender beauty of the rose, the sweet song of the lark, the celestial music of spheres, yet we have panics in finance, homes that are like unto hell, and we see strong men utterly broken and crushed like clay. We have women as beautiful as Cleopatra cursed with ruin of body and soul; we behold the glory and splendor of Athens fallen into tragic desolation. Where is the man who must not sometime say, with the publican, 'God, have mercy on me a sinner?'"

ELIJAH TAKEN UP INTO HEAVEN.

Lesson for October 10.

Golden Text: In thy presence is fulness of joy; In thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore. Psalm 16:11.

Lesson II, Kings 2:1-12a. Memory verses 11, 12a.

(1) And it came to pass, when Jehovah would take up Elijah by a whirlwind into heaven, that Elijah went with Elisha from Gilgal. (2) And Elijah said unto Elisha, Tarry here, I pray thee: for Jehovah hath sent me as far as Beth-el. And Elisha said, As Jehovah liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they went down to Beth-el. (3) And the sons of the prophets that were at Beth-el came forth to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that Jehovah will take away thy master from thy head today? And he said, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace. (4) And Elijah said unto him, Elisha, tarry here, I pray thee; for Jehovah hath sent me to Jericho. And he said, As Jehovah liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they came to Jericho. (5) And the sons of the prophets that were at Jericho came near to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that Jehovah will take away thy master from thy head to-day? And he answered, Yea, I know it: hold ye your peace. (6) And Elijah said unto him, Tarry here, I pray thee; for Jehovah hath sent me to the Jordan. And he said, As Jehovah liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And they two went on. (7) And fifty men of the sons of the prophets went, and stood over against them afar off: and they two stood by the Jordan. (8) And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapped it together, and smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither, so that they two went over on dry ground. (9) And it came to pass, when they were gone over, that Elijah said unto Elisha, Ask what I shall do for thee, before I am taken from thee. And Elisha said, I pray thee, let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me. (10) And he said, Thou hast asked a hard thing: nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so. (11) And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, which parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven. (12) And Elisha saw it, and cried, My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof!

Verse by Verse.

1. When Jehovah would take up Elijah. The time of Elijah's departure had come. His life work was ended. The "Still small voice" was coming to its own.—A whirlwind. The writer uses a figure which most nearly describes Elijah's departure.—Elisha. We learn from 2 Kings 3:11 that Elisha acted as an attendant of the aged prophet Elijah. —Went from Gilgal. Gilgal was the home of many of the prophets and from here they went to visit other schools of the prophets.

2. Tarry here, I pray thee. It may have been to test the faithfulness of Elisha or to satisfy his desire to be alone at the last like Moses.—As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth. A solemn expression, common to the Old Testament, intended to make the act certain.—I will not leave thee. As a devoted disciple he could not leave him.—Down to Bethel. A noted place in history, it is situated on the frontier of Samaria, on the highway between Galilee and Judea.

3. Sons of the prophets. Students of the prophets in the schools were called "sons of the prophets."—Knowest thou. It may have been that Elijah was feeble, and his condition made them feel that he could not last long.—Today. In oriental language this may mean soon, not necessarily that day.—Hold ye your peace. The matter was too sacred for discussion.

4. I pray thee... An urgent form of speech.—Jericho. Here was a school of the prophets. It was about twelve miles southeast of Bethel in the valley of the Jordan.

5. Came near to Elisha. Because of their feeling toward both prophets they came to Elisha. The verse is repeated from v. 3.

6. Sent me to the Jordan. To Gilead across the Jordan. Here again Elisha stood the test. The way opened to him stage by stage. It is ever so in our life. Our task well done fits us for the next.—And they two went on. The two faithful friends passed on to the final separation. It may have passed through the mind of the aged prophet that in the lonely mounts which held the sepulcher of Moses, his forerunner, Jehovah had made his tomb.

7. Fifty men of the sons of the prophets. There was intense interest shown in the events about to take pace. It was not at the fording-place that these "sons of the prophets" stood.

8. Elijah took his mantle. It was of undressed skin, the sign of the prophet's office.—Wrapped it together. He rolled it together, and used it as a rod. Ex. 7:17, 20.—Smote the waters and they divided. Since there are fords in the river Jordan it would seem that the divine economy would not demand any supernatural power.—They two. Elijah and Elisha were fast friends.

10. A hard thing. It was hard because it was a spiritual gift. They did not know what God had planned.—If thou see me when I am taken from thee. That would be a sign that God had answered the prayer, and given spiritual eyes with which to see spiritual things. This is the need of our age.

12. My father. It is a title of affection, and probably used among the prophets. See I Sam. 10:12. The "sons of the prophets" may have used it.—The chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof. Chariots may be the "chariotry," the armed forces of Israel. Elijah was of more value to Israel than the armies. It is true today that great men are worth more to a nation than great armies.

Closing Days of Elijah

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

We are considering today the closing scenes in the earthly life of a very remarkable man. The record we have of his life is very fragmentary, but what we have is full of dramatic interest. He was a man of the hills. The rugged landscape gave strength to his character, and put iron in his blood as well as courage in his heart. He was not afraid of men, because he feared Jehovah and in his way sought to please him. Like all other men he made his mistakes. He came short of his ideal many times during his stormy life, and became very much discouraged with the problems he met; but on the whole he had the joy of a noble service to his day and generation. We need men in our day who have the courage to rebuke sin in high places. We too often read the story of these great leaders of old, and feel that the chances for heroic service are not so abundant today. The real fact is that there are just as many chances as ever for the man who has a trained eye to see them. It would seem that the more complex life becomes the more problems are found along the way. There are home runs to be made in every game of life.

One of the most valuable services rendered by Elijah was the training of Elisha who had the honor of receiving the aged prophet's mantle. The influence on the life of Elisha is shown by his refusal to leave Elijah. He was the aged prophet's most faithful disciple. His spirit was more calm than that of his master. His spirit was more like the "still small voice." It would be too much to look for an ideal prophet in that day; but it is a long way from the very crude notion held by the prophets of Saul's day. In the light of Elisha's day his message was a real contribution to the religious life of his age. We feel at this point so often that too much emphasis cannot be placed on the training of our young people for vital service in the church. Some very good churchmen say, "If you want anything done well you must do it yourself," and upon this feeling they act. The result is that the young men are not trained for church leadership, and when older men are called upon to "cross the bar," there is no one upon whom their mantle can fall. This would be calamity enough, but very frequently it happens that these selfish men will not lead or allow others to lead, and we have an unsafe people. It should be our aim to have many in training for leaders. They may not be able at first to do the work as well as their elders, but it is a part of the development they need for life however simple or complex. The future is in the hands of the present to a very great degree. If this could be grasped by the public it would lighten the burden and increase the efficiency of the leaders in this field of endeavor. The life work of the aged prophet closed, and like Moses his sepulcher is not known. He lived for God, and God took him. The men and women of our day are not singing songs of a future heaven because they are so busy doing heavenly things here. In early days there was a tendency to dwell upon the personal joy and happiness of heaven without remembering that joy and happiness are by-products and are not to be obtained by a direct seeking for one's self. Heaven is a condition of the heart and life. "It is within us." If in thinking of heaven we emphasize place of happiness and not character we are wrong. Richter says, "That the wish often warms up my heart, that I may learn nothing here that I cannot continue in the other world: that I may do nothing here but deeds that will bear fruit in heaven."

New Church Building After Fire Loss.

One year ago the church building at Kirklin, Ind., was destroyed by fire. On Sunday, August 8, a beautiful new building was dedicated. It is a monument to the heroic activities of the people of that church. Will Wiedrich has been preaching for this church for the past three years, while a student in Butler College. D. G. Dungan began a revival meeting immediately following the dedication. There were fifty-seven additions.

Two New Preachers for Eastern District, Indiana.

Carl Burkhardt, of the Burkhardt Bros. of Tipton, Ind., a graduate of Butler College and the divinity school of Yale University, has accepted the work at Franklin, Ind. He is well equipped to assume the responsibilities of that important educational center. He has served for almost two years as pastor of the church at Lexington, Missouri. John W. Underwood, who did a great work at Leipsic and Ashtabula, Ohio, and at the Belmar Church of Pittsburg, has accepted the work of the First Church at Anderson.

Preachers' Institute at Bedford, Ind.

To further the effectiveness and quicken the vitality of the preachers and churches of the Southwestern District, Indiana, Melnotte Miller, evangelist of that district, has been planning a Preachers' and Workers' Institute, to be held at Bedford. Oct. 11-15 is the time set. Among the leaders in the institute will be W. S. Buchanan, P. Y. Pendleton, S. S. Lappin, W. H. Book and C. W. Cauble. J. Boyd Jones, J. W. Street, Garry L. Cook and a number of other leaders will probably also be present.

Guy I. Inman Vacationing in Massachusetts.

Guy I. Inman sends the editor a card from Sagamore Beach, Mass., where he has been spending a few days in rest, before taking up again his arduous duties on the Latin-American Commission, to which he was recently appointed by the United States Government. He writes: "I slipped away from New England Convention at Boston and went first to Plymouth—1620 fame—then over here, where I am enjoying a visit with Dr. F. E. Clark, who is convalescing splendidly at his summer home here. The Christian Endeavorers have a fine summer colony here. This afternoon I am off for Buzzards Bay to commune with the spirits of Grover Cleveland and Joseph Jefferson."

C. H. Winders to Hold Meeting in Missouri.

First church, Mexico, Mo., W. A. Shullenberger, pastor, has secured C. H. Winders, of the Downey Ave. church, Indianapolis, Ind., to assist in a revival meeting to be held this fall. Mr. Winders was for twelve years the pastor at Columbia, Mo. The time of the meeting will be sometime in October or November.

Men and Millions in Missouri.

The Men and Millions team are making their initial appearance in Missouri this month. About the middle of September they were scheduled to hold their first banquet at Sedalia. Thus far some $2,700,000 has been secured and while the number of young men and women volunteering for missionary service in foreign lands and in America is not announced it is known to be quite satisfactory.

South Akron, O., Church Dedicates.

W. G. Loucks, pastor at South Akron, O., church, reports that on July 5, fifty-four men, members of the church and a few friends, came together and built an addition to the church 16x62 ft. They also built 600 ft. of cement walk in front of the church. There was not a paid laborer on the job. Sunday, Sept. 12, the new part, together with the repaired, remodeled old building, was formally set apart for the Lord's work. Over 1,500 feet of floor space is included in the addition, which provides a pastor's study, a big room for the women's class, a room for the Beginners, and a room large enough for the entire Junior department. The South Akron church is now equipped with separate rooms for the Beginners, Primary and Juniors. The men's class is now afforded opportunity to return from the Arcade Theater to the church. For a remodeled building, this is one of the most complete structures in the city. On dedication day $2,500 was needed and over $3,000 was subscribed. Mr. Loucks, for nearly eight years minister of the church, had charge.

Home for Aged to Pay Off Mortgage.

C. H. Whiteman, President of the Board of Managers of the Northwestern Home for the Aged at Walla Walla, Washington, operated by the National Benevolent Association, is making a special appeal to the Disciples of the Northwest for funds with which to pay off the mortgage of eight thousand dollars which that home is carrying and which is due March 1, 1916. Mr. Whiteman offers to be one of one hundred to give fifty dollars each toward this amount.

Advance Steps in the Congo Country.

H. C. Hobgood, missionary at Lotumbe, Africa, writes that he and Dr. Frymire have just returned from a six-weeks' trip in the territory above Lotumbe. Two hundred were baptized in the villages where we have evangelists. Mr. Hobgood also reports that strong evangelists were placed at Bianga and Monkoto, state posts, and at Wafania and Bonginji, important trading centers.

Eureka Church Adds to Its Forces.

Verle W. Blair, of the Eureka, Ill., church, writes that a new recruit to the church and school there is Professor Thomson, late of the Springfield church. Professor Allen has recently become superintendent of the Eureka schools. Mr. Blair writes that plans are being made to use the new superintendent in the Eureka "Church School."

Kansas City Ministers' Alliance to Meet.

The first of the fall meetings of the Christian Ministers' Alliance, of Kansas City and vicinity, will be held at First church, Kansas City, Monday morning, Sept. 27, at 10:30. Evangelist Charles Reign Scoville will deliver an address on "Evangelism," which will be followed by a general discussion led by Evangelist W. J. Lockhart. All Disciple men of the vicinity who can attend are invited. These meetings are held the last Mondays in each month. The practice of pooling and equalizing the Summer at the University of Chicago

The popularity of the University of Chicago Summer School has become an established fact. During the quarter just closed the total enrollment was about 4,000. The Divinity School participated in this general prosperity,—the total enrollment for the summer being 319, the highest mark yet reached. The proportion of "regular" students was noticeably smaller than in the other three quarters, while the number of ministers and missionaries who were taking their vacations was larger.

The Disciples had their usual quota in the school. The Disciples' Club, which has long been a recognized organization in the Divinity School life, attempted to get all its members together as many times as possible during the summer. Dr. C. M. Sharpe gave three lectures before the club, on the historical growth of theology among the Disciples, contrasting the formal logic which has outwardly characterized the movement, with the vital logic, which has really been the guiding force, and setting forth the probable direction in which the work of the Disciples will develop. Dr. Sharpe also gave a course in the Disciples' Divinity House. W. E. Gordon supplemented Dr. Sharpe's excellent lectures, by a talk on "The Political Aspects of India."

Probably close to one hundred Disciples were in attendance at the university, of which number thirty-three were enrolled in the Divinity School as follows: W. G. Alcorn, Monroe City, Mo.; C. G. Baker, who becomes one of the ministers of Indianapolis; Gary L. Cook, the Indiana Sunday-school leader; Miss Grace Daniels; Prof. A. W. Fortune, of Transylvania, who received his Ph.D. this summer with a "magna"; Prof. Walter Gibbs, Columbia, Mo.; W. E. Gordon, India; Prof. G. W. Henry, of Transylvania, who received the B. D. degree; Miss Blanche Holmes, who goes to William Woods to teach; John Imhof; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Jensen; Prof. P. M. Kendall, Canton, Ohio; Rex E. Kissell, who will teach in Drake Bible College; George C. Campbell, pastor Armour Ave. church in Chicago; W. C. MacDougall, India; Prof. Frank Marshall, of Phillips University, Enid, Okla., who received the M. A. degree; Jasper T. Moses, formerly of Mexico, who received the M. A. degree, and goes to teach in Colorado; Roy Mathews, who received the M. A. degree; Mrs. Elizabeth Norton, the Librarian at Transylvania; Kirby Page; Mrs. Charles Records; Charles Ritchey; A. G. Scambler; Mart Gary Smith; Prof. E. E. Stringfellow, of Drake; John F. Stubbs; Prof. H. T. Sutton, of Bethany; C. W. Schwartz, Hamilton, O.; C. R. Sine, Hamilton, O.; F. M. R. Thackaberry; J. E. Wolfe; G. L. Zerby. Messrs. W. H. Smith and C. H. Winders, pastors at Bloomington and Indianapolis, Ind., were visitors at the university, and attended classes for a week or more. The broad fellowship and the unexcelled opportunity for study made the past summer quarter a helpful experience for those who were here, and will be sure to lead back even larger numbers in future years.

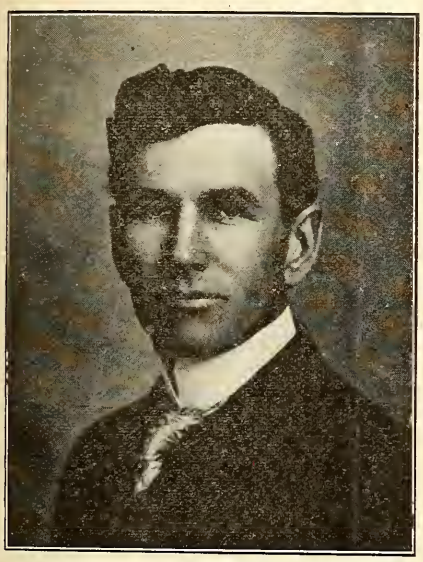
traveling expenses of members attending has been followed during the past year. Wm. M. Mayfield is secretary of the organization.

National Temperance Board Elects.

The National Temperance Board, at a meeting held in Indianapolis, Sept. 13, re-elected David H. Shields, Kokomo, Ind., as president; L. C. Howe, Noblesville, vice-president; Robert Sellers, Elwood, Ind., recording secretary; elected E. E. Moorman, minister of Englewood church, Indianapolis, treasurer; and E. L. Day, 2822 North Illinois St., Indianapolis, financial agent for the board. All money should be sent to him. Mr. Day is minister of the North Park church, Indianapolis. A committee was appointed to secure a man for field secretary.



Rev. D. H. Shields, who has been re-elected president of the National Temperance Board.

Increase in Hiram Enrollment.

J. O. Newcomb, secretary of Hiram College, writes that the college year opened on Tuesday of last week with a striking increase in the enrollment. The Freshmen class is above 100 in number, and will be larger by at least fifteen than the largest previous class in the history of the college. The enrollment in the college proper (Freshman and above) is larger than ever before. The enrollment to date is made up of students from thirteen states and three foreign countries, about three-fourths being residents of Ohio.

L. R. Patmont Speaks in Ft. Wayne.

Louis R. Patmont, the temperance worker whose case created a country-wide sensation early in the present year when he was kidnaped and kept in seclusion for nearly four months, recently spent four days in Ft. Wayne, Ind. On Sunday evening he addressed a large congregation at the West Jefferson Street Church of Christ, speaking on "The Beginning of the Christian Church in Russia." He did not discuss his own experiences.

"Boys' Friend" Connor at Jacksonville, Ill.

During the week beginning Sept. 27, there will be held a campaign in the interests of the boys and girls of Jacksonville, Ill. A. W. Connor of Indianapolis, has been secured for the entire week and he will conduct what is known as the "Boys' Friend Chautauqua." Parents will be welcome at general meetings which will be held each afternoon and evening. Work for the girls will be in charge of Miss Mary Seeger, a specialist in her line, who will conduct interesting meetings for girls. Mr. Connor will deliver a popular lecture each evening on some phase of the boy problem. M. L. Pontius, pastor at Jacksonville announces that John L. Brandt, of First Church, St. Louis, will hold a meeting for the Illinois church in November.

Spokane Disciple Pastors Organize.

An association of the pastors of the Christian churches of Spokane was formed last month. The following officers were appointed: J. Quincey Biggs, pastor of the Dean Avenue church, president; Hardy G. Koen, pastor of the Pacific Avenue church, vice president; O. A. Ishmel, pastor of the Kenwood church, secretary-treasurer. The meetings of the association will be held the first and third Mondays of each month.

Chautauqua circuit. He begins the year with a series of revival services held at the Highland Christian Church, of which Dan Trundle is pastor.

Continuous Evangelism at Grand Rapids.

William Verner Nelson, pastor of Lyon St. church, Grand Rapids, Mich., is planning a continuous evangelistic campaign to be held during the fall and winter months. Mr. Nelson has not yet announced the date of the first evangelistic meeting. He states that during the campaign he will put special stress on attendance at the Sunday and Wednesday evening meetings. The pastor does not believe in motion pictures or other like attractions to procure an audience at these meetings, but will preach a straightforward gospel sermon.

Church to Strengthen Weak Points.

L. N. D. Wells, of High Street Church, Akron, O., recently returned from a lengthy vacation and published a personal letter to his brethren urging their co-operation in building and strengthening their two weak points. These he declared to be the Sunday evening and mid-week audiences.

Mrs. Lura V. Porter at Moline, Ill.

Mrs. Lura V. Porter filled, by special invitation, the pulpit of Rev. J. A. Barnett in First Church, Moline, Ill., on September 12, and organized an auxiliary to the Christian Women's Board of Missions.

College Head Against Military Training for Students.

Asked for his views in regard to training college students in military tactics, Joseph A. Serena, recently elected to the presidency of William Woods College, Fulton, Mo., wrote for the New York Times the following:

"To the Editor of The New York Times: The courses offered by the preparatory school are dictated by the colleges and universities, so that if there are to be any fundamental changes they must first come from the higher body. There is need today for an enlargement in the electives offered for college entrance, and a corresponding diminution in the required work. It is to be regretted that every student entering college does not come with a knowledge of business principles, typewriting, and business writing and arithmetic. Not only in the conduct of the larger affairs of administration but in the conduct of their personal business would this stand most students well in hand. Few colleges can give any credit for such courses offered for entrance, and in consequence the preparatory school is weak in this branch of work. The disadvantage of military training in both preparatory school and college is so great that I cannot bring myself to have any sympathy with the movement. Europe today is a picture of the nations which a year ago considered themselves prepared. There is an analogy in our own country where the law regarding the carrying of firearms is laxly enforced. In these parts crimes growing out of the use of firearms are frequent, whereas in other parts of our country homicides are rare. It is a great temptation for the nation that feels itself prepared

A Survey of Indiana Discipledom.

The Indiana Christian Missionary Society is planning a survey of the churches of the state. This work is to be started the first of next year and a complete report will be given at the Danville convention. It is expected that most of the information will be secured through the County organizations. The State office will be grateful if every preacher and every church will cooperate with the evangelist of the district.

University Preachers at U. of C.

Religious services are conducted at the University of Chicago every Sunday during the academic year in Leon Mandel Assembly Hall. A schedule of University preachers for the Autumn Quarter has just been announced as follows: October 3 and 10, Dr. F. G. Peabody, of Cambridge, Massachusetts. October 17, Bishop W. F. McDowell, of Evanston, Illinois. October 24 and 31, Dr. Carter Helm Jones, of the First Baptist Church, Seattle, Washington. November 7 and 14, Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York City. November 21 and 28, Dean Charles R. Brown, of the Yale School of Religion. December 5 and 12, Bishop C. D. Williams, of Detroit, Michigan. December 19 (Convocation Sunday), Dr. John Timothy Stone, of Fourth Presbyterian Church of Chicago

Eureka College Begins Good Year.

The following telegram received from President H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka, contains good news: "Eureka College opens with largest freshman class in history. Fifty per cent increase over last year. Total enrollment much larger than ever. Dormitory crowded to fullest capacity. New gymnasium almost ready for roof. President's house nearing completion. Everything gives promise of great year."

Church Studies Life of Paul.

H. W. Hunter, pastor at Wellington, Kan., reports that great interest is being taken by his people in the studies in the Life of Paul, which are a feature of the prayer-meetings for the fall months.

J. R. Havener Leaves California Church.

J. R. Havener will conclude his ministry of three years with First church, Ocean Park, California, Oct. 1. During his service at Ocean Park, 175 have been added to the membership. Two Christian Endeavor Societies of thirty members each, and a splendid chorus choir of twenty-five voices, have been organized, and over $4,000 in improvements added to the church property.

An Opportunity for Service.

Mrs. Mary B. Thornberry, matron of the Juliette Fowler Home, Dallas, Texas, writes: "The playground swing and the sliding board, given by citizens of Dallas have been a source of much enjoyment. We are needing some porch chairs and something to equip the boys' playroom with. If anyone has it in mind to do something toward furnishing this home, the things above will be most acceptable."

H. H. Peters for Lieut.-Governor.

H. H. Peters, now pastor at Paris, Ill., is the first down-state man, seriously to consider the race for lieutenant-governor, reports a Paris daily. Mr. Peters has a strong state-wide reputation through his financial work for Eureka College.

MISSIONARY YEAR CLOSING.

It is now only fifteen days until the books of the Foreign Society close for the missionary year. The time is short. Let every church and Sunday-school, Endeavor Society and personal friend be in line on the year's record. The gospel is being preached to the ends of the earth. Great things are being done in all the fields to make Jesus Christ known. Let every friend of the gospel do his full part in sounding out the Word of Truth.

Send to F. M. Rains, secretary, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Money given for missions should be used for missions and not for local current expenses. Some churches put their missionary money in the general treasury and it never reaches the missionary societies. This has occurred more than once. It should never occur again. Church officers should keep faith with the membership, always and absolutely.

J. G. Slayter says: "A Foreign Missionary Rally is the greatest blessing that can be granted a church, provided the church makes ready to receive it." W. F. Turner said: "As to the value of a rally, I can only say that I consider it invaluable." Another prominent minister said: "A rally stirs me to the depths of my being. I always come home with a burning heart and a deeper interest in the wider reaches of the Master's work."

The foreign society has recently received a large number of individual gifts to help in this time of emergency. One sends the amount she expected to spend in attending the state fair. Another finds that after careful adjustment of expenditures he can spare $50 for this work. Another good friend writes that the corn of last year is just being marekted, and when that is done $2,400 cash will be available. A host of friends are remembering the work in this time of need.

PROGRESS IN TEACHER TRAINING

The Teacher Training report for the Disciples of Christ for the quarter ending June 25th, 1915, shows the following splendid report. One hundred and six (106) classes in all have been enrolled from seventeen different states and provinces, with a total enrollment of 1049 pupils.

Of the enrolled classes, 89 are at work on the First Standard Course and 17 on the Advanced.

The state having the largest number of enrolled classes is Pennsylvania, with 14, while Illinois and Kentucky both tie for second place with 12 classes each.

The total number of enrolled classes among all communions for the quarter ending June 25th, 1915, is 1308 and the total number of pupils, 14,178.

We are receiving regularly inquiries concerning the new standard of Teacher Training, which was adopted at our Los Angeles Convention and quite a number of classes will be organized this fall in the new three year diploma course.

The curriculum for the new course, which includes at least three years' study of forty hours per year (unless additional work is done in schools of methods, city institutes or summer schools) is divided as follows:

	hours
The study of the pupil	20
Study of the curricula	20
Principles and methods of teaching	20
A general Bible Survey	20
Bible-school history and administration	20
Specialization, including observation and practice work, for at least four groups	20

(a) Elementary teachers.
(b) Secondary teachers.
(c) Adult teachers.
(d) Administrative workers.

Total course, 120 hours.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

"The Conquest"

THOMAS CURTIS CLARK, Editor

It tells of the big things doing in the fields of the Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor society and the Church.

It puts its readers in touch with the ideals of social service, and keeps them informed of the latest achievements in temperance and missions.

It provides the best aids to the study of the International Uniform Sunday-school Lessons, and of the Christian Endeavor topic.

It makes a special feature of brief articles and talks that are certain to build character in young people.

It is filled with spicy science notes and items of current history.

It prints the best poetry it can find, both serious and comic, and abounds with bits of wisdom from great men and women of the world.

It gives delight each week by its apt pictures of the lighter side of life—in "Chuckles."

It prints in each issue attractive and helpful short stories.

It is the ideal weekly paper for adult and young people's Bible classes.

NOTES FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

The Society has received since the last report three gifts on the annuity plan, one of $1,500, and one of $1,000, and one of $3,000. One of these was from Missouri, one from Ohio, and one from Kentucky.

The church in Bolenge, Africa, gave last year $600 towards self-support. Considering the small incomes of the people, this is a remarkable showing.

Most of the month of June was spent by Dr. Frymire and H. C. Hobgood, of Africa, itinerating in the upper river territory. They visited twelve new villages and all the outposts in the Imoma district. There were 138 baptized.

Dr. Frymire, of Africa, writes about the need of medicine. Medicine was sent, but because of the war has not reached the field. The missionaries are putting the people off with promises. They regret that they are not able to keep the promises. There are thirteen cases for major operations impatiently waiting their promised operations. Others have died because the operations were not performed.

C. F. McCall and P. A. Davey, of Japan, had a good trip through the Akita district in the month of July. They sold more Bibles and Christian books than upon any trip in the last seven years.

The Thirty-fourth Annual Conference of the Churches of Christ Mission in Japan was held in Karuizawa, July 20-23. Nearly all the missionaries were present. The reports of the past year's work were very encouraging, especially that of the union evangelistic work. In this wonderful three-years' campaign the Japanese church has undertaken a task never before undertaken by any native church in the world, and it is succeeding, too. The Japanese Christians are responding whole-heartedly with both time and money.

Just before leaving San Francisco, Mrs. C. E. Benlehr, who is on her way to India, wrote: "It is so good to realize we are on our way back, at last. The children are so happy, too." C. E. Benlehr went to India, leaving his family in America. They are now on the way to join him.

pagans. On April 28 the opening exercises

W. H. Hanna writes from the Philippine Islands that two good chapels have been finished in the Aparri district under the leadership of one of the students from the Bible College. Seven women and one man were baptized in Vigan during the month. Other workers report four baptisms in that district. In the Aparri station there were ten baptisms in the month of May, and five in April. These had formerly been were held in the new chapel built by the people of three barrios in a place called Bulbuluacan.

Charles S. Settlemyer writes from China that the days schools at Hsia Kuan and Drum Tower closed in the second week of July. For the first time there were closing exercises for the Drum Tower Schools. The boys and teachers took a great deal of interest and did very well in recitations, essay-reading and singing. The parents of the boys were invited and they came in large numbers. Pastor Chen, of the Drum Tower Church, who takes a deep interest in the schools, was glad for this opportunity to meet the boys' parents.

A. R. Bowman, of Wuhu, China, writes that the reading rooms still prove a source of interest. The average attendance of men each day is about seventy-five. Four women and ten men were baptized at Wuweichow in July. The missionaries are praying for the time when this will be a resident station.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

The Confession of Dr. Hillis

REV. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS, successor to Beecher and Lyman Abbott in the pulpit of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, stood before his congregation on a recent Sunday morning and confessed that he had fallen below his ideals as a Christian minister by embarking in speculative business enterprises and by inducing others, some of them members of his own congregation, to invest with him in his schemes, as a result of which they have lost heavily, and he has not only lost all he possessed but finds himself entangled in a mesh of obligations which are causing him grave public embarrassment.

Dr. Hillis declared with great frankness, but without self-pity, that he had done wrong in dividing his mind with business ambition and cares when it should have been wholly given to his Christian leadership. He was haunted with the fear that he had been setting a harmful example to young ministers—by his pursuit of Chautauqua platform publicity, by his acceptance of honors instead of working at the quieter tasks of shepherding his flock, as well as by laying his ministry open to the just charge of commercialism.

He confessed that in a sinful degree he had been controlled by his ambition for wealth and power, and the sordid trail of this ambition could be traced over all his work as a minister of Christ.

This self-humiliation of one of America's leading preachers is the most sensational thing that has happened in the Church life of the country in a long time. The daily press has told the story from one end of the country to the other and has started thereby a searching of heart among churchmen and ministers of all religious bodies.

Questions as to the effect of the confession upon the future usefulness of Dr. Hillis seem at this time to be both unanswerable and indelicate. Those who raise such questions now cannot but appear to be taking a cold-hearted view of a soul's struggle that calls rather for sympathy and in turn for self-criticism.

The Brooklyn preacher is perhaps, after all, not a sinner above hundreds of his brethren in the ministry. Whatever fate awaits him, the honest unbosoming of his conscience in the presence of his church should have the effect of confronting every minister in the land with the searching question:

"Am I living up to my ideals as a minister?"

In these days when the distinction between secular callings and the sacred calling has all but vanished, there has vanished also from many minds the very fine and vital distinction that inheres in the minister's calling. It is not a difference between sacred and secular. The world of business is a sacred world; its activities are sacred activities and should be carried on in the light of eternity.

But because we have dismissed the false sacred-secular dichotomy it does not follow that the minister's calling need not be marked off from business pursuits by certain distinctions and restraints.

The essential function of the minister in society demands that he keep his mind free from the anxieties and ambitions of speculative business. He is a prophet, a teacher, a comforter of the people. He deals with the finest and most intimate impulses of their souls—their aspirations, their conscious and unconscious yearnings, their problems of doubt, their perplexities, their temptations.

These things are the intangible stuff of his business.

If he has any other business on hand, any other anxieties, he will not have patience to do this business as it ought to be done; he will tend to dispatch it all without insight and sympathy while he hurries to get to the more tangible and claimant interests of his private business.

How often has the tragedy of Dr. Hillis been enacted before our eyes, with the added sadness that the victim of it never seemed to become aware of the undermining of his prophetic power by the insidious effect of private ambition and the lust of wealth!

Such a minister has no time, or not sufficient time, to study. The reading of books, in the large way the growing minister must read boods, is not easily compatible with the schemes of business and the demands of business responsibility. The power to create fresh formulations of life's problems and ideals is stifled, and the business-man minister falls back upon his old sermons which with continual repetition take on at last a passionless and metallic ring and fall dead on the ears of his people.

The distinction between the business man and the minister is not a distinction of secular and sacred, but a division of labor.

The minister, set apart from the scheming and clamor of business, is a social necessity if ideals and the higher life are to be duly interpreted to mankind and if mankind is to be carried continually forward in progress toward these ideals.

Whatever the ministerial fortunes of Dr. Hillis may prove to be—and all earnest men will pray for the healing of his soul and the greatening of his ministry as a result of his public confession—whatever happens to Dr. Hillis personally, the incident will surely prove to be a wholesome and illuminating one throughout the ranks of the Christian ministry.

It should make many a minister aware of the vanity and danger of financial ambition.

It should bring contentment to the soul of every minister who is guiding as faithfully as he can the spiritual destinies of whatever flock the divine Bishop has made him the shepherd.

It should shock back into the realm of spiritual ideals and unselfish service any minister whose hands have been dabbling in speculative business.

It should put under the conscious condemnation of the whole Church any minister who uses the prestige of his title or calling to induce confiding people to invest in schemes in which he is interested.

And it should awaken the whole Church to its almost absurdly plain but sadly neglected duty of providing its ministry with a decent living so that the necessity of supplementing a meagre salary with business adventure will no longer exist.

If Dr. Hillis' confession can bring about reform in any of these directions he will not have suffered in vain.

The "Holy War" in Persia

BY DR. JOHN SERGIUS

Indications of horrible butcheries are beginning to leak through the censorship exercised by Turkey over the dealings of the Turks and Kurds with the inhabitants of Armenia, the secluded mountain country in the interior of Turkey in Asia. Missionaries and American residents in that country have not been allowed to so much as mention the war in their communications to the outside world. But some news is now being smuggled through in one way or another. Our Turkish Ambassador, Mr. Morgenthau, recently gave an interview to a clever and daring correspondent, who succeeded in getting it past the censorship, telling an astonishing story of the massacre of 350,000 Armenians—more than one-third the total population of the country. Mr. Morgenthau suggests that Americans raise $5,000,000 and send rescue ships for the surviving 550,000, bringing them to this country and colonizing them on some portion of our western lands. The long-time persecution of the Armenians at the hands of the Turks warrants grave fears that any of them will be preserved if the war continues much longer. Dictates of humanity must prompt the Christians of this land to take some steps, whether in the direction suggested by Mr. Morgenthau or in some other way, to shield these ancient witnesses to Christianity from the mad rage of the bloodthirsty Moslems. The following letter was written to President A. McLean of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. How it evaded the censorship is not known, but it contains the grewsome story of the heartless treatment to which Armenian Christians are now subjected. It is written by Dr. John Sergius, an Armenian dentist, a Disciple of Christ, educated at Drake University in this country, and a man held in high esteem by the officials of the Foreign Society and the editor of The Christian Century. His words penned in the heat of persecution will elicit sympathy and should elicit substantial aid from American Christian readers.

Tabriz, June 9, 1915.

I AM glad to say that we are alive. We are first thankful to our Heavenly Father and then to our American flag. Were it not for the flag under which over eighteen thousand people found shelter, there would not be left a soul alive.

I wrote you some six months ago about the situation here at Urmi and even felt that it was my last letter to you. It was on the ever-memorable day of the New Year of 1915, when sad news was spread about the sudden departure of Russian troops from Oroomish. In the afternoon of the same day Russians evacuated the city of Oroomish. On Saturday morning the Moslem population of the city fell upon the Christian headquarters, the Russian consulate and the soldiers' houses and looted every house. After they got through carrying household goods, they began to tear down windows, door shutters, and burned a few houses. Most of the leading Christian men of the city had fled; a few who were left had hidden themselves. I was the only person left among 10,000 bloodthirsty rioting Moslems, pleading with them and the others not to burn the houses. Suddenly some one brought me word that "your house is surrounded with over two hundred rioters." At once I ran to see what was going on, when suddenly a Persian soldier (whom I thought was sent to protect our house) pointed his rifle towards me. Some one near by held his gun, but as I was going through the hall some soldier fired at me. His bullet came within an inch of my head. Nothing could be done; my house was looted by this wild mob. I made up my mind to leave at once, otherwise I am sure I would have been killed. While going through the street two men came at me with brandishing daggers, but some friendly Moslems saved my life. After this the wholesale plunder of 115 villages, towns and hamlets where Christians lived was begun by Kurds and Persians of Suni and Shis belief.

PLUNDER AND MASSACRE.

The inhabitants of about twenty villages and hamlets had come to the largest Christian town in the Oroomish district, Gugtapah. These poor people had brought all their cattle and household goods to this place. There were over 6,000 Christians in the place, including the village people. More than 500 young men fought bravely around about town; but alas! they were too few for 15,000 Kurds and Persians. They fled to hide themselves in one of the churches on the very summit of the ancient fire-worshipers' hill of ashes. Now also all inhabitants fled toward the church. Kurds entered the town and began to plunder and massacre people. More than 300 persons were murdered in the most horribly fiendish way that the devil can manufacture. Most of these unfortunate victims were old men and women who could not run away. Only a few young persons were killed. Some of these persons were burned after being shot, some cut to pieces with daggers, some thrust in the hot baking ovens. Finally, all the people over 5,000, after the massacre and pillage took place, ran to the church, (Orthodox) which had a very high wall around its court and then the big gates were locked. Now brave young men went on the roof of the church and began fighting with the Kurds and Persians while women and children in the church were praying and pleading that God might send a miracle. In this crowd were my poor brothers' and sisters' families.

A MAN OF GOD AND THE AMERICAN FLAG.

Surely God heard the wailing and weeping of these poor people. Some of the young men saw at a distance a group of horsemen coming towarsd them at speedy gait. They thought perhaps this might be some Russian Kossacks coming to their help, but to their great surprise it was Dr. Packard, our beloved medical missionary, with an American flag and a dozen government horsemen. When some Kurdish chiefs saw Dr. Packard, they knew him. He told them that he would give them the guns of the Christian men, if they would spare their lives and that they could have all the goods and wealth of the town. Finally they opened the doors of the church and there came out about six thousand men, women and children, who would have been butchered every one if that man of God, Dr. J. F. Packard, had not reached there. He took this large crowd of people to the city mission yard. During these three days some of the most fearful things happened. Over two thousand men and women were massacred; four or five hundred girls and women taken into captivity, and about five or six hundred were forced to accept the Moslem religion.

After three days the Turkish soldiers with a large band of Kurds came to the city. These people began to plunder the city houses and kill the people. Seven persons in one house were murdered and three or four houses were looted, when missionaries phoned to the Turkish authorities that they should stop this business. Some Turkish officers told their soldiers to stop their doings, and at the same time shot a few Kurds and Persian Moslems. Now all the Christian population of Urmiah, about 10,000 of them, had fled with the Russian army. Two or three thousand were massacred and about eighteen or twenty thousand took shelter under the American flag. This large crowd of people with hardly any clothing, most of them barefooted and without any bedding, were crowded in mission yards.

ON THE EDGE OF STARVATION.

There were from twenty to forty persons in every small room, crowded together; they even had not enough room to stretch themselves. Most of the people slept in the open air. All this crowd was fed on bread alone, which the missionaries gave, one loaf of bread for every person per day, merely to keep him from starvation. I had my share in keeping about twenty persons (four families) of my near relatives and we gave shelter and helped others also. Here within the mission yard were imprisoned 18,000 innocent and helpless persons. Nobody knows why! Only because these people were Christians and might have sympathy with Russians. Ignorant Moslems have heard the command of Jahat (for the holy war against Christians.) Every Kurd believes if he murders a Christian he will go to heaven. There were Kurds of fifteen tribes, Persian revolutionists, Arabs, Turkish irregulars, Persian village people, and a large army of these people which did the most awful things done in the history of the world. I can only say in a few words, that in this bloody war the poor nation of 30,000 Nestorian Christians was doomed to her fate by the most bloodthirsty people—wild Kurds, Arabs and ever-hated Persian Turks and regular Turks of the Ottoman kingdom. There was nothing left undone. Men were murdered in the most indescribable way, children tossed from the arms of their mothers, women disgraced publicly, little girls seven and eight years old were assaulted and killed in the hands of their captors.

For five months we were imprisoned so that we could not get a word from the outside world or write. For three months all my family and twenty persons whom I kept, slept in one room, we even did not dare to take off our clothing and shoes when we went to bed for one month in cold weather. I was watching during the night lest Turks surprise me and kill me. Many false accusations were brought against me—that I had hidden two Russian soldiers, three guns and had burned a Moslem mosque and had killed also a Moslem, but in all of these trials not one of my hairs was harmed, although we lost what goods we had. They tore down our windows, doors and injured our house to the extent of $1,000. They took my horse, two cows, etc., smashed to pieces all household articles and carried away a large quantity of my wheat and did other damages to the extent of $1,300, altogether about $2,300 which is all I had. We only trust our gracious heavenly Father. Men who were worth $10,000 and $15,000 are beggars, and are existing on the meagre pittance which is given to them by Presbyterian missionaries. Contagious diseases have killed more than 6,000 persons. Altogether those who were massacred and died with contagious diseases number between ten and eleven thousand.

I pray that the Christian people of America will not allow America to hurl herself into this infamous and cruel war. Were it not for the stars and stripes not a single Christian in Persia would be left and were it not for the consecrated missionaries who actually gave their lives, and all for the sake of this small nation of Nestorians. Out of eighteen or twenty missionaries at Oroomish, only three persons escaped typhoid and typhus. Three of the good women, a lady teacher, Mrs. McDowell and Mrs. Shedd, entered into their heavenly home and sacrificed their lives for the sake of others. Now we are going on the sixth month. All this crowd of people is sustained by these good missionaries borrowing money from this Moslem friend and that. People are suffering greatly from disease and hunger. No person can live on one loaf of bread a day, without any other food.

I have done my share and am still doing. It is a time of mercy and humanity. The Presbyterian church has sent recently some money to be used in this great cause of suffering humanity. I want that our kind brotherhood will have a hand in this noble work. The eyes of this nation are lookin towards America. I trust that when you receive this letter you will urge our brotherhood to have a share in this great cause of humanity for the ancient nation of Nestorians, who have been a flickering light for ages in the dark country of the Moslem faith and whose forefathers carried the glad tidings to China and India in the days gone by. Today the salvation and evangelization of Persia is resting upon this small band of Christians, so if we love our Savior and Lord we must help this people.

I trust that you will not only send us immediate help, but that you will pray for this people that God may save us from further destruction and that God may use us in his holy service. I am yours in Christ, JOHN SERGIS.

The Bible and the Sunday School

BY J. LESLIE LOBINGIER

THE Bible school objective is not Bible teaching, but character building.'' These words may occasionally be seen printed on placards that adorn the walls of some convention hall. They put the emphasis in the right place; but it has not always been so. Too often the interest of the church school has been Bible-centered, when it should always have been child-centered. In a sense ''Bible school'' is an unsatisfactory name for the institution so called. The implication is that interest centers primarily in the Bible. But it should be made to center in the child, or the youth, or the adult. Something is to be done with him, and for him—not with the Bible. The Bible is simply one of the means to be used—and there are many—to accomplish the end in view, the unfoldment of Christian character. In the words of Professor Dawson, ''there must be a kind of religious conversion from Biblical and ecclesiastical excess of reverence to a reverence for human life.''

EDUCATION AND PERSONALITY.

In the preparation of courses of study, the policy has too often been to regard the Bible as the given quantity, or the fixed quantity. It and it alone was to be taught, and to it the child must perforce adjust himself. But the scientific method of approach is to regard the child as the given quantity. It is he that is to be taught. And the curriculum may contain anything, and must contain only that, which is the best adapted to accomplish for him—considering his age, environment and capacity—the fundamental aims which the church school has in view. The builder of the ideal course of study will center his attention, not upon an external, lifeless thing—a book, but upon an inward, living thing—personality.

This shifting of emphasis is due to a more fundamental change of interest from the past to the present. Nothing can be of greater importance than that religion should be linked up with present-day life. The Bible is our most valuable teaching material, but neither it nor the times of which it speaks are so to absorb our interest as to take precedence over present-day character and the life of today. A not unpopular view, even among adults, is that religion is chiefly to be associated with Bible times; that God is more remote from the world than he once was; that a peculiar sanctity attaches to the persons of David or Joseph or Peter, because their names and work are recorded in the Scriptures, that does not and could not attach to a man or woman of today. The result is that religion and life are divorced from each other.

GOD CONTINUALLY REVEALING HIMSELF.

One of the essential tasks of religious education must be to reveal the falsity of this view, and to substitute a better. It must show not only that God spoke, but that he speaks; not only that he worked, but that he ever works. It must make clear that the history of Christianity, or of God's dealings with men, was not completed nineteen centuries ago, but that it is ever being written. It must present Moody, and Livingstone, and Judson as apostles of Jesus Christ, as well as Peter, and Andrew, and Paul. For those who can receive this view, Christianity assumes a new and peculiar power; it becomes, not in theory alone, but in reality, a religion for our present-day needs.

Courses of study in religious education ought always to be prepared with this in mind. Thus only will our faith be interpreted in terms of the life of today. Human needs are first to be discovered. Then must begin the search for such material, Biblical and extra-Biblical, as will best meet those needs. To the child it will appear that the religious message is essentially for childhood. To the youth it will seem to be primarily for him. The adult will have the Christian message so closely related to the problems with which he is himself brought face to face, that there will be no question in his mind of the relation of religion to present-day life.

This then ought to suggest certain guiding principles in regard to the use of the Bible in the task of moral and religious education. The first is this, that the curriculum must include some non-Biblical material. The religious development of the race has been from simple nature worship, through a period of mythology, to outward formalism, and finally to a religion of ethical morality. The view of the normal child also is seen to progress along somewhat similar lines. He can best approach God, first through nature, later through fanciful imagery that may include something of the mythical, then through a medium of formalism, and later his God becomes Spirit, and he learns to worship him in spirit and truth. To insure the right culture material for each succeeding age, the Bible must be supplemented by nature study, by history, by experience. This is not to put a low estimate upon the Bible. It must ever remain in a unique sense the literature of Christianity, continuing to be the most used, most satisfying, and best loved collection of writings in our possession. But God has not revealed himself more perfectly through a book than he has through nature or in the lives of his followers who have endeavored to exhibit the Christ-like spirit. If a story of missionary endeavor in Africa will portray a certain aspect of the Kingdom of God more strikingly than a New Testament parable, then it ought by all means to be used. The curriculum should include that material, regardless of its source, which will best accomplish the essential aims of the church school: character that is Christian, fellowship with God, service for one's fellows.

HOW SHALL THE BIBLE BE USED?

And as the course of study will not contain only the Bible, so it will not aim to include all of the Bible. Young and old alike are often urged to read the Bible through once a year, and a child who reaches the age of thirteen or fourteen without having done so at least once may be made to feel that this neglect is indeed serious. On the contrary, small children should not be encouraged to read the Bible through from Genesis to Revelation. It is a library in itself, and a child's reading in it should be as carefully directed as in any library. Some parts are unadapted to him, and he should be given only the material suited to his age and needs.

Neither should any part of the Bible be used without relation to a special need for it. Our aim is not to teach the Bible in the hope that at some time that which the student especially needs will appear. Human need is the starting point, and material from the Scriptures or from other sources that will best meet that need must be used. For the student is our center of interest. Thus for the child under twelve the Old Testament will more often be appropriate than the New, because of its realistic nature scenes, its simplicity of life, its naive conceptions, its occasional myth, its appeal to the heroic—so much that we later outgrow. But for the adolescent the New Testament will furnish our chief Biblical material.

Human life, not the Bible, is the eminently sacred thing that becomes our center of interest. But to accomplish what we desire with human lives, we count nothing as of greater worth than the Bible; for it represents the labors of those who in a peculiar degree possessed the spiritual gift of discovering Divine truth—a gift that we call inspiration.

How I Fill My Church on Sunday Evening

From the Ladies' Home Journal.

By Christian F. Reisner, Pastor of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church of New York City

WHEN I took charge of Grace Methodist Church in New York some years ago it had an auditorium seating fifteen hundred people, which at that time seldom saw two hundred in it on Sunday nights. Now it is crowded on Sunday evening, and recently at one such service two hundred and twenty-five people joined the church. Five thousand people used the building in a recent week; a number more than the population of Albany or nearly that of Atlanta or one-half that of Indianapolis or Kansas City attend the services annually; and nearly two thousand members have been received in five years. Yet Grace Methodist Church is on a side street; four out of five of the population of New York have foreign-born parents; and sixty-six languages are spoken in the city so that it is hard for most churches there to get a hearing.

How has Grace Methodist Church accomplished such results under such conditions? The reply to this question also answers the broader query: Can churches attract Sunday night audiences that fill them as theaters and motion picture places are filled on such evenings? They certainly can if the services are made attractive, thrilled with religion and compellingly advertised.

THE CHURCH AND THE COMMUNITY.

More than ever in these days a church must prove its service value to the community. In order to do so the very first step is to make itself widely known and to attract attention and make friends. That was what I undertook to do when I went to Grace Methodist Church, and these are some of the methods employed: A boys' band of thirty-five pieces paraded the streets adjacent to the church and led the children of the neighborhood to the auditorium for a free concert. At another time one hundred and sixty-three men, the best in our membership, followed a band through thirty prominent city blocks singing religious songs; while the streets and house windows were thronged with people asking: "Who are they?"

Early in my pastorate the services of a noted traveloguer were secured, and for three weeks he gave for a ten-cent admission picture lectures for which a dollar admission was usually charged. This was done in co-operation with a "daily" which printed a coupon required with the dime. Thousands came.

Sunday evening services for policemen, firemen, street cleaners, street car employes, and so on, well advertised among them, have all helped to create a friendship, which bears fruit in the ready direction of inquirers to Grace Methodist Church. At Christmas time last year the precinct police captain brought me fifty-two dollars voluntarily handed to him by his men to be used in our work among the poor.

Of course, the Sunday evening service seeks to enlist new members—to get new business, as it were—and to do this it must exude happiness and avoid stale and stilted methods. The unique service at Grace Methodist Church is called "Happy Sunday Evening." All scolding and abuse are shut out; doubts are not paraded; and when the message is delivered—and nothing is allowed to crowd it out—it is a straight-from-the-shoulder deliverance about sin and God's loving desire to heal its diseases.

A SERVICE OF ROSES.

It was just two months after I went to New York that the first real trial of a new "special" method came. It gladdened everyone. A member offered to buy twelve hundred roses as a memorial to his mother, to be presented to people as they came into church. They cost only twenty-five dollars at wholesale. Hundreds of roses shedding fragrance, with faces smiling gratefully above them, made it easy for me to preach on "The Rose of Sharon." Motion pictures of flower parades and the "Birth of a Flower" were shown.

Now every spring suburban churches send great boxes of wild flowers, and eager hands carry away every so-called "weed daisy" after dismissal. One spring a remarkable bird-impersonator brought motion and still pictures of God's feathered choir, and with the help of green-leaf decorations, took us for thirty minutes into the sweet-scented woods. City folks sighed when the exhibition was over. In the autumn golden leaves decorate the auditorium and adorn each visitor.

On one hot July night a "snow service" crowded the church. A pile of snow occupied one end of the table and a cake of ice, into which had been frozen flowers and fruit, stood on the other end. What a cooling lesson for worry's fever was possible! Visit any cold-storage plant or ice factory and scrape off the ice from the pipes, and you will have the snow; while the owner of the factory will freeze the "cake." Another summer evening M. A. Henson, the colored man who accompanied Rear Admiral Peary to the North Pole, spoke; and on still another hot hummer evening we had motion pictures of ice and seals in the Arctic region.

HOW THE POLICEMEN HELPED.

A service is annually given for each group of the city's servants. Each year the New York policemen bring their brass band and play beautiful religious selections. Last year Commissioner Arthur Woods spoke briefly, and a second collection was taken to help put a gymnasium into the local precinct station.

The firemen also brought their band, and Commissioner Robert Adamson spoke. Chief Kenlon, the noted hero of many fire fights, and worshiped by the 'boys," warned them of the danger of carelessness, by citing a number of personal experiences.

The "White Wings," those cleaners of the streets who are often forgotten as public health guardians, were also invited to attend a "special" service; and at its close gristled hands gripped mine and men with tears gave thanks for this service of appreciation.

Five hundred postmen came with a splendid band one Sunday evening, and incidentally I seconded their appeal for a deserved pension. Gas company employes, department store clerks, shopmen, lodges and countless other groups may be included; and they will come again as individuals.

A moving picture company spent thousands of dollars in making a six-reel motion picture of the life of Jesus, giving it an actual historical setting in Palestine. On six successive Sunday evenings the reels were shown with great impressiveness. It was during our annual revival meetings. Nothing before ever drew such large, regular crowds; and that, too, in spite of bad weather.

USING THE "MOVIES."

One evening R. Henderson Bland, the man who had taken the part of Jesus, increased the reverential atmosphere by explaining his feelings concerning the pictures. Another company has spent sixty thousand dollars in producing a similar picture, but in colors, entitled, "The Life of Our Saviour," which will also be shown. "The Life of Moses," in motion pictures, has also proved an attraction. It is not necessary to have religious pictures always; many other kinds may create an "atmosphere."

"Get ready, father; I want you to go to church with me to-night," said the wife.

"No, thanks. I would rather sleep at home," came the answer.

"But Johnnie and Mary are to speak and sing," she urged.

"Oh, that's different." He had such a good time that he went the next Sunday. If the preacher was "alive" a regular attendant was secured.

Nothing will draw an audience like children's programs for Sunday night. In the morning father is sleepy or his clothes appear shabby in sunlight, or there is a chance that someone may see and poke fun at him. Children freshen up the best in us by their sweetness and simplicity. At least twice a year our Sunday-school gives a program. At other times bright boys and girls give one or two numbers. A children's chorus is always possible where there is a faithful leader. Boy tenors, child pianists, youthful violinists or some other type of performers will lure the audience.

"If you once begin these 'special' Sunday evening programs you must keep them up," objected a fellow pastor to me.

"Of course; and why not? Does your local merchant ever 'let down' in his efforts to get new trade?"

Every Sunday evening one or more "special" features are provided. Only recently have I been able to pay even a small sum for outside performers; such noted men as W. D. Hinshaw, grand opera soloist, and Hans Kronold, nationally known 'cellist, came gladly without charge. Every local community has an artist or a teacher or a club (or the possibility of forming one) that can be secured. Some performers are engaged from lyceum companies for Saturday evening, with the stipulation that they remain over and help at the Sunday evening service.

THIRTY THOUSAND CIRCULARS.

The late Reverend Doctor Wallace, at Middletown, New York, a town of fifteen thousand people, did this, and sent out thirty thousand circulars to his members during the season. He paid all the expenses with the Saturday evening silver offerings, while the church profited by the additional Sunday night offerings.

Among other "special" attractions for our Sunday evening services have been these:

When the United States fleet anchored in New York harbor all the sailors received a personal printed invitation to a service in their honor and the admiral sent a ship band.

College glee clubs giving concerts near by are glad to be entertained over Sunday, and in return will render a program. Clubs from Wesleyan, the University of Pennsylvania, the Massachusetts Agricultural College and Pennington Seminary have thus appeared at Grace Methodist Church. Alumni receive special invitations, and at the close of each service a reception is held, the glee club sings, and refreshments encourage sociability. Several young men have thus been made hungry for a college training and entered later.

Among lyceum attractions which have appeared have been bell ringers, a trumpet trio, a harp quartet, a brass quartet, a ladies' orchestra, an Indian orchestra, cornetists and colored jubilee singers. Few towns can afford such performers, but New York offers great competing concerts, and other places can approximate it.

REAL TEACHING DONE.

If the "Happy Sunday Evening" merely "entertained" people the audience would soon disappear. The secret of its success lies in the fact that the people regularly hear a clear Gospel message. Men everywhere are eager to hear about and from God; neither rhetorical essays nor descriptive or scientific lectures satisfy them. The attractions at Grace Methodist Church are used only to draw people, while the real work is to sing and preach them into a personal consciousness of God's presence. A large, robed choir of unpaid voices directed by Tali Esen Morgan, who conducts the great choruses at Ocean Grove, leads in singing popular Gospel selections. In Denver the men whistled some choruses; this melted into oneness the uncomfortable first-comers who could not or would not sing.

The Gospel message is phrased in popular terms. Here are a few subjects which have been used: "How Shall I Spend Sunday?" "Does Praying Pay?" "Did God Punish San Francisco in the Earthquake" "The Baltimore Fire." "Why is it Wrong?"— to gamble, to lie, to steal, and so on, each one a separate subject. "What is the Unpardonable Sin?" "The Modern Newspaper." "A Good Policeman."

Washington Gladden well says: "The pulpit is not secularized by the kind of topics, but by the method of treatment." "Do Ministers' Sons Go Wrong?" is a topic which illustrated the religious emphasis. Letters were read from Governor Whitman, President Wilson, former Secretary of the Interior Fisher and other notable sons of ministers. A study of "Who's Who" showed that the sons of ministers succeeded eighteen times more than the sons of any other professionals.

"Do you allow men of other faiths to speak from your pulpit on Sunday?" a Westerner asked me.

"Most assuredly, when they have a Christian spirit of service and remember that I shall follow with a Gospel appeal," I answered.

Manhattan Borough President Marcus Marks, of Hebrew extraction, spoke at one of our services, favoring public markets. Brooklyn Borough President L. H. Pounds, a Methodist, gave an address during the revival period. When William Jennings Bryan "preached" to a packed auditorium at the beginning of my pastorate, two thousand people stood outside of the church for two hours to see him as he came out, and the newspapers gave large space to his sermon. Judge Ben B. Lindsey recounted his experiences one evening, and I told how the judge came to join the Methodist Church.

WESTON, THE PEDESTRAN, HELPS.

When Edward Payson Weston returned from his walk to San Francisco he told us why he was a teetotaler; concluding: "Otherwise I should now be fooling with a harp or shoveling coal." Inspector Faurot, chief of detectives, enforced with the stereopticon the finger-print methods of catching criminals. Detective W. J. Burns illustrated by personal incidents the certainty that evil will be uncovered. Newly elected Congressmen and other legislators came to us and made promises of future upright activity. We have thus secured an influence that has counted later. These men were of various faiths, but all were clean-living believers.

Audiences to-day want a positive message backed by a religious experience. Negations tire people; religious information is needed. One of our members recently told a Russian Jew about our church while he was papering his apartment. Later, radiant with joy, he said: "I have been hungry to hear about Jesus. In Russia we were not permitted near a Christian church; and I did not know I should be allowed to enter here. But your welcome has convinced me and made me happy." He joined the church. A prominent wholesale flour merchant sought our church to find out what a "wheat" Sunday evening service meant. He met a member who took his name and address. I called at his apartment later, and secured both husband and wife for church membership.

One day, some years ago, a lonely young man arrived in Denver. Bad habits had mastered him. On Sunday homesickness depressed him, and he wandered aimlessly through the streets. Presently a large painted sign about a church stopped him with the word "Homelike."

"I will find that church and see if it is like the one at home," he thought to himself.

THE "HOMELIKE" CHURCH.

So he came to my Denver church, and was met by us in a spirit true to the promise of the word "Homelike." A changed life resulted, and he is now one of the successful young business men of Colorado.

Sociability marks our every service. New York life is apt to be cold to the stranger, and even the churches are prone to create a frigid atmosphere. Constant reminders by sermon exhortation and written epistle have made Grace Methodist Church, also advertised as "homelike," a family church—not in the sense of a residential section church, but in the sense of trying to translate practically the Fatherhood of God. A group of our best men and women greets every person who comes into the church, and every exit is manned to "shake hands" as the congregation departs. The names and addresses of strangers are carefully taken down, and they are visited helpfully. The large church foyer is filled with laughing, visiting folks sometimes for three-quarters of an hour after dismissal. Everyone is alert for new members, and when a person has been spiritually affected he or she is brought to me or to an assistant; at every service someone is converted.

During the month of January revival meetings are held every night for three weeks. Religious thrills are expected; they are safer than those caused by loose our people are organized for visiting and worldliness. I become evangelist, and work. Drunkards are reclaimed; outcasts are harmonized with God; and from one hundred and twenty-five to two hundred and twenty-five people are received annually at the close of these services.

Socials of every type, entertainments with laughs, suppers for varied groups, methods of every variety are employed to make people happily at home in the church. Every person feels this atmosphere, and is attracted and held by it. It gives human point to the religion discussed, and helps to bring it home to each hearer to make it acceptable and inspiring in daily life.

World Sunday-school Convention Postponed.

The World's Sunday-school Convention which was to have been held in Tokyo in October, 1916, has been postponed. The reason is that the passenger boats are being used for such volume of freight that even the missionaries are having a hard time to get to Asia, hence it is obviously impossible to transport the people who would like to attend. The warring nations would also find it difficult to participate. Count Okuma, Prime Minister of Japan, is chairman of a reception committee. It is understood that when it is impossible to hold the convention, it will be held in Japan as was previously planned.

Pastor Heads Theological School.

The Methodist seminary in Denver is named the Iliff School of Theology. The president, Dr. H. F. Rall, was recently called to a chair in Garrett Theological Institute, of Evanston, Ill. The presidency in Denver has been accepted by Rev. James A. Beebe, D. D., pastor of the Englewood Methodist church, of Chicago. Dr. Beebe was educated at the theological school of Boston University and has held a number of prominent Methodist charges.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

PRESENT DAY CHRISTIANITY

. . "I feel entirely sure that there never has been a time in the history of the world when the Christian message was more deeply imbedded in the life of the people than it is today. More and more are our institutions reflections of the spirit of Christ. More and more are the relations of the people to one another honest and kind and simple. The time is past when the Sunday School politician or business man may be sneered at. It was a fashion twenty years ago to sneer at Sunday School men, but more and more the bad man is getting out of politics and the good man is taking his place, and generally speaking the good man is anchored to some church or creed which he is not at all ashamed to proclaim and testify to."—William Allen White.

DR. AINSLIE'S MESSAGE

NO MAN among the Disciples of Christ is getting nearer to the heart of things in his discussion of Christian unity than Dr. Peter Ainslie, president of the Commission on Christian Unity. The catholic spirit has been his from the beginning of his leadership in this cause, but his utterances seem to take on from time to time an increasing candor and his thoughts seem to be assuming greater definiteness of conviction.

At the Bloomington convention last week Dr. Ainslie made two addresses to large audiences in the Second Presbyterian church. It was impossible for one sitting in the great house not to make mental comments on the deepening lines of strength and graciousness that are defining themselves on his countenance. Always a fair face to look upon, its features now seem more and more to betoken the kindly and wholesome thoughts of the soul within.

Dr. Ainslie's personality radiates the spirit and atmosphere of Christian unity. His brotherly patience with his own Disciple brethren who, he feels, are so slow to see and do the thing whereunto they were called, together with his earnest and positive effort to lead them to the higher levels, make for the heightening and deepening of his own spiritual life.

Great enterprises, great ideals, make great men. Narrow, sectarian, unbrotherly enterprises make small and ungracious, finical and un-cooperative men.

We thought that in his Bloomington addresses Dr. Ainslie spoke with greater candor and with more passion than is his wont. He laid the European war at the door of the Church, declaring that had the Church been a united Church it would have been working all these years at its essential task of controlling the fundamental human forces which, through lack of religious control, are now responsible for the unspeakable slaughter of human life.

A divided Church is impotent in the face of such vast forces, he said, and he characterized as a "scandal" the fact that Christ's people in the face of such tremendous human tasks could render itself helpless by divisions over matters which are altogether nonessential and trivial.

"I do not care a farthing," he exclaimed in a moment of exceptional frankness and informality, "about any thing that divides Christ's people, I am sure God does not care either." What God cares for, he added, are the fruits of Christ's spirit—essential Christianity—love, joy, peace, righteousness, and such things as Christ taught to be the very substance of his kingdom.

It is apparent that Dr. Ainslie is getting down to what some one called the "brass tacks" of the Christian union problem. Certainly union cannot be greatly advanced by sentimentalizing in the upper air. Some one must bluntly utter some negatives. Some one must plainly show the unessentiality and folly of many things we still cling to before ever our inertia can be overcome.

We believe Dr. Ainslie's message will continue to grow in concreteness and practicalness, as well as in vision and passion, until the Disciples of Christ are awakened to the scandalous recreancy which has for so long characterize their attitude toward Christian unity.

DISCIPLES AND COMMUNITY CHURCHES

THE presidential address of Rev. W. G. McColley at the Illinois convention last week was a well-conceived and fine-spirited utterance. Its tone was modest and earnest. Its scope was comprehensive, including an expression of the speaker's attitude on most of the live and urgent issues of the times in the Church world.

In his discussion of each one of these issues Mr. McColley sounded a positive and constructive note, not radical nor impatient, but always progressive. In one paragraph he brought together three outstanding problems—the rural church, Christian unity and the Disciples' practice.

Contending that the Disciples owed a great debt to the rural field which their leaders are all too slow to pay, he exhorted the convention not to "forget the rock from which ye were hewn and the hole of the pit whence ye were digged."

The country church problem, he declared, deserves the attention of our educators and the most serious consideration of the graduates of our seminaries as a likely field wherein to devote one's ministry.

And he contended with earnestness that the Disciples of Christ ought to go into these rural situations where there are no churches or where there are too many churches and organize, not a denominational church, but a united community church. The Disciples with their plea for Christian unity, he said, ought to consider themselves experts in the business of establishing community churches and of resolving competing congregations now struggling for a sheer existence into a united church which should transcend denominational divisions.

This word, we venture to guess, met with the approval of ninety per cent of the members of the convention, if indeed it would be disapproved by any one at all.

We believe that Mr. McColley is right, and that he spoke an important word. Not until the Disciples absolutely forget themselves as a religious body and think only of the ideals which they came into existence to achieve will they commend their movement to the Christian world.

Related as they are historically to the country problem, and committed as they are historically to the ideal of a united Church, the logic of Mr. McColley's plea for expert service in solving the rural problem on the basis of a united church in each community should be obvious to every one.

It is gratifying to recall, as The Christian Century is recording from week to week, an increasing number of instances where union community churches haven been established by Disciple leaders in village and rural communities in various parts of the country.

The number of these churches should increase with great rapidity in coming days.

They have the right to think of themselves as approaching more nearly to the Disciples' ideal than most of the older and larger churches of the movement.

MISSIONARIES

IT IS very interesting to an experienced convention-goer to observe the marked growth in the character and personality of the missionaries who from time to time return from their far-away fields of labor and grace these conventions with their presence and their speech.

There seems to be something in missionary service that makes great almost any person who engages in it. Oftentimes missionaries at the time of their appointment are very humble persons. Of course they all lack experience. And few have given clear evidence of possessing those assets of talent and education that would commend them to their fellows as leaders.

Prejudiced persons sometimes cast slurs upon the cause of missions by saying that missionaries are usually a type of people who could not make a conspicuous success at anything here at home, and they resent the conspicuous position the Church gives these "very ordinary" men and women simply because they happen to be working far away.

This, of course, is very silly talk and is not heard much nowadays. The young men and women who receive appointment to the work of foreign missions are among the very best of the output of our colleges. In intelligence and initiative, and certainly in consecration, they are, at the very least, the peers of their colleagues.

But whatever your opinion of missionaries may be at the time of their appointment, there can be no two opinions of their quality after they have seen service in the foreign field.

Nearly all missionaries returning home on their furloughs bear the marks of genuine greatness.

There is something in their work that brings out qualities of genius that their best friends hardly imagined them to possess. They talk in world terms. They have grown accustomed to facing big problems, in strategic situations. Their speech and manner disclose an insight into the forces that make kingdoms, and a mastery of those forces.

Missionaries may start out with sectarian and theological quibbles in their minds but you hardly ever see one returning with such quibbles. Missionaries lose their theological finicalness in the face of heathenism and sin. They come back, therefore, talking about and urging upon us the great elemental things of the gospel.

The growth of the missionary's own soul and personality under the disciplines of his work is one of the most inescapable demonstrations of the effectiveness of his work. He could not become the rare soul that, upon his return, we find him to be except by faithful and fruitful labor to bring Christ to men who know him not.

The most obvious apologetic for missions would be, of course, to visit the mission field and take note of what has been wrought there by the missionaries.

But only one in ten thousand of us can do that.

For the most of us the next best apologetic is to reflect on what missionary work is doing for the missionaries.

THE POINT OF VIEW

THERE are, of course, as many points of view as there are persons in the world, but this fact in no way affects the view, which is there for all. The point of view of any two people can never be entirely identical at a given moment, which is good reason why we ought never to feel impatient or indignant because something that is quite clear to us does not immediately commend itself to others.

We shall understand the reason why when we understand their point of view.

In the famous casket scene of "The Merchant of Venice," Shakespeare illustrates how three people having a common object, Portia's hand, on being subjected to a certain test—that of choosing between three caskets, gold, silver, lead—each chose differently. The point of view is elaborated witth great care. Each one gives his reason for choosing one casket and rejecting the others, and no fault can be found with the logic of their individual arguments from which the final deduction falls most naturally.

Yet each one chooses differently.

It is clear, therefore, that a common purpose is not sufficient to secure like action, and thus we find that it is the point of view which really governs the decisions of men much more than the object in view.

However much our thoughts and opinions are swayed by considerations which are common to us all, or by the press, or by popular clamor, there comes a time to every man when he has deliberately to choose for himself the action that he will take on matters which, to him at least, seem of the utmost importance.

As with the suitors in the play, the pros and cons for differing courses of action will pass before him pending his decision, and it is his point of view that will finally decide. The point of view is, in fact, the point to which one has attained in life's thought journey. If the traveler has not reached beyond the realm of sordid and selfish considerations, his range of vision is narrow, as his actions will show.

The desire for a wider outlook, as well as the unsatisfactory nature of the experiences resulting from the selfish and narrow, will tend to force the thinker to higher altitudes of thought and thus to a more exalted point of view. It is clear that the one who mounts the highest sees the furthest, and the extent to which we may improve our point of view has even now been but dimly discerned. These lines of the poet:

> "The highest-mounted mind," he said,
> "Still sees the sacred morning spread
> The silent summit overhead" convey to us the sense of a constantly ascending path, a metaphorical way of describing that process wherein thought lays off stifling materialism in exchange for the freer atmosphere of spiritual truth.

Some may feel that this rarefied atmosphere of thought is not for them, because they think of themselves as commonplace or matter of fact and so as tied to the lesser point of view; but they must admit that they have not chosen to seek the higher, or that having chosen they have not held their way.

That which inspires us all to improve on our present point of view is the clearness of judgment, the quietness and the confidence that reaches us from those who are on ahead scaling the heights of holiness.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Historic Church in Chicago Burns.

Grace Episcopal church, standing next to the Coliseum, the well-known convention hall, burned on Sunday, Sept. 26. This building was once the home of the most fashionable Episcopal congregation of the city, and it still numbers in its parish many well-known families. The building was an unusually beautiful type of Gothic church, and the organ was known as a specially good one. The building that burned was of stone and was built in 1868. The walls fell in over the altar, but the tower still stands, and in spite of the intense heat, the chimes sounded all day long, during the fire, striking the hours for the great clock. The rector, Rev. William Otis Waters, D. D., called the vestry together while the building was burning and it was voted to rebuild. Near this church is the large St. Luke's hospital, and the nurses of the training school attend worship commonly at the Grace church.

Prsebyterian Seminary Overcrowded.

The talk of theological seminaries falling off in attendance may be true in some quarters, but it is not true at McCormick Theological Seminary, of Chicago, conducted by the Presbyterians. There is not room enough in the dormitories, and a number of men must live in adjoining homes. Sixty new men entered this fall besides the old students who came back, which is larger than any year since 1895. The opening address was made by Dr. A. C. Zenos on "Christ in the Theological Seminary."

World Has Not Ended Yet.

If anybody had any anxiety about the world coming to an end in August as the Adventists predicted, he has breathed a sigh of relief ere this, to await the next fixed date that shall be handed out by this dauntless organization of Christians. Since the days of Miller, the Adventists have been busy trying to discover from the book of Daniel a scheme of universal history, and world chronology. As the book of Daniel seems not to have been written for that purpose, the task is even more difficult than squaring a circle, or finding a stick with one end. Pastor Russell expected the world to come to an end in 1914, but has now reported that "the Lord has delayed his coming." This type of millenarian expectancy is also cultivated by the Moody church, of Chicago, and the Bible seminary connected with it.

New Mission Study Books.

Mission study is now one of the regular features of the evangelical church. The books for this year are designed for courses of eight weeks. They are "Rising Churches in Non-Christian Lands," by Arthur J. Brown; "Efficiency Points," by W. E. Doughty; "The Work of the Churches," by Dr. Charles L. White; "Comrades in Service," by Miss Margaret E. Burton. These books are put out by an interdenominational committee but sold by the various denominational publishing houses.

Dr. Illingsworth Dies.

Dr. John Illingsworth is known throughout the Anglo-Saxon world by students of systematic theology. He deliberately chose a country parish in England that he might have leisure for scholarly pursuits. His two outstanding contributions to theology were "Personality, Human and Divine," and "Divine Immanence." His recent death removes one of the foremost theological figures of England. He tended to conservative conceptions in religion.

Invites Bishop of London to be Ordained.

Rev. A. H. Mathew is furnishing laughter in England in ecclesiastical circles. Baptized in the Episcopal church, prepared for the ministry of that church, ordained a Roman priest, he was admitted again to the Episcopal fellowship. He was then ordained by the Old Catholic church at Utrecht. Following this he has proclaimed himself Archbishop of England and is calling upon the various dignitaries of the English church to submit themselves for ordination, insisting that English orders are not regular. Thus the high church movement in that fellowship is running into fanaticism. Validity of orders with the Rev. Mr. Mathews is more important than the apostolic succession of the truth.

Anti-Socialist Goes to Washington.

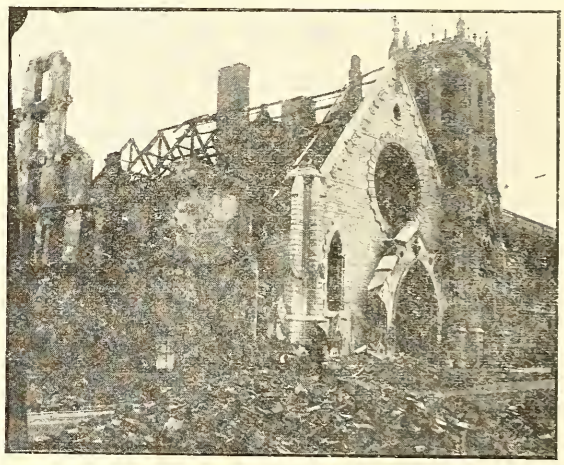
Rev. John A. Ryan, a priest of the Roman Catholic church, won fame recently by a series of articles combating socialistic views of Maurice Hillquit. He has been professor of Moral and Social Science at St. Paul Seminary, but is to take charge of the work of political science at the Catholic University in Washington, D. C. He has published books entitled "A Living Wage," and "Alleged Socialism of the Church Fathers."

Dr. Winchester Goes to Yale.

Dr. Benjamin S. Winchester was six years ago pastor of a Congregational church on the North Shore beyond Chicago, at Winnetka. He organized his church to a high degree of efficiency in religious education with the result that he was called to the position of educational secretary of the Congregational Sunday-school and Publishing Association. In that work he has continued for six years, bringing the Congregational Sunday-school supplies up to their present high standard. He has just accepted a call to Yale School of Religion, to be associated with Professor Sneath in the department of Religious Education. In connection with his duties, he will be the educational executive in United Congregational church of New Haven.

Well-known Bishops Retired.

Following the retirement of Bishop Thoburn, the world-renowned Methodist Bishop of India on account of age, comes the announcement of the retirment of the equally well known Bishop Hartzell of Africa. He is now seventy-four years of age and by the new automatic retirement rule of the Methodist Episcopal church, he is to be taken out of active service, though he is still vigorous. It is not known whether another Bishop will be placed over Africa or whether the work will be administered by the missionary superintendents.



Grace Episcopal Church, Chicago, Built 1868, Destroyed by fire Sunday Morning, Sept. 26.

Baptist Churches Will Unite.

Two Chicago Baptist churches that have been located near together, and whose neighborhood has radically changed, will unite, if present plans carry. They are First Baptist church of which Dr. Myron E. Adams is pastor, and Immanuel Baptist church of which Rev. Johnson Myers is pastor. They plan to build an edifice at a cost of a half million, something on the plan of Tremont Temple in Boston, and face the down-town problem squarely. It is said that the Rockefeller family is interested in the enterprise. The Baptist churches near the loop have in several instances closed their doors in recent years, and this is an effort to stem the tide which has set in against all evangelical churches in the central section of the city. Rev. Johnson Myers has resigned but may continue in some capacity with the united church. He will this winter act as financial head of Immanuel church while its pulpit is supplied by others.

ELISHA HEALS NAAMAN THE SYRIAN.

Lesson for October 17.

Golden Text: I am Jehovah that healeth thee. Exodus 15:26.

Lesson II Kings 5: verses 1-10, 14 printed Memory verses 7, 8.

(1) Now Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honorable, because by him Jehovah had given the victory unto Syria: he was also a mighty man of valor, but he was a leper. (2) And the Syrians had gone out in bands and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maiden; and she waited on Naaman's wife. (3) And she said unto her mistress, Would that my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! then would he recover him of his leprosy. (4) And one went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maiden that is of the land of Israel. (5) And the king of Syria said, Go now, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. And he departed, and took with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment. (6) And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, And now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy. (7) And it came to pass, when the king of Israel had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of leprosy? but consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me.

(8) And it was so, when Elisha the man of God heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel. (9) So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariots, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha.(10) And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in the Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

(14) Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in the Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God; and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child and he was clean.

Verse by Verse.

1. Captain of the host. He was the commander-in-chief of the army.—The king of Syria. Benhadad was king of Syria at this time.—A great man with his master. He stood high in the esteem of the king, possibly because of his military prowess.—Honorable. A man of respect.—By him Jehovah had given victory unto Syria. Naaman was the man who gave Syria victory over Assyria. Jehovah used him in this service.—But he was a leper. You will note that the first three words of this statement are not in the Hebrew.—A leper. One of the loathsome diseases of all time. Read Lev. 13:45, 46, for the law regarding it. Evidently no such law existed in Syria.

2. In bands. Companies of Syrians on marauding expeditions to secure whatever plunder they were able from the Israelites.—Had brought away captive a little maid. Some of these raids were made for the special purpose of carrying off slaves.—She waited on Naaman's wife. The service was different then, for the servant had a real interest in the welfare of the household.

5. Go now. An expression indicating immediate action.—A letter unto the king of Israel. Probably Jehoram, the son of Ahab. The king thinks that this would be the best way to reach Elisha. So great a man would be in the employ of the king.—Ten talents of silver. A talent was 96 lbs. in weight—(Hastings)—Six thousand pieces of gold. Or shekels, RVm. A shekel weighed .224 grains. Silver and gold were weighed in that day. —Ten changes of raiment. They were costly robes, suitable for festive occasions. These presents were quite in keeping with Naaman's station in life.

6. And now. This was the real purpose of the letter, and the complimentary parts are not quoted.—That thou mayest recover him of his leprosy. The king of Syria thought best to send Naaman direct to the king for instruction regarding Elisha. Such noted men are in the employ of the king as a rule.

7. That he rent his clothes. As an expression of intense grief and fear. He lived in constant fear of his neighboring nations.—Am I God, to kill and make alive? The thought is that God only can cure leprosy.—He seeks a quarrel against. A pretext for a quarrel. An occasion for again invading the country. On my failure to cure Naaman armies against me.

8. When Elisha heard. He probably had his home in another part of Samaria, and the coming of the Syrian with his retinue would make a stir in the city, Samaria.—Wherefore. A rebuke to the king.—Let him come now to me. Elisha was confident of his power to cure Naaman. This he did that God might be honored in Israel.

9. With his horses and with his chariots. He came with great pomp and show, demanding rather than asking a favor.—And stood at the door of the house. It was a magnificent cortege that halted at the door waiting Elisha's appearance.

12. The rivers of Damascus. These rivers had the same virtue so far as the mere water was concerned.

13. His servants came near. These were his officers who were with him on the trip.—My father. A title of honor and affection.

11. Call on the name of his God. Naaman believed that every nation had its own god.

14. Went he down. Down from Samaria to the Jordan, a distance of about twenty miles. He learned that he would have to be healed as a leper and not as Damascus's chief general.

Obedience and Service

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

The lesson introduces to us Naaman, the Syrian general. He was a great man: great in his position, in his possessions, in his achievements, and in his authority. There was one thing which unless checked would rob him of success, and take away his life. "He was a leper." This fact kept him from obtaining the crown of success. It is a loathsome disease, taking life little by little. No matter how great the man may be he is only a leper. Station in life will count for naught. Wealth cannot buy a whole body when leprosy has done its work. Death is the end. Sure death!

Sin has been likened to leprosy in its effects upon life. It keeps one from the highest achievement, and little by little takes the life of the one possessing it. The end is death. Naaman was a great man, "but he was a leper." David was a great warrior and sweet singer, but he was a murderer. Ahab had the wealth of a great king, but he coveted Naboth's vineyard. There was a certain rich man who had plenty, but he was poor toward God. A man may have millions, but he cannot buy a new digestive apparatus. Many men might be great but for some sin. "A single 'but', like a decimal point before millions, reduces all the gifts of fortune to fractions of trifling value." You might be a great man, but for that cigarette. You might control millions, but for the glass that controls you. You might gain heaven, but for the sin that keeps you out. When we obey the higher laws of our being, length of service as well as value of service is the result. Pride often keeps us from a rich and beautiful experience. Naaman was disappointed, for he expected Elisha to treat him in the same gorgeous fashion which characterized his appearing at the prophet's cottage door. On the other hand he was treated as a common beggar. Pride must fall if he is to receive anything from the hand of God. The treatment of Elisha and the remedy prescribed were humbling, and Naaman would have returned home without being healed if it had not been for his servants who urged him to obey the prophet's instruction. One of the reasons for much of our race hatred is pride. It very frequently keeps us from our work, and the man whose pride does not control him gets on in life and we become jealous of the fortunate hard-working neighbors. Pride often is the fly in the ointment of our peace and contentment.

Beside Naaman's greatness stands the service of an humble captive Jewish maiden. She possessed two qualities that are safeguards to any life, a kind heart and a living faith in Jehovah. She was the means of bringing salvation to the house of her captivity, and raising up a testimony for God which rang through the whole land of Syria. Humble as she was she did the service that was nearest to her. A few words from her moved the household of Naaman. No one could doubt the sincerity of her confidence in Jehovah, or the genuineness of her sympathy for the household of Naaman. The artless words of this maiden carried conviction to the heart of the king and he said "go." These simple words started her master on his way to health. It may be a small service we have to render, but it is all important in the plan of God for our life. The keeper of the lighthouse off the coast of Cornwall was seized and held by a band of wreckers who planned to rob the vessels which would be wrecked because the lights would not be lighted. They did not think of the keeper's little daughter. When the time came, all alone and frightened, she climbed the long stairs and lighted the lights. God uses the forgotten things and the "things which are despised, did God choose, yea the things that are not, that he might bring to naught the things that are." I Cor. 1:28.

Disciples Table Talk

Hold County Congress of Disciples to Consider Rural Church Interests.

Marion County, Ia., churches are holding this week a series of congresses in the various churches of the county, one day in each church, to consider the practical problems of church and community work. It is a progressive and original program the committee has mapped out. Professor Hauser and Miss Campbell, of the state agricultural college are making the tour of the churches with B. S. Denny, the efficient district secretary and Walter B. Zimmerman, pastor at Pleasantville, one of the leading churches of the county, all of them taking part on the program together with representatives of each local church.

Portrait of Newspaper Man Unveiled in Chapel of Des Moines Church.

A portrait of the late Edwin A. Nye, for many years an Elder in Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., was recently unveiled in the chapel of the church with appropriate ceremonies. Mr. Nye was a journalist, the editor of the Daily News and a writer whose productions were in wide demand through newspaper syndicates. His loyal services to the moral life of his city and to Central Church are held in grateful remembrance.

Holds Union Meetings and Urges Other Disciple Evangelists to do so.

J. M. Rudy of Quincy, Ill., is holding a union evangelistic meeting at Knox City, Mo., in which Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Disciples churches are participating. On Sunday, Sept. 19, there were ten confessions of faith. Mr. Rudy deplores the hesitancy of any Disciple minister to enter union evangelistic work. He says, "Certainly it is an awful blunder for our evangelists not to engage in the leadership of these meetings when they are invited so to do. We claim to hold sane and non-partisan views of the Bible and are ever proclaiming that these views constitute a vital contribution to present day Christianity, and yet when it comes to engaging in these great union movements we shirk or excuse ourselves on the pretext that the denominations will not hear us. I have found this false in my experience. There is not a single passage of scripture that I refuse to quote in a union meeting."

Vincennes Pastor Popular on Platform but Stays in Christian Pulpit.

Edgar Fay Dougherty, First Church, Vincennes, Ind., has had to meet the temptation of the Lyceum platform versus the Christian pulpit since his summer Chautauqua lectures have been received with such popularity during the past two seasons. It is understood that a leading bureau offered him an extraordinarily attractive salary for a year's lecturing. He declined and has just begun his sixth year at old Vincennes with a vigor and a fertility of planning that indicates renewed consecration to the greatest calling in the world.

The Significant Motto of an Indiana Church.

On the pastor's letter head of the Danville, Ind., Church of Disciples is printed a phrase which illuminates the ideal that church is striving to realize: "The Danville Christian Church—a Servant of the Community." Charles O. Lee is the new minister of this very interesting and active congregation. A county convention will be entertained in the church Oct. 2, 3. E. F. Dougherty, of Vincennes, will be the speaker on Sunday. Mr. Doughtery was at one time pastor in Danville. A physical director has recently been employed and the gymnasium is being put to practical use.

Activities of Disciples in the Minneapolis Churches.

S. Grundy Fisher, pastor at Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, has been made chairman of the county committee in the anti-saloon fight now being waged to make Minneapolis dry. Oct. 4 is the day of decision. If Minneapolis goes dry it will be the largest city in the land to do so. Money is being poured into the campaign by the wets from all over the county. Mr. Fisher is throwing his able personality into the thick of the fight. He reports that the churches at Portland Avenue, Grand Avenue and Minnehaha have all engaged Messrs. Brooks and Fitz for an evangelistic campaign this winter. Portland Avenue's meeting begins Nov. 7. Disciples in that city have recently taken an option on a new lot in the Lake Harriet district and hope to plant a new congregation in that rapidly growing residence district soon. Miss Ada L. Forster supplied Mr. Fisher's pulpit through the summer and he speaks very cordially of the satisfaction with which the church received her messages.

"Live and Learn" Series of Sermons Draws Large Attendance at Springfield.

A series of "Live and Learn" sermons is attracting large Sunday evening congregations to First Church, Springfield, Ill. Frank Waller Allen, the pastor, has projected the series forward as far as Nov. 7, with the following titles: "Learning to Thiuk," "Learning to Speak," "Learning to See," "Learning to Hear," "Learning to Give," "Learning to Serve," "Learning to Win," "Learning to Wait."

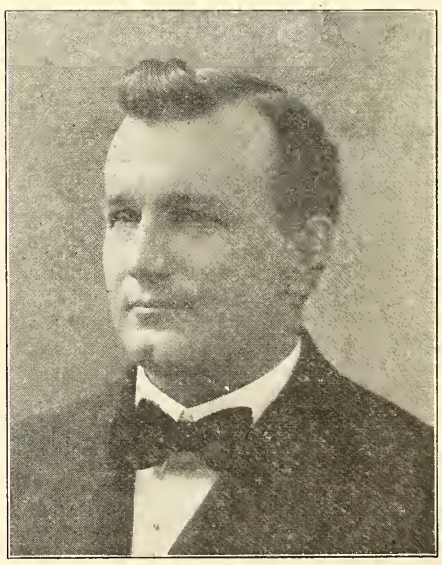
An Appreciation of R. A. Doan

By Secretary F. M. Rains.

The new secretary of the Foreign Society, R. A. Doan, is a typical, up-to-date, well-trained, successful Ohio business man, with consecration and all-round interest in the on-going of the Kingdom of God. He is one of the sons of Hiram College; and thinks clearly and concisely, well-informed and open-minded. Not only so, but he is an experienced manufacturer and ranks well in all circles as a conservative, well-poised man of affairs. Success in his business career has not turned his mind to things altogether temporal and material. On the contrary, his interest in the larger life is vital and world-embracing and withal growing. Mr. Doan is a favorite; congenial, companionable, and he grows into your confidence and appreciation upon an extended acquaintance.



His experience with men and large business interests is a most fitting preparation for the even more important task to which he is now consecrating his life.

He was born at Nelsonville, Ohio, May 13, 1874. In the early morning of life, at the tender age of thirteen, he gave his whole life to Jesus Christ. He soon became active in Christian service, and grew in favor and usefulness. For years he has been a teacher in the Sunday-school, and a part of this time a successful superintendent. The great men's Bible Class organized and built up by him, the attendance having reached at times more than a thousand, is now known throughout the whole country. That class has saved the saloon-keeper, the down-and-out man of the street, and given purpose and direction to many who were only standing or drifting downward. The normal Christian man has been awakened and the lost has been saved. Not only so, but he has served efficiently as a wise spiritual leader and elder of the Nelsonville church and has also been useful as president of the Y. M. C. A.

With passing years his interest in Foreign Missions has grown larger. He has been supporting his own missionary on the foreign field, and it will be remembered also that he was a member of the Commission of the Foreign Society which recently visited the Far East and made its report to the Los Angeles Convention. This eminent service he rendered without expense to the Society for either salary or travel.

Naturally his interest was enlarged by this trip. If five hundred or a thousand of our intelligent, consecrated business men could make that trip, the Foreign Society would have much more money for its work. In coming to the Society as one of its secretaries he provides for his own salary. His position is that of Laymen's Secretary, a position of the greatest possible importance. We are naturally proud of this step and believe it will do much to waken a larger and keener interest, among our business men especially. We mention this fact without his consent, as he is slow to have any special note taken of his generosity and interest. This fact, however, we believe the brethren are entitled to know.

We have in R. A. Doan a parallel of a number of business men who are serving the missionary boards of other communions without financial remuneration. Our brethren everywhere will be quick to recognize and appreciate this unselfish devotion to the work in which they have so much interest, and in which they take a pardonable pride.

The new secretary is a speaker of exceptional ability; well informed, direct, inspirational, and his addresses, reinforced by a life of genuine devotion, have rare power. They have the strength of faith and fervor of grace, and go direct to the heart and conscience.

We believe the churches will keep him busy. He is their servant to do their bidding under God. Already he has moved his family to Norwood and is faithfully giving his time and heart to the new duties before them. We believe this is the beginning of a new era in the history of our work. The impression he made upon the missionaries and native churches in the fields he visited was most favorable. At their urgent solicitation he remained in China and Japan and did some special evangelistic work and organized a number of men's Bible Classes. About 1,300 were enrolled in these classes, which is an altogether new feature in these fields. Some of the classes were organized in heathen temples. Mr. Doan enjoys the distinction of taking the initial step in this confessedly important work.

The missionaries urged him to remain on the fields for permanent service.

ceed Carl Burkhart in the pastorate, has been in his present pastorate for four years. He took the leadership of the congregation when it was three years old, with a membership of 210. The resident membership now is more than 400, of which number 289 have been added during his ministry. Before coming to Lexington, Mr. Wallace was a pastor for six or seven years of First Church at Valdosta, Ga., and prior to that had held pastorates at Meridian, Miss., and Cameron, Mo. He is a native of Adair county, Ky., and a graduate of the College of the Bible and of Transylvania College. Two years ago he was asked if he would consider a call to the church at Lexington, Mo., but declined at that time to sever his connection with his Lexington, Ky., church.

Chicago Women to Meet in Quarterly Convention at Evanston.

The Chicago Union of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will hold its eighty-fourth quarterly convention at Evanston church, Thursday, Oct. 7, beginning at 10:30 a. m., and continuing through the afternoon. Leading speakers are: Rev. Frank Lee, superintendent of the Chicago Chinese Missions. Mrs. E. M. Bowman, who speaks on "Our Newest Work in China," and Mrs. Lulu M. Burner, Missionary to Argentine, who speaks on "Changing Ideals in South America." Echoes from the recent conventions will be given by Mrs. O. O. Kinney, Mrs. W. C. Cook and Mrs. S. C. Sprague.

The Ministry Made Attractive at Steubenville, Ohio, Church.

Four young men—among the best of the congregation, says E. H. Wray, the pastor—have just gone from the church at Steubenville, O., to college to prepare for the Christian ministry. Other young men in this same congregation are considering the call to do likewise. Mr. H. W. Cohagen has recently been added to the working force of this church in the capacity of assistant pastor and choirmaster. There have been nine accessions to the membership since the pastor's return from vacation. An evangelistic meeting will be held in November with home forces.

Progress at Canton, Mo., in Church and College.

The Sunday-school at Canton, Mo., has been reorganized on the principles of the public schools, with graded lessons, an opening of the school year in October with enrolment in all courses and grades, and a commencement in June. H. G. Burgess, the new pastor at Canton, reports that the Missouri Christian Endeavor convention is to be held in their city in October. The college at Canton has been standardized and equipped to meet all the requirements of the Missouri College Union. This is believed to mark the beginning of a new era for the college.

Convention Places and Dates in the South.

Disciples in the southern states will hold their annual conventions at the following places and dates:

North Carolina, Pantego, October 18-21; South Carolina, Ellenton, October 21-24; Georgia, Winder, November 1-4; Mississippi, Utica, November 8-10; Alabama, Jasper, November 10-12; Florida, Miama, November 15-18.

Quitters in Religion Are Worse Than Infidels, Says Chicago Pastor.

Austin Hunter excoriated "quitters" in religion at Jackson Boulevard church, Chicago, after this fashion: "Our Christian work today is crippled by quitters; Chicago is full of them. It is a hard job to warm over the 'has-beens.' On Go-to-Church Sunday the attendance in our city was three times what it is normally, and yet if it were not for the quitters, it would be that large every Sunday, and we could shake this city with the gospel. The quitters are in every church. Sometimes they start in with a great flourish, and high hopes are awakened in the hearts of pastor and people, but alas, some difficulty arises and their enthusiasm soon vanishes. It is not a question of right leadership or able preaching, for they quit the Master, himself, many of them going back and walking no more with him. The quitters are a disgrace to the religion of Jesus Christ. They are deserters in the army of the King. They are worse than infidels. What shall be done with them? It is a significant fact that Barnabas and Paul, while they were sorry because of Mark's conduct, did not stop their work because he quit. They went right on. We are not to stop the work of the kingdom while we humor people who are sore. It is easier to make a new saint than to coddle a sore one. Perhaps the best way to bring them back is to be so aggressive in the work that they will become ashamed of themselves and, like John Mark, come back into the work again."

Dr. Philputt on the Reality of Christ's Temptation.

That the temptation of Jesus was actual temptation and not an imaginative story was the theme of a sermon by Allan B. Philputt at Central church, Indianapolis. "I think Jesus Christ felt the temptations of the wilderness," said Dr. Philputt. "No doubt the grosser temptations, such as might appeal to the average person, did not torment him at all, but he had enough of the human element to be tempted and he resisted them. And temptations were much more dangerous to him there in the wilderness than in public places. It is not in public places that men fall, but in their loneliness. Believe me, sin is first in our thoughts. The New Testament teaches the existence of spiritual beings—both good and bad. Jesus himself often spoke of the evil spirit. Our experiences in temptation, in my judgment, cannot be explained without this belief. There is a master mind—an evil spirit—among us. It floats between our souls and God like a cloud; doubts we have thought settled again assail us and the temptations are strong. Men don't believe in the devil as their fathers did—not the devil as he is pictured, with long horns—but as that evil spirit which constantly assails us."

State and National Sunday-school Leaders Hold Training Schools in Indiana Towns.

Schools for the training of teachers are being held in various county seat towns of Indiana by Garry L. Cook, state superintendent of Sunday-school work and the national departmental superintendents—Miss Hazel A. Lewis, Miss Cynthia Pearl Maus and Mr. W. J. Clarke. This group of leaders is at Valparaiso with Pastor Claude E. Hill this week and will be at Angola with Pastor Paul Preston the week of Oct. 11. J. M. Alexander, of South Bend, is the instructor in the Bible at the Valparaiso school and O. E. Tomes, of Fort Wayne, renders this service at Angola.

Third Church, Indianapolis, Breaks all County Records in Sunday-school Attendance.

All records for Sunday-school attendance in Marion county, Indiana, were broken on a recent Sunday at Third church, Indianapolis, when 1,200 gathered there at the Sunday-school hour. This exceeds by more than 100 this school's previous high mark attained last Easter. Three of the eclasses had an attendance of more than 100 each. The young women's class, taught by Mr. G. W. Lain had an attendance of 110. The men's Bible class, of which the pastor, T. W. Grafton, is teacher, had 203, and the women's Bible class, taught by Mrs. T. W. Grafton, had 307 present. The school has made remarkable strides during the past year under the superintendency of Mr. Smith J. Gray is still growing.

Chicago Chinese Christian Workers Hold Rally of Their Chinese Students.

Chinese Sunday-school students and workers of Chicago held a rally recently at Jackson Boulevard church, Austin Hunter, pastor, where is held regularly the largest Chinese Sunday-school in the city. Boys of this school spoke in English of the things they had learned through the instruction given them there and especial honor was paid to Miss Melva Coombs, superintendent, and for many years a worker among the local Chinese residents. Frank Moy Gwing, "mayor" of Chinatown, helped to make the rally a success.

Dr. Medbury on Christ's Call to the Men of Today.

Dr. Charles S. Medbury, of University church, Des Moines, was the speaker at a banquet given by the affiliated brotherhoods of all the churches of Waterloo, Ia., recently. He spoke on "Christ's Call to the Men of This Age." He began his address by comparing Christ's call to the men of today with his call to the disciples of old, saying: "A man does not need to leave his work and devote all his time to preaching the gospel today, but there should be absolute subordination of business life to the will of God. Jesus is not seeking to interpret with some inconsequential thing. He asks a big thing which will require much time, much money and which will command the biggest man in Waterloo. The Master whom we are following is not dismayed by conditions of our modern life," continued Dr. Medbury, who at this point compared the gold craze that apparently has gripped the world with the gold craze at Corinth and who declared that the superior education at Athens, the superficial culture of Ephesus, the political machinations of Rome and the wickedness of Smyrna and Pergamon all had their parallels in modern cities. "Do you think that the Master who threw fishermen against the civilization of that age is afraid of our civilizaton today?" he asked. "Modern men must take themselves as seriously regarding their spiritual power as they do in business, science and education. I regard Cooper, the builder of the Keokuk dam, as a genius, but I look up even more to Judge Ben B. Lindsay of Denver because it was harder for him to grapple with the kids of Denver than to conquer solid rock. I love to think of Gladstone leading parliament and then going back to his castle and falling on his knees before God. I love to think of Lincoln who sent telegrams of cheer to generals whose defeats had bowed him in grief. Modern men are challenged by the call of a unity of action in the church in harmony with Christ's closer fellowship. I honor Frank Gotch in his world mastery and Humboldt honors him for his clean life. I honor Godowsky who became the slave of his instrument that he might become its master. Edison's life is a story of self-abnegation. These men have become leaders by doing prosaic duties all the time. Multitudes praise the few who do the things the multitudes could do if they would. As the task is greater the cost is greater. We must put under foot the low, mean and unworthy things and subordinate many social pleasures if we wish to be religious leaders and transform Waterlooo, the city we all admire."

The Illinois Convention

Between seven and eight hundred delegates attended the Illinois state coonvention at Bloomington Sept. 20-23. First Church, Edgar D. Jones, pastor, was host to the convention and had the co-operation of Centennial, Second and Normal churches. Two evening sessions were held in the Second Presbyterian church. The Woman's Missionary Society, with Mrs. Lura Thompson Porter presiding, opened its sessions on Monday evening with an address by Mrs. Catherine F. Lindsay, of Springfield, who spoke on "The call of China to American womanhood." It was a thrilling address from the beginning. Having recently come back from a trip to China with her husband Dr. V. T. Lindsay, Mrs. Lindsay discussed not only the missionary problem but the international problem, with a conviction and authority that carried her audience with her. All the sessions of the Woman's Society on Tuesday measured up to the standard set by the Monday evening sessions. Miss Alena Grafton, of Indianapolis, was the out-of-state speaker (besides several returned missionaries) and greatly delighted her audience by her address.

The sessions of the state missionary conventions began Friday evening with President McColley's address to which reference is made in our editorial pages. On Wednesday the two outstanding features were the two Bible studies by Frank Waller Allen of Springfield, on the Creed of Christ and the Program of Christ, founded on the Lord's Prayer. These studies were followed on Thursday by two more on Christ's Prayer and Christ's Experience. The substance of these unique productions will be given to our readers in subsequent issues.

Business sessions were more than usually interesting. Financial reports for the year showed that in the difficult period through which the state work has passed it virtually held its own, which under all the circumstances was as much as could be expected.

The Sunday school sessions were inspiring, as these sessions always are. State Superintendant Depew had arranged a strong program. Miss Maus and Miss Lewis captured their general audiences and their department groups as they always do. An address by E. W. Thornton of Cincinnati laid strong and deep foundations for the graded Sunday school and Professor Walter S. Athearn of Drake University put a climax to these sessions with two masterly and highly instructive addresses. Professor Athearn made all his hearers understand why he has attained to a position of the highest authority in the leadership of the modern Sunday school movement.

Dr. Peter Ainslie's messages on "Peace" and on "Christian Unity" stirred up the better impulses of all who heard him to go out and put these Disciple ideals of ours into increasingly more consistent practice.

The convention was harmonious, optimistic, prayerful and deeply in earnest. No jarring note was heard, save once when a venerable minister made remarks which were taken as casting suspicions on the business ability of certain of the nominees for membership on the state board, but upon consideration his remarks were not taken seriously even by those directly affected. The educational session was particularly effective as an exhibit of the talent of some of its instructors and a putting of the claims of Eureka College. President Pritchard and all Eureka's faculty and trustees are to be congratulated on the great increase of attendance at Eureka at the beginning of the new year.

Peoria gets the next convention, winning out against Springfield and Beardstown. The President for next year is Dr. Edgar D. Jones. John R. Golden, state secretary, presented a substantial report and through him the state board recommended certain changes in the district organization which will lead, no doubt, to the adoption by another year of the Missouri plan of state organization.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—Dr. H. L. Willett is at his home after a two weeks' stay in a Chicago hospital following an operation. His recovery is very satisfactory. Word was recently received from Prof. H. L. Willett, Jr., that he had returned from his vacation in the Lebanon mountains to his college work at Beirut and had resumed his tasks for another year. He writes reassuringly as to his safety at Beirut owing especially to the constant presence of an American cruiser within sight of the city.

—Charles Darsie, recently pastor Crawford Road church, Cleveland, has begun his leadership of Belmar church, Pittsburgh.

—A contest between the girls and boys is being carried on at the Sunday-school of Ninth Street church, Washington, D. C., Geo. A. Miller, pastor. Oct. 3 is girls' day and Oct. 10 is boys' day. The average attendance at this school was 664 last year, and the goal set for the new year is 700.

—The annual convention of the churches of Marion county, Ill., was held at Antioch, Sept. 13 and 14.

—John L. Brandt, of First church, St. Louis, will hold an evangelistic meeting for M. L. Pontius and Central church of Jacksonville, Ill., in November.

—Pittsburg churches engaged in a Sunday-school contest with Canton, O., during the summer months and won. In years past Canton school has been the winner in similar contests with Anderson, Ind.; Des Moines, Iowa; Louisville, Ky.; Chicago and Cleveland.

—Dr. Burris A. Jenkins has been pastor of Linwood Boulevard church, Kansas City, for eight years. The opening of the ninth year was signalized with special services on Sept. 19. Dr. Jenkins was brought up from childhood in Kansas City and with his parents attended the old First church.

—Stopping at Muncie, Ind., on his way to the Illinois state convention, Dr. Peter Ainslie spoke at Jackson Street church one evening on "The United Church."

—Andrew Scott, of Hoopeston, Ill., who received a call to First church, Davenport, Ia., and for a time considered it favorably decided finally to decline it.

—C. C. Morrison preached for Edgar DeWitt Jones in First church, Bloomington, Ill., Sept. 19, and for J. M. Alexander, South Bend, Ind., Sept. 26.

—Howard Cramblett, who has resigned the pastorate of First church, McKeesport, Pa., has opened a printing shop in that city and is now in business. The pulpit vacancy has not yet been filled.

—Southern California state society has organized a Sunday-school department and appointed Edgar Lloyd Smith as superintendent. He will hold institutes among the churches.

—W. D. Trumbull, Kendallville, Ind., was the principal speaker at a Brotherhood class banquet at Elkhart, Ind., recently.

—H. E. Van Horn, pastor First church, Oklahoma City, was charged with reckless driving of his automobile on the streets of his city and fined $10. He regards the charge as unjust and gave notice of appeal.

—Charles McMillan, of Hutchinson, Kans., a young man in the congregation there, was ordained to the Christian ministry by his pastor, K. F. Nance.

—During September, Jay Elwood Lynn, pastor at Loveland, Colo., delivered a series of Sunday night sermons on "Great Factors in Our Community Life," as follows: 1. "Labor," a Labor Day sermon. 2. "The School," a convocation sermon in recognition of the opening of the school year. 3. "Business," a sermon which the Chamber of Commerce recognized by inviting their members to attend. 4. "The American Home," and 5. "The Coming Church." The sermon on the school had for its theme "The Purposes of Education," and its principles were applied to local needs and urged the need of a new High School building. One of the results so far has been the calling by the school board of a citizens' meeting to discuss the matter and if possible secure a special election on the question at once.

—W. D. Ryan, Central Church, Youngstown, O., is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons on the nine false gods which W. J. Bryan enumerated at the Los Angeles General Convention as constituting the divinities adored by many Americans.

—D. D. Dick, pastor at Bellflower, Ill., assisted by W. E. M. Hackleman, closed an evangelistic meeting in his home church just before the opening of the Illinois state convention at Bloomington. Mr. Hackleman will conduct the singing at the Indiana Gideon convention at Indianapolis, Oct. 23, and at the Kansas Disciples' convention at Lawrence, Oct. 4-7.

—The National Benevolent Association received a bequest of $500 from a Colorado estate recently.

—C. R. Hudson, pastor at Pomona, Calif., is convalescing from an attack of typhoid fever.

—C. C. Bentley, pastor at East Side church, Long Beach, Calif., reports in his parish paper the names of two of his members who have recently purchased automobiles and is disposed slightly to taunt them because they cannot have a Ford.

—First Church, Chesterton, Ill., J. McD. Horne, pastor, will celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary during the week of November 7-12.

—Harry Martindale takes the pastorship of Second Church, Vincennes, Ind., in November. Dr. C. E. Underwood, of Butler College has been supplying the pulpit of late.

—Geo. B. Stewart, pastor Lenox Avenue Church, New York, opens his Sunday night services for the new season by reading the opening chapter of a drama written by him some years ago while a pastor in Colorado Springs. He will continue the reading on subsequently Sunday evenings.

MY MODEL CHURCH.

By Bishop Berry.

Vetoes bossy leaders.
Magnifies the minister.
Keeps bills paid to date.
Pushes with desperate zeal.
Has enlargement of the heart.
Aims for definite achievement.
Does not depend upon numbers.
Is specially attentive to strangers.
Gives copiously to the benevolences.
Has a winsome vestibule committee.
Is not alarmed if somebody shouts.
Prays and pays in equal proportion.
Mixes much religion with social life.
Puts the Sunday-school at the front.
Has members who believe in each other.
Keeps the recruiting station always open.
Abhors methods that are musty and stale.
Has conversions every week of the year.
Does not dry up in summer nor freeze in winter.
Is specially attentive to people with plain clothes.
Makes the midweek meeting the core of all activities.
Does not believe in "ups and downs" either in experience or service.
Gives everybody something to do, and then sees that everybody does it.

The Training of Church Members

A MANUAL OF CHRISTIAN SERVICE

By Orvis Fairlee Jordan and Charles Clayton Morrison

For classes of new converts, Adult or Young People's Sunday School classes, Pastors' classes, Midweek services, etc.

Here's the little book that hundreds of pastors and church leaders have long been wanting. Something to instruct church members, new converts and old, or prospective church members, in the meaning of the church, its institutions and activities. Note the titles of the thirteen chapters.

THE CHAPTER TITLES

The Church
Membership in the Churc
Christian Baptism
The Lord's Supper
Church Worship
The Evangelistic Work of the Church
The Teaching Work of the Church
The Social Work of the Church
The Missionary Work of the Church Throughout the World
The Organization of the Local Church
The Ideals and Work of the Disciples of Christ
The Larger Fellowship
The Allies of the Church

This manual, which sells for only 12½c in quantities, will bring new life into many a mid-week service and Sunday School class this fall and winter. It is the only thing published that is just right for use at the close of an evangelistic gathering.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Deterioration of Evangelism

TAKEN IN A LONG PERSPECTIVE a view of the history of the Disciples of Christ discloses nothing more pathetic than the deterioration of their evangelism.

From the beginning the Disciples have been an evangelistic people. Their ruling concepts, such as "our plea," "our program," "our cause," "the current reformation," have implied the urgency of a propaganda.

Their evangelism from the beginning took on a distinctive character; it did not follow the traditions of the time; it was, indeed, a protest against the prevailing evangelism.

The prevailing evangelism of fifty years ago had as its dominant theological presupposition the doctrine of God's sovereignty and man's inability to act until God through the Holy Spirit should move miraculously upon his will.

This doctrine the Disciples rejected, affirming that it was unnecessary for man to wait for God to act, that God already had acted, and was now acting through his revelation of the truth, by believing and obeying which man would be saved.

The prevailing evangelism made its chief appeal to the emotions. The Disciple pioneers made their chief appeal to the reason.

The methods of the prevailing evangelism were more or less primitive, selected from a semi-superstitious point of view, and hypnotic. The so-called "mourners' bench" and the transactions that took place around it symbolize for us the whole method and theory of the evangelism of that day.

The Disciples attacked the mourners' bench, the needless and irrational agonizing that it stimulated and spurned the superstitious and hypnotic methods of evangelistic appeal.

They were intent upon proclaiming a message, upon lodging a great truth in the souls of their hearers. They had no "method," except the direct appeal to the intelligence and conscience of those that heard them.

Herein lay one of the most signal distinctions attaching to their movement. The effort to make religion rational, sane and real, to free it from the capricious control of primitive and hypnotic forces has always met with many difficulties, but in the Disciples' propaganda of religion that age-long effort found an ally.

The pathos of the present condition of the Disciples' evangelism is that it has forsaken the high rational standards of former days. The things that formerly gave distinction to their evangelism—the quiet appeal to reason, the great sermon packed full of vital thinking, the dignity and simplicity of manner—have been lost.

In place of these elements of real power present-day evangelists have substituted artificial devices, tricks of manipulation, sophisticated methods, an attitude of intellectual brow-beating, and for a sermon a collection of miscellaneous indirections that have significance to thoughtful men only after such men have been brought under the spell of the meeting.

Our evangelism is coarse.

Our evangelism is number-crazed.

Our evangelism has become professionalized.

It is not profoundly sincere.

Its fundamental lack is that it has nothing great to say.

Of the utmost importance to any religious movement is its method of propagating itself. Anyone can see at a glance that the method by which converts are made is bound to react into the life and character of the movement itself. Its evangelism can thoroughly change the character of a religious movement.

The churches will be either weakened or strengthened by the particular type of propaganda that represents them, they will be coarsened or refined, they will be cheapened or exalted, they will be impoverished or enriched, they will be made irreverent or more spiritual.

There is no task before the Disciples of Christ today more imperative and urgent than the task of reforming and purifying their evangelism.

We believe that this task must be faced bravely by the clear-headed men and churches that have become aware of the illusions and evils of our present system.

There is only one place to begin. That place is in the local church. Already many are the congregations that have come, through experience and through reflection, to a decision that they will have no more of the now popular type of evangelistc meeting in their church life. They are asking for an evangelism of instruction and inspiration, and they have broken for good and all with the evangelism of manipulation.

Such churches are gradually coming to define other standards for themselves than numbers of accessions and size of crowds.

They are asking not how many were present, but what was done for those that were there? Not how many united with the church, but what control has Truth gotten for itself in the souls of those who did unite?

It is no sequestered ideal that they have for their churches. The do not disdain numbers. They yearn for the multitude. They believe in numbers. They pray God to save the people.

But they absolutely refuse to take numbers as their standard and test, for they know how seductive and deceptive such a standard inevitably becomes.

The number of churches and ministers who are reaching this decision is steadily increasing. Their decision is positive. It is a matter of conscience.

There are enough of them now to begin the construction of a new type of evangelism to operate under new and higher ideals than those that now prevail.

The better evangelism will have to make its way with difficulty. It will not bring so apparent a solution to the problem of the discouraged pastor who is at his wits' end and must have something to "stir up" the church and the community.

But slowly and steadily the better way will commend itself as the way of reality and sincerity, the way of truth.

The Creed of Jesus

The First of Four Studies of the Religion of Jesus Based on the Lord's Prayer.

BY FRANK WALLER ALLEN

INTRODUCTION: In its fullness one's religion has four different expressions. First, it is a creed: one must believe something. Second, it is a program: the abundant life is a planned life. Third, it is a prayer: one must seek to know and to harmonize one's self with the will of the Father. Lastly, it is an experience: for after all out of our contact with life and our interpretation of it, is born our philosophy. In these four studies it is my purpose to interpret the religion of Jesus—his creed, his program, his prayer, his experience—as it may be discovered through the medium of the prayer which he taught his disciples.

A CREED underlies every prayer, for one must have some sort of a conception of the God one addresses, and a sincere man's actual creed is best discovered when one hears him pray.

To understand more perfectly this prayer of Jesus as a disclosure of his belief about God let us put it into creedal form:

"I believe in God, our Father, mine and all men's, whose name of love is alone to be reverenced as the ideal; whose will for earth is the establishment of a social order of heavenly love; who has so arranged his world that all his children will be given daily bread, if we live to fulfil this his purpose; who freely forgives us our sins in the measure in which we are able to receive his forgiveness, that is, as we forgive our brethren; who never leads any child of his into a situation where he may be tempted to evil without providing deliverance for him, if he follows his leading."

This confession has only one article. It is from first to last about God:

His fatherhood.
His character of love.
His purpose for earth and heaven.
His care for the daily needs of his children.
His forgiveness.
His guidance and deliverance.

I have stated that from first to last this confession has only one article, that it is about God. The most fundamental thing in religion is one's conception of God. What one thinks about God, what one believes him to be, is the most spiritually significant thing in one's life.

HOW WE THINK OF GOD.

If God be thought of as the Absolute, then all his relations with us will be philosophical relations; and we will talk of his infinity, transcendence, immanence, omnipresence, omnipotence, omniscience; so religion will be primarily speculation. If with the historic Latin theology we think of God as King, we will speak of his eternal decrees, his sovereignty, his rebellious subjects, his judgments and the like; and his relations with us will be official relations. If we go "through nature to God," we shall arrive at nature's God; his relations with us will be expressed in the scientific words of the day—the terms of biology or psychology or sociology and we shall have natural or physical or social laws in the spiritual world as the statement of our religious faith. If we go through Jesus to God and think of him as Father, and the particular kind of Father Jesus conceived him to be, then every word in our theology will be a household word, a homelike word. Even if for convenience' sake we employ a word that does not belong to intimate family affairs, like the word "kingdom," we will be careful, as Jesus was, to give it a thoroughly personal interpretation.

A creed needs but a single article. Given what God is like, one can easily conclude what such a being will do with anybody, under any circumstances, anywhere, at any time.

But where does Jesus come in, you ask? Where is the divinity of Jesus? It is here. What is the religious value of the statement that in Jesus dwelt "all the fullness of the Godhead bodily," but this, that whenever we think of God we think of Jesus of Nazareth? God is for us Christians eternally Jesus-like. He never wills anything for anybody that

> Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. And bring us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one.

Jesus did not will for somebody. The aim of the doctrine of the divinity of Jesus is not to assert something about Jesus, but to assert something about God. Jesus is the way, but the way is of value only as it takes one to the end, the Father revealed through Jesus. Through Jesus we know what to think of God; and whether we conceive him as Lord of heaven and earth, or as the indwelling Spirit within ourselves, he is always a Jesus-like Lord and a Jesus-like Spirit. We shall never ask, "Does God do thus and so?—does he punish, does he forgive, does he make war?"—without framing our question, "Did Jesus punish, or forgive or sanction murder?" The divinity of Jesus is our way of stating the character of our God. And the God we get through this creed is the duplicate of Jesus who utters it.

GOD'S DEMOCRACY.

By way of illustration the significantly opening word, "Our," and the second, "Father," determine for us both the democracy and the peacefulness of God. "Our" is everybody's God; and "Father" is Love's God. "When he bade us say, 'Our Father,' Jesus spoke from that consciousness of the need of human solidarity which was a matter of course in all his thinking," says Rauschenbusch. "He compels us to clasp hands in spirit with all our brothers and thus to approach the Father together. This rules out all selfish isolation in religion. Before God no man stands alone. Before the All-seeing he is surrounded by the spiritual throng of all to whom he stands related near and far, all whom he loves or hates, whom he serves or oppresses, whom he wrongs or saves. We are one with our fellow-men in all our needs. We are one in our sin and our salvation. To recognize that oneness is the first step toward praying the Lord's Prayer aright. That recognition is also the foundation of social Christianity."

In the light of this creed Jesus would have us cease talking of God in the terms of monarchy, and think of him in the terms of democracy. The curse of the race has been the idea of monarchy. And militarism has been the pus of monarchy. This whole monarchical and military analogy in religion stinks of cheap success and garishness. The God of Jesus is not a king, or monarch, upon a throne. He is not the God of a class or of a chosen people, neither is he the God of war.

"Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men and he shall dwell with them, and they shall be his peoples, and God himself shall be with them." God is the God of the people. His dwelling place is upon the earth and among men. And so far as human affairs are concerned, the progress of the people is the progress of God.

GOD WORKING WITH MEN.

The highest ideal of social progress is that of the co-operation of God and the people for the growth of human society. There are two notions abroad of which society wants to be well rid: the first is that in so far as moral and ethical progress is concerned, God works independent of men; and the second is that men can permanently progress without the leadership of God. Nothing can permanently retard a progress that is inspired by religion. The king idea of God produces the notion of special privilege to those whose genuflections are most graceful, whose liturgy, forms and ceremonies are most empurpled with the servile coloring of monarchy. It produces a doctrine of folded hands and twiddling thumbs, looking to the King to do the work of the world alone. It separates life from religion; it produces sacred and profane history; it makes holy days and holy things over against secular days and secular things.

The democratic idea of God as a great fellow-worker of the people produces self-respect, social self-reliance and independence. It places upon men's shoulders a divine responsibility for the world's lack of love and justice; it makes all days holy; it makes all things and movements which have to do with the happiness and welfare of the people religious.

And if I understand anything of the mind and character of Jesus, such was his conception of his Father.

God. Jesus was no king, and laid no claims to a relationship between himself and the people as that of a monarch and his subjects. What king never had where to lay his head? What king since the history of humanity has been written has based his especial privileged relationship between himself and his subjects upon this principle of life: "And whoever will be chiefest among you shall be servant of all?" You call him the world's brother and you do well, for such he is; you call him humanity's friend, and you do well, for such he is; you call him the world's savior, and you do well, for such he is; but you cannot call him the world's king, for such he never claimed to be. His hopes did not lie in special privilege, nor in a ruling, fighting class, but in a God-led, God-inspired people whose law of life should be love. Jesus wore no halo except in the imagination of artists who thought in the terms of monarchy. He wore no purple robe save as it was colored by the sweat and the dust of the work of the day. He had no scepter other than that of fellowship, no law other than that law of love. His "court" was a Galilean hillside, and his "courtiers" unlettered fishermen.

THE CREED IMPLIED IN THE PRAYER.

Again let us repeat this prayer in the terms of a creed:

"I believe in God, our Father, mine and all men's, whose name of love is alone to be reverenced as the ideal; whose will for earth is the establishment of a social order of heavenly love; who has so arranged his world that all his children will be given daily bread, if we live to fulfil this, his purpose; who freely forgives us our sins in the measure in which we are able to receive his forgiveness, that is, as we forgive our brethren; who never leads any child of his into a situation where he may be tempted to evil without providing deliverance for him, if he follows his leading."

Jesus might turn and explain God and life to us thus:

"This Being you instinctively turn to with reverence is your Father, whose name is love. These people you live with and trade with are your brethren, whom you are to dwell with, working in cooperation for the good things of life, never in competition; whom you are to work with for the joy of serving the family, never for the sake of what you personally make out of your work; and whom you are to consider as the owners of all you individually control, so that you think of them as much as of yourself in the employment of what you call yours. This unfortunate you are sending off to a jail is an invalid child of your Father, whom you must treat as an invalid and do what you can to supply him with health. This man, who belongs to a backward race here at hand or on the other side of the globe, and whom your civilization would like to be rid of because he does not easily fit into it, is a brother for whom your Father's eldest son died. This world in which you find yourself, so pleasant and yet so difficult to understand and to be satisfied with at times, is your Father's house, or one of his houses, where he puts you to get your education, and which he wants you to make a household of love like the heaven of which you dream."

Interesting Books on the War

BY WILLIAM F. ROTHENBURGER

As A historical survey to supplement the rather unsystematic reading of busy people a little volume entitled the "Historical Background of the Great War," by F. J. Adkins, reads well. A Cambridge professor could scarcely be blamed for a bit of bias sentiment, but the author chooses to assume the spirit of the historian as he traces the political history of the warring nations, the processes by which each has arrived at its present status and the contribution each has made to the civilization of today. France is accredited with being the pioneer of modern civilization and Paris is looked upon as being the only city in Europe where it is better for a man to be a writer or an artist than a successful man of business. High respect is paid to Germany for her scientific worth and her sterling characteristics. Believing as he does that the war is bound to introduce a larger degree of Slav influence into European life, the author pleads for a better knowledge of this great mass of unorganized, many-tongued, widely-distributed people in whose character the word "religion" strikes the dominant note. Very naturally, England is lauded for her unparalleled contribution to human welfare, her navy is assessed at its full value and as indispensable to her own protection and her resources are believed to be unlimited. "Blind Alley" recruiting is condemned, military preparedness commended and with the utmost frankness her interest in the neutrality of Belgium is confessed to be prompted by the motive of self-protection.

AN APOLOGETIC FOR BRITAIN.

"Britain's Case Against Germany," by Ramsey Muir, professor of modern history in Manchester, differs radically from Professor Adkins' volume in that the author writes as a partisan. He contends that for many years Germany has had two distinct schools of thinkers—the intellectualists championed by Goethe, Dahlman and others and the militarists as championed by the Prussians. The latter have won the day and are in complete control of the empire. He reviews Bernhardi's "Germany and the Next Great War," pronounces it the fruitage of a Prussian dominance from which the empire under her present form of government can never rid herself and shows how the emperor, who is also the king of Prussia, has it within his power to influence enough votes which, when added to the always united Prussian sentiment, are easily able to Prussianize every measure under consideration. He sees in Europe a growing sentiment for peace championed by England and blocked at almost every turn of the way by Germany. Germany is also charged with the intention to strike a deadly blow at her "enemies" about this time or as soon as even a semi-plausible grievance could be digged up out of her foreign relationships. In the most scathing terms of which the English language is capable the German people are charged with precipitating the war, and of prosecuting it with a brutality common to the pre-Christian era.

BERNHARDI'S BOOK.

One wonders in reading Muir's volume—"Britain's Case Against Germany," whether the author has not overstated the case nad whether he has not misinterpreted Bernhardi. One somehow hopes that no people of today may be proven guilty of the awful charges heaped upon the Teutons and takes up Bernhardi's "Germany and the Next Great War," written in 1912, with a mingled feeling of hope and fear. This is a remarkable volume. Every page bears the mark of one who has mastered his subject to the last minute detail. Von Bernhardi was a retired general until called to the field at his own request late in August of this year. He is a disciple of Treitschke, who during the last twenty years of the last century as professor in Berlin, dominated the thinking of the ruling classes. Even the first few pages of this remarkable volume give one a greater shock than a morning dip in zero weather. For example, "This desire for peace has rendered most civilized nations anaemic, and marks a decay of spirit and political courage such as has often been shown by a race of Epigoni," is a mild sample. War is considered as a spiritual and moral obligation and a biological necessity; America's peace motives are dubbed as selfish and her peace activities as the death knell of her own destruction. The author practically tries to harmonize war with the teachings of Jesus, contending that this law of love concerns individuals and not nations. He laughs at brotherly arbitration, places widowhood and orphanage and bloodshed below the welfare of the state and calls Treitschke in to help him say "God will see to it that war always occurs as a drastic medicine for the human race." Every nation is looked upon with suspicion; the "moral" and "spiritual" welfare of the race is made dependent upon whether or not Germany fulfils her divine historical mission in becoming a world power through war. France must be crushed, England's navy must be sent to the bottom of the sea, the hordes of Russia must be subdued, and any nation which attempts to block her Pan-Germanistic program even by neutrality, must suffer at her hands. The relative strength of the nations is carefully computed and the conclusion reached that Germany can, if necessary, whip the world into subjection. To this end her youth must be trained, her coffers filled with gold and the nation set on fire with this "divine conviction." Is this the sentiment of a military enthusiast or does it represent the general feeling of his people? The unparalleled unity of the empire and the response of her sons to the call to arms is the answer. The program of the Prince of Peace is much less a reality among this wonderful people than we had believed.

THE REAL KAISER.

But what of the Kaiser? A little anonymous volume entitled "The Real Kaiser," speaks with the authority of one who has sat in diplomatic circles and has seen this remarkable man face to face both in public and in private. Was he really away when the issue was settled; was he whipped into line by his

The Fine Art of Conversation

BY W. ROBERTSON NICOLL

In the British Weekly.

EW capacities are more valuable or stand one in better stead than the capacity to converse. There are those who are proficient in parlor tricks. They can sing or play or do conjuring business. I read of an eminent statesman that he especially prided himself on the latter accomplishment. These are substitutes, and very poor substitutes, for good conversation. Where good conversation is valued they ought not to be tolerated. Men, and women, too, are judged very largely by their skill in conversing agreeably. Happily, there are few who make after-dinner speeches, and fewer still who are welcome in that capacity. A man was known to say that the happiest evening of his life was at a dinner party where he had pleasing company on each side, and where all the speakers put down for orations were disabled by tonsilitis.

Yet there are not many who really try to talk well. However clever and well informed, people are often sadly deficient in this respect. They might take lessons, and a very few lessons would serve to cure them of their more characteristic faults. But everyone thinks he can converse. Hardly anyone believes that he has anything whatever to learn in that matter. It is a sad delusion.

Let me speak first of the different kinds of conversation, and then advance my thesis, which is that the primary requisite of success in talk is good manners and good feeling.

I.

We may, if we choose, distinguish between conversation and talk, though a definite line cannot be drawn between them. Conversation is the light kind of talk, the talk that goes on among well-bred people who meet at a luncheon party or at dinner. Most of them, we will supose, are strangers to one another. The conversation must be on the surface. It must not be argumentative or angry or deep or too clever. It may give room, however, for considerable talent and tact. I think it will be found generally that the success of conversation at such meetings depends very largely upon the hostess. If she has a light hand and a keen perception she will be able so to guide matters that everybody will be pleased.

In conversation of this kind serious matters, weighty thoughts, and lengthy anecdotes are barred. If a specially clever and eminent man is one of the company he may, without saying much, stimulate everyone. He will tell briefly and neatly a little experience of his own, and then others will chime in and say, "I remember I once———." Everyone gets his chance, and it is to be supposed that no one abuses it. If you can get at your board such a man, then happiness and brightness are the order of the hour. Dr. Johnson describes the man I mean in the portrait of his friend Fitzherbert. "There was," said he, "no sparkle, no brilliancy in Fitzherbert; but I never knew a man who was so generally acceptable. He made everybody quite easy, overpowered nobody by the superiority of his talents, made no man think worse of himself by being his rival, seemed always to listen, did not oblige you to hear much from him, and did not oppose what you said. Everybody liked him."

It is admissible, however, on certain occasions that the serious talker should have his way and almost monopolize the conversation. If a man has just returned from the discovery of the North Pole everyone will be pleased to hear some authentic account of his experiences. In other words, there is a place for the Lion. But there is no place for the Bore, and the Lion must be very careful not to become a Bore. The choice is between the two. Few would complain if a great poet were to inform his listeners about his views on poetry and on poets. Celebrities, however, are not common, and it is well. With any conversation or light talk the most fluent speaker should be very careful to respect the rights of others and try to draw them out rather than to silence them.

II.

We may take the word "talk" as representing the more strenuous kind of conversation—the kind of conversation in which Dr. Johnson delighted. Sir John Sinclair's immortal definition of bread is as follows: There are three kinds of bread—white bread, brown military advisers or, was he the promoter of the conflict? This interesting volume which treats of the many-sidedness of the emperor contends that the recent remarkable development of the German navy is due entirely to his initiative, though he is not considered among naval experts as authority. He considers himself one of the great generals of all time, makes all military appointments and furnishes inspiration for the army. His finer nature is suppressed and as "War Lord" he stoops to the level of pre-Christian savagery when he takes Attila of the Huns as his ideal warrior in sending his men to China and Belgium. The most charitable thing the author says about him as a warrior is that the extreme military nature and ability of the Crown Prince threatened to dethrone his father whose only alternative was to swing in line with the sentiments of the militarists to save the throne to himself. He still remains an unusual power about whom all the truth is not known and whose place in history is still in the fixing. He has never been a mere figurehead.

INTERESTING BOOKS ON THE WAR.

THE GERMAN ARMY SYSTEM.

The perfection of the German army organization and the marvelous system with which it moves is graphically told by Richard Harding Davis who, as war correspondent, was suspected as a spy, marched for many miles beside the ranks, was confined to an upper room in a Belgian home and barely escaped the way of all spies who fall into the hands of the enemy. But one's admiration for this huge machine fades away under his portrayal of the destruction of Louvain and Reims and the helplessness of their population.

Perhaps the most courageous and timely indictment of the German people is Samuel Harden Church's personal letter to his friend, Dr. Fritz Schaper, of Berlin, entitled, "American Verdict on the War." It is a reply to the appeal to the civilized world of ninety-three German professors. The substance of this reply appeared in The Christian Century and the entire statement has been printed in pamphlet form by the Norman, Remington Co., of Baltimore. It reviews the diplomatic correspondence between the several nations and besides proving beyond a doubt that Germany is responsible for the war speaks an unmistaken word of protest in behalf of humanity. It will be interesting to read a German reply, should one be forthcoming.

AMERICA AND THE WAR.

When one asks about America's relation to the war one is not disappointed in expecting that Theodore Roosevelt will have a word. Early in the new year Charles Scribner's Sons published a volume from his pen entitled, "America and the World War." It is couched in his usual pungent style. Somewhat unbecomingly, the ex-president immodestly criticizes the Wilson administration for its conservatism, brands the president and secretary of state as uninformed and misguided, and shames an Americanism that stands by without protest while neutral Belgium is being dragged in the mire. He advocates immediate armament, not for aggression but for the maintenance of peace, and for protection, and slays certain pacifists in the following style: "Only mischief has sprung from the activities of the professional peace prattlers who preach the gospel of the milk and water of virtue and scream that the belief in the efficacy of diluted moral mush is essential to salvation."

A much more thoughtful and comprehensive volume is Usher's "Pan-Americanism." It is a companion volume to "Pan-Germanism," by the professor of history in Washington College, St. Louis, Those who remember with what prophetic accuracy he stated what the probable movements of the various European nations in case of war would be, accept with all seriousness his speculations on Pan-Americanism. The author is sure that America will be compelled to reckon with the victors of the present war who are bound to look longingly toward South America. As a safeguard against such encroachments Pan-Americanism is suggested. This would include the United States and the twenty Latin republics. He further contends that Japan will control the Pacific and will force upon us another problem. Pan-Americanism is believed by the author to be full of fallacies from the social, geographical and governmental standpoints. He startles us with the information that these republics would more readily ally themselves with European powers than with the states, and that indeed they incline to interpret any approoach that might be made by the states as born of a sinister motive. What America might do as a pioneer in disarmament and the tremendous cost of such a policy are discussed with the utmost frankness, making one feel that the progress of the 19th century has robbed us of our geographical seclusion which, for so many years we enjoyed and used as a substitute for armament. This great book is food for serious thought.

bread, and rolls. I am not aspiring after his fame when I say that talk may be either between two or between a company. If it is to be talk in any company, then certainly the company must not split. Few things ruin an evening like the break-up of a party after dinner into several sets. But if men will range themselves and do their best, and if there are among them a certain number of those who think, who know, and who can speak, the result may be very pleasant.

For myself I prefer the dialogue. You get the most out of a man if you have him to yourself. Often you pass from the shallows to the depths. Such talk is usually best on a long acquaintanceship. The barriers fall one by one till at last there is complete confidence. But there is such a thing as friendship at first sight, and I can recall occasions when the very first meeting with a man put us both on confidential terms for all the time to come. But this happens seldom, and should not be expected. There is a poor worn phrase, "heart to heart talk," which expresses what I mean. Of course, there are men and women who never break their reserve, no matter how long their acquaintanceship may be or how frequent their meetings. All that can be said is that in such cases acquaintanceship never makes the transition into friendship. I think it will be found true that among the number of those with whom you can have really intimate talk nine-tenths at least are to be reckoned among your friends.

THE AUTOCRAT.

Neither conversation nor talk should be kept at a stretch. It should be easy. There should be quiet intervals. These need not be dull, but there must not be the perpetual sound of one voice preaching everlastingly.

"The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" is a delightful book. It is a sign of the true American buoyancy that the breakfast table should be the scene of the talks. Most people with burdens upon them are inclined to be silent at breakfast. Walter Bagehot records the fact that Southey wrote poetry each day before breakfast, and reflects, "As if anybody could write poetry before breakfast!" But if readers will turn to the "Autocrat" they will see that it is virtually a monologue. The Autocrat does practically all the talking, and the rest for the most part are confined to questions in one line. Now I should be glad to listen for a considerable time to a man as witty and wise as Dr. Holmes, but I should take to breakfasting in bed if I had to hear him talking every morning for a month."

III.

I come to my main point. Good talking means good listening, and the art of listening intelligently, kindly, appreciatively, is not common. "I like her," said a man to me, speaking of a lady we knew, "she has such a concave mind." In order to listen well you must take a kindly interest not only in the talk, but in the talker. You meet people consantly who are anxious to tell you about themselves and their children. They never put a question about you or your children. This means that they are not interested in you, and the discovery is chilling. Even if you feel no interest in a man or his belongings it might be as well, as a mere matter of policy, to pretend some interest. Pretended interest is nothing like the real interest, but it is something. At the least, it is a tribute to good manners.

There are men who, when you meet them, have to get through somehow the preliminaries to the discussion of their own important and earth-shaking affairs. It is curious to hear them at a later stage of the conversation asking questions which show that they have not paid the slightest attention to what you have been patiently telling them. That is a breach of good manners. I have noticed that people of this kind never really attract affection. How could they?

ABSORPTION IN SELF.

There are men, and even young men, who fall into the habit of saying the same thing over and over again. In the room where I am writing I received not so long ago two visits, separated by about a week, from a rather well-known person. He told me frankly that his object was to discuss his future prospects with me. The first evening he explained himself at great length, occasionally walking up and down the room. He was not satisfied, however, but intimated his wish for another interview. This was given to him, and I say, on my soul and conscience, he went through the whole performance exactly as he had done the previous week, without altering one word. I could not but think of what others must have had to endure at his lips. Needless to say, he showed no interest or concern whatever in me or mine. That I could have forgiven, but I do wish that he had in some way varied his exposition of his achievements and his hopes. But that, of course, is a question of good manners. It simply meant that he was absorbed in himself. You can, thank God, get another man to be deeply interested in your affairs, but never, I think, unless you are as much interested in his. I commend also to the notice of those who instruct our youth the vile habit of interruption. A man or a woman is getting through a story very well, and is just coming to the point when a rude voice breaks in, introducing a totally different subject. I hope I have my temper under fair control, but sometimes in witnessing such scenes I have been inclined to smite the interrupter on the mouth.

A KIND WORD FOR GOSSIPS.

These are very plain and homely remarks, but they are needed, as I see every day. There is something after all that is amiable in gossip. Gossips are at least interested, and if they are good-natured they are entertaining. I admit that the qualification is important. We must not suppose for a moment that the art of conversation depends upon acquirements or attainments. Members of the educated classes are frequently unready and cumbrous in conversation. Humanity after all is the supreme subject of interest. It has been noticed that the wives of peasants with almost no culture can often chat agreeably and give and take in conversation. There are race differences in this respect, but I cannot go into them. It is said of the Scot that he will not converse, but that he will argue. It is said of the English peasant that he has a gift for meditation. It is said of the Irish peasant that he talks readily and pleasantly in short sentences usually full of expression. A writer who lived for years in India said that the Bengalese, who hardly knew anything, talk frequently and with animation, though almost always on a single subject—money. It has been said that if two Bengalese talk five minutes the word pisa (pence) will always be heard, but talk they do, with remark, rejoinder, and repartee. Dr. Johnson was the greatest of talkers, but he played the game as a rule. Whoever reads Boswell carefully will see that Johnson was an excellent listener. Boswell records:

"At supper we had Dr. Alexander Webster, who, though not learned, had such a knowledge of mankind, such a fund of information and entertainment, so clear a head, and such accommodating manners, that Dr. Johnson found him a very agreeable companion."

Johnson gave full fair play even to Boswell. Let me allow myself one expression out of thousands:

"We talked of a man's drowning himself. Johnson: 'I should never think it time to make away with myself.' I put the case to Eustace Budgell, who was accused of forging a will, and sunk himself in the Thames before the trial of its authenticity came on. 'Suppose, sir,' said I 'that a man is absoluetly sure that, if he lives a few days longer, he shall be detected in a fraud, the consequence of which will be utter disgrace and expulsion from society.' Johnson: 'Then, sir, let him go abroad to a distant country, let him go to some place where he is not known. Don't let him go to the devil, where he is known!'"

That is good talk.

LAST CIVIL WAR VETERAN TO BE RETIRED.

The average reader is mildly astonished to learn that the last civil war veteran is to be retired from the active service of the United States army soon. The war closed fifty years ago. The magnificent Grand Army of the Republic is but a remnant, the veterans have fallen for years like winter's withered leaves. That a veteran should still be in active service staggers comprehension, until it is revealed that the "veteran" was but fourteen years old when peace came. The name, the "youngest soldier of the war" is legion. The claims of many must be taken on faith. But not so in the case of "Johnny" Clem, now officially known as Col. John Lincoln Clem, United States army, and soon to be Brig. Gen. Clem, retired. He has the records. Born on August 13, 1851, he unsuccessfully tried to enlist in an Ohio and later in a Michigan regiment as drummer boy before he was ten. But on May 1, 1862, before he was eleven, he managed by some hook or crook to get into the 22nd Michigan Infantry. He served in the army of the Cumberland during the war, drumming and fighting at Shiloh, Chickamauga, ePrryville, Stone River, Resaca, Kenesaw, Atlanta and Nashville. At the age of twelve he was made a sergeant because of his heroism at Chickamauga. Naturally, the alert and heroic lad became a favorite with the officers and men.

When the war closed he went back home and atteded school for five years. President Grant waived the rules and commissioned him second lieutenant, although he had no regular military education, a deficiency he immediately supplied by attending an artillery school at Fort Monroe. His service in the regular army has been meritorious, but his chief renown, through no fault of his, has been "the drummer boy of Chickamauga." For years he has been the sole link binding the regular army to the great army of volunteers that made such heroic sacrifices that "government of the people, for the people and by the people should not perish from the earth."

CHICAGO DISCIPLES ARE UNITED

REPORTS have recently gone abroad that a certain disunity has come into the missionary activity of the churches of Disciples in Chicago. These reports have done injury to the missionary work carried on in this city by the American Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in co-operation with the Chicago Christian Missionary Society.

Not only so, but discredit has thereby been reflected upon the spirit and temper of the Chicago churches themselves.

There is some frail foundation for these reports.

Two or three ministers of the city recently participated in the organization of an evangelistic association bearing the name "Chicago-Calumet" whose declaration of purpose is phrased in terms that are evidently divisive and mischief-intending.

This organization was heralded by the Christian Standard (whose editor was present and read a lengthy address at the time its constitution was adopted) as a thing of great significance in view of the so-called "liberality" of certain Chicago churches.

Efforts were made, both of a subtle and open character, in connection with the Hammond "Efficiency Congress" to use the "Calumet-Chicago" organization for the purpose of thrusting a theological issue into the co-operative work of the Chicago churches and so of accomplishing the divisive design that that organization was intended to bring about.

With scheming and activity like this going on, and with a newspaper eagerly giving publicity to it all, and actively fomenting it all, it is easy to understand how rumors of threatened division in Chicago should originate.

UNITY IN FAITH

BUT any one at all acquainted with the spirit of the twelve or fifteen congregations of Disciples in Chicago would listen to these rumors with grave skepticism.

Such a one would consider that these Chicago congregations have worked together for too many years at the most difficult task in American Christianity to allow their modest forces to be goaded by outside influences into a scandalous division at this late day.

Amid discouragements and irritations arising out of the pathetically scant resources with which they have had to do their work the Chicago churches have developed a sense of inter-congregational comradeship, a conscious interdependence, that is as strong as it is beautiful.

The theological or doctrinal issue has never been injected into the fellowship of these churches. They have found their unity not in their opinions, but in their common faith in Christ and their common purpose to serve him. Whatever doctrinal differences existed have been held good-naturedly, as subordinate to the essential things that bind churches of Christ together.

Ministers from outside the city, on visiting the Chicago ministers' meetings, always expressed surprise in their discovery that Chicago ministers were less conscious of the orthodoxy-heresy issue than they were themselves.

Their facetious references to their presence in Chicago, the "capital of heresy," etc., always fell flat. Such allusions were not relished by either "conservatives" or "liberals" for the simple reason that both "conservatives" and "liberals" were conscious that in their own experience the whole doctrinal issue was incomparably less significant in Chicago than were the courage and sacrifices of the churches and their deep-based unity in faith and purpose.

The recent lapse of one or two of the ministers from this high level of Christian brotherhood and mutual confidence is regrettable, but it does not in any way affect the fellowship of the churches. The churches of which these ministers are pastors will not follow them into any mischief-making organization.

Every congregation of the city will continue its co-operative part in the Chicago Christian Missionary Society and will permit no competing organization to come in to divide the forces and resources with which the Disciples' work in this city must be done.

AN EXAMPLE TO BE EMULATED

IN THEIR attitude toward those who would cause division the Chicago churches have given anew an illustration of the kind of unity Disciples plead for and have in so many instances scattered along their history failed to practice.

The present reaffirmation of the unity of these churches is not a triumph either for the so-called "liberals" or "conservatives," for both liberals and conservatives simply refuse to allow a division to be made between them.

No doctrinal consideration enters in.

Ministers and congregations whose "orthodoxy" is regarded as fully equal to that of the ministers who suggested division, are as resolute in their rejection of such a proposal as are those regarded as "liberals."

So much publicity has been given to the Chicago situation by others that The Christian Century deems it a duty not only to the congregations of Chicago but to the general brotherhood to let the true state of things be known.

We could wish for no greater blessing on our strife-torn and distraught brotherhood than that the principle of unity which Chicago Disciples have so well learned might be adopted and practiced in the counsels and the co-operative fellowship of all our churches throughout the land.

THE WHOLE FAMILY AT CHURCH

CENTRAL CHURCH, Youngstown, Ohio, W. D. Ryan, pastor, has set out to have every family complete and sitting together in the service Sunday morning, October 17. Mr. Ryan calls the attention of his people to the disintegration of family life through the break-down of family religion. He says:

> "The church should be one institution that should in every possible way recognize the family tie and do its utmost to strengthen this sacred bond. Nothing can do more to sweeten and to preserve the integrity of family life than for all members to sit in a group and worship God together, once a week. When manhood and womanhood shall come, those who are now children will remember such hours of uplift and the memory will be, not only a precious heritage, but a potent factor in keeping them in the way of Godliness.
> "No doubt our church has failed to lay due emphasis upon the family tie. But suppose we try to make one Sunday a sample of what every Sunday should be in having the whole family together at the hour of worship.

He then names Sunday, October 17, as "Family Day" and extends an urgent invitation to every member of every household, from grandparents to the youngest children, to participate in the gladness and worship of that day. He further suggests that those who have no homes be sought out by those who do and invited to share the family life of the Sunday dinner table.

This, we believe, is striking at a vital need in modern church life. The family as a unit is neglected in our churches. There has grown up a division of loyalty between the Sunday-school and Church with the result that not children only, but many young people are rarely seen at the service of worship.

This divides the home itself. To meet this problem the experiment of merging the Sunday-school and morning worship into a single service has been tried with varying success in some churches.

It is not a final solution, for it lets the Sunday-school determine the character of the combined service. But it is a sincere effort at solving a vital problem.

Some day some genius will come along and show how a service of true and reverential worship may be constructed so as to fit the religious needs of all members of the family—from thoughtful fathers and mothers down to the children of early school age.

A "BRIEF" OF THE GOSPEL

REV. J. M. RUDY after closing a union meeting in a Missouri town in which he received the commendation of all the pastors of the city for his faithful preaching writes that he is fully convinced that Disciple ministers ought to take the leadership of such union meetings whenever they are invited to do so.

There are two conditions of success, he says.

One is that the leader—the evangelist—must free himself from all party spirit.

The other is that he "must preach the gospel instead of a mere brief of the gospel."

The meaning of number one is obvious.

The meaning of number two is luminous.

EXPOSITIONS OUTRAGE VISITORS

VISITORS to the California expositions returning to their home communities tell a story of moral conditions in connection with the expositions that ought to nullify the good repute gained for the coast cities by the material and artistic success of their big fairs.

These visitors are carrying to all parts of the land accounts of the most shameless exhibitions of vice, both in the exposition cities and within the exposition grounds.

The good repute of the coast cities generally, and especially of San Francisco, will be bound to suffer by these widely spreading tales of indignation and disgust.

It will be remembered that the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, supported by all its constituent bodies and by local and state federations of churches, took measures long before the Exposition opened, to induce the authorities of the Exposition and the city of San Francisco to maintain a high moral tone within and without the grounds.

Both the Exposition authorities and the mayor of San Francisco insisted that it would be so and issued public statements to that effect.

It is now plainly evident that those promises amounted to nothing. An investigation conducted by the Social Hygiene Association shows that unspeakable conditions prevail.

Within the Exposition are several concessions, maintained despite protests specifically against them, which are deplorably vicious, portraying sexual indecencies, including even exhibitions of entire nudity. Known professional prostitutes are tolerated and certain conditions which were declared as being too bad to be allowed in the city itself, are permitted in these concessions.

In the city itself open prostitution is allowed, and in one district, the investigator says: "It is estimated that there are from 600 to 1,000 women on duty, the policemen being there apparently to prevent anything that would interfere with the orderly and profitable traffic in vice." These houses are open and investigators report seeing seventy-five men and boys entering within ten minutes. They are among the "sights" of the city.

Cabarets in the center of the city are set up with every convenience for securing vicious women.

Summing up his report, the investigator says: "In spite of announcements of officials to the contrary, San Francisco remains one of the few large cities of this country where prostitution is frankly and openly tolerated. Here also little or no effective supervision and regulation of dance halls, rooming houses, cafes, and other public places where prostitutes ply their trade is provided. The natural and inevitable result has been that San Francisco has become the Mecca for the underworld, and that for every such addition to her population the problem is rendered that much more difficult."

Anybody who has any moral judgment at all cannot help questioning whether an exposition that releases and panders to the base passions of men in such wanton fashion as the above description suggests does more good to society than harm.

And the fact that the Church and righteous men seem so helpless in the presence of conditions like these should take all the pride and boasting out of us.

A HYPOTHESIS

SUPPOSE that through the years the Disciples' evangelism had kept its thoughtfulness, its dignity, its intellectual chastity.

Suppose that it had held its message as the all-important thing, and had disdained the temptations to adopt artificial devices that promised a short cut to apparent results.

Suppose that the ablest interpreters of our message were chosen by the churches for evangelistic service, instead of, as now, the cleverest manipulators of crowds.

Suppose that through all the years the taste for Truth had been cultivated in the churches, instead of, as now, the taste for sensation and the admiration of a skillful performer.

Suppose that the radical and absolute incongruity of spiritual religion with the whole vaudeville evangelistic performance had been sensitively felt by the churches.

Would not the Disciples of Christ be an incomparably more significant, substantial and potent force in the Christian world than we are today?

Would not our ideals seem to the world more commanding than we have yet been able to make them?

And would not our own sense of participation in a great movement of the divine Spirit be more certain and satisfying than our people generally possess?

These reflections lead to but one answer. And they point the way to one of our most urgent duties.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Will Parade for Dry Chicago.

The Temperance Parade has come to be one of the annual features of Chicago's life. The parade this year on October 9 will have added interest by reason of the campaign which will be waged to make Chicago dry next spring. The churches and Sunday-schools appear in line on foot, in automobiles and on floats. This year the marchers will have a paper headdress and pennant that will make the marchers look uniform in appearnce. The headdress has some little resemblance to a Knights Templar headgear.

Fight for Civic Decency.

Rev. Clifford G. Twombly is rector of St. James Protestant Episcopal Church, Lancaster, Pa., and has brought about some changes in civic conditions in his city which illustrate the power of the church to make a community better. Two reports on vice conditions have been made at his instigation and at last action has been taken upon the reports. Saloons, hotels and roadhouses of the shady sort have been closed up on account of their indecencies. Most of these questionable resorts were owned by brewers, which is an indication of the sincerity of brewers' conventions in talking about the reform of the traffic. The separate rooms in which women drink are to be abolished by court order. This rector stands as a type of a new interest in his communion in the fight against the saloon.

John R. Mott Heads Y. M. C. A.

The Y. M. C. A. has exalted John R. Mott to the position of general secretary of the international committee of their organization. He will undertake a reorganization of Y. M. C. A. work. He is in addition chairman of the continuation committee of the Edinburgh conference and leader of the World's Student Federation.

Great Preacher Finds Hell on Earth.

Dr. R. J. Campbell has visited the trenches in France and has seen the effect of the gases and liquid fire upon the bodies of the soldiers. He refrained from telling his congregation the worst of the sights he had witnessed but declared that what he had seen was hell on earth.

Rev. R. J. Campbell Resigns.

There are few Christians in the English-speaking world who have not heard about Rev. R. J. Campbell of the City Temple in London. For a time, his name was coupled with the New Theology controversy, and British religious papers treated him with scant courtesy, but now the leading journals of England vie with each other to pay him honor. Born in the fellowship of the Anglican church, he has been an evangelical, and then a representative of liberal orthodoxy. Journals in this country of conservative leanings have been trying to make it out that the recent resignation of the great preacher is due to some inclination on his part to return to Anglicanism, but of this there is not the slightest evidence to date. When he visited America a few years ago, his hair was then white, and the heavy burdens of a metropolitan pastorate have broken his health beyond hope of immediate repair. He suffers from insomnia and organic heart trouble. The letter of resignation is full of terms of appreciation for the great congregation to which he has ministered so many years.

Methodist Reunion Discussed.

Methodists journals now have no more common topic of discussion than that of the reunion of the two bodies north and south. The separation in 1844 on the slavery issue had been upon an agreement not to invade each other's territory. This agreement was soon violated upon both sides. The two bodies now compete in many sections of the country. The Methodist Episcopal Church has eight annual conferences in distinctly southern territory. It has more than three million dollars ($3,084,570) invested in church property, and is spending $211,165 annually for pastoral support and $19,010 for district leadership in its southern conferences. In the border states both churches are competing actively for the resources of the territory. The Methodist Episcopal church, south, has nine and the Methodist Episcopal church has six conferences in the border area. The Methodist Episcopal church, south, has $14,083,783 invested in church property, and is spending $793,711 a year for pastoral support and $117,767 for district supervision in its border conferences. The Methodist Episcopal church has $16,236,343 invested in church property, and is spending $1,050,013 annually for pastoral support and $83,752 for district supervision in the same area. This is denominational competition in its worst form, when two bodies with the same doctrine and organization compete for the sake of issues long since settled in this country.

Preachers Raise Money for Jews.

The Jew baiting propensities of many sections of Europe are in contrast to the spirit just now being manifested in London. A committee of prominent citizens and clergymen are raising funds for the Jews whose homes have been desolated by the great war. Most of the Russian Jews have lived in territory now occupied by Germans and thousands have fled to the east under the protection of the Russian flag. Among the well-known clergymen on the committee are Rev. R. J. Campbell, Dr Clifford and Dr. Campbell Morgan.

W. C. T. U. Will Meet.

The national convention of the W. C. T. U. will be held in Seattle, October 9-14. Addresses will be made by Bishop W. T. Sumner, Daniel A. Poling and others. This organization, founded by Frances Willard, was originally an or-

Chicago Laymen Expectant

Enthusiasm is being shown by all Chicago churches in the work of the big convention of the Laymen's Missionary Movement to be held in this city, October 14 to 17. The program is unusually strong, and should command the attention of every Christian man in the city of Chicago. Some of the speakers are J. Campbell White, Wooster, Ohio; Bishop Homer C. Stuntz, South America; Bishop L. L. Kinsolving, South America; Bishop C. P. Anderson, Chicago; Col. E. W. Halford, New York; Dr. Edward A. Steiner, Grinnell, Iowa; Dr. J. A. W. Haas, Allentown, Pa., Dr. Cornelius H. Patton, Boston; Dr. Charles E. Burton, New York; Dr. Cleland B. McAfee, Chicago; Dr. Herbert S. Johnson, Boston; Dr. Fred B. Fisher, New York; Mr. W. G. A. Miller, Pittsburg; Mr. Chas. G. Trumbull, Philadelphia; Mr. Fred B. Smith, New York, and also a number of the best Home and Foreign missionaries. Some of the topics to be discussed are:

"What Must America Do Under the New World Conditions?"

"The Sort of Christianity Needed to Conquer the World."

"The Call of God to the Church of Today."

"Is a Victorious Christian Life Possible and Obligatory?"

"Recent War Experiences in Turkey."

"Is the Church Awakening to Her Missionary Duty?"

"The Disintegration of Mohammedanism."

"The Two Americas."

"The Immigrant Opportunity."

"The Place of the Church in the Life of the City."

"The Adequacy of the Gospel to Meet Modern Industrial and Social Conditions."

"The War and Missions."

"Where to Begin in Making the Church More Aggressive and Productive."

"Religion in Business and Business in Religion."

"Essential Conditions of Evangelizing the World."

"How to Reach the Unchurched in this Territory."

"Saving America for the Sake of Humanity."

"What Would it Mean if Laymen Were Good Soldiers of Jesus Christ?"

"The Man and the Church."

The men of Chicago churches have the opportunity of starting the greatest campaign that America has ever seen and there is no doubt whatever but this convention will be the greatest ever held in America. It is expected that eight to ten thousand men will register and attend the sessions in Medinah Temple. A number of the churches of the city are ont to register every man in their church. Some churches have already registered every member of the official board. A strong deputation committee has been organized to assist in holding meetings in a large number of towns outside the city limits, and the invitation has been extended to men covering a wide area.

ganization exclusively for temperance work. It is now interested in a great variety of reforms and types of Christian work. The national headquarters is at the Rest Cottage, which was the old home of Frances Willard in Evanston, Ill.

Judson Memorial to be Erected.

The Baptists of the United States are raising a fund of $300,000 to save Judson Memorial church in New York City and to also memorialize its late pastor, Rev. Edward Judson, who died recently. Very favorable progress has been made in the raising of this money, and it is now proposed to make the building a Baptist headquarters for New York. This would mean housing the common activities of the denomination in this building.

Lloyd George on War and Religion.

Lloyd George, the Minister of Munitions in the present crisis in England, is quoted as saying that the religious result of the present war will not be the destruction of religion, but rather a revival. He has expressed a desire to study the effect of the civil war in America upon the faith. He is quoted as saying that some theological opinions will be put on the discard by the great conflict but essential religion will be more alive than ever.

Laymen's Missionary Convention.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement, whose striking campaign in 1909 brought thousands of men together to pack theaters and listen to missionary addresses, will go through the country again this winter with a series of conventions held in the largest centers in the land. The first convention of the series will be in Chicago, October 14-17. In this meeting the pace will be set for a movement which it is hoped will bring a great passion into the hearts of the men of the church for the world's redemption. After the Chicago convention, three teams will go through the cities led by J. Campbell White, W. E. Doughty and D. Clay Lilly respectively. They will have with them Col. E. W. Halford, Editor Charles G. Trumbull, many leading missionaries and some of the most prominent of the missionary secretaries.

The expressed purposes of the movement are to study the missionary progress of recent years; to project plans looking toward the accomplishment of our whole missionary duty; to emphasize the adequacy of the gospel to meet modern social conditions; to increase the spiritual power and efficiency of the local church; to secure the general use of the best methods of missionary education and finance; to inspire laymen to take their part in the extension of the Kingdom of Christ.

The Chicago meetings will be held in the great Medinah Temple, the building erected by the Shriners for their degree work. In this building the Sunday-school convention was held the past year. Men of the Chicago churches are enrolling in large numbers. Though not a large church, the Second Presbyterian church of Evanston, where Secretary Michel has his membership, has enrolled a hundred men, and the Episcopal church in the same block has already enrolled 125. The prospect for the convention next week is that it will be the greatest laymen's meeting ever held in Chicago.

ELISHA'S HEAVENLY DEFENDERS.

Lesson for October 24.

Golden Text: The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about them that fear him, And delivereth them. Psalm 34:7.

Lesson II Kings 6:8-23. Verses 8-17 printed. Memory verses 16, 17.

(8) Now the king of Syria was warring against Israel; and he took counsel with his servants, saying, In such and such a place shall be my camp. (9) And the man of God sent unto the king of Israel, saying, Beware that thou pass not such a place; for thither the Syrians are coming down. (10) And the king of Israel sent to the place which the man of God told him and warned him of; and he saved himself there, not once nor twice. (11) And the heart of the king of Syria was sore troubled for this thing; and he called his servants, and said unto them, Will ye not show me which of us is for the king of Israel? (12) And one of his servants said, Nay, my lord, O king; but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bedchamber. (13) And he said, Go and see where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him, saying, Behold he is in Dothan.

(14) Therefore sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a great host: and they came by night, and compassed the city about. (15) And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, a host with horses and chariots was round about the city. And his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! how shall we do? (16) And he answered, Fear not; for they that are with us are moore than they that are with them. (17) And Elisha prayed, and said, Jehovah, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And Jehovah opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw; and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha.

Verse by Verse.

8. King of Syria. The king of Syria was probably Ben-hadad II.—Warring against Israel. The Syrians made predatory raids throughout the fertile plains, especially at the harvest-time.—He took counsel. He took personal charge of the campaign.—In such and such a place. In a definitely named place.—Camp. Or, encampment, RVm.

9. The man of God. Elisha.—Beware that thou pass not such a place. Naming some definite place. It may be a warning to keep away or not to overlook the place.

10. The king of Israel. Probably Jehoram.—Not once or twice. Several times. He brought relief to the land again and again.

11. Sore troubled. It seems that the king lost courage. His well laid plans were frustrated.—This thing. The betrayal of his plans.—Which of us is for the king of Israel? He thought there must be a traitor in his army, some one whom he had been trusting.

12. One of his servants. We are not told who the servant was, but some have supposed, it was Naaman. It was some one who knew of Elisha's fame.—Elisha the prophet. His fame had extended to Syria by this time.—In thy bedchamber. He knows and reveals your very thoughts.

13. Go and see where he is. Locate him for me.—That I may send and fetch him. It was a misjndgment on the part of Ben-hadad to try to capture the prophet.—He is in Dothan. Dothan is twelve miles north of Samaria on the road from Samaria to Damascus. The name means "Double fountain."

14. A great host. It was no mere band of marauders, but an organized army. An army was commissioned to take one man. Read in this connection Matt. 26:17.—Came by night. These sudden raids usually take place at night. The king did not know that the God of Israel never slumbers.—Compassed the city about. Dothan was on a hill. The king encamped on the other hills across the valley.

15. The servant. Not Gehazi who was a leper, but some other.—Risen early. Awakened by the approach of the Syrian hosts. How shall we do? He comforts the young man by his faith and heavenly host.

16. Fear not. There is no need for fear. Jehovah will provide, was the thought of Elisha.—For they that are with us are more* * * with them. The servant saw them surrounded with a mighty army and helpless, for no human power could resist. Elisha saw a host of heavenly defenders. We too often fail to take account of the unseen forces about us.

17. Elisha prayed. Prayer is the never-failing means of help. It puts the divine resources at our command.—Open his eyes that he may see. Let him have a vision of our defense. We need in our day such a vission of our spiritual resources.—The mountain was full. The hill upon which Dothan was built.

"There are who like the Seer of old
Can see the helpers God has sent.
And how Life's rugged mountain side
Is white with many an angel tent."

Invisible Forces

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

The Bible continually recognizes the unseen forces playing upon our lives. The deliberate movement of Jehovah working vast changes in the world, the wonderful transformations made in human hearts by his spirit, and the influence of great men, both past and present, upon the life of our day, are all mighty testimonies to the power of the unseen. We come to appreciate Paul's significant words in the second Corinthian letter when he says "We look not at the things which are seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are tempted; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

Like Elisha's servant we need our spiritual eyes opened that we may understand these eternal forces at our command. We are grossly materialistic in our thinking, because we fail to take account of the unseen forces all about us in this life. The structural engineer calls our attention to the great strength of a bar of steel, but often fails to make clear to us that the strength we so much admire depends upon the unseen forces acting upon the visible content of the steel. We stand before the marvels of electricity with keen appreciation of its power, and fail to realize that it is an unseen force. We possess the keenest interest in the beauty and power of the animate universe, yet fail utterly to realize that life is an unseen force; and manifests its highest values in spiritual rather than temporal ways. In the same way we do not get the real values of our religion because we live as if they were found in forms and ceremonies, in offerings and and temples; in the mere trappings of true religion rather than in union with Jehovah, who is spirit and who must be "worshiped in spirit and truth." Religion then is the consciousness of our oneness with God. As the word implies, it is a binding of the soul to God. It is the last, deepest, and ultimate conviction of the spirit as it grapples with the unseen. All these outward manifestations which we too often call religion are but its wardrobe, in which it goes abroad in the world. It is to be expected, then, that religion will wear out these garments, just as we lay aside a wornout dress. No creed or form will answer for all the centuries. All the works of God are assuming new forms. Jehovah's eternal word is: "Behold. I make all things new." The story is told of Ampere who was led by a friend to try his eyeglasses, when to the latter's surprise the great electrician burst into tears. Ampere had not known before that he was nearsighted, and the sudden realization of what beauty and interest he had missed all his life was overwhelming. Are we not just as ignorant of spiritual nearsightedness? We need the ability to detect the new spiritual values in all the changing departments of our life. When we pass from the bright sunlight into a darkened room we cannot see its contents, but gradually the pupils of our eyes enlarge until what was invisible becomes visible. As with the physical, so may it be with our spiritual sight, the power of spiritual vision will enlarge if we live up to the faith we have. The true unveiling of the human eye, the true sight that gives courage to a human heart, and victory to life, is the sight of the Divine Father, our spiritual helper, who is in the thick of our struggling life, supplying love, pity, and strength to our fainting spirits.

Religion in Haiti.

The disturbances in Haiti have brought to the attention of the civilized world the religious condition of that unhappy country. It is made up almost entirely of blacks, and nominally is Roman Catholic. The medicine man has more power than the priest, however, and Voodooism, or snake worship, is the religion of thousands. Some Protestant work is being done by Pastor Lherisson. He has been establishing small schools and is trying to get the people educated enough to read the Bible.

Reclaiming Land and Men.

In Portland, Ore., there is a unique mission called the Men's Resort. Here the wrecks of humanity that float into rescue missions are taken care of. In case a man shows prospects of reform, he is sent out to a farm where land is being reclaimed, some thirty miles away from Portland. Thus both man and land are redeemed together.

Foreign Society Closes Books Showing Greatest Loss in its Entire History.

The books of the Foreign Society closed September 30, with total receipts of $425,137.20. There was a loss of $39,011.96. This is the greatest loss in the history of the society. There was a loss from every source of income except from the Sunday-schools, which show a gain of $935.00. The losses are as follows: From the churches, $9,674.96; from the Endeavor Societies, $592.50; from individual offerings, $3,224.13; from miscellaneous sources, $18,581.36; from annuities, $5,291.14; and from bequests, $2,583.49. This is the first loss since 1908. It is the third loss since 1900. In making this report Secretary F. M. Rains says, "We have faith that this defeat is only temporary. There are better days. God is not only in His heaven, but he is also in the earth and dwells in his church that he has commissioned to preach the gospel to the whole creation."

Texas State Paper Compelled to Find New Editor.

After two months of effort to carry out his contract to purchase the Christian Courier from the State Board of the Texas churches, M. M. Davis of Dallas has been compelled by ill health to ask the board to release him and the board has done so. The paper is now the property of the board again. A. E. Ewell, pastor of Oak Cliff Church, Dallas, has been selected to edit the paper for the time being. He makes a very modest bow in the last issue. The Courier is an excellent paper, possessed of a good spirit, and as the organ of the state board ought to be supported by the Disciples of the state of Texas. It certainly has our sympathy in its recent severe trials and our earnest hopes of a more prosperous future.

Presbyterians and Disciples Close Union Evangelistic Meetings with Communion

The church at Liberty, Mo., led by its pastor, Graham Frank, has been engaged in a union evangelistic meeting with the Presbyterian church of their city for several weeks. The services were held in each church on alternate weeks, Mr. Frank preaching in the Presbyterian church and the Presbyterian pastor preaching in the Disciples' church. The meetings were well attended, and there were many confessions of faith as a result of the preaching. On the final Sunday morning the Presbyterians joined with the Disciples in the observance of the Lord's Supper, the two pastors officiating at the table, the deacons from the two congregations dispensing the emblems to the united congregation. In preparation for this service Mr. Frank published in his weekly parish paper a portion of the "Order for the Celebration of the Communion" as given in the "Book of Common Worship" of the Presbyterian Church. On both sides there are many expressions of the joy found in the fellowship of these special meetings.

President-Elect of William Woods College Married.

Joseph A. Serena, president-elect of William Woods College, Fulton, Mo., and Miss Virginia K. Hearne of Lexington, Ky., were married at Catlettsburg, Ky., on Saturday, Oct. 2. Mrs. Serena is a graduate of the University of Chicago and has been an active leader in the work of the Woman's Missionary Society in Texas and Kentucky. President and Mrs. Serena will begin housekeeping in the beautiful new president's house, the gift of Dr. William S. Woods, just now approaching completion on the college campus.

Kentucky Holds Annual Convention Up to Usual Kentucky Standards.

Kentucky's state convention was held at Madisonville, Sept. 20-23. The registered attendance showed something over 250 delegates. The first session, on Monday evening dealt with the problems of Christian Education. Pres. R. H. Crossfield was in charge. The C. W. B. M. occupied Tuesday and displayed the usual high spiritual intelligence and enthusiasm by which all their work is characterized. Prof. W. C. Bower, of Transylvania College, spoke on Tuesday evening and made a profound impression with his interpretation of the missionary task based upon his recent trip to the Orient. Ellis B. Barnes, of Richmond, known to all our readers, was president of the Kentucky Christian Missionary Convention. The secretarial reports were encouraging and the addresses inspiring. The sermon at the close of the convention by J. N. Jessup of Hopkinsville was commented upon as especially strong. The Sunday school sessions under the presidency of H. C. Garrison of Danville, and with the inspiring leadership of Walter Frazee, superintendent of Sunday-school work, made an effective climax to the week's exercises. The next convention goes to Winchester. R. N. Simpson, of Harrodsburg was elected president for the next year.

Church Extension Society Reports Enthusiastic September Offerings.

The Church Extension Society reports enthusiastic and generous returns from the September offerings. For the first eleven days of September there was a loss of $471.78 but this was due to the fact that a large offering of $300 on the Name Loan Fund came in last year during this period. The loss in individual receipts up to Sept. 1, was $15,685. This is due to the fact that but few large annuity gifts could be secured this year. The net falling off in receipts thus far this year is $14,080.

A Unique Plan for Church Growth as the Year Draws to an End.

Chas. M. Fillmore, minister of Hillside church, Indianapolis, has organized "The Cornelian Centurion Band" for his fall and early winter work. He is asking one hundred of his members to pledge themselves to work during the last one hundred days of 1915 for one hundred increase in all departments of the regular church activities. It means an increase of one hundred in the enrolment and attendance of the Sunday-school, an increase of one hundred in the average attendance at the Sunday morning and Sunday evening audiences, one hundred at the mid-week prayer-meeting, one hundred in the Calender Club, one hundred in the Men's Club, one hundred in the missionary organizations, one hundred in the young people's societies, and one hundred accessions to the church. It started off very encouragingly the first week. It is probably too late for other churches to adopt this plan this fall, but it can be worked successfully during the first hundred days of 1916. Any one wishing details can secure them by writing Mr. Fillmore. Such a correspondent will not fail to enclose stamps with his request.

Jacksonville Church Elders Take Charge of Services During Pastor's Absence.

Myron L. Pontius, completed his first year with Central church, Jacksonville, Ill., on Sept. 1. At regular services of the church during the year there were eighty-eight additions. Missionary apportionments have been met and a current expense deficit removed. During the vacation period the elders of this church took charge of the morning service. During these weeks the close of the Sunday-school was the beginning of the church service. An elder would talk for ten minutes followed by the communion, and the congregation was dismissed. A very large per cent of the children remained for this short service and profited by it. There was no evening service. During Mr. Pontius' absence one of the church's most faithful members, Mrs. Alice Taylor, passed away. The funeral service was held in the

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes wish to study the life of Jesus this year. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

church, conducted by two elders, Mr. Geo. Harney and Mr. Walter Riee. The service was one of the most impressive ever held in the church. Last week Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Conner and Miss Seegar were with the Jacksonville church in the interest of the boys and girls. Mr. Pontius says their work is unique and worthy of the highest praise.

Kansas City Church Loses High-minded Layman by Death.

Linwood Boulevard church, Kansas City, feels deeply the loss of one of its leading laymen in the death of Mr. Thomas S. Hall. Burris A. Jenkins, his pastor, writes of him thus: "Mr. Hall was a stalwart man physically, intellectually, and morally. He was abreast of every modern movement in thought, a wide reader, and even a popular science student. Although an active business man up to within about a year of his death when still in the prime of life, his interests were largely intellectual and spiritual. He will be sadly missed in the work of the church, in his firm whith whieh he was connected, and among a wide circle of devoted friends. He will be missed by his pastor more than by any other one, except his wife. He leaves no children." Mr. Hall's death occurred Sept. 14.

Pastor Invites Questions and Answers Them on Sunday Evenings.

W. A. Moore, pastor First church, Tacoma, receives questions from his congregation upon which he bases his Sunday evening talks. These questions cover a wide range of subject matter as the following list indicates:

Does the Bible condemn cremation?

Can the United States justify herself in the sale of munitions of war to Europe and thus continue the awful death struggle?

What is meant by the Bible quotation, "They were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed?"

What possible good can come from the war?

Why did God tell us to covet the best gifts and then not give us our desires?

What is Christianity's reply to threatened war with Europe and Mexico?

Is poverty a disgrace?

If the Lord has power to stop accidents, why does he permit such as the Titanic disasters?

Why don't you heal the sick?

Explain why the "Church of Christ" is undenominational.

Are soldiers in Europe first degree murderers? If not, what degree?

I have lost faith in the church of my fathers. What shall I do?

How can lovers know they love well enough to marry?

How can I become a Christian?

How do you know Jesus had no human father?

Preacher Attracted to the Law Returns to the Ministry of the Gospel.

The call of Frank G. Tyrrell to the regular pastorate of First church, Pasadena, and his acceptanee of the same brings baek to the church's ministry a man whose powers and consecration were proved years ago. Mr. Tyrrell has been praetieing law in Los Angeles since leaving the pulpit of First church, Chicago, and it is understood he had built up a substantial practice. The hold of the Christian ministry upon him seems never to have been shaken off, and when the Pasadena pulpit was made vaeant by the departure of Jesse P. McKnight for Los Angeles Mr. Tyrrell, invited to supply for the time, gladly accepted. The congregation has been much pleased with his ministry and has now asked him to move to Pasadena, give up his law practice and preach the gospel. He has decided to do so. Mr. Tyrrell was pastor of the old Central church, St. Louis, for ten years before coming to Chicago.

Topeka Minister Discusses Question Why the Church Fails.

If people gave as much of their interest, time and money to the spiritual life as they do to the material, there wouldn't be so much talk of the church being a failure, said O. L. Cook, pastor First church, Topeka, Kan. Mr. Cook, who celebrated the first anniversary of his pastorate at Topeka, on Sept. 26, preached on "Where the Church Fails,' at a rally day service. "The church does fail in some instanees," said Mr. Cook, "but it is on the human side and not the divine. It fails in a way beeause its people do not have a clearer conception of its mission, an understanding of its real aims, because of a lack of co-operation and laek of unity in it: in fact, because its members are human. Then it should be remembered that the church is constantly taking up the sinful and imperfect, very many of whom no lodge or society or institution would have. The church holds out hope to the downtrodden and oppressed. Why then, should it be thought a thing incredible with multitudes of the most imperfect specimens of human kind flocking into the church if it should be found with some of the marks of imperfcetion upon it?"

New England Convention Meets at Everett, Mass.

The New England Christian Missionary Society and the New England auxiliaries of the C. W. B. M. held their annual convention with the church at Everett, Mass., Sept. 9-12. They represented twenty churches having a membership of 3,100. The statistics showed an increase of 327 members during the past year, 219 of whom were by baptism. The loss was ninety-seven. These figures represent our strength in six states with a population of more than six and one-half millions. The spirit of the convention was deeidedly optimistic. Many said it was the best conventon in years. The program was highly creditable. The addresses of the visiting secretaries, S. G. Inman, W. R. Warren and F. W. Burnham were exceptionally praiseworthy while the rest of the program was of splendid charaeter. The address of Jno. F. Kyes, a layman of Main street church in Worcester, Mass., was especially comemnted upon. The convention meets next year for its fiftieth anniversary with Main street church of Worcester, aMss., Harry Minnick, pastor.

BRIEFER NEWS NOTES.

—The Sunday-schools in the central part of the country that set their Rally Day for Sept. 26 were not so fortunate as those that chose Oct. 3. The former day was generally very rainy while the latter day was one of the most beautiful days of the season.

—J. Boyd Jones and Central Church. Terre Haute, Ind., are taking an active part in voting out the political evils that have made that city notorious in recent years. Mr. Jones said, in announcing his evening sermon recently, that people who did not believe in mixing politics and religion would be uncomfortable if they came to hear him.

—At the evangelistic services at Eminence church near Atlanta, Ill., sixteen persons have been added to the church by baptism, ten of whom are young men. James A. Barnett, pastor at Moline, is assisting the pastor, T. T. Holton.

—Carl H. Barnett, pastor First Church, Rochester, N. Y., has made an acceptable president of the Christian Endeavor Union of that city for the past two years. Resigning recently, he is now sought to take the position of pastoral counselor to the union.

—The National Benevolent Association is just in receipt of a payment of $7,084.86 on the bequest recently made the association by the Blanks estate of Austin, Texas. The association has just issued a new and attractive annuity booklet entitled. "His Silent Partner," and will be glad to send a copy to anyone requesting it.

—H. W. Hunter, Wellington, Kan., preached two Sunday evening sermons,—companion sermons, he called them,—the first on "The Man Who is too Busy" and the second on "The Man Who is Not Busy Enough."

—The work of John R. Blunt at First church, Winnipeg, Man., is gaining results. Two missions have recently been estab-

News From the Foreign Society

Within a week the Foreign Society has received a piece of property worth $3,000 and a gift of $300, both gifts being on the annuity plan.

M. B. Madden is now assisting the Men and Millions team. His family is in Eugene, Oregon, where the five children are in school. The mission work in Osaka, Japan, a city of two million people, is now in charge of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Erskine alone. They need reinforcements.

D. C. McCallum of Vigan, Ph. Is., writes: On the 14th of June the dormitory and Bible College were opened. Almost thirty young men of the Government Schools were admitted, eight teachers who studied in a normal institute and ten Bible College students. One young Chinese was baptized in the month.

C. F. McCall and P. A. Davey have been making an evangelistic tour through the North of Japan. It was their privilege to speak to quite a number of public school teehers, some of whom are inquiring concerning Christ and the gospel. One teacher said: "Last night for the first time I understood God as Father."

Dr. W. N. Lemmon reports the following: In the Mary Jane Chiles Hospital in Manila, Ph. Is., during the month of July, persons treated, 1,739; treatments, 5,452; surgical operations, 63; surgical treatments, 586; out of town visits, 2; city visits, 68; in-patients, 62.

Dr. Kline, of Vigan, Ph. Is., writes that the hospital work has doubled recently. A thousand pesos was collected in fees during the month of June. In that month 2,000 people were treated. This does not count treatments, but the number of individual patients.

William Price, the minister of the Christian church at Lancaster, England, in sending money for a number of subseriptions to the Intelligencer, says: "The magazine is appreciated very much, and as pastor I realize its value in keeping the people interested in our own missionary activities."

t The church at Palestine, Texas, of whieh L. B. Haskins is minister, supported F. E. Meigs, of China. His pieture was hanging in the auditorium and upon the news of his death was draped in mourning, and a memorial service was held.

Robert N. Simpson, of Harrodsburg, Ky., writes that he never felt more encouraged over the growth of missionary enthusiasm among his people since the beginning of his ministry. This is largely the result of the teaching of the minister.

One church that adopted the budget plan reeeived an offering of $88.01, and set apart sixty-five cents of it for the work of the Foreign Society. In view of the needs of the work on the foreign field, it would seem that this is not a just proportion.

Dr. Frymire, of Lotumbe, Africa, writes that there are 300,000 people in his district absolutely dependent for medical assistance upon Lotumbe. The work on the hospital progresses.

Miss Emma Lyon, who has returned to China after twenty-two years of service on the field, writes: "If more of the people only knew what a great joy it is to go, they would go, too. I sometimes think I am selfish in going and leaving others to do the hard work at home." Miss Lyon is supported by the church at Pasadena, Cal. She writes that the California people have been most kind to her during her stay in their midst.

—Carl A. Burkhardt has moved from Lexington, Mo., to Franklin, Ind., where he has begun his leadership of Tabernacle church.

—Claris Yeuell, Plainville, Ind., spent a part of his vacation at Barnesville and Hopedale, O., former fields of labor. He preached at Bethesda and La Belle View, O., and visited Bethany, W. Va., where his son Gladstone Yeuell is now in college.

—Mr. R. A. Doan spoke in Wilson Avenue Church, Columbus, O., for Pastor J. J. Tisdale, Sept. 26. Mr. Tisdale describes the new secretary's address on the call of foreign lands a "wonderful address" which "made our hearts burn within us."

—Jackson Boulevard Sunday-school, Chicago, had an attendance of 1,201 at its Rally Day sessions last Sunday. This includes 173 attendants at the Chinese department. This is the largest Sunday-school ever assembled in a church of Disciples in Chicago and probably the highest record attained in Illinois. Austin Hunter is the pastor, Mrs. Hunter's women's class had over 200 enrolled. The young men's class had over 100. The superintendent is Mr. A. B. Segur.

—State Secretary John R. Golden, is holding evangelistic meetings in Kankakee, Ill.

—Robert E. Henry has begun his new work at First church, Decatur, Ill. The Havana congregation gave him a social reception on the eve of his departure for his new field.

—Walter M. White is speaking on Sunday evenings to the college students attending the various schools in Cedar Rapids, Ia. Recently the students of Coe College attended First church in a body.

—The Tennessee state convention was held last week at Union City. J. E. Stewart, of Woodland street church, Nashville, was president. Carey E. Morgan, of Vine street church, Nashville, thrilled the convention with his address on "The Plea of the Church of Christ."

—The sixty-fifth anniversary of First church, Quincy, Ill., fell on the same day as the first anniversary of the pastorate of W. D. Endres with that people, Sept. 26. The day was observed with special services. Alexander Campbell once visited Quincy church, a fact to which the members naturally point with pride. Mr. Endres' ministry is taking on the aspect of success in the one year he has been there.

—W. H. Book and Tabernacle church, Columbus, Ind., observed the eleventh anniversary of Mr. Book's pastorate, Oct. 3.

We are a growing enterprise—steadily, healthily and substantially growing. The past year has shown an increase of 40 per cent in the volume of our patronage. The tokens indicate that the new graded Sunday-school year upon which we are entering will bring us another encouraging increase in patronage. During the past year our indebtedness has been cut down by the gifts of our friends from $17,000 to a little above $8,000. The annual deficit under which our business has been operating (it is a young business, our friends will remember, and was begun very modestly) has been cut down substantially for each of the past two years and with continued support from our friends and patrons promises to disappear altogether inside of three years.

LET THIS BOOK SPEAK FOR ITSELF

COMMENTS OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

St. Louis Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents.

The Christian Intelligencer (Reformed)
The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal.

Zion's Herald (Methodist, Boston)
Dr. Morrison who is editor of The Christian Century, a national organ of the Disciples of Christ—a denomination which believes in immersion—handles with utmost frankness the position of his own denomination relative to baptism. The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of this leading publication in that denomination. Dr. Morrison's work is frankly done, and while arousing, doubtless, some criticism among those of his own denomination and the close communion remnant still to be found in certain localities, will be heartily received as a genuine contribution toward Christian unity.

The Advance (Congregationalist)
We commend this book to pastors who find the baptismal question up for discussion in the parishes. It is a strong contribution to the literature of the subject and we believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt. We do not think it possible for them permanently to hold to close baptism without going the whole length of the Baptists and join close communion to it.

The Epworth Herald (Methodist)
While not agreeing with all the statements made it is about the most interesting book on the subject I have seen. The author is master of good, clear English and knows how to express himself.

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination)
He presents his thought from a new and interesting standpoint. We wish it might be read by all Disciples, all Christians, all Baptists, and in fact by all denominations—it will have a moulding effect as to one's opinions of baptism. The Disciples' themselves will likely get the most good from the book. Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God.

The Continent (Presbyterian)
It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity for immersion, and he writes that "the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever, stands behind the practice of immersion." Instead, in the New Testament, baptism simply means the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian. He is strongly against demanding the rebaptism of Christian believers who apply to Baptist or Disciples churches for membership having been accepted in other churches by any mode of baptism whatever. Equally he opposes infant baptism, because the subject of baptism must be voluntary. At the root of his argument lies a sound desire for Christian unity.

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren)
The author is clear and candid, brave and kind in performing the task to which he assigned himself. . . . As we view the real meaning of this new interpretation of baptism it involves a complete abandonment of the dogma of immersion, and may lead to a new adjustment of attitude on that subject on the part of other immersionist bodies. At any rate, the significance of the work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement.

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Dr. Morrison belongs to what might be called the younger school of Disciples who have the discretion and the will to approach the members of other churches, not with the club of intolerance and pseudo-omniscience, but with the open hand of intellectual catholicity and good will. . . . The propaganda could not wish for a leader more truly representative. A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few. This book gives one evidence. The significant fact is that the author is a member of an immersion church, once commonly called "Campbellites," and while he holds to immersion as the correct mode of baptizing, yet he declares, "It would be too much to say, dogmatically, that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." The book is well worth reading, not only for its scholarly treatment of the question of baptism, which is satisfactory, but as an example of true liberality in modern church life, a liberality which is not degrading and flat, but catholic, appreciative and noble.

The Christian Endeavor World.
A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view but building a bridge toward the affusionist view.

The Congregationalist
A daring and splendidly Christian piece of work is "The Meaning of Baptism," by Charles Clayton Morrison, in which the author frankly asserts that Jesus "had no intention of fixing a physical act upon his followers. He did not have in mind the form of baptism but the meaning of it." Nevertheless, for historic reasons he recommends retaining the form of immersion.

The Baptist Banner
A new book of more than ordinary interest. It is learned, and is written in excellent spirit and fine style. It is eminently suggestive and well worth the price and a careful reading.

The Christian Observer (Presbyterian)
It is a courageous man who will undertake to write a book on the subject of baptism in this age of the world . . . This book has stirred up considerable controversy in the writer's church. By many he is regarded as a heretic and is abused accordingly. However, in other respects the author is true to Disciples' sentiments. The chief value of the book lies in the author's contention that New Testament baptism is not tied to any physical act, but is "the spiritual, social act of self-commitment and self-consecration by the individual and his induction into the church." This idea, by the way, is very forcefully expressed in an old document that was formulated by the Westminster Assembly more than two centuries and a half ago when they said, "Baptism is a sacrament. . . whereby the parties baptized are solemnly admitted into the visible church and enter into an open and professed engagement to be wholly and only the Lord's."

The Standard (Baptist)
The argument throughout is good and there are conclusions that are worthy of careful consideration.

The Christian Union Quarterly (Disciple)
The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines. . . However one may differ from the author there is much in this book to be commended from both the Baptist and paedo-baptist sides of the house.

The Churchman (Episcopal)
Under the title "The Meaning of Baptism," Mr. C. C. Morrison has given an interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism. The Disciples, to whose fellowship Mr. Morrison belongs, practice rebaptizing for those who have not been immersed. Mr. Morrison is not in sympathy with this position. He shows that baptism by immersion has figured little in the divisions of the church and will doubtless likewise figure little in its unity.

Baptist Standard (Dallas, Tex.)
This is a very interesting work, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this summer!

The Homiletic Review
A volume on this subject with an irenic purpose by the editor of The Christian Century is welcome. The position taken is that while immersion is the valid mode of baptism the doctrine or dogma "eclipses the great objective task of the church for large majorities of Disciples and Baptists." Baptism has its essence not in the mode of administration, but in that it means "the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian" (p. 193). While, then, the volume is a plea for the adoption of immersion as a mode universally recognized as regular, the practice of rebaptism with its implication that Presbyterians, Methodists and others are not Christians is to be reprobated. Members should pass freely from these other churches to those of Baptists and Disciples without calling into question or ignoring their status as already members of the Church of Christ.
The spirit of the book is delightful and raises new hopes where none had seemed possible.

The Presbyterian Advance
The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which often has been asked of him by correspondents and readers—"What is the best book on baptism?" . . . Against all who insist that immersion and immersion only is baptism this book provides an unanswerable argument.

The United Presbyterian
An unusual book. Written by a Disciple and the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion. He says the use of the word "baptizo," in its New Testament usage, refers primarily to the function of initiation and only incidentally to the particular [physical] act.

The Meaning of Baptism

By Charles Clayton Morrison.

Regarded by both friends and critics as the most significant contribution made to the baptism problem since the debate between Alexander Campbell and N. L. Rice. Do not let your opinion of this book be formed at second hand. It deserves your own careful reading.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to cooperate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

News From the Foreign Society

Dr. Pickett reports the number of treatments in the medical work at Laoag, Ph. Is., for one month, as 2,010; minor operations, 24; major operations, 85; visits to outside villages, 5; visits to homes of the sick, 20. The baptisms for the month number four; Sunday-school classes, 82; average Sunday-school attendance, 1,698.

W. H. Hanna writes that one of the oldest members of the church in Laoag is a man who used to be a chief servant of Satan. Now he allows no one to surpass him in zeal as he serves Jesus Christ.

Early in the month D. C. McCallum, of Vigan, Ph., Is., visited several towns in the interest of the dormitory. Almost everywhere he found that Padre John Thompkins, S. J., had been busy trying to undermine the influence of the mission and in some places had done so with considerable success. In other places in spite of strenuous efforts he almost entirely failed.

On the 19th of September, Mr. and Mrs. Holder, and W. H. Edwards had reached France on their way to the Congo. They left London on the 17th. They found everything on board ship very congenial and anticipated a happy voyage.

Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Oliphant are planning to remove to Akita, Japan. They have been spending some time in the language school in Tokyo.

Fred E. Hagin is planning to visit the island of Hachijo, Japan, a place where very wonderful victories were won within recent months. Before the cold weather comes on he wishes to visit the churches of the country.

Tomono San, who graduated from Drake Bible College in Japan in June, is now located in Toride. He is working hard, carrying the gospel into other towns. He has opened special services for railway men at the station.

S. Imamura San, a trusted and beloved Christian from Japan, is now in Transylvania University. After completing the course there he expects to return to Japan to help extend the Kingdom of God among his own people.

For five years the society has held no rallies in the winter. It did not wish to interfere with the work of the Men and Millions Movement. This year rallies are to be held in the East and West. None will be held in the state of Missouri, where the Men and Millions teams are at work.

R. A. Doan is in great demand from the churches and adult Bible-classes. Without his consent and without his knowledge he was elected the president of the Federation of Adult Bible-classes of Ohio. He has visited the men of the church at Parkersburg, W. Va. He spoke in three churches in Pittsburg the first Sunday in the month, and addressed the men of the East End church on Monday, and a union service representing three churches on Monday night. Within a week he has to be in Muncie, Terre Haute, and Huntington, Ind.

Alexander Paul is planning to return to China in December. Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Burner, of Matanzas, Cuba, are taking a short vacation with their friends and kinsfolk in Virginia. The work in their absence is being carried on by faithful Cuban Christians.

New York City Notes

The work of the Disciples' Missionary Union has been resumed after the quiet of the summer months. The missions and the co-operating churches are facing another year of work with enthusiasm and interest.

The New York City Ministerial Association of the Disciples of Christ met Monday, Sept. 27th at the Hotel McAlpin. The relations among ministers and churches is cordial and harmonious.

Greenpoint church, Brooklyn, has repaired and beautified its house of worship, making it attractive and modern.

Ridgewood Heights Mission has been improved by cement walks, iron fence, painting and decorating. This mission with a school that crowds its capacity is doing vigorous work.

The Russian church, East 2nd Street, New York City, has continued its services during the summer. English classes are being held nightly and the work is being done with as great efficiency as possible with the present equipment. Mr. Johnson reports a meeting during the summer where the needs of religious work among the Russians in America wes presented and one Russian day laborer gave $100. Mr. Johnson has been going to Bridgeport Sunday afternoons speaking to a group of fifty or sixty Russians. There is a similar group of more than 150 in Waterbury, a smaller group in Springfield and Hartford City; another group in Philadelphia. All these are Evangelical Christians, so-called in Russia, but are our own people in all points. Is it not pathetic that we, as a brotherhood, cannot take care of these foreigners, who are our own, but that they must be dependent upon the charity and friendliness of denominational churches? In Bridgeport they meet in a Methodist church; in Philadelphia in a Methodist church; in Waterbury in a Baptist church, and even here in New York City our own Russian mission meets in the rented basement of a Presbyterian church. This door of opportunity is now open to the Disciples of Christ to take care of their own. If we do not face the task in the spirit in which it should be done, will not the door be closed?

For information regarding New York City churches and work of the Disciples' Missionary Union address the writer.

In behalf of each one of our churches, it would be of tremendous value if pastors outside of the city would send to us the names and addresses of Disciples coming to New York City.

Ohio Secretary's Letter

M. C. Hughes began a vigorous fall and winter campaign at Perry with an all-day meeting the third Sunday in September. He chose one of the few ideal Sundays of the season and large and enthusiastic audiences were present at all the services. The State Secretary enjoyed the day with the church in this fine rural community.

District conventions are the order of the day yet this month. To the state workers they are a strenuous delight. The fellowship is of the finest. Ohio Disciples care tremendously for the kingdom. They are growing in numbers, in service and in grace.

W. H. McLain is winning favor as state Sunday-school superintendent. His work in the conventions is greatly appreciated, and is resulting in more calls for service to local schools than he can fill.

The Every Member Canvass for church expenses and missions continues to hold the center of interest. Almost every preacher orders the every member canvass packet and many church officers secure them for study. It would greatly bless the churches and further the kingdom if a hundred more churches would put on the canvass this fall. Thoroughly prepared for and energetically pushed the canvass will of itself make a great season's work in any church. Three things are indispensable: The preparation must be most thorough; the work must be carried on as an enterprise permeated through and through with deep religious devotion; the missionary phase must be made prominent. Let these three elements be present in full measure and any church can have a great year that will so conduct an every member canvass.

Ohio Day approaches.

Nov. 7 is the great day for the churches to register their zeal for a Christian Ohio. The measure will be taken in the offering for Ohio missions that day. Interest in the dry campaign must not overshadow the perennial and fundamental work of Ohio missions.

Apportionments have been sent to the churches. They have been worked out with care. Every church in Ohio should have pride in giving its full apportionment. Many will want to give more. Send the offering promptly to I. J. Cahill, corresponding secretary, 2047 E. 9th St., Cleveland.

NEWS FROM TRANSYLVANIA COLLEGE.

Transylvania College and the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., opened auspiciously Sept. 13. During the first week, the registration showed an increase of fourteen per cent over that of the corresponding time of last year. Every available space in Ewing Hall, the residential hall for men, is occupied, and a large number are on the waiting list. A number of freshman classes are unusually large, and it has become necessary to divide them into sections so as to produce the best results. The "Transylvania spirit" far surpasses that of previous sessions, and everything points to the conclusion that the sessions of 1915-16 will be by far the best in the immediate history of these institutions.

A great need, and one that should be remedied at the earliest possible moment, is a girls' dormitory. Transylvania and the College of the Bible could matriculate two hundred young women each session were adequate accommodations provided.

The first football game of the season was played at League Park, North Broadway, on Saturday afternoon, Sept. 25th, with Ohio University, and resulted in a score of 16 to 0 in favor of Transylvania. The visitors were heavy, well trained, and confidently expected to win the game by a large score. Superior skill and endurance won out for Transylvania. Several big games are scheduled for October.

HOW YOU CAN FILL YOUR PRAYER MEETINGS

Order a sufficient number of copies to supply every home in your church with one copy of

The Training of Church Members

By Orvis F. Jordan and Charles Clayton Morrison

Distribute them at Sunday services and mail copies to every home not represented at the Sunday services. Announce that this booklet will be used for the next thirteen weeks (or twenty-six weeks, spending two weeks with each lesson) and you will find that there will be the largest attendance and the most eager interest you ever had at your midweek services.

This little manual is just off the press and the prompt and widespread demand for it from pastors and teachers of young people's classes and adult classes shows how eagerly something of this sort has been desired.

Cost? Only $12.50 per hundred copies. Other quantities in proportion.

When the Bartender Loses His Bar

ACCORDING TO THE DEFENDERS of the saloon one million workingmen would permanently be thrown onto the labor market following the introduction of national prohibition. This argument is based entirely upon the absurd proposition that if the liquor dealers fail to get the money now spent for beer and whiskey nobody else will get it.

It is assumed that if a man does NOT spend a dollar for "booze" he will throw that dollar into the sewer or into some kind of a bottomless pit, instead of using it to purchase some other commodity which will do good instead of harm, which will have a permanent value, and which will give the workingmen of the country more work, more wages, and greater prosperity every way than if the same amount of money were spent for beer and whiskey.

A good deal is being said about the enormous amount of capital invested in the liquor industry; and yet, according to the Statistical Abstract of the United States, for every $1,000,000 invested in the average industry, practically four times as much raw material is required, four times as much wages are paid, and four times as many workers are employed, as is the case in the liquor industry.

Let us take five leading industries in the United States, and compare them with the liquor business, with reference to the number of wage earners employed. For every $1,000,000 invested in each of these industries the following number of wage earners are employed: Liquor, 77; iron and steel and their products, 284; paper and printing, 367; leather and its products, 469; textiles and their finished products, 578; lumber and its manufacture, 579.

These figures prove that the iron industry employs nearly four times as many, paper and printing nearly five times as many, leather six times as many, textiles seven and one-half times as many, and lumber seven and one-half times as many workers for every $1,000,000 invested as does the liquor industry.

What is the ratio of wages paid the workers to the amount of capital invested in the liquor business, as compared with each of the industries noted? Here are the figures: Liquor, 5.6 per cent; iron, 17.6 per cent; paper, 21.3 per cent; leather, 23.5 per cent; textiles, 23.8 per cent; lumber, 27.1 per cent.

A quick glance at these figures shows how comparatively little the labor man gets out of the liquor business. If the $2,000,000,000 which we now spend for intoxicating liquor were spent for bread and clothing—the two staple articles in the life of the workingman—it would give employment to nearly eight times as many workers, who would collectively receive five and one-half times as much wages as is now the case in the liquor business.

Besides this, it would require $600,000,000 worth of raw material in addition to what the liquor industry now uses. It would not be necessary to spend all of the $2,000,000,000 for bread and clothing if the liquor industry were destroyed, but if the transfer of this money into the legitimate industries mentioned above would produce the results described, is it not fair to say that substantially the same results would be achieved if the total sum were distributed among all of the industries that would receive the benefit of increased business were men to spend money for the necessities of life, as well as for its legitimate luxuries, instead of for beer and whiskey?

If this were done, the men who make glass bottles, barrels, automobiles, signs, printing material, cabinet work, and other products for use in the liquor business, would find jobs in turning out these same materials for other industries.

The figures given by the liquor interests as to the number of men who would be affected by the abolition of the liquor traffic are greatly exaggerated. The census report for 1910 tells us that in all manufacturing industries there were then employed 6,616,046 persons. The liquor industry employed 62,920, or just about one per cent of the total.

But of this number only about 15,000 were brewers and malsters, distillers and rectifiers. The remainder of the 62,920 were employed as engineers, carpenters, machinists, teamsters, bottlers, etc.—occupations which are not at all peculiar to the liquor business. There were more teamsters employed than there were brewers and malsters, distillers and rectifiers.

There are about 100,000 bartenders in the United States. What will become of these men when the saloon is abolished? What is it that makes a successful bartender? It is his ability as a salesman, and a man who is a good bartender will make a good clerk or salesman in practically any other kind of business.

Furthermore, it requires many more people to sell $2,000,000,000 worth of bread and clothing, for example, than it does to sell liquor of the same value. And it is more than likely that at least as many salaried employes, such as traveling salesmen, bookkeepers and stenographers will be employed.

But what about th 15,000 or so brewers and malsters, distillers and rectifiers? They will, of necessity, be compelled to adjust themselves to changed conditions. But this does not mean that they will either go adrift or cause a labor panic. The constantly changing situation in the industrial world in this country often compels men to transfer from one occupation to another, many of them being required to learn entirely new trades.

Take, for illustration, the situation when the Mergenthaler type-setting machine was introduced—the printers thought that their trade was destroyed. However, they immediately learned how to run type-setting machines, with the result that today there are more printers employed than ever before, and they are receiving higher wages than at any time in their history.

As a matter of fact, however, more workingmen lose their jobs because saloons are open than would be the case were the saloons to be closed. As somebody put it, "When liquor puts a man out of a job it unfits him for another job. When no-licence puts a bartender out of a job it makes him a wealth-producing workingman, instead of a wealth-destroying workingman. It is better that the bartender should lose his job and get a better one, than that dozens of his patrons should lose their jobs and be unfitted for any job."

The Program of Jesus

The Second of Four Studies of the Religi on of Jesus Based on the Lord's Prayer.

BY FRANK WALLER ALLEN

INTRODUCTION: In its fullness one's religion has four different expressions. First, it is a creed: one must believe something. Second, it is a program: the abundant life is a planned life. Third, it is a prayer: one must seek to know and to harmonize one's self with the will of the Father. Lastly, it is an experience: for after all out of our contact with life and our interpretation of it, is born our philosophy. In these four studies it is my purpose to interpret the religion of Jesus—his creed, his program, his prayer, his experience—as it may be discovered through the medium of the prayer which he taught his disciples.

THE TIME is here to interpret Jesus in the terms of a working program for making life both beautiful and brotherly.

It is worth noticing that the same words contain Jesus' program and his creed. His theology was really subordinate to his purpose, and he was interested in it only as it promoted his purpose. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me," he announced in the synagogue, not to give men correct ideas as to God and themselves, but to bring in the era of gladness and liberty and light and health in unison with the will of God.

In the statement of our creed we must see to it that every clause is convertible into a plank in a working platform. The commonest of heresies is a false emphasis. The Church has spent precious time in discussing details of its theology which have no direct bearing on the Christian purpose, e. g., the method and extent of the inspiration of Scripture, the doom of those dying out of Christ, the virgin birth of our Lord, and so on —and has often separated itself from those who were thoroughly at one with it in aim, because they differed on certain opinions. Truth is precious, and its frank statement is usually a plain duty; but the accomplishment of those things for which Jesus toiled is more precious still. Whether we be radical or conservative in theology we are bound not to emphasize either our dissents or our assents to the detriment of co-operation with those who are one with us in devotion to the program of Jesus.

THE CENTRAL PURPOSE.

"Thy will be done. . .on earth"; is the central purpose of the work of Jesus. If his creed centers about the phrase "Our Father," his working plan centers about something that is to be done by him with humanity. That purpose is to bring about a condition in human society where its conduct will be based upon the will of God rather than selfishness. The word "kingdom" which Jesus uses in this connection was the only term having a definite meaning to the Jews, which signified the social order. To his hearers the kingdom of David or the kingdom of Caesar meant the political or the economic order of society under the will of David or Caesar. Therefore, Jesus used the word "kingdom" to signify just what it meant to his hearers—a social order. And to them, as well as to him, the kingdom of God, or the kingdom of heaven meant human society ordered according to the will of God. "Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done. . . on earth." Thy society come; Thy love be done on earth.

Whatever other meaning may be given to the term "kingdom" when Jesus used it, and however relatively different we may deem the ways of its attainment, it still remains that the central purpose of Jesus' activity was a redeemed society at work in the world.

To quote Mr. Rauschenbusch, "The three petitions with which the prayer begins express the great desire which was fundamental in the heart and mind of Jesus: 'Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth.' Together they express his yearning faith in the possibility of a reign of God on earth in which his name shall be hallowed and his will be done. They look forward to the ultimate perfection of the common life of humanity on this earth, and pray for the divine revolution which is to bring that about.

> Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. And bring us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one.

HEAVEN ON EARTH.

"There is no request here that we be saved from earthliness and go to heaven which has been the great object of churchly religion. We pray here that heaven may be duplicated on earth through the moral and spiritual transformation of humanity, both in its personal units and its corporate life. No form of religion has ever interpreted this prayer aright which did not have a loving understanding for the plain daily relations of men, and a living faith in their possible spiritual nobility."

Again Professor Rauschenbusch, in his "Christianizing the Social Order," says, "Christianity was pure and unperverted when it lived as a divine reality in the heart of Jesus. But in his mind its purpose was summed up in one great word: The Reign of God. To this he dedicated himself in baptism. This set him the problems which he faced in the wilderness temptations. This was the center of his prayers and prophecies. This explains the ethical standards which he set up in the Sermon on the Mount. It was the Reign of God on earth for which he consumed his strength for which he died, and for which he promised to return."

Professor Shailer Mathews says, "By the Kingdom of God Jesus meant an ideal social order in which the relation of men to God is that of sons, and therefore to each other is that of brothers."

It is obvious, then, that to misunderstand the meaning of the Kingdom is to misunderstand the teaching of Jesus, to misunderstand Christianity, and to misunderstand the mission of the Church.

JESUS' INTEREST WAS IN LIFE.

Now it must not be understood that in preaching and teaching the gospel of the Kingdom that Jesus was thinking in definite terms of organization or an institution. The mind of Jesus did not think in terms of institutionalism. The organization of the new social order was that part of the beautiful Kingdom of God which men were to work out for themselves. The ultimate interest of Jesus was in the life of man, which, at its best, can no more be organized than love or poetry or religion. The machinery of social progress was not unimportant to Jesus, but it was of minor significance compared with the ultimate ideal. Jesus leavened the hopes of men with an ideal for their relationship based upon righteousness, justice and love, God-led and God-inspired. His disciples were to so make men think in terms of God that they would create such a social order.

The program of Jesus emphasizes action; the cost of action, and the dynamic of action; service, sacrifice and love.

As is implied by the prayer, the Kingdom of God comes in the earth just so far and just so fast as God's will is done by men as it is done by angels. Perfect harmony with God's will is perfect heaven. Self-will is discord, and the essence of every kind of sin. No man is saved until he is saved from self-will, self-seeking or selfishness, which is the same thing; and society can never be saved until it is saved from selfishness. It is selfishness which creates discord and conflict between nations, races, classes, capital and labor, many husbands and wives. It is the great anti-social principle, the great disintegrating force.

THE HIGHEST GOOD.

Surely there is no higher good conceivable for this world than that all men should do God's will as it is done by angels, that is, gladly, intelligently, and perfectly, which is the full coming of God's Kingdom in the world. Jesus saw that in order to have an ideal world, society must be saved as well as the individual, and that the body must be perfected as well as the soul, and that environment must be changed as well as character. Indeed it is true that environment commonly (not always) is decisive in shaping character, that the body profoundly influences the soul and that the individual is in a very large measure what society has made him. Thus the Kingdom of God includes the physical as well as the spiritual, the two do not constitute a kingdom divided against itself, but the physical serves the spiritual, while the spiritual glorifies the physical.

This eliminates the so-called "secular," and now

"There are no gentile oaks, no pagan pines;
The grass beneath our feet is Christian grass."

Thus may the laws of the Kingdom be expressed as one: Service inspired by love and measured by sacrifice.

HELPING GOD.

There is a fine old Irish proverb, "God loves to be helped." Says Josiah Strong: "As co-laborers with God, we are his helpers in hastening the coming of the Kingdom. I know of a family in which there had recently been large property losses and much sickness. A small boy in the family prayed, 'O Lord, make us rich and make us well, and then you can go.' The religion of a great many people is simply the means by which they hope to induce God to help them; but when we become co-laborers with God unto the Kingdom, our great longing is to help him, and helping him is our exceeding joy. Moreover, we not only enter into high fellowship with the Highest, but we also become yoke-fellows and brothers of all that goodly company in all the ages and in every land who have helped to roll the world up hill."

My religion means to me loving and serving my fellowmen; not instead of loving God, but because I love God. The Master taught that to serve our fellows was to serve him, and that to neglect them was to neglect him. If my professed love to God does not express itself in loving service to men, I have no valid evidence that it is genuine. "If we love not our brother whom we have seen, how can we love God whom we have not seen?" I do not believe that in the soul there are two watertight compartments, one for love to God, the other for love to man, one of which may be full, while the other is empty. Christian love, which is disinterested love, cannot be apportioned between the divine and the human; whatever is rendered to either is rendered to both. Cardinal Manning said to Henry George: "I love men because Jesus loved them." To which Mr. George replied: "And I love Jesus because he loved men." The Cardinal's love for the Master inspired love for his fellows; the philanthropist's love for men inspired love for the Master."

THE PRAYER AS A PROGRAM.

In conclusion, stating the prayer of Jesus in the terms of his program, we have men at work with God in human life to make a brotherly society. It is as if he had said:

"Our Father, I will deal with thee as a son, in trust and obedience, and with every child of thine as a brother; I will hallow thy name of love by seeking so to represent it that thou shalt be lovely in all eyes; I will make thy purpose mine, and seek to live in and further thy kingdom of justice, kindness and faithfulness in the earth; I will be confident that, seeking first thy kingdom, I shall not fail of daily bread; I will not run into any temptation unled, but when led into a trying situation, will rely absolutely on thy deliverance as I obey thy leadership."

Grading the Sunday School

A Helpful Examination of Conditions and Standards.

BY R. W. GAMMON

(From the Advance.)

ONE of the problems now engaging the attention of Sunday school leaders everywhere is that of grading. The Sunday school has fallen far behind the public school in this task. It would have meant the utter condemnation of the public schools any time within fifty years to have said of it truthfully that all the pupils in all the grades were studying the same lesson on the same day; yet that has been one of the greatest grounds for boasting regarding our Sunday school. We have been slack in every department in grading. We have suited neither the curriculum nor the worship nor the equipment to the task in hand, and we have allowed pupils of great disparity in age to be in the same class. I saw a class in a school not long ago composed of boys ranging in age from nine to sixteen years; in another school I found a class of girls made up of those from eleven to nineteen years. Instances of this sort are very common, especially in the smaller schools.

UNIFORM LESSONS CRITICIZED.

The material of the curriculum as found in the Uniform Lessons is usually subject to two or three criticisms. The passages selected are often only a part of a story or narrative so thatt pupils, especially the younger ones, receive fragmentary impressions of the Scriptures. This material, taken out of its historical setting, is not nearly so effective for teaching purposes. The material chosen for the Uniform Lessons is chosen without question of its adaptability for teaching purposes for any particular age. The needs of childhood, of youth and of adults differ so much that if the lesson is adapted for one age, it usually is not for the others. In every discussion of the use of the Uniform Lessons, someone asks, "Can't you adapt the same material to all ages?" I am always reminded of the reply made to this question by a witty primary teacher of Denver, who said, "Yes, you can grind up beefsteak and give it to a baby or you can feed him on corned beef and cabbage, but neither is as good for him as milk." We have taken great pains and shown wonderful ingenuity in attempting to adapt the same lessons to all ages—we might have exerted ourselves to better advantage.

STUPENDOUS BLUNDERING.

On account of our failure to grade the pupils in worship, that period in the Sunday-school has been one of stupendous blundering. The period of worship we have called that of opening exercises. In most of the schools I know there is little worship. There has been practically none on the part of the primary pupils when they were expected to worship with the remainder of the school. They did not understand what it was all about. Hymns, prayers and lesson were usually incomprehensible to them. Instead of learning to worship, the tendency has been to lead them into habits of inattention, irreverence and carelessness. Anyone who will observe the members of the beginners and primary kept in the main school during the opening worship will see at once that this is true.

We have been equally slow to purchase equipment adapted to each age. All the older churches were built to furnish audience rooms for adults and not school rooms for the youth. Formerly the Sunday-school was held in the one room of the church which became during that hour a sort of a bedlam. Classes were seated so close together that the pupils not only could hear what was being said in other classes, but could also see everything that went on. Ofttimes the disturbance has been greater because one or more of the teachers talked to large classes in a throaty voice. We have made great improvements, but we still have many churches that hold Sunday-school in one room. We have been slow of heart to believe that we have in Sunday-school the same boys and girls with the same kind of human nature as in the public schools. We have been loth to buy suitable chairs and desks, to fit up rooms, to provide blackboards and lockers and the remainder of equipment that is so necessary in the public school. The length of time that we have them in the Sunday school is exceedingly short, so there is all the more need that we have the very best equipment. By so much as we have failed to adapt the means to the end in view, by so much we have failed in our work in the church school.

THE CURE OF THESE TROUBLES.

Whole-hearted grading is the cure for these troubles. Many schools, however, have adopted a graded system of instruction and after trying it for a few months or a year have gone back to the Uniform Lessons. The testimony from such schools pronounces the Graded Lessons a failure. Grading and Graded Lessons are not a failure. The failure lies in the lack of generous, whole-hearted action on the part of the school that attempted to grade. It not infrequently happens that pastor or superintendent attends a Sunday-school convention or institute, gets stirred up on the subject of grading, returns home saying within himself, "Go to, now; we are going to have a graded school." The secretary is requested to order the supplies. Perhaps the secretary is a young girl still in short dresses, who doesn't know whether there be such a thing as a graded system; she makes out the list to the best of her ability; the supplies arrive. Without consulting the teachers, the superintendent on the first Sunday of the quarter announces, "We are going to use the Graded System and we shall begin today."

The teachers will probably feel that they have not been properly treated in that they have not been consulted about the lessons they are to teach. The lessons are new, and it will not be strange

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

A BALD CONFESSION

A PREACHER from Boston got into the Chicago newspapers last week by an interview in which he gave his method of solving the down-town church problem. It was an interesting interview. It was a sign of the times. The preacher unintentionally confessed the helplessness with which the modern Church confronts the fundamental religious needs of men and offers them a jim-crack to divert their attention and keep them in a good humor. He said:

"My theory about preaching is the same as my practice in fishing. I give trout angle worms, not because I like angle worms myself, but because the trout like them. The people in our down-town churches are young and middle aged. They are lonesome. They go to picture shows. They crave comfort, fun, enthusiasm, and the spectacular. I believe in giving it to them. When I came to the Warren Avenue church I had twenty-two bulletin boards made and placed them in strategic points in the city. Every week I filled them with poster anouncements in red letters as large as the theaters use. I advertised sensational topics. Two of my recent topics were, "Should We Pray for the Kaiser?" and "Why Not Pass a Law Against the Crowing of Roosters?"

In other words, in order to get the people into the church building let the church offer them something else than religion.

Turn the church into an entertainment center.

Make it anything except the bearer of Truth. People don't like Truth anyway. And, besides, the conventional preacher of today hasn't anything on hand that he can conscientiously call by the name of Truth.

That is the pathos of modern orthodox religion—our religion, dear reader—it lacks religious character and goes in for divertisements and irrelevancies that promise to hold the people's attention and keep the institution going.

Give the people what they want, but don't make a failure of your ministry by imagining that they want the living Truth of God!

CHICAGO'S DRY SUNDAY

CHICAGO dry on Sunday—that is an experience this great city has not had for forty-three years until last Sunday, Oct. 10. But on that day the unambiguous order of Mayor Thompson to the saloons to obey the state law was enforced with unexpected consistency and success.

Only twenty-eight saloons violated the law—out of over 7,000. It was a strange sight to the citizens to walk along the streets and see the little inside double gates of all saloons fastened wide open so the bar could be viewed from the sidewalk.

For some reason the wet forces did not undertake to carry out any of their threats of various sorts of action, such as injunction proceedings, or rioting. The day was quiet. The police forces were unimpeded in their work.

There seemed to be an undertone of satisfaction in the liquor camp itself—especially on the part of the bartenders, the employes, who would have a day of rest—that the order had been issued.

The proprietors, however, and the manufacturers are threatening all kinds of political trouble for the mayor upon his return from the San Francisco exposition.

The dry forces would take greater satisfaction in the mayor's order if they believed that he was acting through conviction instead of for political purposes.

Yet there is a plausible interpretation of his course which while it does not class him with the "reformers" does not consign him to the category of a mere opportunist. That interpretation takes into account the fact that the mayor is, by profession, one might say, a sportsman. He takes the sportman's view of his position as mayor. It is as if he reflected thus: "The city of Chicago is a part of the state of Illinois. The state has a law against Sunday saloons. I don't particularly care to be classed among the opponents of the Sunday saloon, but I believe a city ought to take its medicine as an integral part of the state. The law's the law. I have sworn to enforce it. Chicago is under obligation to obey it. So regardless of its merits or my preferences, here goes!"

We are disposed to interpret the mayor's motives in that fashion rather than in terms of deliberate political design.

The great parade which opened the campaign for a dry Chicago last Saturday had no connection with the Sunday closing order. April, 1916, is the time when the city will vote for or against abolishing the saloon altogether, and the 25,000 people in the parade, viewed by as big a crowd on the sidewalks as ever lined the city's highways, betokened the high degree of public interest in the issue.

The question raised and so effectively answered by Mr. Charles Stelzle seems so pertinent at this hour to the recent advances of the anti-saloon movement that we gladly give the position of our opening editorial to him this week.

WANTED: FULL INFORMATION

THERE has fallen under our eye an amazing bit of correspondence published in the Disciples' state paper of Arkansas. It consists of a request from an Arkansas pastor to Pres. F. W. Burnham, of the American Missionary Society, for information as to the relation of the American Society and the other national societies to the General Convention of Churches of Christ.

The cool and unequivocal assurance of President Burnham's reply is unbelievable to one not on the inside of secretarial and other official councils. We give the correspondence in full:

Dear Brother Burnham:

Your Los Angeles appeal to this church for the "apportionment" of $290, at hand. I shall gladly recommend to the church the acceptance of this apportionment provided you say in your reply that these several societies are not in any sense subject to the advice, direction or co-operation with the so-called "General Convention." If you can say that these societies maintain the same relationship to the churches of the brotherhood as they did prior to the birth of this "General Convention," and that they have not surrendered to this "Delegate Convention" any work, office or function of these societies, by which surrender this "Convention" is furnshed a pretext for its existence, you can count on our co-operation. We are wanting in means but not in sympathy with our organized missionary societies.

With the best wishes for your success in every good work, I am yours sincerely,

Pine Bluff, Ark. C. C. Cline,

My Dear Brother Cline:

Replying to your letter of August 28, allow me to say that I can truthfully answer your proposition in the affirmative. Our societies are not in any sense subject to the advice, direction or co-operation of the so-called "General Convention." Our societies maintain the same relationship to the churches of the brotherhood that they did prior to the birth of the general convention, and the general convention or its executive committee does not now perform any work, office or function of the societies. If the general convention continues to exist, as it may in name, it will do so without any co-operation on the part of the societies. You will observe that the plea which was sent out from our office by a committee of which I was made the secretary is not a plea from the general convention, but is a plea from the Los Angeles convention, which convention represented simply the people who were present, some two thousand or more, who with a unanimous vote and in a spirit of profound reverenee and prayer felt that they wanted to do something to prevent further retrenchment on the part of our societies and to save the work and the workers from a backward step. The appointment of the committee and the adoption of its report was just such a step as could have been taken in any of our international conventions in any year of their history. This appeal is entirely without history, it is not in the nature of a demand, but comes to the churches as an appeal and a prayer for their co-operation in this time of stress and need. If you and your church feel like responding to such a prayer and helping in such a time of need, your co-operation will be thoroughly appreciated. Reference was made in this appeal to the joint apportionment simply that some basis of division, for such funds as the churches mght contribute, might be equitably made among the varous societies, and the joint apportionment, having been made out for all the states and all the churches, seemed to the committee to be the most available basis to present.

Please remember, in this, that it is not the amount of the contribution so much as the spirit of fellowship we covet. If every minister and every church will do their full part the Kingdom will make progress all along the line. With sincere regards, I am, very cordially yours,

Cincinnati, O. F. W. Burnham.

This we say is an amazing statement to come from the president of the American Society. The situation evidently calls for a frank and public explanation to the churches.

The churches have a right to know what has been done since the Atlanta convention of 1914 to so completely revolutionize the action taken by two previous conventions and further confirmed at that time. The General Convention was organized to co-ordinate the missionary societies, to act in an advisory capacity in the direction of their policy.

When did the General Convention surrender this function?

Or when did the societies take action refusing to co-operate with the convention in the exercise of this function?

By right of what inside knowledge does Mr. Burnham now use such an expression as this: "If the General Convention continues to exist, as it may in name, etc."?

Evidently some sleight-of-hand work has been done, or someone thinks it has been done, by which the reality of the General Convention has vanished, leaving only the illusion of its name.

Has such a scheme been carried out by the secretaries or by the boards?

Or was some motion put through the Los Angeles convention this summer of whose full purport the delegates were not advised, and which now gives Mr. Burnham the right to assure a pastor in Arkansas that if the General Convention continues to exist "it will do so without any co-operation on the part of the societies?"

Or does Mr. Burnham simply speak his own personal opinion on the matter?

The brotherhood has a right to hear a complete and frank explanation from its official servants, from Mr. Burnham first of all, if he insists that his statements above are backed by official action and not simply his personal opinion, and from the officers of the other societies as well.

In the name of all the holy interests that are made to suffer from year to year by the unconscionably long discussion of this General Convention affair the brotherhood demands that the matter be dragged from underground and set in the light, so all can know just where we stand.

Let the facts be known!

A Menace to Unity

BY THIS TIME it has, no douobt, become clear to the churches of Chicago that the socalled "Chicago-Calumet Evangelistic Association," organized early last summer, is a standing affront to the Chicago Christian Missionary Society, divisive in its tendency and purpose, unworthy of the principles of the Disciples of Christ, and, withal, up to this date, futile.

The character and purpose of this organization were set forth in The Christian Century several months ago in the words of its own constitution and official announcement. Its creation was inspired by the editor of the Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, who undertook, with sinister glee, to start in the vicinity of Chicago, and involving a few disaffected spirits in Chicago, a missionary society to which he could point as a model of his ideas for all the missionary work of the Disciples of Christ. In the pride of his success the editor printed at great length in his paper the address he delivered on the occasion of the first meeting of the new association, devoted many pages to an illustrated announcement and prospectus of its proposed objects, and predicted that the association would receive large sums of money from various parts of the country to enable it to carry out the purposes outlined in its constitution.

The craftiness of the editor's plans was evidenced by the time set for the appearance of the new organization. The Standard had already projected an "Efficiency Congress" to be held at Hammond, the largest city in the great industrial Calumet district lying southeast of Chicago, in late August, and it was expected that the presence of the visitors at the congress would give significance and momentum to the "Chicago-Calumet" association.

Moreover, this editor knew that there had been some tension and disquiet in Chicago mission work for a year or so over the question of advising with the local Federal Council before establishing mission churches, which tension and disquiet his newspaper had done all within its power to aggravate. It was hoped that the "Chicago-Calumet" association, thrown into relief by the presence of the Hammond Congress, would be the means of precipitating a movement of disaffection on the part of the so-called "conservative" portion of the Chicago churches away from the so-called "liberal" portion, thus making a thorough-going division in the ranks of the Disciple forces of this city.

Like most public enterprises projected in recent years by the Christian Standard, this wicked machination has come to naught, as any one acquainted with the bond that holds our Chicago churches together could have predicted.

The Chicago churches hardly knew the Hammond Congress was in session.

The congress failed to give any significance to the "Chicago-Calumet" association.

No considerable sum of money has been thrust upon the association from outside sources for its work, and none is likely to be.

Several of the more influential and broader-minded pastors who amiably allowed their names to appear as members at the beginning have since become aware of the presumptuous and factional character of the organization, so it is reported, and have declared that they intend to have nothing to do with it.

The two or there disaffected Chicago pastors who participated in the organization of the "Chicago-Calumet" association, and whose presence in it gave the semblance of justification for the presumptuous use of the name "Chicago" in its title, failed to carry their congregations with them.

On the other hand, all the churches of Chicago are more united than ever before in support of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society, and determined that every evil spirit that makes for division in the work in this city shall be cast out.

This determination, The Christian Century now strongly affirms, should take the very positive form of protest against the presence in our midst of an irresponsible, competitive, partisan, and division-intending organization, created by outside influences for purposes that are incompatible with the purposes that actuate the church life of our Chicago congregations.

Notwithstanding the futility, up to this moment, of the plans of the promoters of this organization, the unity of the churches of Chicago cannot be secure, the united backing of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society cannot be secure, while any of the leaders of the Chicago churches hold connection with the so-called "Chicago-Calumet" association.

If that organization does not see fit to disband, or to fundamentally change its character, every Chicago pastor and layman should be expected to withdraw from it.

It is as plain as the daylight that no pastor connected with that organization can command the unsuspecting confidence of his co-workers in Chicago mission work, and it is equally plain that no layman believed to be dominated by or strongly influenced by a pastor connected with that organization, or in any way likely to have his policy dictated by the declared principles of that organization, can command the confidence of his Chicago co-workers so as to lead the cause in this city to any degree of success.

Therefore we say bluntly that the two or three pastors who belong to the organization and whose churches decline to sever their allegiance to the Chicago Missionary Society should be prompt to put themselves in a position of standing whole-heartedly with their churches by withdrawing their connection from an organization whose description of conditions obtaining in Chicago churches is false, and whose declaration of purposes is a menace to united Chicago work.

We limit the application of our words at this time to the Chicago members of this organization. The same situation does not obtain in the Calumet district that obtains in Chicago. There is no organization of the churches as such in that district other than this "Chicago-Calumet" association which, as we are informed, at its origin absorbed an already existing "Calumet Evangelistic Association," the new organization with the dual title taking on, however, a character altogether different from its Calumet predecessor.

Nevertheless we believe that right-minded men of the Calumet district owe it to their state and national missionary societies to have nothing to do with an organization whose motives are inspired by the Christian Standard's iniquitous designs to break up the unity of the Disciples' missionary life.

But with that point our present contention has nothing to do.

We are now considering only the interests of Chicago mission work, with which not only those who live in Chicago, but all Disciples of Christ in all parts of the land have the deepest interest.

If the subject were not intrinsically important enough to warrant its discussion in a national journal, sufficient warrant would be found in the fact that this is not merely an isolated instance but a typical case. There are others, not just like this, but involving the same principles, which have received considerable public exploitation. We believe we are here suggesting a kind of treatment that is typical of the treatment that should be accorded the Minneapolis disaffection from the American Society, also the socalled "National Evangelists' Association," as well as a number of irresponsible missionary adventures on the foreign field.

The time has come for pastors and leading laymen, for national and state secretaries and other officials, and for our newspapers, to show their allegiance to the duly constituted organizations of the churches by refusing absolutely to have any part or lot in any organized effort whose end is the weakening if not the disintegrating of the painfully won unity of the Disciples' missionary work.

A COURAGEOUS STAND

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., ministers have voted to invite Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman to hold a union meeting during the coming winter. The reasons given in their discussion of the proposal were that they were at their wits' ends in their local churches and needed something to stir up the town.

It is about six years since "Billy" Sunday stirred up the town and added thousands to the membership of the churches. Of the twenty-one ministers who were then pastors in the city only one or two remain. The new men know that there is something the matter with the state of religion in their community, but they have nothing to propose save another evangelistic effort.

The First Christian church passed a resolution advising its pastor, Rev. Frank Waller Allen, that it deemed another union revival meeting an undesirable thing, and recommending that the church, as a church, assume no active responsibility for such a meeting.

The resolution made it clear that First church took this stand with deep regret on account of its earnest desire to share in all united work with other Christians of the city, but felt that with its own program for the year well planned and already successfully under way it would not be justified in turning aside to another evangelistic adventure the value of whose results it had been taught by past experience to gravely question.

This is a brave stand.

First church is probably the strongest Protestant church in the capital city of Illinois. The spirit of its entire history has been co-operative. But apparently it has reached the point where it is compelled in all good conscience to cast its vote and influence against the prevailing evangelism to which a visionless church and ministry so invariably turn in their helplessness.

First church is aware of the evils that accompany such evangelism. And if all the members are not aware of positive evils they are at least aware of the illusions of that method of propagating Christ's gospel.

The church's present position will subject it to much criticism. But we believe the time has come for strong churches of the Disciples to face such criticism with patience, and constructively to work out a higher order of evangelism, not for their own churches alone, but for all the churches of their communities.

THE VERY LATEST

A Disciple Sunday-school in a fairly intelligent city in the United States is now carrying on a "Mutt and Jeff" contest for increased membership. We commend this very chaste and wholly congruous device to those who are on the lookout for new "methods." Readers knowing of any other kind of contest that will help the cause of religion will confer a favor by advising us; we will be glad to pass it on.

THE BOY JOASH CROWNED KING.

Lesson for October 31.

Golden Text: The house of the wicked shall be overthrown; but the tent of the upright shall flourish. Proverbs 14:11.

Lesson II Kings 11:1-20: verses 4-12 printed. Memory verses 11, 12.

(4) And in the seventh year Jehoiada sent and fetched the captains over hundreds of the Carites and of the guard, and brought them to him into the house of Jehovah; and he made a covenant with them, and took an oath of them in the house of Jehovah and showed them the king's son. (5) and he commanded them, saying, This is the thing that ye shall do: a third part of you, that come in the Sabbth, shall be keepers of the watch of the king's house; (6) and a third part shall be at the gate Sur; and a third part at the gate behind the guard: so shall ye keep the watch of the house, and be a barrier. (7) And the two companies of you, even all that go forth on the Sabbath, shall keep the watch of the house of Jehovah about the king. (8) And ye shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand; and he that cometh within the ranks, let him be slain: and be ye with the king when he goeth out, and when he cometh in.

(9) And the captains over hundreds did according to all that Jehoiada the priest commanded; and they took every man his men, those that were to come in on the Sabbath, with those that were to go out on the Sabbath, and came to Jehoiada the priest. (10) And the priest delivered to the captains over hundreds the spears and shields that had been King David's, which were in the house of Jehovah. (11) And the guard stood, every man with his weapons in his hand, from the ridght side of the house to the left side of the house, along by the altar and the house, by the king round about. (12) Then he brought out the king's son, and put the crown upon him, and gave him the testimony; and they made him king; and anointed him; and they clapped their hands, and said, Long live the king.

VERSE BY VERSE.

4. Jehoiada. The high priest.—The captains over hundreds. These were captains in Judah's army. For their names see 2 Chron. 23:1-3.—Carites. They were foreign soldiers.—Took an oath of them. He pledged them to loyalty, before making his plans known.—Showed them the king's son. This must have been a surprise for they had no means of knowing that he was alive.

5. This is the thing that ye shall do. Jehoiada had his plans clearly made, and gave directions to those who were to carry them out.—On the Sabbath. The priests served one week at a time and went in on the Sabbath.—Watch of the king's house. Guard the royal palace.

6. Gate of Sur. The only time it is mentioned and its location is not known.—The gate behind the guard. Every precaution was taken, that the coronation proceeding should not be halted.

7. All that go forth on the Sabbath. The Sabbath was chosen for prudential reasons, and the gates, the temple and place were guarded against surprise.

8. Compass the king round about. Guard the king on all sides and all occasions.—He that cometh within the ranks. Whoever would break through the ranks would be considered on the side of Athaliah.

9. Did according to all that Jehoiada the priest commanded. This is the kind of service that we should give our Master as Christian men.

10. The spears and shields that had been King David's. These were probably the weapons that David had taken from his defeated enemies, and stored somewhere in the temple.

11. Every man with his weapons in his hands. Ample protection was thus provided the coronation ceremonies. The young king would be safe.

12. The king's son. Joash was the son of Ahaziah, and the grandson of Athaliah. Jehoiada led the boy Joash before the people.—Put the crown upon him. The word for crown is the same word used for a diadem. The priest performed this service.—Gave him the testimony. The special roll of the law. —They made him king. The crown was placed upon his head in the presence of the assembly.—They clapped their hands. In token of their joy over the coronation of Joash as king.

The Young King

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

History is filled with the accounts of young kings put to death, as were the young princes of England, Edward V and his brother Richard. In our lesson we have the account of the systematic and extensive measures taken to save a young king. While we are appreciating this ancient story we must not forget that we have prospective kings and queens all about us. They are in our homes, in our Bible schools, and in the community. We should, therefore, be in the business of saving these prospective kings and queens of our day. While we should aim to get all men and women into the Bible school it nevertheless remains true that the work of the church school is conspicuously for the young. It remains true in all lands that the childhood of earth presents the most unrivaled opportunity for the formation of the right sort of character. Character that will stand the test in these complex days. The desired result cannot be realized by the unnatural methods of modern evangelism. The Christian nurture idea is gaining adherents in all lands, as the better way. These more refined Christian workers seek to keep the child as pure through his maturing years as he was when they received him from the hands of God. This is the normal and natural evangelism. With it intelligently in mind we shall see princes in every group of boys, and queens in every company of girls. In our Bible schools we shall discover some Cromwell to dissolve a parliament, some Joash to demolish the idols of our day, some John Knox to make queens turn pale, some Beethoven to touch the world's harpstrings, some John Howard to pour fresh air into the lazaretto, some Florence Nightingale to bandage the wounds of battle, some Miss Mary Davies to turn a theory into a living service for the good of humanity, some David Brainerd to change the Indian's war-whoop to a Sabbath song. Yes, we shall find and inspire through intelligent teaching of the massage of our God, men and women for every great task in his kingdom. Those reached in this way by Christian influences are at an advantage unspeakably great and appealing, in that they are saved from the lasting influence of false conceptions and evil habits which for those won in mature years must remain as a burden to their struggling spirits. If after what has been said any one imagines that the young kings in our day, with superior advantages, are safe, all they need to do is to visit the places of questionable resort in our cities and note the crowds, and at the same time note the crowds that come under the helpful influences of our city life. The result will stir us to more heroic service in their behalf. Like the faithful priests of old we shall make extensive plans for the saving of the young kings of our time to the many needed reforms that are calling for consecrated leadership. The saving of these leaders must take into consideration all of their training. There are sleeping in our cradles by night, and playing in our nurseries by day souls that if properly trained will decide the destiny of empires. Our Sunday-school task thus begins at the cradle and ends at the grave.

A NOTE FROM SECRETARY HOPKINS.

Our financial report is very discouragig. It will be seen that there is a deficit this year from the Bible schools of $6,441.18.

We are exceedingly sorry to report this fact. It is the first serious decrease in Bible school receipts that the American Society has reported since the National Christian Bible School Association was made the Bible school department of the American Society. The month of December witnessed our most serious slump in receipts. The loss that one month amounted to $5,736.34.

It is always difficult to tell the cause of loss in receipts, but in this instance there are two or three very definite factors discoverable. Last fall when the offering was being taken there was a widespread appeal among all Bible schools for contributions to the Belgium Relief Fund and other war funds. There has been this year an unusual amount of agitation and misunderstanding with regard to the budget offering from the churches. There were additional appeals made among our own schools that conflicted with this regular appeal in November. Underlying all these contributing factors has been the general financial depression which has so seriously affected every phase of the work.

And yet in spite of these explanations there would seem to have been no real cause for such a decrease in the offerings from the Bible schools.

There will be unusual necessity for the Bible schools doing their utmost to overcome this year's loss through their contributions of the fall and winter of 1915.

To carry forward all this work now being done as well as to provide for its enlargement as imperatively demanded, we recommend that the Bible schools, as schools, be asked to give $50,000 to American Missions for the year 1915-1916.

All of which is respectfully submitted for the Bible school department.

Robert M. Hopkins, Bible School Sec'y.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Missionaries are Overpaid!

Southern Baptists, who are already distinguished by their unwillingness to practice comity on the mission field, and by their refusal to unite with the church federation movement, are now adding to their fame by having a well-defined movement for the reduction of missionary salaries on the ground that missionaries are overpaid! A single man receives $600 and a married couple $1,200 with an allowance of $100 to $150 for each child according to age.

Another Red Hat for America.

A Catholic organ in Rome is making announcement that Mgr. John Ireland is soon to be raised to the cardinalate. He has been one of the more liberal and American kind of bishops in the Roman church, and it was thought these very propensities would prevent his elevation to the higher rank. As compared with Cardinal O'Connell of Boston, he will be a more acceptable ecclesiastical dignitary, because of his greater sympathy with democratic institutions in his country.

Russian Church Asks More Money.

The Russian Orthodox church has a large group of priests to keep, and these practically all have families. There are white clergy, 3,043; archpriests, 47,403; priests, 14,868; deacons (candidates for the priesthood) and ecclesiastical singers are to be added to this total. There are about a hundred thousand monks and nuns. Many parishes are not supported by the state and are in dire poverty, but the Duma has recently refused to increase the state aid to churches.

Bishop Wants no Protestants at Panama.

The Roman Catholic bishop at Panama has made a protest against holding the missionary congress on Latin-American countries at Panama City, and President Forras of the republic has withdrawn his consent to hold this Congress in the National Theatre. The state religion of the republic is Catholic and the eccelsiastical authorities view with suspicion the work of the proposed Congress. Of course there is nothing to prevent the Congress being held in privately owned halls, but the committee on arrangements will be put to some embarrassment.

Methodist Sunday Schools Growing.

At the close of the conference year this fall, Methodist Sunday schools in the northern branch of the church will have in them four and a half millions of pupils. This is the largest single denominational group of Sunday school pupils in the world. In the past seven years there has been a gain of 1,200,000 pupils, a gain that was four times as great as in the preceding eight years. The gain in the past eight years forms a body of Snnday school pupils as large as that of the Congregationalists and Episcopalians combined. It is said that in eight years, 1,400,000 of these Sunday school pupils have been converted, and the schools have contributed five millions of dollars for missions and benevolence.

Evangelism for English Church.

A nation-wide evangelistic movement is to go forward in England this fall. A single week, beginning October 24th, will be given over to special missions in all the parish churches. The Bishop of Worcester recently convened all his clergy at Malvern where thy wr addressed on the great simultaneous campaign. In other dioceses there will be meetings at the cathedral with visiting bishops to make addresses.

Rev. R. J. Campbell To Become Episcopalian.

Religious circles are deeply stirred in England by the change of Rev. Reginald J. Campbell from the Congregational fellowship to that of the state church. Mr. Campbell became known in the Christian world by the New Theology controversy, and his position as pastor of Joseph Parker's old church gave him great prominence, so he was called the archbishop of nonconformity. He was the son of a United Free Methodist minister of Scottish descent but was educated in Christ church, Oxford, with the idea of becoming an Episcopal rector. In spite of the influence of Bishop Gore and Dean Paget, he became a Congregational minister, settling first at Brighton, the old home of Robertson, and was later called to City Temple, London. The first advices of his announced change of fellowship contain no statement of the motives that have led to the change.

Attacks Social Service Man.

Dean Bernard Iddings Bell, of the Episcopal cathedral of Fond du Lac, writer and socialist, makes a violent attack upon some statements of Mr. Atkinson of the Congregational Social Service Bureau. The latter gentleman insists that in strikes there are three parties concerned, employers, employees and the public. The socialist dean calls this "sociological quackery," and dubs the writings of the Congregationalist "pseudo-psychology." The militant dean is known for his efforts to reconcile Christianity and socialism. He does it by the remarkable method of limiting religion to a supernatural world, and socialism to this world.

The Missionary Campaign Poster

A poster in four colors is to be displayed in front of thousands of churches to announce the National Missionary Campaign, the opening feature of which is a great interdenominational convention for men in Chicago, beginning October 14th with a program of inspirational and educational speaking.

The poster is symbolic of both home and foreign missions, which are strikingly represented. The non-Christian world is typified by a figure of a great idol with a group of worshipers before it, and mission work at home by a man of the common people, standing in a city street. The particular idol which has been taken as a symbol of idolatrous religion is the gigantic bronze Buddha at Kamakura, Japan.

This wonderful idol is snpposed to date from the year 1252, and the reasons and particulars of its erection have been lost to history. The bronze figure, sitting uncovered in a grove of trees, is fifty-four feet high and ninety-seven feet in circumference. It is made of sheets of bronze, cast separately, brazed together, and finished on the outside with the chisel. The length of the face is eight and one-half feet and the width from ear to ear, seventeen feet nine inches. In the forehead there is a solid silver boss of the weight of thirty pounds. Each eye is four feet in length and is made of pure gold. The weight of the statue has been estimated at four hundred and fifty tons, and its value as bronze, at the prevailing market price, is about $315,000. This does not take into account the silver boss at the idol's forehead or the golden eyes.

On the head are ball-shaped protuberances resembling curls. These represent snails, which, according to legend, crawled up to shelter the bald head of Buddha from the burning rays of the sun. Immense bronze plants of sacred lotus are in front of the figure and at each side are great bronze lanterns.

This image was chosen by the secretaries of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which is organizing the campaign, as typical of the religions of the non-Christian world, complacent, unhearing, unseeing, unmoved by the millions who, without knowledge of Christ, bow in futile worship before their idols. On the poster the great idol is printed in dark green, as near as possible to the color of old bronze. The head and shoulders stand above a forest, outlined against a twilight sky.

Home missions is represented by a man standing bewildered in the heart of a great American city, in which much of home mission work is centered. He seems to need the ministrations of a church in the picture, but, alas, the doors of the church are closed, for it is a week day. The man may be an immigrant just arrived, an alien who has been in the United States for some time, or an American-born laborer or mechanic.

He is depicted as representative of many thousands. The factory, the tenement and the slum in the picture, are important factors not only in his problems but in the work of the home mission agencies. The man appears to be poor and the artist has endeavored to give the impression that he is drifting away from spiritual and moral moorings.

It is believed that the poster, used in many ways, will be a popular campaign device. The text has a militant note, reading "Men Wanted, National Missionary Campaign, 1915-1916. Enlist for World Service; Conventions in Seventy-five Cities."

Following the convention in Chicago in October, there are to be seventy-four others in the leading cities of the United States, culminating in a National Missionary Congress in Washington, next April. All the home and foreign missionary agencies of the country are making unusual preparations for co-operation in the campaign.

Every Woman Should Know

There are three entirely different kinds of baking powder, namely:

(1) Cream of tartar, derived from grapes;
(2) Alum, a mineral acid; and
(3) Phosphate of Lime.

(1) Baking Powders made of Cream of Tartar add to the food the same healthful qualities that exist in the ripe grapes from which Cream of Tartar is derived.

(2) Baking Powders made of Alum add to the food some form of Alum or Aluminum, a heavy metal, wholly foreign to any natural article of food.

(3) Phosphate of Lime is made from rock or by burning bones which by chemical action are changed into a white, powdered acid. It is used in baking powder only because it is a cheaper substitute.

A Cream of Tartar powder never contains Alum or Phosphate.

Every housekeeper should read the names of the ingredients printed on the label and know what she is using.

GRADING THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

if they do not take kindly to them. Some of the teachers will surely "knock" the lessons to their pupils. Then they will complain to the superintendent that the pupils do not "like" the graded lessons. If there is anything that will frighten a superintendent out of the use of any set of lessons it is to be told that a class of ten or twelve year old boys does not like it. The above method of procedure is exactly the way not to grade the school.

So important a movement as this is in the life of the school should engage the attention of all its leaders. If the church has a committee on religious education, this committee, in conference with all the officers and teachers, should thoroughly canvass the whole subject. The time to begin the use of the Graded Lessons is the first of October, for the Sunday-school year is now coincident with the public-school year. For months before this time the committee should have before it the leading graded systems for thorough examination. Sentiment in the school should be cultivated in favor of grading the pupils as they are graded in the public schools, putting like ages and experience together. The church should also be canvassed for extra teachers, so that there shall be a supply for the new classes that will necessarily be formed. Even with such careful preparation as this, it will not be wise to grade the whole school at once, unless there be a large number of well-trained teachers and a generous cooperation on the part of teachers and pupils in the project. The beginners, the primary and the junior will be sufficient for the work of the first year in many schools. A graded curriculum demands that there be yearly promotions just as rigidly observed and as much made of them as the promotions of the public school.

ATTRACTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The beginners and the primary should have their own department, equipped with suitable chairs and other furniture. Their rooms should be the most attractive in the church and teachers should be secured especially trained for this department. The beginners' department includes the ages of four and five years, the primary those of six, seven and eight years, the junior those nine to twelve inclusive, the intermediate thirteen to sixteen inclusive, the senior seventeen to twenty, and the adult twenty-one and above. The thoroughly graded school should have a superintendent of each department. In the smaller schools it will be found most feasible to have the school divided into two sections for worship, the first to include the beginners and the primary, and the second the remainder of the school. A large, well-equipped school may find it better to allow each department to have its own worship.

It is commonly supposed that Graded Lessons are more difficult to teach than the Uniform. They are and they are not. A teacher unfamiliar with the course will find it difficult ofttimes to teach one lesson. It is easier for a teacher who comes without any special preparation to teach the Uniform Lessons, because of long years of experience with that series. But it is much easier for the teacher who is prepared and knows the Graded Course to teach Graded Lessons, because they are adapted lessons. In grading the material to be taught, we simply meet God's terms as expressed in human life. He graded humanity. It is our business to adapt ourselves to His work.

It is often reported that the Graded Lessoons are neither biblical nor evangelistic. The fact is that they are more biblical and more evangelistic than the Uniform Lessons. They give the entire passage rather than the fragmentary, and suppose a much greater use of the historical setting, so that the Bible is more completely interpreted. They are more evangelistic in nature because at the periods in the life of the youth when the choice of Christian life is most normally made, they bring to bear upon it in all his power the life of Jesus and urge teachers to seek decisions.

These lessons are not perfect, but for effective teaching there is no comparison between them and the Uniform.

Disciples Table Talk

Great Assembly in Dallas to Celebrate Twenty-fifth Anniversary of M. M. Davis.

Twenty-five years ago this month M. M. Davis occupied the pulpit of Central church of Dallas, Texas. He spoke in a little frame building. On the evening of Oct. 3 Mr. Davis occupied the pulpit of Central Christian church, on which occasion the nine Christian church congregations of Dallas joined in a grand union service to commemorate the occasion and show their regard and affection for the man who has labored incessantly throughout these years and who has been the main factor in the growth and development of the church in the city. The subject of Mr. Davis' discourse was "The Pre-eminence of Christ." Mr. Davis is now pastor of Rose Avenue church.

"It was in Missouri, before entering Transylvania university, that I became a member of the Christian Church," Mr. Davis said in his introductory remarks. "The people in the church knew that I was a poor boy, and they offered to educate me, but I declined their offer, preferring to work my way through college. I believed then, and I still believe, that any young man who deserves a college training can get it himself without outside help." After his course at the University of Kentucky, having completed his preparation for the ministry, toward which he had been striving, the young minister returned to Missouri and for two years served the congregations of the Christian Church at Nevada and Sedalia. From Sedalia he went to Dallas in 1890." "My coming to Texas was purely accidental," Mr. Davis said. "I suffered with a slight bronchial trouble in Missouri and sought the Texas climate as a relief. It was my intention when I came to Dallas to return to Missouri within a very short time. But I never returned. I found Dallas people so congenial, my work so delightful and so many great opportunities for the work I wanted to do that I could never tear myself away during these twenty-five years—and I never expect to."

Mr. Yeuell's Program for Future Months.

Herbert Yeuell will conduct an evangelistic campaign with the Cynthiana, Ky., church, beginning Oct. 1. He assisted the pastor, Joseph D. Armistead, then at Walla Walla, Wash., in an evangelistic meeting some years ago. Mr. Yeuell is now assisting W. B. Hendershot at Central church, Huntington, W. Va. He will return to Richmond, Ky., where E. B. Barnes ministers, for a course of Chautauqua lectures and addresses. He will dedicate the beautiful $50,000 new church at Athens, Ga., Dec. 19. Then he expects to be home for Christmas in Chicago. After Christmas Mr. Yeuell is to deliver courses of lectures and conduct Decision meetings at some of our colleges. On Feb. 1, he will conduct a similar course with a large Baptist church at Malden, Mass., a suburb of Boston. It will be remembered that he conducted a mission some years since at the Dudley St. Baptist church, Boston, in conjunction with our own St. James St. church.

Community Message Bearing Fruit at De Land, Ill.

L. A. Crown is doing a fine work in De Land, Ill. It is the kind that should be done in many other communities. De Land was made famous among Illinois Disciples by Thomas Bondurant, who left most of his property to the missionary societies and Eureka College. When Mr. Crown went there as pastor he took up the idea of community service. One of the first results was a consolidated high school, with a district of thirty-six sections. Mr. Crown was elected one of the members of the first school board. One of his sermons resulted in a community picnic. This was held Oct. 7. Addresses were made by one of the professors of the University of Illinois and by H. H. Peters, of Paris. Mr. Peters delivered his lecture, "The Soil and the Soul," which is becoming quite popular in such gatherings in Illinois.

Ira M. Boswell May Not Leave Chattanooga.

It is possible that Ira M. Boswell, pastor at Chattanooga, First, may refuse the call of Georgetown, Ky., church, and remain with the Chattanooga work. His congregation has strongly urged him not to change his field of activity. Mr. Boswell's popularity is based upon his twelve years of good work in Chattanooga, during which time he has been prominently identified with the religious, social and civic life of the city. He is known as one of the founders of the juvenile court and one of the city's chief advisers in matters dispensing charity to certain institutions of the city. He has served in the latter connection upon the committee of municipal research elected by the former board of city commissioners. In his church at Chattanooga, Mr. Boswell's record is one of progress and activity. He took charge of the congregation when it occupied a small building, built it up, and finally brought about the purchase of the present large building. There, under the ministration of Mr. Boswell, the congregation has continued to expand till now the church is ranked as one of the largest in the city. A local paper speaks of Mr. Boswell in the following terms: "Mr. Boswell has been something more than a mere preacher for his congregation, and we believe that the entire community will join in saying that he has been a helpful figure in every progressive movement for the betterment of the moral, social and civic conditions of this community. Mr. Boswell and The Times have not always agreed upon issues dividing public sentiment, but this newspaper has always recognized his ability, his sincerity and his genuine piety and can cheerfully attest the value of his pastoral work as well as the helpfulness of his activities both as neighbor and citizen."

C. G. Baker Begins New Work.

Clarence G. Baker, who was recently called to the pastorate of the West Park church, Indianapolis, began his work there on Oct. 3. Mr. Baker was formerly pastor of Douglas Park church, Chicago.

Next Tennessee Convention to Meet At Knoxville.

The Tennessee state convention, which met at Union City, Tenn., voted to accept the invitation from the Fifth Avenue Church, Knoxville, Tenn., to bring the convention for 1916 to the East Tennessee city. The following convention officers for 1916 were elected: President, W. J. Shelburn, Shelbyville, Tenn., vice-president, E. S. Smith, Murfreesboro; secretary, Gus Ramage, Nashville. E. H. Koch of Nashville state missionary secretary, was unanimously re-elected and also elected as a member of the state board. Geo. W. Hardin of Johnson City and Dr. Carey E. Morgan of Nashville, whose terms as members of the state board expired this year, were re-elected for three years. A. I. Myhr of Nashville was elected for one year to fill the unexpired term of Harris L. Brown of Memphis.

W. R. Motley Closes First Year's Work In Richmond, Ind.

W. R. Motley, pastor of Central church, Richmond, Ind., has closed his first year as pastor of that church. During the last twelve months, Mr. Motley preached 105 sermons, conducted 17 funerals, married 19 couples, made 2,112 calls, and added 83 new members to the church membership and increased the Sunday schoool membership roll by 256. The church roll now records 604 names and the Sunday school 804 names. All current expenses have been met and contributions have been made to the missionary and benevolent organizations of the church. A large amount of money has been raised on the church debt.

Enlargement Campaign at Logansport, Ind.

A feature of the fall work at the Logansport, Ind., church, to which L. E. Sellers ministers, is an enlargement campaign. A committee of 100 recently called in all the homes of the members to talk over the work of the year and enlist the interest and co-operation of the whole number. The Sunday school rally was held in the church on the following Sunday and an attendance of 800 was the goal. The evening of that day was designated. The report of Mr. Sellers for the year showed he had delivered 179 sermons and conducted 43 funerals during the year. Every department showed a gain in membership, and a total fund of $7,499.06 raised.

Buffalo Church Listens to Public Leaders.

B. S. Ferrell, pastor of Jefferson street church, Buffalo, N. Y., announces a series of "Evenings With Men in Authority," on which addresses are to be delivered by men in public office and affairs. The series opened two weeks ago with an address by Mayor B. F. Rand of Tonawanda, whose subject was "A Big Issue." Subsequent addresses will be delivered on Sunday nights by W. H. Whalen, Principal Frank S. Fosdick of Masten Park High School, and Charles R. Wiers.

North Carolina Convention Meets Next Week.

Among the speakers at the North Carolina convention, which meets at Pantego, Oct. 18-21, are the following: W. O. Winfield, C. W. Howard, J. R. Tingle, H. S. Carawan, Charles E. Lee, W. A. Davis, J. J. Walker, W. O. Lappin, R. P. Smith, L. J. Chapman, Sam B. Waggoner, C. B. Washburn, R. V. Hope and J. W. Baldwin.

Substantial Record of Five Years' Ministry in Colorado.

The well-kept pastoral record of Randolph Cook, who has recently left Trinidad, Colo., to assume pastorship of the church at Albuquerque, N. M., shows that in the five years' ministry at Trinidad, there were 285 additions to the church membership. The pastor made 6,000 calls, delivered 711 addresses, conducted 108 funerals and 88 weddings. The church raised over $20,000 including $1,200 for missions. More than 2,000 needy persons were given material assistance through the church and over 6,000 persons came to the pastor's study for help or advice.

English Disciples Meet.

The 35th annual conference of the Churches of Christ, co-operating as the Christian Association was held at Southport last month. There were about seventy delegates, from various parts of the United Kingdom. The president, Mr. Edwin H. Spring (Gloucester), had charge of the sessions of the conference. Among the speakers was Mr. Frank D. Coop, of Southport, who discussed the theme "World Conquest: Its Nature and Methods." Among Mr. Coop's contributions to the conference was the following statement: "Complete personal salvation here and now is not possible apart from the complete salvation of society. Have we not been to eager to become assured of personal salvation whilst ignoring some of its most imperative obligations? We are all realizing more or less that our religion is not the dynamic it ought to be and some of us to whom Christ is 'all in all' are feeling deeply perplexed. The root cause, to my mind, is that we have not taken Christ at His word; we have trifled with the demands He makes upon us. Possibly the greatest source of weakness in our fellowship with Christ to-day lies in our failure to bring certain parts of our social conduct into line with His desire. Often we do not see how we can; some deny that it can ever be possible, and in consequence their faith in Christ is badly, perhaps irretrievably, shaken. We do not have to look far for examples of this difficulty. There are many manufacturers who are faced with the alternative of either paying what they sorrowfully admit are almost starvation wages or of dismissing their workpeople and closing their factories."

Old Bethany Dedicates New Memorial Church Building.

The new memorial house of worship at Bethany, W. Va., was dedicated last Sunday. F. M. Rains was in charge of the services. The building cost $40,000. J. J. Morgan is pastor. Many visitors from surrounding communities attended the dedicatory exercises, drawn by the historic attractions of old Bethany.

Mexico, Mo., Church Meets All Apportionments for Missions and Benevolences.

W. A. Shullenburger, pastor at Mexico, Mo., enters the sixth year of a very prosperous ministry there. The church is happy in having raised all its apportionments during the year past for missions and benevolences. No society or cause was overlooked. Mr. and Mrs. Shullenburger went to the Pacific Coast on their vacation the past summer and the pastor is now in the midst of a series of Sunday evening travel talks, which are heard by congregations that pack the house. C. H Winders, pastor at Irvington, Indianapolis, will hold a meeting in Mexico church beginning soon.

Suggestion That Old People's Home May Be Removed Arouses Churches of Niagara District.

The announcement by the National Benevolent Association that through lack of local support the Havens Home for old people at East Aurora, N. Y., would have to be abandoned and its residents moved to the Jacksonville, Ill., home has stirred up the churches of the Niagara Frontier to the importance of their keeping the Home in their section of the country if possible. A united rally of the churches will be held at Buffalo to consider what is to be done.

Dr. Powell Looks Forward to Great Religious Activity After the War.

Under the heading, "Preparedness," Dr. E. L. Powell preached a stirring sermon at First church, Lonisville, on a recent Sunday evening. But he did not advocate preparedness for war, but "preparedness for the great spiritual awakening" he sees about to come over the world as a result of the agitation of present days and the reorganization of human values that will follow the great war. Dr. Powell connected his theme with a series of meetings to be held in First church, with Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, of Kansas City, as preacher. The meetings are to open Oct. 17.

In and Around Chicago

Ministers Organize for Season.

The ministers' meeting opened for the new season on Monday, Oct. 4, by electing Orvis F. Jordan, of Evanston, president for the year, H. L. Willett, vice-president and Lloyd H. Miller of Metropolitan church, secretary. H. L. Willett read a paper Oct. 11 on "The Bible and the Community." The meeting was held at 10 o'clock in a private room of the Boston Oyster House.

Dr. Willett Begins Year's Work at Memorial Church With Earnest Sermon.

Dr. H. L. Willett preached at Memorial church on Sunday, Oct. 3, for the first time since the summer vacation. He had not fully recovered his strength from the operation of nearly a month before, but spoke with almost his usual urgency. The sermon came nearer being a self-revelation than Dr. Willett is accustomed to allow himself. A touch now and then indicated that his theme was born "in the silence" of the recent days of confinement when, as he confessed, it seemed easier than usual,—seemed necessary in fact,—to look at life's meanings with a fresh assessment. "The Open Door" was the title of the discourse, the theme being that the church now faces a vast new opportunity made for it by the psychological and moral revolution brought on by the war. The old order was passing away. The new order was yet to be determined and the Church is to be the most potent constructive force in the new day. Dr. Willett seems to be gripping his task at Memorial with renewed purposefulness and his leadership is answered by a loyalty and responsiveness on the part of the membership that promises a very fruitful year in this union congregation of Baptists and Disciples.

Quarterly Assembly of Woman's Missionary Union Meets at Evanston.

The quarterly assembly of the Woman's Missionary Union met at Evanston church, Thursday, Oct. 7. A large attendance, considering the distance, was attracted by the very interesting program that had been announced. These meetings begin at 10 o'clock in the morning and close at 4 p. m., with a luncheon and social time at the noon hour. Messages of especial interest were brought by Mrs. W. J. Burner, of Peoria, who with her husband, was a missionary in Buenos Ayres, Argentina, for several years, and Mrs. E. M. Bowman, of Chicago. Mrs. Burner told very interestingly her story of conditions in South America and made all feel the importance that continent is bound to have in our Christian expansion work in the immediate future. Mrs. Bowman told for the first time to her Chicago co-workers the story of the considerations that led her and Mr. Bowman to undertake the main responsibility for the Christianization of the province of Nan-tung-chow in China. It is known to most of our readers that Mr. and Mrs. Bowman pledged $25,000 to this work at the time the Men and Millions' Commission was making a canvass of the Chicago churches. This amount, Mrs. Bowman says, is only a beginning. It is their hope to enlist gifts from many others as well as to do more themselves as they may be prospered. Already the Rockefeller Institute has agreed to lend its co-operation in the manning of a hospital, the ground for which has been donated by a wealthy Chinese statesman of the province. The hospital is yet to be built. The ideals of missionary service which will obtain in this territory, as expounded by Mrs. Bowman, are of the highest and most practical sort. They take into account the agricultural and social life of the people, and lay great emphasis upon medical missions and education. Mrs. Bowman was speaking to an audience of her own co-workers whose affection for her and her husband is frankly expressed in many ways, and she talked with a frankness and informality that made her words especially winsome.

City Missionary Society Adopts Englewood Amendments and Elects Officers.

The Chicago Christian Missionary Society held two meetings within a week. The first was a called meeting to consider certain changes in the constitution making a financial participation by each church to the amount of at least $50 a year, a basis of representation on the board of trustees, and providing for the trustees to be elected directly by the qualifying churches instead of by the society as heretofore. These amendments had been proposed in the early summer by the delegates representing Englewood church. They were adopted by this called meeting, without criticism. The second meeting was the regular annual meeting of the society for the election of officers. Mr. L. N. Black, of Irving Park church, who has served as president the past year with efficiency, and Mr. Leon L. Loehr, of Jackson Blvd church, who has been treasurer of the society for a number of years, both declined to serve longer. The officers chosen for the year were Mr. E. M. Bowman, of Memorial church, president; Dr. P. L. Prentis, of Austin, vice-president; Mr. W. E. Palmer, of Englewood, treasurer. Mr. Bowman has given many years to the presidency of this work and it was universally felt that under his leadership the work would take on new life in the coming year. He has not yet given his consent to assume the duties of the presidency. Rev. W. G. Winn, of Irving Park, is the superintendent of city missions.

A Vision of the Dead

By Joseph Fort Newton

CHICAGO

News From the Foreign Society

Dr Pickett, of Laoag, Ph. Is., writes: "After a long vacation, we were able to get another supply of German medicines. I laid in a supply of 2,000 pesos' worth, using the money granted by the government for the purpose. Patients are coming every day. One morning we treated seventeen. The treatment of the tropical yaws comes near being a miracle."

B. L. Kershner, of Manila, Ph. Is., writes: "In response to the urgent request of men of the country churches, I started some lessons in Teacher Training by correspondence. The class now has an enrollment of thirty and has worked up some enthusiasm. It seems to be promising work, but requires a great deal of time and energy. The result of the venture seems to be to give the leader a pretty long daily schedule."

The boys' school in Wuweichow, China, opened with twenty-three scholars; the girls' school having only twelve, but the teachers believe that more will come in. Good crops are reported in that whole section of China. This should mean a happier winter for the people in the country and a better trade for the cities.

C. S. Settlemyer reports that the work on the Science Building of the University at Nanking, China, and on the several new homes has gone on with varying rapidity. The missionaries were having considerable difficulty with the contractor. He lacks capital and good managing ability.

The new day school at Hsia Kwan is nearly completed and will be occupied before this reaches readers. The teachers at the Drum Tower continued their free summer day school through August, and it was greatly appreciated by the parents and boys.

The missionaries in China have much to say about F. E. Meigs and the loss sustained by his death. He gave his life for the church and schools in Nanking and vicinity. His body was completely worn out, but his mind was clear and hopeful and energetic until the last. His place is a large one and it cannot be filled. He was one of the most useful men in the university and in China.

H. C. Hobgood and Dr. Frymire, of Africa, made a long tour into the back country. At Bongale they baptized 7. They spent four nights at Eyete and baptized 21. The same steamer that brought this report brought H. C. Hobgood, also, who has returned on furlough.

Dr. W. A. Frymire, of Lotumbe, Africa, reports that this is the time for pneumonia and that it is both prevalent and destructive. He writes that many cases came in during the month of July, among them seven from Bolenge and others from Longa. In the month of July 120 different persons required care. The separate treatments given numbered 1,030.

Dr. and Mrs. G. J. Barger are on their way to the Congo. Among the passengers on board their ship are twenty-two Protestant missionaries.

Miss Eck writes that during the month of July the printers have set up and printed the first spelling book, prepared by Mr. Hobgood, have reprinted Mr. Hensey's "Old Testament Story Book," have reprinted a school book, besides tracts, marriage certificates and circular letters, amounting to 98,740 pages.

D. O. Cunningham, of Bilaspur, India, writes that the work is now being held up because of cholera, which has been very bad in Bilaspur and the surrounding villages for three weeks.

F. M. Rains, Secy.

Transylvania College Notes

H. Clay Hobgood, of Madisonville, Ky., a graduate of 1912, who has been in Africa as a missionary of the F. C. M. S., for the past three years, is home on a furlough. He is spending several days with friends at Transylvania, and gave an interesting talk on his work in the foreign field at chapel.

President Crossfield has just returned from a ten days' trip to the East. While away he attended the inauguration of Dr. J. Ross Stevenson as president of Princeton Theological Seminary, and Dr. J. Richie Smith as professor of Homiletics. He was also present at the inauguration ceremonies at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., of which Dr. John Henry MacCracken is the new president. On the 22nd President Crossfield will deliver an address at the Rural Church Institute and School of Methods at North Middletown. Several of the professors are also on the program.

Mr. George Manifold, College of the Bible, 1896; A. B. Transylvania, 1900; M. A., Transylvania, 1915, who is now in Harvard University, has been granted a scholarship in that institution. Mr. Manifold is working for the S. T. B. Degree.

Among the student body this year five are from southern California, four from Memphis, five from Louisville, four from Kansas, three from Maryland, four from Oklahoma, three from Arkansas, with representatives from about thirty of the states and five foreign countries. Marshall Dunn, A. B., Wisconsin University, 1915, is pursuing work leading to the B. D. degree. T. F. Coyle, a former student of Leland Stanford Junior University, has matriculated for the A. B. degree. Aaron Sund, of Vase Sweden is now in his fifth year in Transylvania. Schoichi Imamura, a graduate of Toyko, Japan, has entered as a graduate student, having mad his degree in the University of Toyko. He is a candidate for the B. D. degree. There is quite a group from Australia, the last to arrive being Mr. Fred Kefford of Melbourne.

Opening of Bethany College

In all the history of Bethany College she has never had such an auspicious opening as in this year 1915. She has a larger enrollment than at the close of any other fall term. She has the largest freshman class by far; about one hundred have applied for freshman standing. The Agriministerial department has shared in the infifty have signed for the course. The crease until we have the largest enrollment of students of strict ministeral standing and some of the most promising men we have ever had in Bethany College.

The splendid memorial church is completed, costing about $40,000 and will be dedicated Oct. 10th 1915. It is one of the most beautiful church buildings in connection with any oof our colleges and is admirably suited for the training of young men and women for efficiency in modern church work. It is not only a fitting memorial to the "Fathers of the Restoration" movement but a monument to the faith and wisdom of the heroic friends of Bethany for a larger work in the Kingdom.

The Department of Bible-school Pedagogy, memorial to Herbert Moninger, is meeting with a hearty reception. In its beginning we have not been able as yet to present the full course outlines but each year shall add studies as the classes advance until the entire course is presented. Prof. H. Newton Miller, who occupies the chair of Bible-school Pedagogy will be in vital touch with the Bible School when we get into the new church and will strive to make it one of the most efficient Sunday schools in the brotherhood.

The ministerial association of which John Ray Clark is president has not only its largest enrollment but has begun its work with greatest enthusiasm. Among the new members are Brother Clark Moore of Nova Scotia; Alexander Betterly, of Ontario; Walter Caines of Australia and F. H. Tilock and W. C. Fowler who were at Phillips Bible Institute last year. They are all efficient preachers and desire to be of service to the churches within reach of Bethany, while in college.

W. B. Taylor.

BRIEFER NEWS NOTES.

—"The Heresy of Silence," was the subject of a Sunday morning sermon by Graham Frank at Liberty, Mo.

—Sunday, Oct. 10, was Butler College Day at Columbus, Ind., Tabernacle church. The pastor, W. H. Book, gave the morning service to President T. C. Howe and Professor W. C. Morro, and the evening service to Professors Underwood and Kenyon.

—S. Grundy Fisher, who headed the ministers' committee in the liquor fight in Minneapolis, writes that the effect of the campaign in the churches was like a great revival. He says that though the drys lost by 8,000 votes, the politicians dug their graves and that two years from now Minnesota will be dry from river to river.

—Carl Burkhardt opened his new ministry at Franklin, Ind., Oct. 3, by preaching a sermon whose thesis was the unfinished work of Christ. "I am glad," he said, "that Christ left work for us to do, for thereby we have fellowship with him." Mr. Burkhardt's pastorate opens very auspiciously.

—Dr. J. W. Lowber, of Texas, has recently been lecturing in Kansas churches.

—A class for mothers has been organized in the Sunday school of First Church, Springfield, Ill. Its purpose is to teach mothers how to teach the facts of sex life to their children. There will be a course of twelve lessons and the membership of the class is limited to twelve students. Mrs. Lora Robie, a mother, a graduate of the University of Chicago, who has spent some time preparing herself to do this work for the church, is the teacher.

—Definite goals for the coming year were placed before the Gibson City, Ill., Sunday-school by the superintendent at the rally day exercises on Sept. 26. The pastor, C. J. Robertson, writes that the promotion exercises on that day were interesting and inspiring. The congregation is co-operating with other churches of the place in a union evangelistic meeting to begin Oct. 24.

—Randolph Cook has removed from Trinidad, Colo., to Albuquerque, N. M., where he has taken the pastoral leadership of the church until recently in charge of Charles L. Dean, who is now in Canon City, Colo.

—T. W. Grafton, of Indianapolis, and David H. Shields, of Kokomo, were leading speakers at Sunday-school conference at Ninth street church, Logansport, Ind.

—The Every Member Canvass was made by Central church, Roekford, Ill., recently. W. B. Clemmer is the pastor.

—Maywood Church, Chicago, has been working modestly but faithfully for several years under the leadership of Victor F. Johnson who devotes most of his time to business pursuits. The congregation has recently finished paying for a lot and will go on to build soon.

Judge Lobingier Honored by Many Groups on Vacation Trip.

During the furlough of Judge Charles S. Lobingier, of the United States Court for China, who has been in this country several weeks, the First church, of Lincoln, Nebr., is planning to hear him speak on two evenings, once at prayer-meeting and again at a larger meeting to which the general public will be attracted. Judge Lobingier was received with great interest by the citizens of Hebron, Nebr., his boyhood home, who met in the courthouse to greet him and hear him speak. Dr. Ames and the men of Hyde Park church, Chicago, of which he is a member, gave a dinner in his honor when he passed through the city. Judge Lobingier will sail for China the last of this month.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Volume XXXII OCTOBER 21, 1915 Number 42

Efficiency

CAN "EFFICIENCY" BE OVERDONE?

It would be a strange sort of reasoner who would undertake to say so.

If a piece of work is worth doing, it is worth doing well, and efficiency means simply the doing of a given piece of work as well as it can be done.

It means the utilization of all available resources; it means the economizing and conservation of all these resources against waste and misdirection; it means a vigorous attack and it means a persistent following up, a determined seeing through of the thing that is begun until it is altogether accomplished.

Surely a virtue like this cannot be overdone.

But it is quite conceivable that absorption in the pursuit of efficient methods might divert attention from the essential task itself, drain off energies that ought to be expended upon the real object of endeavor and finally obscure or altogether eclipse the real object.

It is quite possible for men or churches to become so obsessed with means that they have no awareness of ends; quite possible to become proficient in the forms of religion, the mechanism of religion, and never to have gotten a vital hold of the substance of religion at all; quite possible for the institutions of the Church to call into play the wit and enthusiasm and even the loyalty of its members and yet leave them to awake some day in disillusionment, asking, "What is the good of it all?"

This transvaluation of values, the substitution of efficiency for substance, is the root weakness of the modern Church.

It is a kind of weakness that is not obvious.

In spite of it the Church is able to appear strong.

There is more activity in the Church today than ever before, more money raised, more organizations, more efficiency in running the organizations, more energy expended in doing Church work than ever before. And the vast energies of the Church are really productive of much good in social and individual uplift.

But somehow those of keenest spiritual insight, whose insight grows out of their own heart-hunger for the living bread of God, are not satisfied with what they find in the churches.

They are not hostile; their criticisms are not impatient; often their discontent is not openly acknowledged; they keep right on loyally bearing their part of the responsibility for church duties; but they feel the leanness and hollowness, and often the coarseness, of the church life and even of those features of church life that are regarded by others as most successful.

In a letter from a woman of unusual nobility of soul who is face to face with problems that involve the deeper spiritual realities and who is earnestly seeking guidance, she tells of the relinquishment of his pastorate by a spiritually minded minister whose sermons and character had been a great support to her. He had found so scant a response to his strong, thoughtful and constructive message that the financial support soon failed also, and he left. "Our people have been used to an organizer, a driver," she says, "the spiritual problem has never been brought home to them, and mainly what they want in their minister is that he shall keep the church going."

Here, again, is the pastor of one of the strongest churches among the Disciples; he is well known in the brotherhood as an "efficiency expert." His mind seems to be alive with new schemes and methods of doing things, and with new things to do. His church is a bee-hive of activity. His Sunday-school is as palpitant with vitality as a crowd at a foot-ball game. A contest is on all the time. Success is written over every activity and department.

But member after member of that church has expressed his lack of satisfaction in the things of the soul.

These members are not disloyal; they are simply hungry.

Their pastor's whole mind is taken up with the mechanism of the church. He is a splendid technician.

But his imagination seems to have gotten hard; his messages are said to be metallic; and the church services are full of distractions that leave but scant chance for the informing and growth of the inner life.

Is this church efficient? Yes. But to what end?

We are not suggesting that such a church does no good. No sane and fair man will deny that such a church does good. It will even be willingly conceded that the engaging of people in the sheer task of keeping the wheels of the church running has a certain religious value for those who engage in it.

But the religious value is in the nature of an unconscious by-product of all this institutional activity.

And we do affirm, with great depth of conviction and feeling, that religion—in the sense of an inner, spiritual experience of God—ought to be the end consciously aimed at by all the activities and services of the Church.

And we further affirm that a Church that holds its religious character and purpose so habitually to the front of its mind that its methods and organizations are constantly subjected to the test of their religious value will be a very different kind of Church from most of those that today boast of this virtue of efficiency.

The technique of religion has taken on an altogether exaggerated importance in the modern Church for the simple reason that the substance of religious experience is thin and pale.

Where religion itself is vital, where it has actual control of the inner personal life, the clang of the machinery of it is not heard. Indeed a vital religion needs only the simplest machinery. The science of its technique is not subtle nor even sophisticated. It does not need to be galvanized by "efficiency methods," because it is inspired by its possession of a Truth whose redemptive power, demonstrated in the souls of its members, is self-impelling.

Our Church mind is too much cluttered up with methods —evangelistic methods, Sunday-school methods, efficiency congresses.

Many of us have lost the gospel in the very machinery we have so artfully devised to propagate it.

The hungering human heart of the Church and of the world will not find God until our technicians and tinkerers make way for His priests and prophets.

The Vision of the Dead

BY JOSEPH FORT NEWTON

THE APOCALYPSE of St. John, said Milton, is the majestic image of a high and stately tragedy, shutting up and intermingling her solemn scenes and acts with a sevenfold chorus of hallelujahs and harping symphonies. It is a Book of Vision, forecasting, in forms now vague, now terrible, now unspeakably grand and lovely, the final issues of the life of man and the world. Far beyond the shadows of time and death and sin, it foresees, with a triumphant and all transfiguring faith, the ultimate victory of the right and the overthrow of evil—a new earth overarched by a new heaven, and the City of God descending. It is the vision of a Christian seer who, amid the tragedies of earth and the overturnings of history, appeals to the high court of eternal Judgment.

St. John lived to be ninety years of age, and is said to have been the only one of the Apostles who did not wear the crown of martyrdom. Despite his infirmities, as life deepened into twilight, and he looked upon the world in the light of Jesus, seen through the sunset air of memory and hope, his gospel became so simple that he was wont to sum it all up in a sentence, oft repeated as they carried him about on a cot: "Little children, love one another!" That was the heart of his Christian faith, the whole of it, and on the lonely isle of Patmos it brightened into a vision so radiant that the dark earth seemed a shadowy phantom and heaven the supreme reality. With what clear insight Browning reads this vision in the "Death in the Desert," showing how the seer, with his bright dying eyes, foresaw all the subtle attacks on the faith of his Master, and won our battles before they were fought. As Hugo said, here we touch that sombre portal that leads toward God himself; some one seems to push us from behind, and the dread entrance, in vague outline, rouses mingled terror and longing.

A PASSION FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Now, consider the dignity of this vision, its vastness, its inconceivable solemnity, its exquisite and noble reserve. Here is no shallow optimism shouting itself hoarse about certainties whereof no man knoweth, while it has no rebuke for present rampant iniquity; no facts and curious imagination making a map of heaven and hell. It sets no dates. It indulges in no glib dogmatism. It does not overlook the awful law of retribution, here and hereafter. No; behind it beats a mighty passion for righteousness, a profound concern for man, a sense of the tragedy of his history and a longing wonder as to what becomes of him after death. It is no idle speculation, but a vision vouchsafed to a great soldier of righteousness, who, in the stress of moral conflict and the sorrow of seeming defeat, is permitted to behold the issue—as, later, when Rome was reeling to his ruin, Augustine took refuge in that same City of God. It is always so. In the darkest periods of history, in its most desperate crises, there is some God-illumined, prophetic soul who sees beyond the shadows, as Tolstoy, in our own day, foresaw the tragedy of the world-war, but looked beyond it and beheld the dim figure of a great Teacher of Faith rising out of the soul of Slavic peoples, and calling the world back to the life of the Spirit.

> "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened." Rev. 20:12.

THE EARTH A CEMETERY.

Reverently let us study this vision of the innumerable dead, whose exodus from earth began with the morning of time and continues day by day, night by night, and in this year of blood has become multitudinous and overwhelming. Tenderly, pensively one also of our own poets broods in his Thanatopsis over the earth as a mighty sepulcher, and bids us have no fear to lie down in its bosom, since we retire not alone, but in the silent company of patriarchs of the infant world, with kings and peasants, with hoary sages of ages past, with the fair forms of matron and babe, aye, with the good and wise, the wicked and the foolish of every land. The moon in her dark journeying, and all the infinite host of heaven, are shining on "the sad abodes of death, through the still lapse of ages," until the friendly earth seems to the poet one vast cemetery, nor could we wish for couch more magnificent!

"The hills
Rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun; the vales
Stretching in pensive quietness between;
The venerable woods; rivers that move
In majesty, and the complaining brooks
That make the meadow green; and poured round all.
Old Ocean's gray and melancholy waste—
Are but the solemn decorations all
Of the great tomb of man. . . All that tread
The globe are but a handful to the tribes
That slumber in its bosom."

But our Christian seer, rising above this vast shadow that hovers over the earth, sees those whom men call the dead standing before God—past kneeling, past praying, erect and still, awaiting his judgment. How natural that one who walked with Jesus should see, first of all, not the great of earth, not the mountain peaks of humanity, not the few elect souls of valor and intelligence, but the little ones whom the world forgets and God only remembers. How full of tenderness and humanity, how infinitely dear this test is to those in whose homes the child-voice is only an echo, and whose hearts have been broken over little folded hands. Half the human race die in infancy, and if the number of darkened homes in one age is uncountable, the sum of them in all ages, since the wild cry of the first mother over the first dead child, is overwhelming. What is the fate of these little ones who came and looked, with eyes of wonder and trust, into a few fond faces and vanished? Speechless they came and speechless they went; they had no language but a cry. They are forbidden to go on here; are they forbidden to go on somewhere, annihilated without opportunity, and cast as rubbish in the void? This Christian vision of the dead says, No! If they have no history, they have an endless opportunity in the love of God whose they are and in whose presence they stand.

THE MARK OF GREATNESS.

When on an ocean voyage a poor stoker dies, at once and without ceremony of any kind "his heavy-shotted hammock-shroud drops into a vast and wandering grave," and he is a symbol of a great majority of the race. While they live they are hardly counted, and when they die nothing stops. The big world, like the ocean liner, does not even slacken its speed. Yet these multitudes, of whom the world takes so little note, do the hard work of the world, and their service is inconceivably great. Obscure, nameless, unknown, as Lincoln said, God must love them else he would not have made so many of them. Those who talk so glibly about the survival of the fittest only betray their brutal, snobbish egotism, for they assume that they are among the fit. Whereas the Cosmic Spirit, always alert, unerringly detects their vanity and atheism lurking under it. But the Christian vision, like him who inspired it, reckons no soul insignificant for lack of position, education or even character, and no soul great save in its fellowship with the Eternal Soul.

LOOKING BACKWARD.

Think, too, of the uncountable multitudes, like the sands of the sea for number, who have walked lightly or sadly upon this earth in the ages before us. What of them? Of the fifteen million inhabitants of this globe today, how few can be called great, how few are known, how few signify! Yet they are but a drop in the bucket beside the millions who lived in ages agone, long since forgotten and fallen into dust. Think of the hordes that battered down Rome, of the teeming throngs of Carthage, of Babylon, of Egypt, and further on back beyond recorded time to the swarming and suffering population who prepared the way for the great historic enterprise. If you look still further, your vision is lost in barbaric clans and groups of roving savages, and when your mind sweeps the whole field of time the total of humanity since man appeared is bewildering. Who can look back down the long highway of time without gratitude and pity for those nameless millions upon whose labors and achievements the later civilizations rest?

A PROBLEM STATED.

Now, reflect on the problem which those millions, as numerous as clouds of insects in the summer air, present to the Christian thinker. If we follow those who say that they are not immortal, by the same stroke we cut the ground from beneath our own hope and consign the race to dust. As Lincoln said, "It is either all or none." To be indifferent to those forerunners of our civilization betrays a lack of humanity, to say nothing of a Christian concern for man. Admit that the further back we go the noble lives become fewer, and the moral failure more general. Even today the race is largely in sin; and the number of those who share the highest life of the world, its science, its art, its philosophy, its best faith is very small. If they are unfit for moral bliss, they are surely too many for doom. Those who seem willing to admit the possibility, if not the fact, of such a colossal divine failure, shatter the citadel of all religious faith. In the sight of that vision of all the mighty dead standing before God, how dare any man go "dealing damnation round the land" in the name of a petty dogma, and glibly passing sentence on the human race! How blasphemous beyond words! No, no. Let us not turn pessimists and despair of the overwhelming majority of our humanity with one scheme, nor rush them all into heaven with another. It is enough to have the veil lifted and behold them standing before God.

TRY OUR NOTIONS OF GOD.

Surely all must now see how vital it is, how necessary alike to our faith and sanity, that we have a noble vision of God before whom not only the dead of ages past, but our own dear, pitiful, august dead, must stand. Nature teaches us much about the law and power and majesty of God. History, now immeasurably extended by evolution, discloses yet deeper and more precious things, revealing his crusade for righteousness and his labor working toward a higher type of humanity. But these do not satisfy when we see, as in this vision, that white and silent assembly of all the dead before his throne. Here, in this high court of the dead, let us make trial, not of the dead, but of our ideas of him in whose presence they stand. Take any of the modern notions of God put forth with such smart logic, and test it in this light and you will see how thin and pale it is, how inadequate to the demands of humanity, how deaf to the most pathetic and moving of all cries that ascend from this shadowed earth to the shadowless heavens.

For example, let us read the text as Spencer would translate it: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before an Infinite and Eternal Energy from which all things proceed." Whose heart does not turn sick and sink within him to think of all the suffering, sinning, aspiring, pathetic humanity in the grasp of mere impersonal Energy, as if caught and crushed in a vast machine. Or let Bergson give his version of the text: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before a Vital Urge," a blundering life force groping its way in the dark, running into blind alleys—humanity itself largely an experiment, if not a mistake! Who can hold that dogma against the protesting cry of helpless innocence and the infinite misery wrought by its blind and fumbling God! Let Matthew Arnold render the text: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before a stream of tendency, a power not ourselves that makes for righteousness." That is a little better, in that it adds to mere power a gleam of conscience, a dim prophecy of moral responsibility, a faint hope that right will somewhere rule at last. But not one of these guesses measures up to the problem. How dare we bring a mere hypothesis, or an arid rationalism, to the judgment of all the dead!

Happily our Christian seer, whose far-shining vision casts our groping guesses into shadow, brings to the solemn assize of the dead not only a passionate human heart, but a grand revelation of God. Only when we know the ineffable fatherhood of God, as unveiled in the life and spirit and living presence of Christ, do we have a vision of God equal to this vision of the dead. Ah, when we see that God is like Christ, there is light all round the sky, transfiguring all our mortal life from the cradle to the tomb—and beyond! Then the wild fondness of the suffering motherhood of the world, with its cry after lost little ones since ever the Pyramids were built, finds response in the words, "Suffer little children to come unto Me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Then the piteous moral failure of humanity, so tragic in its weakness, so staggering in its aggregate, is in the hands of One who knows all, as no mortal can know it, who remembers that we are dust, and who knows how to be merciful and just. He who taught us to forgive until seventy times seven, will not forget the possibilities of growth in his poorest human child, nor will his love let go of the most far-wandering soul made in his image. The dead are in the hands of God whom Jesus made known, and there we may leave them, knowing that we shall soon stand in that company and be judged according to the deeds done in the body.

RETRIBUTION IS CERTAIN.

Retribution there is; retribution there will be, here and hereafter; but if it is Divine it is neither vindictive nor hopeless. The judgments of eternal love are not the judgments of doom, but of redemption, as our nobler human judgment comes more and more to be. He who made us for himself knows that unrighteousness is our woe, here and everywhere, and that righteousness is our infinite joy. If we cannot forecast the ultimate issue, we can at least be sure that a redemptive intention is at the heart of all the moral pain of humanity, and as surely affirm that the infinite pain that throbs in the heart of our race will never cease until that heart is pure. Of all the mysteries amidst which we are encamped in this "isthmus of a middle state" none is so strange, so inexplicable, as that of pain, which increases in intensity, as the saints tell us, the nearer we come to God. Nor does it cease until we attain to the heavenly death—that death, that is, of all that is unheavenly within us—when it is lost in that joy which all the world is seeking, but which so few have found upon earth.

HUSH ALL PETTY DEBATES.

Such a vision of the dead fills one with awe unutterable, and it well may hush our petty debates about the fate of that host assembled before God. If any one insists upon a literal and austere reading of the book of vision, let him not crucify humanity on a few texts, but begin at home and make trial of his exegesis on those nearest to his heart. The Judgment parables of Jesus should be read by a father, with his family gathered about his knee, and in that scene, with its tenderness and beauty, he will best understand the infinite Father at whose feet all assemble at last. In those parables it is not penitence, but a beautiful, unconscious possession of moral worth and the spirit of service, that is the basis of high reward. Nothing is said about belief, about belonging to a church, but only about deeds that find their fruit in character and a faithful pilgrimage in "the road of the loving heart." Those who are most sure that they are worthy to stand in that awful hour learn that they are the most unfit, while others whom they had deemed outcasts receive blessing. It was not Nero, but St. Paul who felt himself most unworthy, as all the saints have confessed in their sweet and wise humility, trusting only in the infinite mercy of God, as we must do here and always.

Above all, let us not be guilty of the unspeakable vanity of claiming for ourselves what we think is too good for all our humanity, lest we be found less worthy than the least. Let us dare to trust the highest hope our hearts can dream, and stand by it, without dogmatism and without doubt, the while we join with Faber in his hymn—

"There's a wideness in God's mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in His justice,
Which is more than liberty.

"For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind;
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind."

Edison as Prophet

The Wizard of Electricity Tells How the War is Going to Effect the United States

The United States has embarked on a voyage of prosperity to last seven years and longer if the manufacturers and public do not overdo things, declares Thomas A. Edison. The inventor dropped his manifold tasks in West Orange, N. J., for a few minutes to discuss with a reporter the brilliant outlook for better times.

Mr. Edison expressed confidence in the success of the new inventor's board to assist the United States government. The veteran is an optimist, and in his talk saw beyond the scarred ruins of the world's war a new era of prosperous content; a spirit of broader democracy in Europe, with monarchies and empires giving place to republics, in which the people and not kaisers, czars or kings will rule, and prophesied for the United States seven years of plenty; a more extensive period of good fortune if industrial leaders do not commit the familiar error of overdevelopment.

"Leaving out entirely the question of war industries, activities which are simply a hectic flush and do not give a complexion which indicates the healthy advance of commercial enterprises in the United States, I am satisfied this country has embarked upon a seven years' cruise of prosperity.

"But I am afraid it will be the same old story over and over again; some will attempt to overdo it. Then inevitably will come a recurrence of bad times, although not so bad as we have seen them, because business is now established in this country upon a really sound banking system. People can go safely ahead now with assurance of good times to come, but they must learn to save their money and avoid extravagances.

"When the European war is over we are bound to be affected, you must remember, in the re-establishing of business. The world is all locked together commercially, and the devastation of the countries of Europe by war naturally affects seriously all the other countries of the world, our own included, of course. Notwithstanding this troublesome phase of the future, we are in for a term of commercial prosperity, and if the people do not overdo things it may extend over a long period."

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

DR. IDLEMAN'S ADVENTURE OF FAITH

NOTHING more significant is recorded in the news pages of The Christian Century this week than the resignation of Dr. Finis Idleman at Central church, Des Moines, Ia., to accept the leadership of Central church, New York City.

To a certain type of mind this action will seem inexplicable. Dr. Idleman has achieved in Des Moines one of the most brilliant pastoral successes of the last ten years among the Disciples. He went to Central church as the successor of Dr. H. O. Breeden, who had for twenty-five years been shepherd, teacher, builder, major-general and prophet to the church. Dr. Breeden's ministry was by far the most outstanding ecclesiastical fact in the history of Des Moines up to that date.

Naturally everybody said that Breeden's immediate successor was fated to be a sacrifice. It was hardly conceivable that any man could step into the place made vacant by his removal to the Pacific Coast and stand up under the express comments and subtle feelings of contrast to which he was bound to be subjected as he attempted ever so faithfully to carry forward the work which his predecessor's strong hand had laid down.

So when Finis Idleman was called from a successful but less commanding ministry in Paris, Ill., to the Des Moines pulpit, and accepted the call, most of his best friends, those who knew better than others the Christian stuff of which his soul was made, felt as if their friend was going to a sort of ecclesiastical shambles.

At the time he took the leadership of Central church there was not a more difficult pulpit in the United States to fill. Not only would the Breeden pace strain his successor, but new problems in the church itself had to be solved. The whole down-town question had to be faced with a new mind, from a new point of view.

Dr. Idleman caught the torch from Dr. Breeden's hand and carried it forward with an assurance, a skill, an endurance, and at a pace that has amazed and gratified his intimate friends, broken the tradition about the fate awaiting the successor of a popular pastor and glorified the cause of Christ in the whole state of Iowa.

At the hour of his most evident success he now resigns his church of 1,500 members, relinquishes the commanding position he occupies in the cultural, political and commercial life of Des Moines to accept a church of 300 members smothered under the vast commercial and religious enterprises of New York City.

No one who knows Dr. Idleman would imagine for a moment that the lure of the great city had overcome his good sense. He is under no illusions as to the trials that await him in his new work. Many are the adventurers who buoyantly accept great-city calls with no insight into the gravity of the work they engage to do. Dr. Idleman is not one of these.

His letter to his Des Moines congregation discloses a conviction and faith that allies him with the elect company of Christian missionaries who go out by faith. His counselors have made him feel that he is truly called of God to go to New York, and in the utmost humility, accepting this interpretation, he goes by faith. The noble succession of leaders of which Dr. B. B. Tyler years ago was the founder and Dr. J. M. Phillput in two pastoral intervals the continuator will now be upborne by Dr. Idleman.

He will represent the Disciples as they ought to be represented in that great center. He will, on behalf of his brotherhood, have a part in the many co-operative Christian movements that originate in New York. He will serve there the same great ideals he has so well served in the West and his ministry will make an impact upon the Disciples throughout the nation.

And first or last, we predict, New York will know and acknowledge that Dr. Finis Idleman is one of her truest prophets.

THE PRESIDENT IN LOVE

NO EXHORTATION is needed to secure for President Wilson the hearty congratulation of the American public on his engagement. Such an expression springs spontaneously from the hearts of his fellow-citizens in all parts of the land.

The President has been the object of sincere public sympathy as, during the past year, he has carried burdens more grave than any President since Lincoln has had to bear, and has carried them without the support and inspiration afforded by a normal home life.

The characterizations of the next "first lady of the land" given by the daily press show her to be a high-minded, natural and beautiful character who will not only grace the exalted position to which her marriage to the President of the United States will elevate her but will also bring to the President the peculiar reinforcement of mind and strength and disposition which springs out of a happy domestic life and can be found nowhere else.

THE LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT

MORE often recurring than any other note in the Laymen's Missionary Convention held last week in Chicago was the acknowledgement of a unique responsibility resting upon the Christian men of America during this time of world war to uphold the banner of Christ in the unevangelized portions of the world.

Again and again the truth was driven into the quick of men's consciences that with the other "Christian" nations slaying one another the only conspicuous testimony to be borne for the Christian ideals of peace and civilization must be borne by the United States. This is not true because we of America are better or more Christian than other nations. We are not. In their circumstances our conduct would in all human likelihood have been on a level with their conduct.

But our different circumstances, our fortunate detachment from the scene of struggle, our independence of European entanglements, all combine to lay upon us an unusual responsibility not merely to do the conventional and customary thing but to erect new and higher standards beyond anything the Church of Christ has ever before striven to measure up to.

The war and its meaning for the peaceful American Church constituted the thesis of nearly every address of the great convention. Chicago churchmen set a record which seventy-five other cities will try to break during the next six months of a nation-wide campaign. Forty-five hundred men registered for the convention and paid one dollar each. All the Protestant churches in the city were represented. The sessions, held at Medinah Temple, were presided over by Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, a master of business and a man equally at home in conducting the affairs of the kingdom.

This series of laymen's conventions differs from that of six years ago in that home missions is now included side by side with foreign missions. One of the greatest addresses of the convention was an interpretation of "The Appeal of Chicago," by Prof. E. A. Steiner, of Grinnell College, Iowa.

The South American field loomed large. Bishop Kinsolving of the Episcopal church and Bishop Stuntz, of the Methodist church, both missionary bishops in South America, brought urgent messages of opportunity and need from our neighbor continent.

The Laymen's Movement will gather power as it rolls through the leading cities of our land. And it is safe to predict that the climacteric convention in Washington, D. C., in May, 1916, will be one of the most significant religious gatherings held in many years.

"THE FIGHT IS ON"

SOMETHING unusual happened in the moral history of Chicago last Tuesday when the mayor of this city, returning from a two weeks' trip in the West, was welcomed home by a meeting of Christian ministers.

That never happened in Chicago before.

On the night on which Mayor Thompson issued his order closing the saloons on Sunday he departed for the Panama Exposition, leaving in the hands of the police department the execution of his order.

Just what effect upon the mayor's mind the violent criticism of his policy might have had since he first made his unexpected announcement, was a matter of concern to the dry forces of the city. And just how deep and how mature his original determination may have been was also a matter of concern.

The dry forces had never counted on Mayor Thompson as an asset. He had few acquaintances among the Church leaders of the town. No one was able to speak a reassuring word on his behalf during his absence. But the ministers arranged a welcome meeting in the banquet hall of the Auditorium hotel where they could speak plainly to his honor and give him a chance to speak to them, and where, more important than all, they could study the tone and gesture and quality of the man at close range.

It was a remarkable meeting. Representative ministers spoke words of praise and gratefulness that at last a mayor had come to his high office who took his oath with an intention to match it with official action.

Appreciation and optimism and pledges of support so long as the mayor stood his ground, were the dominant expressions of the addresses.

But running through the talk there was a vein of skepticism, of concern. The ministers were not willing to give unqualified support to the mayor until they had further reassurance of his fundamental sincerity and steadfast purpose.

Within thirty seconds from the moment he arose to speak Mr. Thompson had given absolute certification of his sincerity and strength of purpose. His manner was quiet and self-contained. He burned all his bridges behind him. Most of the ministers were surprised at the strength of purpose evidenced by his well-seasoned words, and in their enthusiasm were again and again brought to their feet shouting and waving their hats.

One of the mayor's expressions, spoken quietly after he had voiced a castigating indictment of the leader of the "Wet" forces, was this simple word, "The fight is on!" It was a signal for another demonstration. The mayor explained that he had given no orders for drastic police action against the violators of his orders, preferring to give the saloon men a fair chance to show that they would voluntarily obey the law, but he declared that it was his purpose to cumulatively increase the penalty with all the powers of his office until the law should be absolutely obeyed.

It was a great day for the law-respecting forces of Chicago and of the nation. For this action of Chicago's mayor marks a great stage forward in the advance of prohibition and in the respect for law throughout our land.

THE DISCIPLES HUMILIATED

HAS THERE ever anything more stultifying to the Disciples of Christ than the agitation now being made in certain quarters to inhibit the cooperation of Disciple ministers and churches in union evangelistic meetings?

If that agitation were based upon the character of evangelistic methods that obtain in such meetings many could honestly share in it, The Christian Century among the rest.

But the basis of it is the union characteristic of the meetings, and the contention is made that Disciples of Christ cannot participate in such meetings without compromising their convictions!

Here, for example, is a situation in a Kansas town. The ministers of the city drew up a declaration of their own unity, interpreting their differences as subordinate to the fundamental faith they all shared in common. The well-phrased declarations of unity were as follows:

1. That we stand together on the practical, vital doctrine of the Protestant Christian faith.
2. That while we differ in some points in doctrine and church polity, these differences are only such as enable us to accord to each other equality of grace, merit and salvation.
3. That our differences of opinion in the matter of doctrine, church polity and mode of baptism do not affect or disparage the essentials of our individual salvation.
4. That the doctrine, church polity and mode of baptism practiced by each of our churches is such that all our people stand on equal footing before God in proportion as each follows the teachings of his own church and harmonizes his life with the spirit of Christ.

And the pastor of the church of Disciples refused to sign it!

Instead, he took the declarations as a text and preached a sermon on conversion and kindred themes and, according to his report, killed the union meeting!

The Disciples of Christ owe it not only to their reputation and their influence in the Christian world, but to their own integrity, to repudiate the spirit, the views and the conduct of that minister and of every minister who so grossly violates the ideals and purposes for whose realization they as a people exist.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

New Commission Launched.

The handling of community problems has often been turned over to independent and, in a measure, competing organizations. The religious work of the nation in its interdenominational aspects has had similar overlappings. Through the agency of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, there has been organized a Commission to bring interdenominational organizations into closer fellowship. In this commission there have been represented the Laymen's Missionary Movement, The International Sunday School Association, the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., the International Committee of the Y. W. C A., the Home Missions Council and other organizations of similar character.

Peace Subjects for Week of Prayer.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has sent out a list of suggested topics for the week of prayer which is held in the churches Jan. 2-9. A similar series of topics is being prepared for Passion Week. The idea is to unite the Christian forces of the country in prayer for world peace for two different weeks the coming year.

Bishop of Panama Agitated Over Protestant Visit.

The pastoral letter of the Bishop of Panama (Catholic) has been made public. The bishop calls attention to the fact that there is a synchronizing of the dates of Martin Luther's birth and the Latin-America Congress to be held in Panama in February. This is a mere coincidence of course. The bishop quotes the scriptures about wolves in sheep's clothing, and false prophets. High church Episcopalian journals affect to find in this pastoral a reason why the Congress should not be held at Panama.

Baptist Merger.

The union of the Baptists and the Free Baptists is proceeding gradually but surely. The latest step in the consummation of the plans for union has been the merging of the state missionary agencies in Maine recently. Maine is one of the states where Free Baptists have been relatively strong.

Quakers Help in War

The Society of Friends has protested throughout its entire history against the practice of war. In the present war, the members of this communion have not been willing to enlist. A number of English Friends, however, have enlisted for special service, that of mine-sweeping in the North Sea and the Dardanelles. This is regarded as the most dangerous of the various kinds of military service.

Will Furnish Missionary News.

Christians of the southland are not noted for their cooperation but they have recently gotten together in a common enterprise of real significance. Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians will furnish missionary news to secular papers and more than six hundred papers serving nine million readers will be served.

Methodists Will Visit Sixty Cities.

The Methodist Forward Movement plans to hold all-day meetings with eminent speakers in sixty of the leading cities of the country, beginning in October and ending in March. Bishop Henderson has the matter specially in charge and the resident bishop in each section will be at the meeting. The itinerary is nation-wide, except that certain sections of the south, in the territory of the southern branch of the church, will not be reached.

Yaun Shih Kai Makes Gift.

Yuan Shih Kai, the president of the Chinese republic, has made a gift of $2,000 to Pekin University, formerly Methodist, but now being reorganized on interdenominational lines. Presbyterians, Congregationalists and English, Episcopalians will co-operate in the management of the school henceforth.

Yuan Shih Kai, who has made a gift to an interdenominational school of China.

Pastors Go to War.

The entrance of Italy into war has resulted in considerable change in the personnel of the Methodist work in Italy. A number of the pastors are in the army and some have already been killed or wounded. Dr. Caccipuoti, a professor in Reader Theological School, was recently wounded at Sei Busi.

Starts a Wesley Club.

The leading Wesleyan layman of England is Sir Robert Perks. He has inaugurated a Wesley Club which will have headquarters at Central Hall, Westminster, London. It is proposed to make the reading room and the library a meeting place for all kinds of Methodists in all sections of the world. Methodist travelers going to London will be urged to visit the club.

Catholics Urge Social Service.

The great immigrant population of America, sixty per cent of which is Catholic, has been the most inviting field for social service in this country. The Roman Catholic church has carried on many of the older forms of philanthropy but has not done much "social service" in the newer meaning of the term. The Rev. Dr. Francis C. Kelley, president of the Catholic Church Extension Society, has recently expressed himself as disappointed that Catholics have not been more interested in social service activities. He urges that Catholics co-operate more in community enterprises.

Uses Display Advertising.

The churches of Mason City, Iowa, have joined in a unique community campaign to enlist the whole population for the church. A visitation of the whole city will be made house to house and this is being preceded by quarter page display ads in the city papers, outlining the purposes of the churches and their program in the city. The expense of the advertising and visitation is prorated among the cooperating congregations.

A PRAYER FOR INDIA

Where the mind is without fear and the head is held high;
Where knowledge is free;
Where the world has not been broken up into fragments by narrow domestic walls;
Where words come out from the depth of truth;
Where tireless striving stretches its arms toward perfection;
Where the clear stream of reason has not lost its way into the dreary desert sand of dead habit;
Where the mind is led forward by thee into ever-widening thought and action—
Into that heaven of Freedom, my Father, let my country awake.

—Rabindranath Tagore.

Give Credit for Bible Study.

The movement throughout the country for giving credit for Bible study is spreading. Birmingham, Ala., is the latest addition to the list of cities where the public school system has made arrangement to extend such credit for work done outside the school building. Previous to this credit was given for musical studies done at home and there was precedent therefore for the step.

Do Preachers Violate the Law?

Probably few ministers in the country are aware that the War Tax Act passed by the last Congress provides for a ten cent revenue stamp which shall be attached on all wedding certificates and shall be cancelled with the initials of the giver and the date. A penalty is imposed for the non-observance of the law. Probably many ministers have unwittingly violated the law, since but little publicity has been given to this provision.

Bishop Hartzell On His Retirement.

Bishop Hartzell who is soon to retire from active service in the episcopacy of the Methodist Episcopal church, writes with regard to his coming retirement because of advancing age. He states that he had prayed when he entered the service in Africa that he might be given twenty years of service there, and this is just about accomplished. He suggests a change of districting for the Methodists which would relate the work of northern Africa and southern Europe under one bishop.

Christmas Presents for Lepers.

There are two leper colonies in the United States, one in Massachusetts and the other in Louisiana. In the Philippines are to be found 3,600 of these unfortunate people. The Mission to the Lepers is asking the Christian world to provide Christmas presents for all the lepers under the stars and stripes. They have appointed the well-known publisher Fleming H. Revell to receive the contributions. The office of the Mission to the Lepers is at 158 Fifth avenue, New York.

Reformation for Greek Orthodox Church.

There is much agitation in Greece for a change in government of the church. At present the secular government controls the situation, and the King is the official head of the church. The bishops are seeking a separation of the church from state control. It is the purpose at the end of this world war to present the whole situation to the Patriarch at Constantinople, the leading figure of Eastern Orthodoxy, and undertake a settlement.

Dr. Zwemer on Pan-Islam.

Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, missionary from Cairo, Egypt, spoke at Fifth Avenue church of the Presbyterians in New York recently to a very large audience. He said the war had dissipated the scare about a Pan-Islamic uprising against Christians. The "holy war" that was proclaimed from Constantinople was "made in Germany," he declared. Dr. Zwemer will return to Egypt to resume his work this fall.

JOASH REPAIRS THE TEMPLE.

Golden Text: God loveth a cheerful giver. II Corinthians 9:7.

Lesson II Kings 11:21-12:16; verses 12:-4-15 printed. Memorize verse 9.

(4) And Jehoash said to the priests, All the money of the hallowed things that is brought into the house of Jehovah, in current money, the money of the persons for whom each man is rated, and all the money that it cometh into any man's heart to bring into the house of Jehovah, (5) let the priests take it to them, every man from his acquaintance; and they shall repair the breaches of the house, wheresoever any breach shall be found. (6) But it was so, that in the three and twentieth year of King Jehoash the priests had not repaired the breaches of the house. (7) Then King Jehoash called for Jehoiada the priest, and for the other priests, and said unto them, Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? now therefore take no more money from your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house. (8) And the priests consented that they should take no more money from the people, neither repair the breaches of the house.

(9) But Jehoiada the priest took a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of Jehovah: and the priests that kept the threshold put therein all the money that was brought into the house of Jehovah. (10) And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that the king's scribe and the high priest came up, and they put up in bags and counted the money that was found in the house of Jehovah. (11) And they gave the money that was weighed out into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of Jehovah; and they paid it out to the carpenters and the builders, that wrought upon the house of Jehovah, (12) and to the masons and the hewers of stone, and for buying timber and hewn stone to repair the breaches of the house of Jehovah, and for all that was laid out for the house to repair it. (13) But there were not made for the house of Jehovah cups of silver, snuffers, basins, trumpets, any vessels of gold, or vessels of silver, of the money that was brought into the house of Jehovah; (14) for they gave that to them that did the work, and repaired therewith the house of Jehovah. (15) Moreover they reckoned not with the men, into whose hand they delivered the money to give to them that did the work; for they dealt faithfully.

Verse by Verse.

4. Jehoash. This is another form of Joash, see 11:12, and 2 Chron. 22:11.—All the money of the hallowed things. This includes all things used for sacred purposes. Gold and silver were valued by weight.—In current money. Money was not coined but weighed, and valued in this way.—The money of the persons for whom each man is rated. The money paid for the redemption of vows. The Heb. Each man the money of the souls of his estimation, RVm.—The money that cometh into any man's heart to bring. This was a voluntary offering. Lev. 22:18.

5. Let the priests take it to them, every man from his acquaintance. Each should go among the people to whom he was best known, is perhaps the best rendering.—They shall repair the breaches. Years of neglect and the hand of time had caused the walls to crack and crumble and the timbers to decay.—The house. Temple.

6. The three and twentieth year. We have not means of knowing just how long the work was delayed, but it was long enough to cause the king to take the initiative.—The priests had not repaired. They were dilatory and neglectful, and had not kept up the temple. There is need of repairing some of our modern temples.

7. Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? With the decay of the house, the offerings had decreased. The priests had become formal and professional causing religion among the people to halt. We need to guard the same tendency.—Take no more money from your acquaintances. They were not to go through the land collecting money, but the people were to bring it when they came to worship.

8. The priests consented. They surrendered the offerings and were glad to get rid of the responsibility. The king's authority aided in this consent.

9. Took a chest. A simple device for a treasury.—Beside the altar. The brazen altar of burnt offerings outside the temple.

10. They saw that there was much money in the chest. The weight of the chest indicated how much was in it. Probably enough to repair the temple.—The king's scribe. Or, secretary, RVm. A man representing the state.—The high priest. The title was applied to Aaron and Eleazar, but we do not find it used again until now.—Put up in bags. Hebrew, bound up and, RVm.—Counted the money. The bags were weighed and thus valued.

11. The hands of them that did the work. The secretary and high priest gave the money to the overseers or superintendents and they in turn gave to the workmen their wages.—Paid it out. Hebrew, brought it forth. RVm. To the workmen on the temple repairs.

12. To. . . carpenters. . . masons, etc. Labor is thus dignified, for the sacred money goes to pay the mechanics who work on the temple. For buying timber and hewn stone. This as well as other expressions show to what extent the temple had fallen into decay.

13. There were not made. The repairs were first completed with the money thus collected. After this work was finished the furnishings were made, see 2 Ch. 24:14.—Trumpets. Clarions. The special word for the silver trumpets of the priests used at sacred festivals.

14. Repaired therewith the house of Jehovah. This states the consummation of the work of repairing the temple.

15. They reckoned not. There was no auditing committee needed. Read 2 Kings 22:7.—They dealt faithfully. How beautiful it all goes when we have cheerful givers and good workmen in and on the temple of God.

Repairing the Temple

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

Time and neglect had caused the temple to decay. The decay of the temple marked the decline of faith. Dilapidated churches always indicate a lack of spirituality. These Levites failed because they had but little interest in what the temple really stood for in the life of the people. They were indifferent to the highest values, and unmindful of the soul's need of a spiritual religion. Indifference is the wintry blast that freezes the flowers of faith, and causes the leaves to fall from the tree of life. Joash and the temple. The temple at Jerusalem had been the nursery as well as a sanctuary of Joash when a child in hiding from the cruel Athaliah, and now he was zealous for its honor. He signalized his otherwise ordinary career by laying this matter to heart, and taking it thoroughly in hand. He counseled with Jehoiada. He incited the hesitating priests. He called forth the energy of the people. He would not let any slackness on the part of those who should have been eager and diligent, constitute a hindrance to the work. It was Judah's duty to protect and preserve the temple. Joash gave ample time for the successful working of his first plan, then he quickly unfolded his second, which was as simple as it was effective. In commanding that the temple should be repaired, Joash directed how the funds should be obtained and disbursed for the work. Every piece of money was strictly accounted for by the king. This is in marked contrast to former servants of the people who rather kept the people in ignorance for their deeds were evil. It would be a fine lesson for the public servants of our day to take to heart.

Heredity did very little to form a noble character for Joash. It was true then as it is true today, that Joash was the acorn and he must be the oak. His environment was the strong factor in the formation of his character. This has always been true, although we have not always recognized it. He had a good counselor, who gave him godly instruction. Jehoiada saved his life in infancy. To him he owed his instruction in boyhood. He enjoyed the sustaining help of the best and most faithful of friends in the godly priest Jehoiada. It is quite possible that the priest did not realize how much he was doing for his country in protecting and guiding the early footsteps of Joash. How do we know to what extent our influence helps make for manhood and womanhood? The whole course of a life may be changed in a single recitation. It may be a word or deed that releases the latent energy of some life, and starts that soul up the ladder of fame. The service may seem insignificant at the time, but when measured by the influence of a noble life there is no estimating the value of such service to the world. Emerson said, "The greatest enterprise in the world for splendor, for extent, is the upbuilding of a man." "After all the rest is said, the crowning glory of any city is its men, who make every other excellence possible," writes E. E. Brown. It is the joy of the Bible-school to be engaged in this sublime enterprise.

It is certain that more minds rust out than wear out. We are capable of larger mental life than we realize. Dr. Thorndike, of Columbia University, lately asserted that the human mind needed no rest save in sleep. He agrees with the late Prof. James of Harvard who said, "The more the mind does, the more it can do."

Dr. Ainslie Suffering from Pneumonia.

Report comes that Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Christian Temple, Baltimore, has been suffering from a severe attack of pneumonia since Oct. 12. He is reported as "improved but not yet out of danger." The high esteem in which Dr. Ainslie is held by his community is indicated by the following editorial which appeared in the Baltimore Sun: "A great many people outside of his own congregation learned yesterday with deep regret of the serious illness of the Rev. Dr. Peter Ainslie, pastor of the Christian Temple. Dr. Ainslie is not a divine who has been in the habit of posing in the limelight, or of figuring as a leader in local movements unconnected with his special religious work, but he has built a monument to his energy and enthusiasm in the church and large congregation which his labors have created out of almost nothing. His sincerity and earnestness have deeply impressed all who have been thrown with him, and the cause of religion has been strengthened by his simple piety and unaffected devotion to the faith to which his life has been consecrated. Dr. Ainslie carried the creed of the Prince of Peace to what he considered its logical conclusion, and he never has failed, in season or out of season, to protest against the abominations of war. A quiet but strong and inspiring influence for good, he is one of the men whom Baltimore can ill afford to lose."

H. H. Peters is Stricken.

H. H. Peters, of First church, Paris, Ill., was stricken with facial paralysis two weeks ago and left at once for Chicago to enter the Dr. Hindsdale sanitarium. His condition is alarming and it is uncertain how soon he will be able to return to assume his duties at the church. The stroke came suddenly on Sunday, when he lost control of the left side of his face. As soon as his condition was realized his two physicians ordered immediate rest and hospital treatment.

Central School, Indianapolis, Has Record Attendance for City.

The largest Sunday School attendance ever reached in Indianapolis is reported from Central Church school, of which organization Geo. P. Harvey is superintendent, and A. B. Philputt, pastor. There were present 1268 on Oct. 10. The school has an average attendance of about 700. That the work of the superintendent is appreciated by the school is indicated by the fact that a fine gold watch was presented to him on this record Sunday. This school has three large organized classes taught by Mrs. Samuel Ashby, Judge U. Z. Wiley and Dr. Philputt. There are over fifty teachers in charge of classes.

Christian Ministers' Alliance of Kansas City To Meet.

The October meeting of the Alliance will be held on Monday, Oct. 25, in First church, at 10:30 a. m. George H. Combs will read a paper on "Church Publicity," and general discussion will follow. The paper and the associations will be well worth the while of any preacher who can reach the city at that time. There were fifty in attendance a month ago. These meetings are held the last Monday in each month.

Pastor Discusses "Ideal Minister."

Walter M. White, of First Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., in a recent feature sermon, tried to forget that he was a preacher and described his "ideal minister." Here is Mr. White's picture: "There are five characteristics I would have my minister to possess: First, he must be a godly man. In the midst of men everywhere I would have him to be known and felt as 'God's man.' Second, he must be sympathetic. I would not want one callous spot upon him. I would have him to be an 'easy mark,' touched by every story of human suffering and need. Third, 'He would be unafraid.' Like his divine master, the fire of his soul would blaze into hot anger on occasions. And he would denounce without fear or favor. Fourth, my minister would be a shepherd. Of all the beautiful pictures of Christ none, to our mind, is so beautiful as the one which represents him as 'the good shepherd.' Like his master, I would have him to be my shepherd. Fifth, my minister must be a man of vision. He must have eyes to see, ears to hear, a heart to feel, and a brain to know. He must be my leader and show me all the kingdoms of this world and of the world to come."

Dr. Peter Ainslie, who is reported ill with pneumonia.

$35,000 Church for Winnipeg.

It is proposed to build a $35,000 home for the congregation of First Church, Winnipeg, as soon as the war closes. These people are now worshiping in an old building formerly owned by the Church of England. J. R. Blunt is serving the church as pastor. One accession is reported for Oct. 3.

New Church at Old Bethany Object of Widespread Interest.

The completion and dedication of the new house of worship at Bethany, W. Va., marks the realization of one more dream of the leaders of Bethany College and the community made famous and dear to all Disciples of Christ by the historic association of Thomas and Alexander Campbell with its life for nearly a half century. The new house costing $40,000 was made possible by local gifts supplemented by gifts from many states of the Union. It is described as a beautiful and commodious structure of tapestry brick laid in black cement mortar, roker joints and covered with Spanish red tile. The building is of Tudor Gothic architecture. It has 20 class rooms and will accommodate, according to the architect, 1,000 persons. There are memorial windows to Thos. and Alexander Campbell, W. K. Pendleton, Robert Richardson, J. W. McGarvey, Isaac Errett, Robert Milligan, Barton W. Stone, Walter Scott, C. L. Loos and others of more recent date. The building committee was composed of President T. E. Cramblett, of Bethany College; Dr. J. J. Morgan, pastor of the church; Prof. E. Lee Perry, Prof. W. B. Taylor and John Gibson. F. M. Rains conducted the dedication services.

Finis Idleman Accepts New York Work.

Announcement was made recently in the churches of the Disciples' Missionary Union of New York, that Finis S. Idleman had resigned the pastorate of Central Christian church of Des Moines, Iowa, on October 10, to accept the call of the Central church of Disciples of Christ, 142 West 81st St., Manhattan. Mr. Idleman is forty years of age and a graduate of Eureka College and University of Chicago. He has preached for the Des Moines church for nine years and has had a place of active leadership in the life of that city. During the recent "Billy" Sunday campaign over 600 converts united with his church. Mr. Idleman is a special lecturer to the divinity students at Drake University. He is an active member of the Christian Unity Commission of the Disciples and has met frequently with representatives of other communions in the interest of Christian union. The Central church on West 81st St., to which Mr. Idleman will come on Jan. 1, 1916, is the oldest church of the Disciples of Christ, having been founded in 1810. The present pastor is Dr. James M. Philputt, who has been serving as acting-minister for the past year. The membership is made up largely of former members of churches from the west and south. Dr. Philputt is promoting a number of progressive plans in anticipation of the coming of the new minister. Hon. W. H. Olmsted, former Justice of the Court of Special Session, is President of the Board of Trustees of the church.

Brings Dead Churches to Life.

Granville Snell, district evangelist of Northwest Missouri, has put the breath of life into a number of dead churches, and set them to work He is following the apostolic custom of "setting things in order." He goes among the country churches which are pastorless or closed up and starts them going again. There are now ten of these resurrected churches in his district. Mr. Snell recently spent two weeks at Converse, where worships a part of the historic Haynesville congregation for which Moses E. Lard preached his first sermon. Twenty additions were reported, and the church will now secure a pastor.

Lathrop, Mo., Church Building.

The congregation at Lathrop, Mo., to which Baxter Waters ministers, is building a new edifice which, when completed in December, will be one of the finest small town churches in northwest Missouri. Mr. Waters is now in his sixth year as pastor. A feature of the Lathrop work is a C. W. B. M. auxiliary of 120 members.

Rural Church Institute in Indiana.

An institute for rural church workers will be held in the church at Advance, Ind., November 15-19 inclusive. This school will be for all pastors, Sunday-school superintendents, teachers, elders, deacons and every one who belongs to a rural church. Some of the members of the faculty for this school will be: John W. Street, O. E. Kelley, Grant K. Lewis, Robert M. Hopkins, C. W. Cauble, at least two specialists on rural life from Purdue University, Garry L. Cook and others. There will be courses in agriculture, domestic science, church finance, Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor, eldership, etc., etc. Advance is an ideal place to hold the institute. The church under the direction of O. E. Kelley has met the needs of the prosperous rural community. The Advance church will entertain all visitors.

New Pasadena, Cal., Church Prospers.

The first annual business meeting of the Washington church, Pasadena, was held two weeks ago. While the charter for the new church was not issued until late in January, the work began in December, so that the reports cover a period of ten months. In that brief time a lot has been purchased, an attractive bungalow church has been erected, a Bible-school organized and the church membership has more than doubled. The reports show that $3,004 were raised for all purposes during the ten months. W. C. Hull leads in this work.

Corner Stone Laid at Peoria, Central.

The corner stone of the new home of Central church, Peoria, Ill,. was laid Oct. 10, Homer E. Sala, the pastor, having charge of the ceremonies. F. Lewis Starbuck, pastor at Howett St. church, delivered the sermon of the occasion. The new building is beginning to show what its finished form will be. Practically all the interior will be of steel, the girders and cross-beams for the galleries and main floor being already set. Placing of the stone trim has progressed rapidly and it is expected the structure will be gotten under roof within a short time. The building will be modern in every detail when finished, with a seating capacity of 1,200.

Laymen Testify at Federated Church.

Evangelist William J. Lockhardt, pastor of the Urbandale Federated church, Des Moines, has recently promoted a laymen's campaign. The plan was for a layman each evening during the week of the campaign to bring an evangelistic message of his own life's experience as a Christian. After these testimonies the pastor followed with a twenty minute talk and the invitation.

C. C. Chapman Addresses Business Men.

Charles C. Chapman, well known orange grower and capitalist of Fullerton. Cal., delivered an address to the business men of Pasadena, Wednesday night, at the First Christian Church on "Christ in the Daily Life." The attendance was large and the speaker's remarks were received with enthusiasm.

A Hundred Disciple Freshmen at Purdue

Prof. E. H. Clarke, of Purdue University, reports that in the Freshman class at Purdue this year there are exactly one hundred students who are members of the Christian church or give it their preference. To be exact, there are seventy-on members and twenty-nine preferences; there are fourteen women and eighty-six men.

Donovan, Ill., Church Helps Clean Up City.

This church began its new year October 1. A month previously the election was held and a board chosen. A dinner together was a feature of the day. President H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka, was a chief speaker. A local paper says that Mr. Pritchard delivered the best sermon ever preached from the pulpit. The past year at Donovan, under the ministry of Guy L. Zerby, shows progress. Electric lights have been installed in the church. The congregation has shown a vital interest in the community life and problems. Owing to its influence a young people's week was observed at the New Year's season which resulted in a civic organization of the young people of Donovan that has cleared the rubbish from the town, distributed free flower seeds, etc. Inspired by a special service held for them the business men are now forming an association which will mean much. A great union picnic was recently held, 235 sitting down at the common table. The Sunday-school has adopted graded courses in the Primary and Junior departments. A live C. W. B. M. is growing in membership and influence. Probably the best service of the church has been in its missionary offerings and the missionary educational campaign that has been earnestly carried on by Superintendent Behlke, of the Sunday-school. The church has heretofore done only a little missionary work and that all for foreign missions. This year offerings have been sent to ten boards and the offering to foreign work increased.

Ministerial Relief Comes Up to Mr. Long's Conditions and Gets His Gift of $6,000.

W. R. Warren, secretary of the Ministerial Relief board, reports that the books closed Oct. 1, with $39,738 in receipts for the year, a gain of $52.41 over last year. The income was large enough to claim the full amount of $6,000 conditionally pledged by Mr. R. A. Long. There are now 124 names on the pension roll, an increase of thirteen for the year.

THE WAY THAT LEADS BACK HOME.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

Out from the noisy town it leads,
Where malice and deceit are rife;
Out from the realm where pride is queen,
Where men contend in heartless strife.
No voice disturbs the quietness
Which thrills me as again I roam
By flowery fields, a boy again,
And seek the way that leads back home.

The robin choir glad welcome gives,
Clear calling in their lofts of green;
The melody of singing brooks
Is mingled with the summer sheen.
'Mid quiet vales my way leads on,
Through aisles of emerald and chrome,
Foretelling joys soon to be mine,—
For 'tis the way that leads back home.

Let those who will, leave homely paths
To find heart's ease in lands afar;
Let those who will, contentment seek
On rolling sea, 'neath alien star;
But give to me, I humbly ask,
The joy I know as, through the gloam,
I turn from all the world can give
To seek the way that leads back home.

Hamilton O., Church Celebrates.

October 10 was an interesting day in the High Street church of Christ, Hamilton, O. The morning was devoted to a Bible-school rally which began at 10:00 o'clock. The adult division met in the main auditorium and was addressed by William P. Rogers, of the Cincinnati Law School. The Junior and Primary departments were addressed by Miss Hazel Lewis. About 500 were present at the rally. The evening service was a special anniversary convocation celebrating the completion of seven years of the pastorate of Charles R. Sine. The church building was crowded and people were turned away. The Lindenwald church had a large delegation present, with the pastor, Craig W. Schwartz, who took part in the services. The pastor spoke on the work of the past seven years. Each year has shown a steady growth and in spite of the disastrous flood of 1913 the church today is stronger in membership, organization, and workers than any period in its history. This year the church has excelled all records in its gifts to missions and has already paid all its apportionments in full. A vote was taken at the convocation and it was found that, of the members present, 70 per cent had come into the fellowship of the church during the past seven years. There has been a heavy loss through removals but the resident membership reaches about 550, with a large number on the non-resident list. Missions have been established in different parts of the city. Lindenwald church was organized in 1902 and is in a most prosperous condition. Eleven years later Coke Otto church was organized (three days before the flood which covered the entire district) and has a splendid building. Last year another lot was purchased and a building will be erected this year, if possible.

R. P. Shepherd Scores Churches for Money Waste.

The chief speaker at the recent meeting of the Marion Co., Ind., Sunday-school Association, held at Central church, Indianapolis, was R. P. Shepherd. He discussed "Organization for Efficiency Conquest."

"We are running the Lord's work in this country in the most costly and inefficient way." Mr. Shepherd declared. "It costs $389, on an average, for every convert to the church in the United States. The results we are obtaining are in no way commensurate to the effort being made. There are too many organizations and no coherence of definite organization. I know this is the opinion of many pastors. The Sunday-school forces are the only active forces in the church at the present time, for people are beginning to take their religion more and more in a flippant and casual manner, but the Sunday-school is creating most of the church's acute and aggravating problems, and I don't care how soon it goes out of existence as an institution. Our work is not to save the saints who wouldn't go to hell anyway, or to reach the Christian families, but to touch, with constructive religious teaching, those untouched by religious influence. We've got to reach the home first. We can't build a Christian civilization on pagan home life. We must personalize our work—don't teach lessons, teach folk—teach them how to embody in thought, emotion and conduct the will of Christ."

Quincy, Ill., Church in Attendance Campaign.

The church at Quiney, Ill., W. D. Endres, pastor, has begun an attendance campaign which will run for eight Sundays, closing on the Sunday after Thanksgiving A record will be made of those attending the services at the church, the church school and the Endeavor society, and those who have a perfect record will constitute an honor roll. During the eampaign the pastor will deliver a series of sermons on the general theme: "The Work of the Church." The subjects of the eight sermons are as follows: "Why Attend Public Worship?" "Instruction in Christianity." "Mid-week and C. E. Prayer Meetings." "Personal Faith in Christ." "The Limits of the Field." "The Laborer and his Hire." "The Year Crowned With Goodness." "The Measure of Success."

Mt. Sterling, Ill., Sunday-school in Rapid Growth.

Allen T. Shaw, who went from Macomb to Mt. Sterling, a year ago, is a Sunday-school pastor. That fact is indicated by the report of attendance in the school October 10. Over six hundred were present, the largest attendance in the history of the school. Mr. Shaw has a hustling business men's class which recently averaged 105 for six successive Sundays. The Mt. Sterling pastor begins his second year's work at an increased salary. The year's reports show that this church raised $3.000 during the year for local work. All bills are paid and money is in the treasury. Mr. Shaw has recently delivered his lecture on "Peace vs. War" at Timewell, Versailles and Ripley.

Chattanooga Pastor to Stick to Post.

Ira M. Boswell, of Chattanooga, Tenn., who was tendered the pastorate of First church, Georgetown, Ky., has declined the offer, deciding to remain in Tennessee, where he has had charge for the last twelve years.

BRIEFER NEWS NOTES.

—In a vigorous sermon dealing with local conditions in Terre Haute, J. Boyd Jones told his Central church Sunday evening congregation that he had visited the red-light district and found conditions apparently improved there. One-half of the houses had "for rent" signs, he reported. Mr. Jones spoke drastically about a certain kind of "pink tea preacher who reads essays to handsful of people on Sunday nights."

—E. E. Violett who is now in the midst of a successful meeting with the Central Church, Pueblo, Colorado, will conduct a meeting for the church at Plymouth, Penn., in November.

—The postmaster at Cincinnati was invited to be present at "the largest Sunday-school he ever attended," by Pastor C. R. Stauffer, of Norwood church, Cincinnati, on Rally Day. He came and made a speech.

—The annual convention of First District of Oklahoma was held at Pryor, Oct. 11-13, where Byron Hestor is pastor.

—First Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., has asked for the State convention of Disciples which is to be held in June.

—C. T. Stevens, pastor at Beatrice, Neb., First church, was the chief speaker at the Founders' Day Exercises at Cotner University early this month. His topic was "The College Man and His Country."

—Frank G. Tyrrell, recently elected pastor of First Church, Pasadena, Calif., spoke at South Pasadena on Oct. 11 at a meeting held under the auspices of the Committee of One Hundred, which is organizing the citizens of the town for civic bettermen.

—The Mackinaw, Ill. Church recently celebrated the seventy-eighth anniversary of its organization. S. W. Crabtree is the pastor. Not one of the four hundred persons present could claim connection with the first days of the church —At the fiftieth anniversary of the church at Centralia, Ill., J. F. Rosborough, of Salem, was the principal speaker. He spoke on the theme, "Backward or Forward—Which?"

INDIANAPOLIS ITEMS.

Dr. R. P. Shepherd was the chief speaker at the county Sunday-school convention held in Indianapolis last week. E. LeRoy Dakin, recently of Chicago Memorial, now of Logansport Baptist church, was another prominent speaker.

H. Clay Trusty is in a splendid meeting at Zionsville; 31 additions so far.

Central church broke all records in Sunday-school attendance for any and all Indianapolis churches on Oct. 10, with 1,263 present. This was the second time the record was broken, as Third church turned the trick two weeks before, with 1,217 in attendance.

E. L. Day, of North Side, gave a splendid paper on "The Church and the Moving Picture Show" at the recent ministers' meeting.

I am much pleased with my new field and delighted with the fellowship of our Indianapolis preachers and teachers. I will have the pleasure of teaching "The Message of Jesus to Our Modern Life" in the city Y. M. C. A. this winter, and also the pleasure of co-operating with the work at Bethany settlement house which is within walking distance of the church.

COMMENTS OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

St. Louis Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents.

The Christian Intelligencer (Reformed)
The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal.

Zion's Herald (Methodist, Boston)
Dr. Morrison who is editor of The Christian Century, a national organ of the Disciples of Christ—a denomination which believes in immersion—handles with utmost frankness the position of his own denomination relative to baptism. The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of this leading publication in that denomination. Dr. Morrison's work is frankly done, and while arousing, doubtless, some criticism among those of his own denomination and the close communion remnant still to be found in certain localities, will be heartily received as a genuine contribution toward Christian unity.

The Advance (Congregationalist)
We commend this book to pastors who find the baptismal question up for discussion in the parishes. It is a strong contribution to the literature of the subject and we believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt. We do not think it possible for them permanently to hold to close baptism without going the whole length of the Baptists and join close communion to it.

The Epworth Herald (Methodist)
While not agreeing with all the statements made it is about the most interesting book on the subject I have seen. The author is master of good, clear English and knows how to express himself.

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination)
He presents his thought from a new and interesting standpoint. We wish it might be read by all Disciples, all Christians, all Baptists, and in fact by all denominations—it will have a moulding effect as to one's opinions of baptism. The Disciples' themselves will likely get the most good from the book. Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God.

The Continent (Presbyterian)
It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity for immersion, and he writes that "the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever, stands behind the practice of immersion." Instead, in the New Testament, baptism simply means the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian. He is strongly against demanding the rebaptism of Christian believers who apply to Baptist or Disciples churches for membership having been accepted in other churches by any mode of baptism whatever. Equally he opposes infant baptism, because the subject of baptism must be voluntary. At the root of his argument lies a sound desire for Christian unity.

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren)
The author is clear and candid, brave and kind in performing the task to which he assigned himself. . . . As we view the real meaning of this new interpretation of baptism it involves a complete abandonment of the dogma of immersion, and may lead to a new adjustment of attitude on that subject on the part of other immersionist bodies. At any rate, the significance of the work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement.

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist)
Dr. Morrison belongs to what might be called the younger school of Disciples who have the discretion and the will to approach the members of other churches, not with the club of intolerance and pseudo-omniscience, but with the open hand of intellectual catholicity and good will. . . . The propaganda could not wish for a leader more truly representative. A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few. This book gives one evidence. The significant fact is that the author is a member of an immersion church, once commonly called "Campbellites," and while he holds to immersion as the correct mode of baptizing, yet he declares, "It would be too much to say, dogmatically, that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." The book is well worth reading, not only for its scholarly treatment of the question of baptism, which is satisfactory, but as an example of true liberality in modern church life, a liberality which is not degrading and flat, but catholic, appreciative and noble.

The Christian Endeavor World.
A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view but building a bridge toward the affusionist view.

The Congregationalist
A daring and splendidly Christian piece of work is "The Meaning of Baptism," by Charles Clayton Morrison, in which the author frankly asserts that Jesus "had no intention of fixing a physical act upon his followers. He did not have in mind the form of baptism but the meaning of it." Nevertheless, for historic reasons he recommends retaining the form of immersion.

The Baptist Banner
A new book of more than ordinary interest. It is learned, and is written in excellent spirit and fine style. It is eminently suggestive and well worth the price and a careful reading.

The Christian Observer (Presbyterian)
It is a courageous man who will undertake to write a book on the subject of baptism in this age of the world . . . This book has stirred up considerable controversy in the writer's church. By many he is regarded as a heretic and is abused accordingly. However, in other respects the author is true to Disciples' sentiments. The chief value of the book lies in the author's contention that New Testament baptism is not tied to any physical act, but is "the spiritual, social act of self-commitment and self-consecration by the individual and his induction into the church." This idea, by the way, is very forcefully expressed in an old document that was formulated by the Westminster Assembly more than two centuries and a half ago when they said, "Baptism is a sacrament. . . whereby the parties baptized are solemnly admitted into the visible church and enter into an open and professed engagement to be wholly and only the Lord's."

The Standard (Baptist)
The argument throughout is good and there are conclusions that are worthy of careful consideration.

The Christian Union Quarterly (Disciple)
The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines. . . However one may differ from the author there is much in this book to be commended from both the Baptist and paedo-baptist sides of the house.

The Churchman (Episcopal)
Under the title "The Meaning of Baptism," Mr. C. C. Morrison has given an interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism. The Disciples, to whose fellowship Mr. Morrison belongs, practice rebaptizing for those who have not been immersed. Mr. Morrison is not in sympathy with this position. He shows that baptism by immersion has figured little in the divisions of the church and will doubtless likewise figure little in its unity.

Baptist Standard (Dallas, Tex.)
This is a very interesting work, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this summer!

The Homiletic Review
A volume on this subject with an irenic purpose by the editor of The Christian Century is welcome. The position taken is that while immersion is the valid mode of baptism the doctrine or dogma "eclipses the great objective task of the church for large majorities of Disciples and Baptists." Baptism has its essence not in the mode of administration, but in that it means "the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian" (p. 193). While, then, the volume is a plea for the adoption of immersion as a mode universally recognized as regular, the practice of rebaptism with its implication that Presbyterians, Methodists and others are not Christians is to be reprobated. Members should pass freely from these other churches to those of Baptists and Disciples without calling into question or ignoring their status as already members of the Church of Christ.
The spirit of the book is delightful and raises new hopes where none had seemed possible.

The Presbyterian Advance
The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which often has been asked of him by correspondents and readers—"What is the best book on baptism?" . . . Against all who insist that immersion and immersion only is baptism this book provides an unanswerable argument.

The United Presbyterian
An unusual book. Written by a Disciple and the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion. He says the use of the word "baptizo," in its New Testament usage, refers primarily to the function of initiation and only incidentally to the particular [physical] act.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity —several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Volume XXXII OCTOBER 28, 1915 Number 43

Numbers

ARE NUMBERS A TEST OF SUCCESS IN THE WORK OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST?

Yes and no.

Certainly a church that despises numbers, that goes on the complacent assumption that numbers of hearers, numbers of inquirers, numbers of converts, are not to be expected nor sought for, thereby discloses its lack of one of the fundamental impulses of the Christian gospel.

Our Christianity is inherently a missionary religion, an evangelistic religion. The supreme commission given by the Lord of the Christian Church bade his followers go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. The mind of Christ could tolerate no plan that limited his religion to an esoteric or exclusive group. It was for all men.

When Christianity loses its conquering spirit, its militant impulse, that is to say, its passion for numbers, it loses its character as Christianity.

Moreover, we may be certain that the failure of any Christian group to get numbers, to actually grow by the winning of converts, makes a strong presumption that there is something fundamentally wrong either in the character of the Christianity which that group embodies or in the methods it uses to proclaim its message.

Allowing for variations in times and circumstances, allowing for the sometimes slow processes of education required to bring the gospel message to fruition in the hearts of men, it remains unqualifiedly true that a church that does not in the long run grow in numbers is lacking in something that is of the very essence of the Christian faith.

But from this it does by no means follow that a church that does grow, a church that commands great crowds, that boasts no empty pews, and that receives many converts is on that account a Christian success.

It may be a Christian success, but again it may be an even greater failure than the church that does not seem to grow.

Here is the point at which the number standard is deceptive as a test of success in church life.

The presence of numbers may be due to some cause quite irrelevant to the purpose for which the Church of Christ exists.

Even numbers of converts do not indicate a Christian success. For these converts may be converted to various things, all of them quite irrelevant to the Truth that saves the soul.

The most deplorable and vicious tendency in modern Church life is the unreligious craze for numbers.

Many pastors, restless and burdened with the fact of empty church houses, and with the sense of the hollowness of their church life, and lacking both the humility and the courage to re-think their problem in the light of the mind of Christ, have plunged into an orgy of sensationalism to get a crowd. They have turned their churches into amusement centers in which religion is but a collateral, or in many cases an incidental, consideration.

And they have their reward.

They get the crowd.

And they think that because their church is organized in the name of religion, and their church house stands dedicated to the ideals of religion they can therefore assume that any thing—so long as it is not positively bad—that is done by that church and in that house will therefore have the value of religion.

But every man who is spiritually aware knows the fallacy and delusion that lurks in all this. The moment a church shifts its appeal from religion to anything else than religion—pure, straight-forward, unadulterated, serious-minded religion—that moment it ceases to be worthy of its name as a church of Christ.

No church of Christ has a Christian right to get a crowd into its house of worship under the auspices of a service of worship by any appeal other than an appeal directly to the religious nature of men.

A church that does so is guilty of a species of duplicity, which, while it seems to be amiably tolerated and even enjoyed by those who are its victims, is, nevertheless, in their heart of hearts, deeply resented.

And worse than this: the church that conceives its success as dependent upon the wit and versatility of its leaders in devising new appeals that will tickle an audience into assembling, loses at last its character and power as a constructive religious institution and becomes a mere social center whose nearest approach to a religious function is, perhaps, to march in an anti-saloon parade.

Our craze for numbers is cheapening the Church.

But it is doing much worse than that: it is changing the character of the Church from an organ of religion—the single social institution that stands for the construction of an inner life—to a social center for entertainment or, at the best, to an organ of specific social reform.

Our coarse vaudevillian revivalism now so widely prevalent, is tolerated by the modern Church just because the Church has so greatly changed its character.

And the usual justification of this revivalism on the ground that it gets "results," that is, numbers, is convincing even to the majority of the leaders of the Church just because they have abandoned the religious conception of their work.

The Kingdom of God waits today for the coming of one who can speak with arresting and prophetic voice a great word of rebuke and of illumination, calling the Church back from its hysterical chase for numbers to the construction of a spiritual message aimed directly at the spiritual nature of men.

A church possessing an inner life of its own and bearing its testimony to the Truth that it possesses, without apology or meretricious disguise, will get numbers without the use of artificial and non-religious attractions.

For God always sees to it that after men faithfully plant his Truth and patiently water it he himself richly gives abundant increase.

The Prayer-Life of Jesus

The Third of Four Studies of the Religion of Jesus Based on the Lord's Prayer.

BY FRANK WALLER ALLEN

INTRODUCTION: In its fullness one's religion has four different expressions. First, it is a creed: one must believe something. Second, it is a program: the abundant life is a planned life. Third, it is a prayer: one must seek to know and to harmonize one's self with the will of the Father. Lastly, it is an experience: for after all out of our contact with life and our interpretation of it, is born our philosophy. In these four studies it is my purpose to interpret the religion of Jesus—his creed, his program, his prayer, his experience—as it may be discovered through the medium of the prayer which he taught his disciples.

THE tendency of our times is to rationalize religion. It is right and wise to explain our religion in the terms of knowledge and experience.

On the other hand the danger of a pragmatic day is in refusing to recognize anything to be of value that cannot be understood. And yet to do this will be to make a mistake which will rob life of much that adds to its zest and adventure. Are we to go so far as to say that a thing does not exist or that it is of no value to life because it cannot be explained, because it is a mystery? Because we cannot explain death fully are we to ignore it? Is it not so that some of the gravest things with which we have to do, in a sense some of the most real things, belong to the unseen, the inexplainable? There is love itself, which, no matter how much we write scientific treatises about sex, still remains an inexplainable mystery in the midst of life.

Faith, however much it may have its beginnings in knowledge, ends in the unknown. It may be defined as being our vision of the unknown and, sometimes, the unknowable. No man has seen God and yet we sense him through faith. And here comes in this most wonderful essential of the religious life which we call prayer. To attempt to rationalize it fully is to fail. I believe in rationalizing it, as I do in rationalizing every manifestation of religion, as far as it may be explained in the terms of accepted knowledge, but to say that all there is to prayer is what I can explain to you is to fail to give utterance to its full value for life. Now there is love which you do not expect to be defined in the terms of words, and there is faith and there is hope from which no man can clear the mystery and the romance, therefore why prayer?

SOME EASY EXPLANATIONS.

It is easy to explain that prayer is a program in which you have quite as much a part in its carrying out as the Father whom you are petitioning. It is easy to explain that sometimes the greatest prayers are deeds and not words. It is easy to explain that if a prayer never reaches God's heart its influence upon you personally may be of marked value. It is easy to explain that there are some things for which one should not pray. It is easy to explain that prayer should be altruistic and for the spiritual gifts of life. It is easy to explain many of the minor details of the value of prayer and how to pray. But after all no man can explain the experience of companionship with God. And that seems to have been the climax of prayer with Jesus and with all great souls who have projected their personalities out of the known into the unknown because of faith and love.

Consequently more praying is going to be done on the part of the people when we come to realize that, notwithstanding our insistence on the practical, serviceable, understandable phases of life, it is worth while to admit that there are still left some great things we do not understand; some great things that we may understand better after a while than we do now; perhaps some great things that we may never understand.

> Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. And bring us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one.

PRAYER IS LISTENING TO GOD.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, with what might be termed practical mysticism, tells us that prayer is listening to God. Says he: "If God is to be to us the Great Companion, we must form the habit of listening to God. Prayer is something else than talking to God. It is something else than asking things of him which we expect to receive. I have heard prayer compared to a draft on a bank, which the holder presents, expecting to receive the money upon it. This is a very inadequate and unsatisfying interpretation of prayer. Prayer is communion with God. It is the intermingling of our life with his life. It involves listening to him as well as speaking to him. The answer to prayer is furnished not in things given, but in life imparted, in fellowship enjoyed, in counsel received, in uplifting, inspiring, life-giving influence. Prayer is living in the conscious presence of God."

Prayer is carrying to God our sins, and receiving forgiveness; our sorrows, and receiving his comfort; our weakness, and receiving his power. In prayer is the secret of that indefinable spiritual life which defies definition, description, interpretation, which can be felt by the possessor, the effect of which can be seen in his character, the nature of which cannot be explained by philosophy. "Spiritual power," says Canon Liddon, "may be felt rather than described or analyzed. . . It is an unearthly beauty, whose native home is in a higher world, yet which tarries among men from age to age, since the time when the Son of God left us his example and gave us his spirit. It is nothing else than his spiritual presence, mantling upon his servants; they live in him; they lose in him something of their proper personality; they are absorbed into, they are transfigured by, a life altogether higher, than their own; his voice blends with theirs; his eye seems to lighten theirs with its sweetness and its penetration; his hand gives gentleness and decision to their acts; his heart communicates a ray of its divine charity to their life of narrower and more stagnant affection; his soul commingles with theirs, and their life of thought and feeling and resolve is irradiated and braced by his."

PRAYER IS TO SEEK GOD'S WILL.

To pray is not to seek his alliance in our work, his strength for the accomplishment of our will; it is first of all to make our will tributary to his will, and ourselves sharers in his work. Therefore it is that the Master, in that prayer which he has given us, and which ought not to be a form but rather the secret and illustration of a spirit, bids us make our first petition, the very entrance door into the room of prayer, "Hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven." If one has not come into this spirit, he has not come into the spirit of prayer at all. If he has come into this spirit, he will wish to know what the Father's will is, and what he himself can do to hallow the Father's name and hasten the Father's kingdom.

In a lifetime one prays for many things, but with the most of us there is a ruling prayer, a devout passion, to which we return ever and anon when our better selves arise and dominate our actions. Jesus's prayer, as all prayers should, grew out of his work and his experience. It was truly a Christian prayer, in as much as he sought to do God's will in his life, and consequently prayed not for himself, but to know the will of God and to be able to do it.

PRAYER AND PUBPOSE.

Here again we cannot emphasize too strongly that the same words which form his prayer, form also a declaration of his purpose. Every one of Jesus' prayers is a program for men as well as a petition to God. He bade his disciples pray, "And pray ye the Lord of the harvests, that he would send forth laborers." And there the narrative continues, "These twelve Jesus sent forth." "Go ye" stands side by side with "Pray ye." When he said in Gethsemane, "Thy will be done," he was not uttering passive submission like helpless old Eli's, "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth good," or a grim resignation to the inevitable like the stoics: He rose from his knees, gave himself into custody, walking to the cross.

Even in his last prayer made in complete exhaustion, "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit," he himself carried out even in his last prayer. He placed his life in God's keeping and left it there with the calm assurance that it would be safely kept. We so often pray, "I commend," but instead of actually putting ourselves in God's hands, and leaving ourselves there, we expect our Father to drag us from ourselves when we continue self-conscious and self-willed. Jesus believed something with a perfect faith; he planned something that was to be his task; the secret of his faith and program and the potentialities of humanity lie in his consciousness that his Father, God, was his co-laborer.

The secret of prayer lies in "Thy will be done." Its true meaning—not submission, but consecration. "It is my will that Thy will be done."

Prayer is not the conquering of God's reluctance, but the taking hold of God's willingness.

"Thy will! it bids the weak be strong;
It bids the strong be just;
No lip to fawn, no hand to beg,
No brow to seek the dust.
Wherever man oppresses man
Beneath the liberal sun,
O Lord, be there, Thine arm made bare,
Thy righteous will be done!"

In the faith that, although life is a mystery, it is not a muddle, for God is in his world bringing order out of apparent chaos; in the reverence which trusts and obeys God, mingled with the affection which clings to him and rejoices in his world bringing order out of aphave a little share in God's work of healing, helping, conquering love, is found the secret of a courage which no dangers can daunt, a patience which no delays can exhaust, and a confidence which no disappointments can destroy.

And the source of it is companionship with God.

Present Day Revival Campaigns

BY CHARLES R. BROWN

IN HIS moderator's address at the opening of the Congregational Council at New Haven last week Dean Brown, of Yale Divinity School, devoted a section to modern revivalism, as follows:

"In certain cities we have seen spasms—I use this term advisedly and in its full strength—spasms of evangelistic effort. They have not always commended themselves to our sober judgment either by their form or their spirit or their results. We might for the sake of some greater good overlook the introduction into the pulpit of the slang of the gutter and the antics of the circus. These things are important, but they are secondary. But when it comes to irreverence and blasphemy in an age already flippant; when it comes to coarseness and vulgarity in dealing with human values altogether sacred; when it comes to teaching multitudes of unthinking children and adults conceptions of religion which are un-Scriptural and moral ideas which are untrue; when it comes to having religious work done and the religious appeal made in an intolerant, vindictive spirit toward those who hold divergent views touching evolution, or Biblical criticism, or social ethics, then we are not indifferent. These things are not secondary—they are primary.

"How far it is in moral distance from the spirit of the four Gospels to the spirit of one of those worked-up campaigns! How far it is from the spirit of him who went about doing good, envying oftentimes the foxes their holes and the birds of the air their nests in the consciousness that he had nowhere to lay his head—how far it is from that to the public exploitation of costly gifts from the altars of religion or the screwing up of what has been humorously called 'a free will offering'!

"I NEVER KNEW YOU."

"We were enjoined at the beginning not to allow ourselves to be stampeded by the showy appearance of success, but to look closely at the spirit and disposition which attended the effort. 'Many will say to me in that day'—not one here and one there, but many—'Many will say to me in that day, 'Have we not prophesied in thy name and in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? and then I will say unto them (because of the lack of a certain spirit and disposition) I never knew you."

"But it gets results! Yes, it gets results, all sorts of results; and some of those results make us pause. It is easy to tabulate the results which are instant and visible. It is not so easy to tabulate the deeper results which last. Here are a few questions to be answered by the intelligence and conscience of the community as it studies the effects of that sort of effort upon the life of a generation: Has the spiritual taste of the community been lowered and coarsened? Has the great work of religion been vulgarized in the minds of many? Has the quiet presentation of the truth after the method of the Master been discredited? Have thoughtful, discriminating men and women been pushed just a bit farther away from organized religion? Have boys and girls been confused in their moral judgments and in their conception of the Bible in such a way as to work havoc to their faith when the inevitable day of awakening comes? Have impressionable people been rushed through experiences which were supposed to represent repentance and faith, regeneration and consecration, only to find later that they had been roughly mishandled? Here are results to be added in when we cast up the debits and credits of such a campaign.

THE LONGER VIEW.

"The Master taught us to take the long view. In his eyes the religious worker was not a hustler, but a sower of seed. He deals with processes which are vital. He casts his seed into good soil. He waits patiently for the early and the latter rain from heaven. He allows the seed to grow, first the blade, and then the ear and finally the full ripe corn. In like manner we find that in the work of education, in science and in civic betterment, the men of vision and achievement take uniformly the long view rather than the swift, short, smart glance. Why not also in that which is higher than them all, the work of religion?

"During the last twenty-five years two lines of effort have gained tremendously upon the popular interest, the work of higher education and the work of medical science. Measure them by the amount of money men will give, or by the number of aspiring young men who can be enlisted in their service, or by the number of people to accept their guidance and you will see that they have forged ahead. During that same period the church has not made any such relative gain. There are those who feel that it has really suffered a loss. And I need not remind you that the universities and the physicians have all but uniformly taken the long view. They have stood for thoroughness and against quackery of all sorts. We as churchmen have sometimes been led by our desire for immediate results, or by our tender concern lest we should forbid any one who can cast out a devil, to follow the most gigantic and preposterous forms of religious quackery. In the long run we can do nothing against the truth, nor against the spirit, nor against the method of Jesus Christ. And I believe we shall do well to go back and sit down again at the feet of him who said: 'I am the Truth. And ye shall know the Truth, and the Truth shall make you free.'"

Men walk not with God, because they are not come to an agreement with Him; God's agreement with us, and ours with him, is that we may walk together. If we walk not with God, it is because there is no agreement; and what doth that import, but an alienation of mind from God? Says God, "I would not have you live in the world at so great a distance from me, I would walk with you and have you walk with me; and for this end I would come to an agreement with you." But sinners will not come to any agreement with God, and thence it comes to pass that they walk not with God; they begin the day without God, walk all day long without God, lie down at night without God, and the reason is because there are no agreements, and that denotes enmity.—Howe.

GIVE IMMERSION A FAIR CHANCE!

THERE are several points in Mr. Boren's critique appearing on another page which we are prompted to consider, but we can take up at this time only one, viz., his plea for an optional practice of affusion and immersion in the administration of baptism.

Underlying our correspondent's argument is the assumption that a particular mode of baptism is not imposed upon the Church by specific divine command. In this assumption The Christian Century agrees with him. We are together in holding that while baptism itself is specifically commanded by the Scriptures, baptism is not the same as the mode by which it is administered.

Mr. Boren differs from us in seeming to advocate the practice of baptism by more than one mode. He believes this is necessary in order to satisfy the demands of Christian unity. A church that receives into its membership unimmersed persons who are already Christians, but confines its practice to immersion only in initiating new converts, does not practice Christian union, he says. Such a church makes inevitable the planting of another church in the community, a church that is willing to administer baptism by affusion.

But this consideration works the other way just as well. If Mr. Boren's church practices two or three modes of baptism it is equally inevitable that another church practicing immersion only will be established by its side. The optionist practice no more satisfies the immersionist conscience than the immersionist practice satisfies the optionist liberality.

This is a dilemma from which in the present state of religious conviction it is impossible to escape. From the standpont of the immediate situation neither the practice of immersion only nor the practice of optional modes solves the problem of Christian unity.

Manifestly our problem must be approached from a higher point of view. We must ask what practice would, in the long run, be the normal and most satisfying practice for a united Church?

Quite apart from our private preference for immersion as the classic mode of baptism practiced in New Testament times, a mode which gathers into itself a richness of symbolism which no other mode can ever possess, there are two leading considerations which we believe should determine the Disciples of Christ to maintain their custom of practicing immersion and nothing else.

One is that to practice any other mode would inflame the minds of fellow Disciples beyond all hope of future co-operation in the deeper things of Christian service and Christian unity. Even if it should be conceded that some day the Disciples and Baptists will be compelled to practice optional modes (an admission we are not by any means willing to make) it certainly would mean only alienation and division to do so at this time. The utmost that can be expected of us Disciples is that we change our practice with regard to other Christians, receiving them into our fellowship without insisting upon re-baptism by immersion, on the simple ground that Christ has, as a matter of fact, received them into his Church. But it is not feasible, nor would it solve any problem, for the Disciples to change their baptismal practice with regard to those who are not yet members of the Church of Christ.

The other consideration is that we believe immersion ought to be given a fair trial in the modern Church. It has not had a fair trial by Baptists or Disciples. Held dogmatically and imposed as a sectarian test of fellowship among Christians it quite naturally awakens resentment and repugnance in the minds of most Christians. It is The Christian Century's deep conviction that immersion, released from all legalism, and practiced under undogmatic and unsectarian conditions, implying no prejudice or inferiority of status against those who are not immersed, would find incomparably greater favor than it now finds. The general repugnance in which this beautiful classic symbol is held, would, in our judgment, be broken down by a free, unprejudicial and unsectarian practice of it. For that reason we feel that its continued practice by the Disciples of Christ will ultimately make for Christian unity.

In short we believe in the inherent appropriateness, the appositeness, of immersion for the purpose which it has served since the beginning days of Christianity.

It needs no dogma to support it.

It loses its attractiveness the moment you imagine that the will of Christ imposed it upon the Church.

But freed from that grandiose legalism it finds its own level and makes a true appeal.

Let us give immersion a fair chance!

AUTOMOBILES AND CULTURE

THE automobile has attained the dignity of being referred to in a university president's address as forcing upon academic officials, and upon students, new difficulties in living the simple life with culture as the goal.

President Hadley, of Yale, is a discerning educator. The automobile, student owned and used, he says, does not encourage those habits of browsingly reading the world's best literature that were possible to lads like James Russell Lowell and Thomas Wentworth Higginson when they were in Harvard College, habits which they were always glad they formed at a stage when manners and morals tend to become fixed.

Like many an adult house-owning citizen who once read books and was well informed on literature, but who now worships "speed," the student motorist is tempted to scour the rural hinterland or to visit the urban amusement resort when he should be doing what attendance on college implies—training his intellectual faculties and deepening and refining his character.

HOME INTERESTS HELPED BY FOREIGN LINK

ANOTHER illustration of the way in which active participation in the work of foreign missions stimulates and develops the grace of giving to all the interests of the kingdom, is afforded by the so-called "Living-link" churches of the Disciples.

It has been carefully calculated from the annual reports of all the missionary and benevolent societies of the brotherhood that fully fifty per cent of all the money received by their treasuries came from those congregations that are supporting their own "Living-link" missionaries through the Foreign Society.

This disposes effectually of the criticism sometimes made that churches that undertake to support their own missionary are lop-sided in their giving to other equally imperative interests. The fact is that such churches are the most well-rounded as well as generous in their contributions for other causes beyond their locality.

And of course it has time and time again been demonstrated that the way to get a congregation to give to the support of its own local work—like paying off a big debt, or building a house of worship, or increasing the minister's salary—is to enlist its self-forgetful interest in the evangelization of the world.

It is doubtful if any movement has done more to liberate the impulses of the people of our churches toward helping all good causes than the movement to get each church to support its own missionary in a foreign land.

MR. CAMPBELL'S LATEST MOVE

VERY little fuss is being made in England over an event which two years ago would have caused extended comment and perhaps a heated discussion. We refer to the announcement, following his resignation from the pulpit of the City Temple in London, of the decision of Rev. R. J. Campbell to leave the Congregational communion and enter the established church.

On both sides of the line—the Congregational and the Episcopalian—the event is recorded rather casually. Earnest and kindly words of appreciation of the character and ministry of Mr. Campbell are spoken by his Free church friends who bid him Godspeed in his new association, and equally earnest and kindly words, but also equally casual, are spoken by his Episcopalian colleagues who welcome him into their communion.

Mr. Campbell has been for a dozen years the most outstanding preacher in England, occupying the leading nonconformist pulpit of the nation, and from it delivering a steady stream of utterance inexhaustibly fresh and vital, and profoundly influencing the religious life of the British people.

The total lack of unfriendly comment on his present course is probably due to two things, the first of which is the fact that Mr. Campbell has won universal respect by the way he conducted himself and his case in the so-called "new theology" controversy of some eight and nine years ago. Even his opponents have long since acknowledged the power and graciousness of his deportment while the fiercest theological storm since the days of the tractarian movement, raged about his head. The sentiment seems to be that Mr. Campbell was discussed enough in that controversy and there is no disposition to make him the object of another controversy.

The second reason why his course is not subjected to criticism is probably the fact that the war has tended to subordinate and even to erase the party distinctions in the Church just as it has done in the State.

It would be very difficult to get up a theological or ecclesiastical controversy when a nation is fighting for its very life. So Mr. Campbell, the erstwhile champion and symbol of the most radical departure from conventional religious thinking, passes all the way back to the conservative extreme, and his passing is regarded as but an episode.

His reasons for changing his course have not yet been announced, but it is safe to predict that they will neither startle nor enlighten the religious situation of Great Britain.

THE BIBLE IN WAR TIME

THERE is naturally a falling off of interest in the scholarly study and use of the Bible in these times of war's emotions. A discriminating attitude toward Biblical theories is difficult for even the well-trained man to maintain when the sky overhead is full of portent.

In the war-ridden countries the Bible is used for the sake of enforcing immediate practical duties, and whatever interpretation gets the results demanded by the practical situation is used without critical squeamishness.

The teaching of Jesus and the apocalyptic portions of the Bible are especially made to suffer by the pragmatic use to which they are put. And the ethics of certain portions of the Old Testament are so pertinent that the exigency of the hour easily enough invests them with a kind of authority which they cannot claim for themselves in times of peace.

It is the clear duty of men and women whose faculties have been trained to take the Bible as it actually is—not as it has come to be used by an obscurantist orthodoxy—to keep their faculties alive and to stand ready to defend the Bible against the blind and merely emotional use to which it is put by those who stagger under the emotional shock the war has produced.

We in America cannot afford to let go the progress made in Bible study in the past quarter century. The fact that certain other questions of a practical sort are more urgent and perhaps more interesting for the moment than the scientific study of the Bible, should not justify us in allowing the Bible to be neglected.

President Burnham's Statement Disputed

THE publication in The Christian Century of Oct. 14, of the correspondence between President F. W. Burnham of the American Christian Missionary Society and Rev. C. C. Cline of Arkansas in which Mr. Burnham declares with astonishing explictness that not the American Society alone but all the missionary and benevolent societies of the Disciples have no relationship whatever with the General Convention of Churches of Christ has brought a volume of protest and denial from many readers who attended the Los Angeles convention last summer and from a number of the officials of the various national societies.

Mr. Burnham has not yet offered any authority for his utterance nor any explanation of his purpose in making such a statement without authority. We are hoping that he will be able to relieve a critical situation with some explanatory word.

Of the correspondence we have received some is for publication, other portions are personal, and still other portions include copies of letters sent to Mr. Burnham asking for a frank acknowledgement of the error he has made. It is not our purpose to publish any portion of this correspondence at this time. But we have received a statement from Secretary Graham Frank which is referred to in a letter from Pres. W. F. Richardson as representing the executive committee of the General Convention. This we believe ought to be given to our readers, while further comment is withheld until more information is received:

SECRETARY FRANK'S COMMUNICATION.

I have read the editorial on "Wanted: Full Information," in the last issue of The Christian Century. I am surprised at Brother Burnham's letter. I was at the Los Angeles convention and took an active interest in it. If anything was done in any session of that convention which warrants the position taken by Brother Burnham, it wholly escaped my notice.

I agree with you in thinking that "the brotherhood has a right to hear a complete and frank explanation," and I am glad to give you such facts as I have bearing on the issue raised. You are at liberty to make any use of these facts which you may care to make.

Here are the facts regarding the matter, as I understand them:

Brother Burnham says, "Our societies are not in any sense subject to the advice, direction or co-operation of the so-called General Convention." By what right Mr. Burnham speaks for all the societies, I do not know, but I do know that the last action taken by the American Christian Missionary Society relative to co-operation with the General Convention was that taken at Atlanta when the following resolution was unanimously adopted in a session of the American Society convention:

"Resolved that the acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society be and hereby is recommendd to co-operate with the other missionary and benevolent boards and with the executive committee of the General Convention in promoting attendance upon and preparing for the anual convention, and in the preparation and presentation to the churches of the annual joint budget, and in order to these ends to pay its proportion of the expenses of the executive committee of the General Convention out of offerings made by churches and individuals and by them designated for that purpose."

This resolution still stands as the last expression of the action of the American Christian Missionary Society. By what right the president of the society announces a change of policy, I will leave for him to state.

BETTER FEELING THAN FORMERLY.

The executive committee of the General Convention recommended to the Los Angeles convention that for the current missionary year no call be made on the missionary societies for funds for General Convention expenses, but no action was taken at that convention indicating that "if the General Convention continues to exist, as it may in name, it will do so without any co-operation on the part of the societies." So far as I could discover there was at Los Angeles a general feeling that the relation between the missionary societies and the General Convention was more cordial because it was better understood and defined than it had ever been. I have had letters from several secretaries since the convention expressing their pleasure in the amicable relations established between the Convention and the societies.

The constitution of the General Convention provides that

"it shall be the duty of the Executive Committee in conference with the various missionary and benevolent boards to prepare the annual budgets of said boards for presentation to the annual convention, to join the boards in recommending to the churches the budgets as adopted by the convention. In general to act in an advisory capacity with said boards in devising ways and means for carrying on their work."

On the basis of this constitution the several societies have been co-operating with the General Convention. If any action has been taken by any missionary board making such co-operation further impossible, it has been taken in opposition to the action of the society itself which that board represents, and in opposition to the expressed will of the churches that have been represented at Louisville, Toronto, Atlanta and Los Angeles.

Relative to the appeal sent out from the Los Angeles convention to the churches asking their help in the financial stress which was then and still is on the societies, the facts are as follows:

THE SPECIAL CALL FOR FUNDS.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the General Convention held in the office of S. M. Cooper in Los Angeles, on Tuesday, July 20, the following members were present: W. M. White, C. M. Chilton, Dr. R. L. Rigdon, A. R. Moore, S. M. Cooper and Graham Frank. It was proposed by C. M. Chilton that we ask for a meeting with the officers of the state and national missionary societies to see if something could not be done to help lift the financial burdens under which the societies were struggling. In the Daily Bulletin of Thursday, July 22, appeared the following notice: "The executive committee of the General Convention requests the presidents and secretaries of all state and national missionary societies to meet in the lower auditorium at the close of the afternoon service Thursday. This meeting is of vital importance." The meeting was held. President W. M. White of the General Convention, presided. C. M. Chilton presented the matter discussed in the previous meeting of the executive committee. It was the first word heard in the Convention relative to what should be done in the face of existing financial conditions. The suggestion that some appeal be formulated and sent to the churches with the approval of the Convention was taken up heartily by the society officials present at this meeting, and a committee consisting of F. W. Burnham, G. W. Muckley, C. M. Chilton, W. M. White and S. J. Corey, was appointed to formulate such an appeal for presentation to the convention. This committee made its report to the business session of the General Convention on Saturday morning, July 24, presenting the resolution from the joint meeting of the executive committee and the missionary officials and also the letter to be sent to the churches. If any one wishes to know whether the General Convention had anything to do with this appeal, it seems to me that the facts stated will show that it originated in the executive committee of the General Convention. It may be further interesting and enlightening to state that the only minutes of the Los Angeles convention showing that such a step was ever taken are the minutes of the General Convention. These minutes are now being printed and when they are distributed they will show the facts to be just as I have stated them.

The fact stated by Mr. Burnham that the appeal "is not a plea from the General Convention but is a plea from the Los Angeles convention" is due to the fact that when the matter was under discussion, I myself proposed that the appeal bear the name of the Los Angeles convention rather than that of the General Convention in order that the urgency of the appeal might not be lessened by being involved in the discussion over the General Convention.

THE JOINT APPORTIONMENT.

Relative to the Joint Apportionment: everyone who knows the facts knows that the first Joint Apportionment was made in the office of the General Convention and that it is to be revised by a committee made up of one representative of each missionary society and on a basis adopted by the General Convention at Los Angeles. The only action relative to the Joint Apportionment by the Los Angeles convention was that taken on recommendation of the executive committee of the General Convention and in the business session of the General Convention.

Mr. Burnham says, "The General Convention or its executive committee does not now perform any work, office or function of the societies." All the work of promoting attendance on the Los Angeles Convention was done by the executive committee of the General Convention. Mr. Burnham himself served all last year on the committee on arrangements provided for in By-law 5 of Article two of the constitution of the General Convention. The program was assembled and printed by the General Convention committee. The Daily Bulletin was published by the General Convention. The registration of the convention was done under the direction of the General Convention. The general missionary Budget for each and every society was adopted by the General Convention. All the work of preparation for the Des Moines convention is in the hands of the General Convention. These are some of the functions previously performed by the societies but which the last four of our General Conventions have indicated that they wished to have performed in the futnre by the executive committee of the General Convention.

Dynamiting A House To Make A Picture.

Out in Santa Barbara, California, the general public was invited recently to view the filming of a thrilling scene designed for inclusion in the four part Mutual Masterpicture, "The House of a Thousand Scanadls." The production is being superintended for the American company by Director Thomas Ricketts, and plenty of action preceded the chief incident, the blowing up by dynamite of a specially constructed house. A large crowd assembled to see the explosion, and a crowd of four hundred "extras," whom Mr. Ricketts had been rehearsing for over a week, added to the picturesqueness and realism of the scene.

A Memorial In The Sky To Aviators.

The citizens of Mill Valley, a town at the foot of the famous Mount Tampalais which overlooks San Francisco Bay, have chosen a novel place to locate a memorial to the nation's heroes of the air. On Decoration Day they unveiled a gigantic monument to the airmen at a point three thousand feet above the place where Beachey, the dare-devil bird-man, recently met his death.

Our Readers' Opinions

OUR CATHOLIC PLEA AND OUR UNCATHOLIC PRACTICE.*

A recent editorial in The Christian Century on "The Catholic Plea," is as fine a statement of the Disciple position (ideally conceived) as I have ever seen. Had our practice been as perfect as our plea, our influence in the religious world would have been immeasurably greater. Had our fathers remained in the fellowship of existing denominations wherever possible, leavening those churches with a larger spirit, and working through them for the larger ideals; had they limited their expansion work to unchurched communities, seeking humbly and earnestly to make these churches as nearly Christian as possible, but without boasting of their attainments, and making them really union churches; they might have had an immense influence in promoting a higher order of church life. The tragic fact is that in thousands of overchurched communities, the Disciples have been the last on the field, or at least not the first.

I question whether "the way to union is to abandon all non-catholic practices." Union will come by a process of expansion rather than by a negative process of abandonment. Many non-catholic and unscriptural practices are needful for our efficiency, and we should be free to use them. We have tried the program of abandoning organs, missionary societies, delegate conventions, etc. The plan has never worked and has always led to a multitude of inconsistencies.

But if it be said that it is as tests of fellowship that these things should be abandoned, this only means that we need not abandon them at all. If we unite on "the great catholic essentials," this will mean simply a change of emphasis and a greater expansion of life, and this also usually means a larger use of many non-catholic things in order to express that larger life. The quest for essentials should never mean a quest for the minimum. We may indeed receive a man into fellowship who has only a minimum of faith; but it is in order that he with us may go on to attain to a maximum. The lopping off process, except as it means the pruning away of useless practices, tends to reduce the spiritual life to a minimum. A group of people with a minimum of faith and with no unscriptural practices, would not be an ideal church. I believe that as we approach a maximum of faith and life the use of unscriptural practices will multiply. A fountain pen may be more catholic than a typewriter, and a steel pen more catholic than either; but we would not advocate a minimum of efficiency merely for the sake of uniformity.

I am not sure that we more than others have a "catholic book." As long as we make our interpretations a test of fellowship, we are in the same boat with those who make their formulated statements a test. Our creed is unwritten, that is all. Nearly two hundred petty sects are each accusing the others of having man-made creeds. This is virtually a claim that their interpretations are infallible. Besides there is no static Christianity in the New Testament, and with the open book before us, we have still to ask, "What is essential?"

The whole question of church fellowship must after all be worked out from the standpoint of efficiency. We might with some reason take the stand that a church would be more effiicent with all the poor material weeded out. We might accept as members only those with a maximum of faith. We might reject the majority of Christians, and insist that the church would be more useful if it included only the "best Christians" in its fellowship. We might rigidly insist on certain forms, upon a certain standard of experience. We might rule out those who did not give according to their means. We might contend that a body of immersed Christians is more efficient than a body of unimmersed, or mixed. This exclusive policy is of course the defense of denominationalism. But it does not work. We never succeed in excluding the worst and including the best. The exclusive policy results in division, since those rejected set up for themselves.

The Disciples have deliberately adopted the inclusive policy, in theory at least, because they believe that a united church is an efficient church. They may be wrong. The point is, do they consistently practice the inclusive policy? The Baptists may consistently exclude the unimmersed, since they defend the denominational order, and desire, not all Christians, but only a select group of Christians in their fellowship. We denounce the denominational order; but we make that order inevitable as long as in any community we exclude Christians from our fellowship.

Granted that it is universally conceded that immersion is a valid form of baptism, this does not make it a catholic form, for to be catholic it must be universally adaptable. We shall not attain catholicity in writing by ruling out fountain pens and typewriters, and adopting exclusively the steel pen or lead pencil. These latter are undoubtedly more catholic. Perhaps we can attain catholicity without uniformity.

Nor can it be maintained that there can be no "conscientious division over the use of immersion." Upon what ground do affusionists concede the validity of immersion? Upon precisely the same ground that they place validity of sprinkling, upon the ground of Christian freedom. They hold that they are free to be immersed, but equally free to be sprinkled. They hold neither to be obligatory. As to which they shall choose depends upon which is most adaptable. To choose an unadaptable form is to admit an obligation, and this is to destroy the underlying foundations of its validity. The catholicity of baptism does not lie in the form, but in the spiritual realities which it expresses. Essential to that spiritual content is the freedom and spontaneity of choice. Baptism is an EXPRESSION of fellowship. The moment we make any particular form a TEST of fellowship, we rob it of the thing which makes it Christian baptism.

No denomination, as far as I know, make immersion a TEST of fellowship, They all grant the liberty to be immersed. I think most of them would receive a Quaker into fellowship. It appears then that in making immersion a test of fellowship, we have virtually a denominational form. Our exclusive practice promotes denominationalism, indeed makes it inevitable.

But it may be said that we do not make immersion a test of fellowship, we merely PRACTICE this form only. By "we" we mean a dozen or so open-membership churches. We—that is open-membership churches—will receive the unimmersed into our fellowship, provided they will get some one else to sprinkle them. Let them come to us by way of some other church, and we will receive them. We will do wrong by proxy and reap the reward. Even if all our churches were open-membership churches, I do not believe that the practice of a "catholic church fellowship" can be reconciled with the exclusive practice of immersion, for immersion is not one of "the great catholic essentials."

We face a great many unfortunate situations for which the present generation is not responsible,—situations which cannot be remedied in a day. But we shall sin where our fathers only bludered, if we continue the policy of the past.

MADE FOR EACH OTHER.

Editor The Christian Century: I wish to express my appreciation of your editorial on "Made for each other." It sums up the matter in the most concise and lucid way that I have ever seen an article on Christian union put.

DISCIPLES AND CONGREGATIONALISTS.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY: Your discussion of the union of Disciples and Congregationalists is most timely.

Such an experiment is being tried in this state (Wash.) at Toppenish. A Congregational pastor told me yesterday that the Disciples had swallowed the others. I will probably be there before long and, if you wish, will report on what I find.

At Enterprise, Ore., Presbyterians, Disciples and M. E's. have federated each retaining its organization but having one S. S., one pastor, etc. A. J. Adams of the Disciples is pastor.

Five denominations are in a federated church at Freewater, Ore., ministered to by Rev. E. W. Warringhan of the Presbyterian church.

I am ordering Wells' book for use in a place where some sort of union may be worked out between Disciples and Congregationalists. Suffer a suggestion to the effect that the free reading of that book should help largely in your present campaign. Can you not prevail on the proper ones to launch an advertising campaign for it?

I am traveling for the Anti Saloon League. We have three court fights now on hand. Should we lose, the initiative and referendum laws of the state as well as prohibition will be invalidated. One case, only, has came to trial and we won a signal victory in the superior court. It goes to the supreme court Oct. 11.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Chicago Presbyterians to Hold Efficiency Campaign.

The Chicago Presbytery will carry out an efficiency campaign in a hundred Presbyterian churches in Chicago this fall. Dr. A. S. C. Clarke, moderator of the Presbytery, has been authorized to appoint a committee to have charge of the program for the churches. Among the possibilities is an interdenominational efficiency campaign for the whole city.

War and Roman Catholic Mission Work.

The total contributions for foreign missions by Roman Catholics is $6,000,000 per annum as compared with $28,000,000 given every year by Protestants. The Catholics of the United States gave less than a half million last year, and this exceeds the gifts of any other country except France. The foreign mission office of the church is in France and its work has been brought almost to a standstill by the war. It is said a large number of the missionaries have been called to the colors in the different countries.

Theological School Has New Chapel.

The Boston School of Theology (Methodist) operating in connection with the Boston University has just dedicated a new chapel costing $115,000. The building is of Bedford limestone in the Gothic style, and is of fire-proof construction.

Seminary Union Consummated at University of Chicago.

The Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) has actually moved, and the opening exercises of the institution in connection with the University of Chicago were held in University Congregational church recently. Addresses were made by President Ozora S. Davis of the Seminary and Dean Shailer Matthews of the Divinity School. The undergraduate Congregational students will continue to study at the old plant on the west side. The Congregational school has a total enrollment this fall of 45.

Baptist Secretary Resigns On Account of Irritation.

Heckling the secretaries has been a favorite pastime of a few spirits in the northern Baptist fellowship in recent years. The criticisms and annoyances to which he has been subjected have led one of their strongest men, Rev. Fred P. Haggard, to resign. He was formerly a missionary in Assam, and wished to remain in that work but for fifteen years has been home secretary for the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. He stated in his letter of resignation: "It is due me and the majority of the constituency of the Northern Baptist Convention to add that I have taken this step not because I believe that the majority desires it, but because of what is represented to me to be the wish of a small but persistent minority against whom I could never bring myself to contend. Much less could I desire my friends to array themselves on my behalf. That I have very pronounced convictions regarding the righteousness of the attitude of the minority referred to, the methods pursued by it to secure its end and the results which must always follow such minority rule in a democratic body, I simply state without comment. I feel strongly that this outcome was not necessary and ought not to have been permitted. But I will not press the matter, for the peace of Jerusalem is more to be desired than the most exalted position in the gift of any people."

Open Training School for Slavs In Chicago.

The Baptists have opened a Slavic Training School in Chicago. Interested in the enterprise are the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist convention, the Slavic Baptist conferences, the state conventions of the middle west, and the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago. The school is under the direction of Rev. Frank L. Anderson, who is superintendent of the city mission work of the Baptists in Chicago. It has a temporary home in the First Baptist Bohemian church at 1609 street. The building has been repaired extensively in order to accommodate the work. There are fourteen students in the school as it opens and they represent the leading Slavic nationalities. One-fifth of the citizens of Chicago are Slavs.

Catholic Daily Newspaper for Chicago.

It is reported that the Roman Catholics will establish a daily paper in Chicago. The Irish Voice, a secular paper devoted largely to cultivating anti-English feeling, carries an ad to this effect. It is not known just how soon the enterprise will be launched.

Panama's Bishop Opposes Congress

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Panama is quite excited over the announcement of a "Congress on Christian Work," to be held in Panama in February, 1916. The President of the Republic of Panama, it is understood, has withdrawn his consent to the use of the National Theatre for the sessions. It may be necessary for the Congress to be held in the Canal Zone which, of course, is controlled by the United States. While not so convenient as the accommodations afforded by the City of Panama, adequate facilities may be found in large Y. M. C. A. buildings. As indicating the kind of feeling an aggressive move on the part of Protestant Christian forces to evangelize Latin-America will surely encounter we give a translation of a Pastoral Letter issued by the Bishop of Panama:

THE BISHOP'S LETTER.

"To Our Beloved Faithful, Health, Peace, and Blessing in Our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Some days ago, our attention was called to a project which is planned in our episcopal see and capital of our Catholic Republic, the beginning of next year, by a certain Protestant element in the United States. We refer to a Congress for the evangelization of Latin-America, to be held in Panama. This mere announcement is an insult to us Latin-Americans that no one can approve, for it is known that the delight of Protestant oratory consists in attacking the Catholic religion and the Roman pontiff, depreciating and calumniating the clergy, ridiculing our religious practices, and criticising our Christian customs.

"Knowing already the purposes which so many Protestants have in the above mentioned Congress, for we have at hand various North American newspapers that publish it, we must call the attention of our diocese and National Government to the matter that possesses so much gravity as much for our character as Catholics as for us as Panamanians.

"And first, as touching our diocese, it is proposed to celebrate the 37th anniversary of the death of Martin Luther, the father of Protestantism, who came to his end at Eisleben, February 18, 1546. Evidently, all Protestants, his children, are preparing themselves to commemorate that date in the best manner that occurs to them; and to a group of citizens of the United States who do not in any manner represent North American sentiment, it has occurred to commemorate it by holding three congresses, one in New York, another in Panama, and a third elsewhere. Without doubt, these Protestants consider the Republic of Panama as something which belongs to them, where they can come to hold meetings, congresses, conventions, at will, as they might in any part of the United States, taking possession of our public buildings for their purposes.

"Of what will the Congress treat? Why, of 'Christian Work,' that is to say, of our evangelization, for, according to them, we are ignorant; of our morals, for, in their conception, we are outcasts; and to place us in the road of civilization, for, to them, we wander in the darkness of heathenism. Such is the conception, as it would appear, that these deluded ones have formed of us; and not only of us Panamanians, but of all Latin-America; for their programme embraces all the peoples of Latin-America, as the Christian Observer, a Presbyterian publication of Louisville, Ky., clearly says, and the title which they have given to the proposed congress is, Congress on Christian Work in Latin-America, Congress to Christianize Latin-America. Can there be for us a greater insult or greater humiliation?

"The language which the speakers will employ on such an occasion is left to imagine. It will be their habitual defamatory speech towards the Catholic Church, towards the Roman Pontiff, towards the clergy, and towards all the people, that which they always use when they set about 'Christian Work.' There will be repeated that which they have spread on all sides in the United States, namely, that all Latin-American countries, from Mexico down, are to be civilized, for they are woefully backward and ignorant, for they are Catholics, and the Catholic Church is responsible for their condition, for they keep them under and in subjection, and they wish to suggest that railroads, enormous bridges, the telegraph, the colossal buildings, the world of machinery, and the thousand and one other things of progress in the United States are due to Protestantism. Think of such logic! As if the civilization and morality of a people consist of these elements of material welfare! In the matter of morality and civilization, the defamers of the Catholic Church would do well to lower their tone and to moderate their speech, for it is not certain that the United States is the place to learn these lessons.

"That which these speakers propose with their Congress is to make proselytes for their sect; and accordingly the Committee of Arrangements for the Evangelization of Latin-America proposes to change the name of the convention, calling it Congress in place of Missionary Conference, that had been given earlier of the proposed Protestant Congress, to disarm Catholics.

"However, we, in fulfilment of our pastoral duty, and in use of our authority, formally prohibit, under penalty of mortal sin, all Catholics subject to our jurisdiction to assist at the sessions of of the proposed Prostestant Congress, that will take place, as announced in this city, February 10th to 20th next, even though it should be from curiosity.

"(Note.—In a Protestant conference recently held in Edinburgh, Scotland, it was resolved not to send additional Protestant missionaries to Catholic peoples, Latin or Greek, nor to expend more money upon such missions, for, they said, already the Word of God has been announced to them; but, to the fanatical anti-Catholics of the United States, we are still in the darkness of ignorance. In a certain sense they are right, for concerning Protestantism we are in perfect ignorance and we thank God that it is so.)

"And as, according to an article published in the Star and Herald of this city, there has been granted to the speakers both the Theatre and the National Institute for the meetings, the President being undoubtedly ignorant of the purpose of the Congress, it is as much to say that they choose the city of Panama, a Catholic city, and capital of a Catholic nation, for the purpose of insulting us not only in our homes but in our very face. We call upon the President of the Republic that he do not permit what in their own country they could not obtain, for in the United States public edifices are only for specific purposes and not for the propagation of any sect; that he recall the license; that offended Panamanian Catholic sentiment will not permit public buildings erected with the money of Panamanian Catholics to be used for sectarian propaganda and attack upon the national religion. When the Shriners (Minnesota Masons), some time ago, requested the Theatre for the celebration of their ceremonies it was denied them for identical reasons and they had to hold them in the Canal Zone. Greater and more powerful reasons present themselves now for the refusal, so much the more because there are spacious Y. M. C. A. halls in which they can have such gatherings on their own North American territory.

"Be awake, then, beloved faithful, and do not forget in these dangerous circumstances the words of the Saviour of men: Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits (St. Matt. 7:15, 16). And those words of St. Paul: For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into apostles of Christ (2 Cor. 11:13).

"✤WILLIAM,
"Bishop of Panama."

Disciples Table Talk

Dr. Ainslie Sends Message to His Congregation.

Howard W. King, pastor at Seventh Church, Baltimore, writes that Dr. Ainslie is not yet out of danger, but gives the assuring word that his attending physician is confident of his recovery. Mr. King also sends a letter dictated by Dr. Ainslie and sent to his congregation. He reports that men and women sobbed like children when the acting pastor read the letter to the Sunday morning audience a week ago. The morning services had been dominantly sad, a pall of gloom hanging over the members of the church. The attendance was unusually large. When the acting pastor spoke of the critical condition of Dr. Ainslie and asked the prayers of the congregation for him every head was bowed. It was after these prayers that the following letter from Dr. Ainslie was read:

"To my dear people of the Temple and other friends, not of the Temple, Greetings: "I am passing through a very critical illness and am still in a critical condition, and the tide may turn one way as easily as the other. I am sending this message by the pen of my nurse. You have been so good by your prayers and your remembrances as expressed in many ways, only a part of which I know, for I am too ill yet to receive any information except of a general character. While I have a competent physician and competent nurses and they are doing all they can for me, yet God, our Heavenly Father, who is the greatest factor in all things that have to do with body, soul and spirit, is our indispensable helper at all times. I have frequently taken you and your burden to him; you have likewise done this for me, but especially now do I ask that you petition him that I may be filled with the Holy Spirit and this sickness may redound to the honor and glory of God. Weak and suffering as my body is, I have great peace of heart, knowing I cannot drift beyond his love and care. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Your servant in his name, Peter Ainslie."

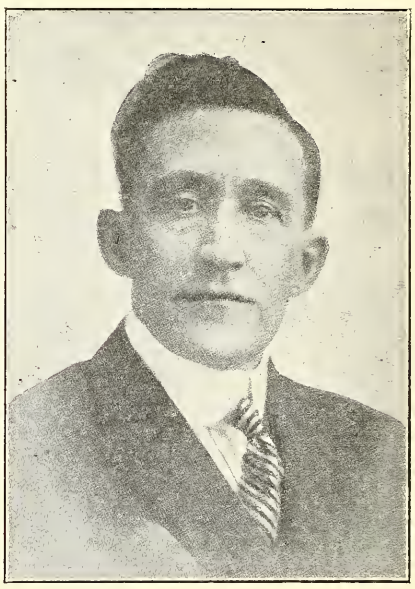
Des Moines Church Urges Dr. Idleman to Remain.

A movement is on foot among the members of Central Church, Des Moines, to retain their pastor, Finis S. Idleman, who resigned some days ago to accept a call to Central Church, New York city. A petition containing more than 1,000 names of members of his congregation was presented by church leaders to the pastor. Strong efforts are being made to have the pastor reconsider his action and stay with the Des Moiness church. It is not known what effect these efforts will have on the pastor's final decision.

Dr. Medbury Raps "Preparedness" Doctrine.

At the conclusion of a recent sermon by Dr. C. S. Medbury, of University Place Church, Des Moines, vigorously attacking the policy of military preparedness, the audience which completely filled the great auditorium, rose with practical unanimity to indorse the minister's sentiments. So enthusiastic was the approval of the preacher's sentiments that it was suggested that a mass meeting be held in the Des Moines Coliseum at which Dr. Medbury should again speak on this theme. "In the darkness it is for someone to speak with confidence of the dawn," said Dr. Medbury. "If we actually believe in God we can do this. If we do not, if real faith is dead within us, then of course, we must go back to the counting of battleships. The multitudes of the lovers of God must determine what their attitude shall be toward the human brotherhood proposals of Christ. If these are to be taken seriously and the might of right to be our dependence then war cannot be thought of as a possibility, so far as we are concerned. I know this will be sheer foolishness but that does not make it so. Nations have tried everything else but the present world agony is the answer to their wisdom. Why not at least try the plans of God? Why not seriously put to the test the golden rule? It works well between individuals, perhaps it would work in the affairs of nations. It would seem, in any event, that we might be humble enough to work at the thing that way."

Closing, Dr. Medbury pointed out the possible destiny of the United States should a decided stand be maintained for peace:



Dr. Charles S. Medbury, who advocates the adoption by the United of the Golden Rule as the "way out."

"Never did a nation have the chance that we have now to be truly great," declared the speaker. "Never would the voice of real brotherhood be listened to as now. Never would the way of truth and righteousness for nations be as acceptable as when Europe, struggling to live at all, faces the trials of the future. Added battleships mock our very destiny. They throw their great bulk in the way of the world's progress. They clog the channel of universal good will. Instead of building more of these it is ours to build a nation's life in such a splendid way that the whole world will marvel. It is ours to struggle in these days of our nation's freedom from war, for a greatness of soul that will give us a hearing in all the courts of the earth. And we must determine whether such life before God shall be our dependence or rifles in the hands of our boys and battleships upon the seas. The Nazarene is calling one way. Barbarism calls the other."

A Notable Event.

A significant meeting was held in Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, on the evening of October 18. It was the occasion of a banquet given by the Board of Managers of the Kansas City Christian Hospital to the members and their wives of the joint board of all of the Disciple churches. There were 402 persons present, representing all of the churches of Greater Kansas City. Mr. J. W. Perry, president of the National Benevolent Association, also of the Christian Church Hospital Association, acted as toastmaster. The speakers were: Drs. Duke and Jackson, Supt. Coddington, Messrs. A. E. Cory, R. H. Miller, L. J. Marshall, M. Chandler, J. H. Mohorter and R. A. Long. The report as read by Mr. Eubank, treasurer of the board showed that the building, which is now about ready for occupancy, has cost in round numbers $200,000, exclusive of the lot. Dr. Murphy, of Chicago, perhaps the most noted surgeon in the country, recently said, after an inspection of this building, "For location and appointment it is surpassed by none." It will require about $50,000 to pay off some indebtedness and to supply the needed furniture and equipement. If these funds are provided at once, the doors of this beautiful building will be thrown open January 1 to welcome the sick of every land and clime, and especially Disciples, in the name of Christ. Mr. R. A. Long has put $200,000 into the building. The people of Kansas City have furnished $150,000 as an endowment. One-third of the 130 beds of this institution are to be dedicated to the free use of the poor in the name of the Great Physician.

Ex-Saloonkeeper Talks to Bible Class.

Bert Gill, for thirteen years a saloonkeeper in Columbus, Ohio, gave an address before the Allison Bible Class of Uhrichsville, Ohio, on a recent Sunday morning. Several of the boys' classes were also present to hear him. He gave an address in the Moravian church and also spoke at the First M. E. church in the evening. It is reported that Mr. Gill does not make a hero out of converted saloonkeepers. He has much to say about God and Christ but gives little credit to himself.

Church May Build $10,000 Gymnasium.

One of the improvements now being talked of at Third church Indianapolis, is a well-equipped gymnasium. The project took definite form at a banquet given for the Third Christian baseball team, when the pastor, T. W. Grafton, made a speech in which he advocated the plan. The church owns a lot and dwelling house situated near the church building, and it has been suggested that the dwelling be torn away to make room for the gymnasium. Mr. Grafton said he was ready to begin an effort to raise a $10,000 gymnasium fund.

New Church Building For Des Moines Disciples.

The church at Grant Park, Des Moines, has outgrown its home, which was built some twenty years ago. A new two story building is now in process of erection. The main auditorium is above with a seating capacity of nearly 1500. The room below will be fitted for Sunday School work. The Sunday school has an attendance of nearly 600, and the church membership numbers the same.

Oklahoma Pastor Writes Unity Hymn.

A feature of the First District Convention of Oklahoma disciples was the frequent singing of a "Convention Song," words and music of which were written by Byron Hester, pastor at Pryor, Okla. The hymn is of good quality, the refrain being especially attractive. The words of the refrain follow:

"Hear me, O my Father,
Glorify thy Son;
I pray for my disciples,
Make them, keep them one;
Even as we are, Father;
Lo, the hour is come;
Holy Father, keep them
In name and spirit one."

Dr. Maclachlan Defends "Preacher in Politics."

In a sermon at the Seventh Street church, Richmond, Virginia, on "Emotional Gentlemen in the Pulpits." H. D. C. Maclachlan upheld earnestly the right of ministers of the gospel to take part in politics. He declared that the opposition to preachers participating in public affairs comes from those who do not want the truth told. Dr. Maclachlan compared the attacks made on ministers in Richmond, who have attacked vice and immoral conditions from the pulpits, with the manner of those in the communities rebuked by prophets of olden times, his text being taken from Isaiah 30:10: "Which say to the seers: See not; and to the prophets, prophesy not unto us right things, speak unto us smooth things, prophesy deceits." Precisely that is what we find today," said Dr. Maclachlan. "We find the same opposition to the Word of God, the same attempt to muzzle its messengers. Said the people of old: 'What will this mad fellow say?' Say those of today: 'Beware of the preachers when thy get into politics. They are too emotional" In closing, the speaker said: "Finally I rejoice that I am an emotional gentleman in the pulpit. I am proud of the distinction. It puts me in goodly company—in the fellowship of St. Peter and St. Paul, of Augustine and St. Chrysostom, of Benedict and Francis, of Martin Luther and John Knox. I am proud to be called emotional. I am glad that my face can flush at the wrong and injustice. I have no desire to be 'safe and sane' if my safety means the condoning and my sanity walking in the safe middle distance of compromise and toleration."

Des Moines Preparing for 1916 Convention.

Determined not to let the Californians outdo Iowa in decorations, the Des Moines Disciples at a meeting at Central church last week decided to begin a state-wide movement among the members of the churches to provide decorations for the convention of the church which will meet in Des Moines next year. Iowa corn will be the central and dominating feature of the decorative scheme which will be followed. The Californians spent $4,000 for flowers when the convention met in Los Angeles in the summer. Disciples of Christ in every county in the state will be asked to contribute a certain part of the Iowa products which will be used. The permanent organization which will handle every detail of the convention was effected at the meeting and the following officers were named: President Hill M. Bell was elected general chairman; J. W. Hill and B. W. Garrett, vice presidents; George A. Jewett, treasurer, and L. E. Stamm, secretary.

Chicago Pastor Predicts Fall of Sectarianism.

"Sectarianism is under a sentence of death which will shortly be executed," was the prediction of Orvis F. Jordan, of Evanston, Ill., in a recent sermon on "The Approach to Christian Unity." Mr. Jordan said: "There are more than 160 denominations in the United States and as many more in Russia, and but few Russian sects are found here and vice versa. Christendom is divided into a thousand fragments, and no one church can claim even a majority of the Christians of the world. There is no 'universal church.' Yet there is every evidence that the sectarian spirit is on the wane. Old watchwords have lost their magic, and ancient shibboleths drop into disuse. There is no longer an effort to have an exclusively Presbyterian meat market, or a Baptist grocery or a Disciple blacksmith shop. A Methodist political boss or a Congregational school board is a conception that is already passé. The man who uses a denomination for such devisive purposes is odious to us all, and the sect that abuses other sects receives from the impartial jury of the community its just sentence of death."

Indiana Church Has "Whatsover Club."

The newest organization of First Church, Kokomo, Indiana, is the "Whatsoever" club. Its members stand ready to do what its name indicates—whatsoever their hands find to do, whether it is a work of love, an act of charity or the decorating of the church. This church recently featured a successful "Autumn Festival." D. H. Shields ministers in this field.

Endeavorers Adopt Aim For the Year. . .

The Endeavorers of Norwood, O., Church have adopted the following aim as their part in the Millions Campaign proposed by Dr. Clark at Chicago last summer: "100 Converts, 75 New Members, $30 for Missions, 100 for Peace Union, 1 New Society, 100 Comrades of the Quiet Hour, 25 Tithers, 25 C. E. Experts, 5 Life Covenanters, 10 New Subscribers to the C. E. World."

Do You Read Labels?

Domestic science teachers and food authorities are urging the housewife to carefully read the labels on all food articles.

The laws of most States compel food manufacturers to print the ingredients of their products on the label, and this enables consumers to distinguish healthful foods from those which may be deleterious.

High-grade baking powders are made of pure cream of tartar, derived from grapes. Royal Baking Powder is a type of the highest grade. It is healthful beyond a doubt and the safest and best to use.

The low-grade baking powders are made from alum, a mineral acid salt, or phosphate of lime.

Consumers can learn the character of the baking powder by referring to the label, which must state whether the contents include cream of tartar, alum or phosphate.

H. H. Peters is Rapidly Recovering.

The Christian Century enjoyed a visit last Saturday from H. H. Peters, who as reported in last week's issue, was recently stricken with facial paralysis. Mr. Peters is under treatment in Hinsdale Sanitai Hinsdale, a suburb of Chicago. A pleasant side of the very unpleasant story of Mr. Peters' affliction is that the other churches of Paris, Ill., where Mr. Peters ministers, offered to take eare of the problem of pulpit supply during the pastor's absence, and now eaeh Sunday one of these brother pastors of Mr. Peters' brings his entire congregation to the Christian ehurch for the morning service, the pastor doing the preaching. The ehurehes eo-operating in this good service are the Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Protestant, United Brethren and Baptist.

A National Secretary Retires.

After three years of service with the National Association of the Christian ehurch, Casper C. Garrigues returns to the pastorate. Before coming to the National Benevolent Assoeiation, Mr. Garrigues was the effieient pastor of the Hammett Place church, of St. Louis, and pastor therefore of the Christian Orphans' Home. During these years of work with the Hammett Plaee ehureh, he rendered such a valuable serviee to the orphans' home and to the National Benevolent Assoeiation that he was invited to a plaee on the seeretarial staff of the association. He has served these years with splendid devotion to the ministry of Christian benevolenee. His heart has been in this work through all the years and is still in it. He returns to the pastorate beeause he feels that a man with a young family ought to be located and beeause he has felt the pull of the pulpit and the regular ministry through all these years. He retires from the association enjoying the fullest eonfidenee and the highest esteem of all his assoeiates. He retires also without any abatement of his interest in the work of Christian benevolenee and in the speeial work in which the National Benevolent Assoeiation is engaged. He has accepted the pastorate of the First ehurch in Joplin and has already entered upon his work. He goes with the prayers of his brethren for a continuanee of his splendid sueeess in the ministry.

How P. H. Welshimer Works.

H. E. Stafford, pastor at Massillon, Ohio, sends a report of a meeting reeently held in his ehureh by P. H. Welshimer and P. M. Kendall. There were thirty additions. Mr. Stafford offers the following interesting explanation of Mr. Welshimer's sueeess: "Inasmueh as the writer lives but eight miles from the Canton ehureh he is often asked to account for the sueeess aehieved by Mr. Welshimer. The chief element as the writer sees it is his untiring devotion and consecration to his work. Mr. Welshimer begins his tasks of the day in the early morning and at ten o'eloek at night he may be found going from house to house visiting the sick. At eleven he may be found in consultation with some member or members regarding some work at the ehureh and there are times when he ean be found in his study at one and two in the morning. The eritieism often applied to ministers that thy possess professional laziness may be true of some few but not so of Mr. Welshimer."

Bible School Institutes in Ohio.

A Bible School Institute will be eonduеted at Cadiz, Ohio, November 28, 29 30, with sessions afternoon and evening. Instructors are not yet deeided upon. At Felieity an Institute for workers in Brown and Clermont Counties will be eonduеted December 3, 4, 5; instruetors, Mrs. Grace Boteler Sanders, Jamestown, and the State Bible School Superintendent, W. H. McLain. Robert M. Hopkins will assist on Deeember 5. In the Grandview Avenue Chureh, Portsmouth, the State Bible School Superintendent will be assisted in an institute by Mrs. John Asbury, Elementary Superintendent of the Kentueky Bible School Association, December 6, 7, 8.

the school, old and young. It contains a flag drill for the Beginners, a salute and song for the Primary pupils, a new kind of geography drill for the Juniors and a scripture lesson for the intermediates. For the others there are stirring messages and faets concerning the great Christian victories in our land. This program should be used, if possible, the Sunday before Thanksgiving. Whether the school takes special offerings or gives in other ways, the material of this exercise should be used for the sake of its instruetion and the enthusiasm it will ereate. Copies ean be secured from the American Christian Missionary Society, Carew Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Church Adds Members at Regular Services.

Magnolia Avenue Chureh, Los Angeles, does not need a revival to add to its membership. R. W. Abberley, the pastor, reports that during the past month twenty-three persons were added to the church family at regular services.

Church Extension Gains in Spite of War Conditions.

Secretary Muekley makes the following eneouraging statement of Chureh Extension progress: "Our new reeeipts show a gain of $999.41 from the chureh offerings and a gain of 116 new eontributing ehurches. This is very encouraging in the face of financial eonditions during the past year. The total new reeeipts are $86,998.70. Including returned loans the grand total for the year is $203,487.39, which is the amount on which the Board transaeted business and furnished help to the churehes needing new buildings. This is about $48,000 less than last year due to a failure of churches to return loans that were due and due to a falling off of $15,100 in Annuities. Our Annuity friends would have supplied this need and more but for the fact that they eould not collect loans due without embarrassing those who had their money. During the year 66 eongregations paid their loans in full, which means they paid their last notes. The total amount required on loans for the past 27 years, ineluding interest, is $1,864,903. By the Chureh Extension Plan of "Running the mill with the water that is past" the Board has had $1,864,903 more with which to do their work and the churches that returned this money say they are all the stronger because they systematieally planned to pay the money back to the Board so that it could go out again to build churches. Thus far 1778 churches have been helped to build in 44 states and in Canada and 1156 have paid their loans in full. 16 have failed and sold their property. That only 16 failed out of a total of 1778 speaks well for the vitality of our Home Mission work."

Thirteen Denominations Represented in Union Meeting.

W. J. Lockhart, pastor of the federated church at Urbandale, a suburb of Des Moines, sends the following interesting telegram:

"In campaign with my own church, Urbandale Federated, with 42 added past few days. Great services today. More than $8,000 contributed to complete building. Federated church deeply spiritual. More than 300 strong now and growing rapidly. Thirteen denominations represented. My union meeting at Rock Rapids is postponed; this gives me freedom for one union meting before Christmas."

—I. J. Cahill, of Cleveland, O., speaks highly of the evangelistic ability of G. Webster Moore, of Tiffin, O.

—Herbert Martin, of Drake, filled the pulpit for Arthur Dillinger, at Altoona, Ia., last Sunday. Seven accessions are reported at Altoona church during two weeks.

—I. E. Reid, pastor at North Tonawanda, N. Y., reports for his congregation an offering to missions and benevolences of $4.99 per average member; $8.87 per average member for local current expenses; for all purposes, per average member, $16.58. About $1,500 was raised for missions, benevolent and other philanthropic causes.

Victories of American Missions

Under the Union Jack.

M. B. Ryan has won a notable victory in the far northwest. He is in Alberta in western Canada, where the Union Jack proudly flies from the flag poles. This is almost in the land of the midnight sun, as in summer the sun shines from two in the morning until ten at night.

Mr. Ryan looks after all our work in the whole province. He always has an encouraging story to tell. This is what he has to say of the first Bible School in this pioneer land: "Our first Bible School was organized at Lake de May by some homesteaders from Minnesota. It met in the first school house built in that new distriet. It has been running continuously for nine or ten years and is the only Bible School for miles around. There is no church building in the community, and there has been very little preaching in all these years. A good many of its scholars have become Christians."

We now have ten Bible schools in the province of Alberta which is six times the size of Kentucky.

In the Lone Star State.

The cause of Home Missions has had no more faithful servant in all the land than that veteran of the Southwest, J. C. Mason. He began his work for the American Society in 1880 and served continually for thirty-five years save when for a few months he would bring his churches to self-support. During these years he planted churches at Texarkana, Houston, Beaumont, Orange, El Paso, and scores of others in cities, towns and country places in Texas and the southwest. He organized the Arkansas State Missionary Society and served the Texas Society for eleven years. He was especially fortunate in selecting good lots in growing towns for churches that later would be organized.

In a recent statement this grand old soldier of the Cross writes, "I am now serving from preference small churches that need the guiding hand of an experienced minister. If I had my ministry of more than forty-five years to go over again, I would place my services at the command of the American Christian Missionary Society."

Secretary Robert M. Hopkins is asking the Sunday-schools to make an Offering to Home Missions on the Sunday before Thanksgiving.

NEWS FROM THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO.

The Chicago Theological Seminary began its affiliated work with the University of Chicago at the opening of the autumn quarter. The seminary continues on the west side of the city an undergradute department, but at the university maintains only graduate work.

The formal opening took place at the University Congregational Church, when addresses were made by President Ozora S. Davis, of the seminary; President Harry Pratt Judson, of the university; and Dean Shailer Mathews, of the Divinity School. President Davis spoke on the subject of "The Place of the Theological Seminary in University Life."

For the first year under the new conditions the total enrolment in the seminary is thirty-eight, which shows a considerable increase over the number of college graduates enrolled last year.

The work of the seminary is so coordinated with that of the Divinity School as to increase the efficiency of both institutions. Thus far, all of the libraries have not been transferred, but a considerable section is kept as a group library in Haskell Oriental Museum. The university agrees ultimately to take care of the entire library, if desired.

The Theological Seminary has purchased the property on the northeast corner of University avenue and Fifty-eighth St., opposite the Quadrangle Club, and will enlarge the house for its own use.

The enrolment of the Divinity School during the year 1915-16 promises to be the largest in the history of the institution. Three hundred and nineteen were registered in the summer quarter, and in the autumn quarter there will be at least 140, exclusive of the students of the Chicago Theological Seminary, each one of whom is also matriculated and registered in the Divinity School. There will thus be during the course of a year a divinity student body in connection with the university of over five hundred, with a teaching force of something over thirty.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity —several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Volume XXXII NOVEMBER 4, 1915 Number 44

Doctrine

"PEOPLE AREN'T ANY LONGER INTERESTED IN DOCTRINAL PREACHING."

There is where you make a very vital mistake, Mr. Churchman. The only kind of preaching people are really interested in is doctrinal preaching—strong, serious doctrinal preaching. And the reason many a pulpit has become an impotent thing is because it no longer rings with a great doctrinal message; its preacher no longer studies the deep things of God and comes to his people with a fresh interpretation of the vast mystery of life in the presence of which every humblest soul of us continually stands.

Of doctrine there are two kinds, pseudo-doctrine and vital doctrine. Probably the reason doctrinal preaching is in disrepute is that the term is usually associated with the preaching of pseudo-doctrine.

We do not say false doctrine; for "pseudo" does not necessarily mean untrue. It means that which passes for doctrine, that which claims to be doctrine but is not. Many things have occupied the mind of the church which have passed for Christian doctrine, but were not. There is all that brood of denominational foibles and conceits—they have been each one in its day erected into a doctrine of the first magnitude, and to preach doctrinal sermons was to expound these peculiar tenets of one's own sect.

They might be true or they might be false, but whether true or false they were usurpers of the place that should have been given to the great life and death realities which truly concern every human heart.

Then there are the fine-spun theories that are woven out of the fragile threads of scripture texts. The time was when preaching of that sort was the stock in trade of the pulpit and there were minds that delighted in it.

But the mind of today that delights in it or can so much as tolerate it is very rare. People have lost interest in any literalistic interpretation of the Bible, and in the theories and doctrines that are based upon such use of the Scripture. If this microscopic expounding of texts is what is meant by doctrinal preaching, then there is no disputing the statement that people are no longer interested in doctrine.

But this, of course, is not doctrine. It is pseudo-doctrine. The theories may be true or false—who cares? More urgent matters concern the man of today, matters in which his very soul is at stake.

And these matters are doctrinal.

What a mistake does God's prophet make who imagines that his people have no interest in the deep things of the soul, and perhaps no capacity for them, and who therefore makes of his sermon a mere "practical" talk about some phase of church work! Such a preacher is ever exhorting his people to attend church and Sunday-school, reproving them for their reluctant and inadequate giving, pleading with them to take an interest in the prayer-meeting or the woman's society or the men's club. There is no eager anticipation in their hearts as they approach the sermon hour. That their minister will have a message that will feed and enrich and stay their souls is not to be expected. His task, he thinks, is to build up the church.

And all the time his people are hungering for a vital doctrinal message. They want to know how to think about life. The humblest of them want to know how to think. They do not want to be cozened into being good, or endlessly exhorted into being good. They want to feel that there is being built up in their inner selves a structure of Truth which will enable them to live by motives and insights that spring out of their own consciousness, not blindly following the crowd of other good people, or merely answering to the appeals of their spiritual leader.

The modern Church in reacting against the pseudo-doctrines of creeds and texts has made a radical blunder in reacting against the intellect itself in religion.

There is a tendency to discount the intellect, even to scoff at it, to assume that religion can get along very well without it. Religion is stated in terms of an amiable, cooperative disposition to work at social tasks of various kinds under the leadership of experts.

The social movement—as every great and fundamentally sound movement that grips mankind is likely to do—has brought with it a by-product of harm. In attempting to get us to fix a social focus for religion it has too often allowed us to let go the individual focus. And so religion has lost its character as religion.

Strong, sound religion revolves not around a single center but around two foci. The control of the individual is not more truly lodged in the social situation in which he lives than is that social situation controlled by forces that spring out of the individual soul.

And the distinctively religious quality of experience enters at the individual focus not at the social focus.

All of which means that the great task of the religious teacher and leader is not the social task—not the carrying through of this and that social reform—but the individual task—the building up of an inner spiritual life in the breasts of individual men and women.

And this means doctrinal preaching.

It means the illumination of life's mystery by putting a torch in each man's hand, by giving him an individual perception of his own, by training him to master his problems in the strength of his own principles and by the light of his own insights.

Doctrine—yes, the Truth about God, about the soul—this inner world of which even the average Christian knows so little, about the forces that lie at our hand wherewith to conquer our pride and lust and greed and all our sin, about our neighbor and his spiritual kinship to us, about Christ and the spiritual laws by which he was made perfect and by which we are to be made like him, about the world that lies but a hand-breadth beyond this—these are the doctrinal truths men's souls evermore need.

No, Mr. Churchman, the world isn't weary of Christian doctrine, but it faints for the want of it.

The Experience of Jesus

The Fourth of Four Studies of the Religion of Jesus Based on the Lord's Prayer.

BY FRANK WALLER ALLEN

INTRODUCTION: In its fullness one's religion has four different expressions. First, it is a creed: one must believe something. Second, it is a program: the abundant life is a planned life. Third, it is a prayer: one must seek to know and to harmonize one's self with the will of the Father. Lastly, it is an experience: for after all out of our contact with life and our interpretation of it, is born our philosophy. In these four studies it is my purpose to interpret the religion of Jesus—his creed, his program, his prayer, his experience—as it may be discovered through the medium of the prayer which he taught his disciples.

THIS prayer which Jesus gave his disciples proved to be his experience. With it as an outline one could write his biography. Jesus not only believed God to be, he not only petitioned him, but God's presence in human life was his experience. Of course I would caution my readers not to confuse the word "experience," as I use it, with the term as it is conventionally used in this connection, that is to say as merely an emotion. By experience I mean to say that Jesus consciously found for himself that God was a fact of life as primary and elemental as air and water and food. The ultimate aim of the creed, the program and the prayer is to discover and co-operate with God for human progress.

Life is changing, a process of becoming. Therefore the truth for us can never be absolute and final. Evolution is a law of the spiritual world as well as of the physical, and in the light of this truth, wonderful reconciliations become possible in the domains of science, religion and philosophy. Thus the new and vital philosophy of Henri Bergson is derived, like that of Herbert Spencer, from the great scientific generalization of the volution of living species. But Bergson goes further than Spencer, in his emphasis on the creative aspect of evolution. His philosophy discloses the life of the spirit, revealing to us a reality that is consistent with the satisfaction of our highest ideals. In his view, one of his commentators says, the reality of life is essentially freedom: "Life is a free activity in an open universe." Says Bergson:

THE FUTURE IS BEING MADE.

"We may be of little account in the great whole. Humanity itself and the planet on which it has won its success may be an infinitesimal part of the universal life, but it is one and identical with that life, and our struggle and striving are the impetus of life. And this, above all, our spiritual life means to us—the past has not perished, the future is being made."

Why, then, should we fear to bring a free and open mind to the consideration of religion? Truth has nothing to suffer from truth. When life forces us to discard a dogma that has outlived its usefulness, life offers us something better in its place and we have no excuse for repinings or misgivings. The sun is not extinguished when a candle burns out. To love the ancient forms of religion more than we love the religion which created those forms is idolatry. To fear that light has died when an old lamp is broken is childish lack of faith. There is no real loss in our individual lives, as there is no real loss in the universe. Human experience is a progressive discovery of good. The religious experience is a progressive discovery of God.

Our spiritual life is not a thing apart, but is born of and colored by our physical and emotional and intellectual experiences. And as these experiences are part of the ever-moving, oft-changing stream of life, they change, and our spiritual needs change with them. Religion, which links our consciousness to this vast current and makes us feel our relation to the stupendous, uncomprehended scheme of life, is something at the same time universal and intimately personal. Therefore, no definition can hold God, nobody can put him into a formula for us. Our discovery of God is a constant, ever-increasing, never-ending process, like our discovery of life. It is after all the great adventure, to which love and service and toil are all contributory.

> Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. And bring us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one.

This was the experience of Jesus. You ask: "Where did his knowledge of God come from? Were his ideas and ideals readymade?' Or were they communicated to him in some miraculous way?" If so, he was not made in all points like unto his brethren. He found out God, precisely as all the children of men must, by living with him and experiencing what God is to us. He started life with an exalted view of God, taught him by parents who inherited the best in Israel's religion: he lived with the God of his fathers, only as none other had ever lived, in unbroken accord with him; and he made the greatest of all discoveries, the discovery of the God whose purpose is set forth in this prayer. He was "the first that ever burst

Into the silent sea."

All of the great souls from mountain-peaks, from their highest moment of inspiration, have seen dimly and from afar what Jesus saw plainly. He was the pioneer in the complete knowledge of the purpose and character of God.

Translating the prayer into the terms of autobiography, it reads:

"I have discovered God, my Father, and all men's; I have found that his character compels supreme adoration; that his will is that earth shall contain a brotherhood of his children dwelling together as they do in heaven, the sphere of his ideals; that he has cared for me faithfully as I have striven to fulfill his will; that he forgives freely as we forgive, and so has been entirely at one with me, who have always forgiven my brethren; that he has never led me into temptation without providing a way of escape, that I might in his strength meet and vanquish it."

Are not the words of this prayer the record of the spiritual explorations of one who "Lived with God in such untroubled love

And clear confiding, as a child on whom
The Father's face had never yet but smiled;
And with men even, in such harmony
Of brotherhood, that whatsoever spark
Of pure and true in any human heart
Flickered and lived, it burned itself toward Him?"

And because it was his experience, he said to his brethren, "follow me." To share his purpose and to make it our prayer is to repeat his experience and join in his freedom.

Jesus went to school with a living God who was then at work in his world, and not with a god who had acted long ago and put it down in a book. He learned religion by the laboratory method of actually living.

Our times demand a livable, lovable religion. There needs to be a simplification of our definitions and a practical, everydayness to our expressions of religion. The eternal must be humanized, brought to earth and wrought into the commonplace routine and duties of daily life. He who, without robbing or depreciating the sanctuary, discovers God in the streets has found immortality here and now without regard to time or place. Jesus experienced God in everyday life.

RELIGION AND EVERYDAY LIFE.

To be great a religion must be intimately related to the most commonplace experiences of everyday life. To our daily bread; our daily temptation. It is easy to believe that one has discovered God in a Gothic cathedral, but it requires greatness of soul to find him in the hurrying, light-hearted throng on a September Saturday night. But the point is that he is in the crowd; in the laughter, hopes and dreams of youth; in the living, striving, heavy-happy-hearted human throng! God is there or nowhere: and it requires neither a genius nor a poet to make this discovery. Sympathy in human things and a faith in folks finds God among the people.

Thus do we become seekers, constantly determining the relation of God to life. And in the Christian religion we determine the relation of God to human life through the mind and activities of Jesus the Carpenter. Thus is religion made simple and reasonable. Such a religion has no creed save that the God of Jesus is in his world; the conviction that justice and gentleness shall cause "the desert to blossom as the rose"; to give people a chance to be good by first making them happy; and to pray that we may be delivered from stupidity, ignorance and selfishness while we are granted an open mind and intelligent faith and a love at work for folks.

A religion which does not express itself in fraternal social relations is not a religion, but a mocking masquerade. The Christian who does not feel the poverty of our large cities to be a reproach to society, the hunger of mothers and babes to be a sinful and shameful thing, the toil of little children to the end that palaces may be built for human drones to be as unholy as the crucifixion of Jesus itself, is in need of the service of some true Christian missionary. To be a good Christian and a bad citizen without seeking to remove bad social conditions is impossible.

ONLY CHARACTER COUNTS.

Finally, it was the experience of Jesus that the divine element in religion is love. Love manifesting itself in service is alone divine in Jesus of Nazareth and in man. Love without service is base; and service without love is dead. The absence of either results in atrophy of character. And only character counts—and then it doesn't unless used for human service. God hates servility as much as he loves that gentle mastery of life to which he always lends a hand. If there is anything which makes one man God's son more than another it is a deeper love and a greater service. It is thus only that we become one with our father and share immortality. Greater love hath no man than this, that he live his life for his friends. Consequently greater religion hath no man than this, to know God in everyday life and to live for his fellowman.

Publishing Religion Abroad

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN

MAKING the church and religion known is an enterprise which involves ethics, psychology, sociology, aesthetics and many other sciences and arts. First of all, perhaps, we ought to know whether it is proper to speak at all about publicity for our religion and its institutions.

The Old Testament prophet was not squeamish about the methods he employed to bring his message to the attention of the people. Isaiah almost naked in the streets of his nation's capital was a sensational preacher of the coming captivity of Judah. Jeremiah, despairing an audience to which to preach, wrote what he had to say in a book, not a bad occupation for some men of today who preach to empty benches a message which they are sure the world ought to hear. The very word gospel means "news." The command to "publish abroad" is one of the injunctions in connection with gospel work. There were no newspapers in Jesus' day, but the equivalent in modern life was used. Disciples were sent ahead as messengers to announce their Lord's coming and to give some idea of what his message was to be. Paul was not satisfied with preaching but used his epistles to continue a preaching ministry to churches that he might not see for awhile. It is foreign to the spirit of the gospel for us to hide our lamps under bushels. We are to proclaim the good deeds of our religion until the faith is like a city set on a hill. We are encouraged to proclaim good deeds to the world in the confident belief that the world will glorify our Father in heaven on the receipt of this good news.

IS PUBLICITY LEGITIMATE FOR THE CHURCH?

The notion that a publicity campaign is secular and that only secular-minded preachers will have part or lot in such questionable enterprises, is born of false conceptions both of publicity and the real nature of religion. An advertising campaign for a church may be secular, but so may a course of sermons on biblical subjects, if improperly handled. A preacher oft seen about newspaper offices may be a consummate egotist exploiting his foolish personality, or he may be a modern prophet who has recognized how religious work should be done in a new century. It is our point of view, at the outset, that a publicity campaign is to arise out of our deepest religious convictions, and that we are to give the larger public not the hay, stubble and chaff of our religious household, but its real treasures.

The church, as well as a soap factory, must have good goods, or else it is no use to advertise. More than one firm has promoted an inferior article at great cost, only to find that the public soon turned away in weary disgust from the fraudulent article that was exploited with such fair promise. The church with an out-grown message will do well to seek no publicity. Display ads, bill-posters, electric signs, and house-to-house distribution bring only disappointment to such.

Ethics, too, has its place in an advertising campaign. "The truth at any cost" is the slogan of the great advertising organizations of the country, because nothing else works. When a church advertises good music, and provides glory-land songs, the public resents the misrepresentation. "Strangers Welcome" is on many a church signboard, when the visitor comes and goes without the slightest notice from the congregation. More than one preacher dares to announce himself for a given subject, and changes the arrangement without notice, to the disgust of the visitor who comes after the advertised article. It will not do to advertise a refrigerator as "A Home-like Church." This invites disgust and revulsion of feeling.

TWO FORMS OF CHURCH ADVERTISING.

The publicity agent for the church must also have some artistic feeling, or the proprieties will be violated continually. Undertaking firms do not advertise with "Sunny Jim" pictures. The skilful ad for such a firm creates an impression of dignity. A publisher who would advertise a book on philosophy by means of a cartoon, would not find that his investment paid. On the other hand, a burlesque show that had its ad set in text type would be equally inefficient and futile in its campaign. There are styles of printer's type and methods of approach for every mood of the human mind. The man who would commend the gospel of Christ with a funny picture, lacks completely in aesthetic feeling and consequently in advertising efficiency.

Two rather popular forms of church advertising right now might be mentioned, as illustrations. They have nothing to commend them except that they seem to their perpetrators to be funny. There is the church blotter which makes a pun out of the noble text regarding the blotting out of our sins. It makes men laugh but never drives them to their knees. A still worse device came out last winter, making a pun on the "Safety First" movement throughout the country. A big safety pin was attached to a card, and "Safety First" was connected with the sacred theme of the safety of our souls. It brought a shock to religious souls; it was worse than useless.

ADVERTISING AND PSYCHOLOGY.

There is the sociology of advertising. Any given denomination is apt to operate generally with certain groups in the social structure. This is much more true of a local congregation. The sociological question for the advertiser is this: how does my constituency receive its ideas? In a town where the socialists have accustomed the working people to accept tracts and read them, there is a hint to the church from this fact. In another town, the newspaper is the big outstanding agent of publicity for the church to use. Some kinds of people can best be reached through their mail, as for instance office men, who feel some conscience about reading letters and answering them. This makes apparent how useless it is for a publicity man in the church to copy methods from another parish, unless the conditions of the two parishes are somewhat similar in character.

There is probably no more important science in connection with advertising than psychology. Professor Scott of Northwestern University is the foremost authority in the practical application of psychology to publicity. His book on advertising is now in every high grade commercial course in the country, and should be in the library of every preacher who would know his job as a publicity agent.

The advertiser must know how to secure attention. He must realize there is a limit to the time he may hope to hold attention, so he must not try to tell all his story today. Frequency in advertising attack tends to break down opposition and to wear grooves into the mind of the public. There is the suggestive element in advertising. An ad is a bad one which facetiously advises the reader to do the opposite of what he ought to do. This may engage attention but will not secure favorable action. There is the proper play upon emotions and motives in advertising literature. The preacher may undertsand this when he stands in his pulpit but have no feeling for it when he writes an article for the newspaper, or prepares copy for the printer.

SELF-LAUDITORY "PUFFS."

We must vigorously exclude a type of publicity which the wrong kind of preacher has sought, the advertisement of the person. Newspaper men have been more disgusted with preachers on account of the self-laudatory puffs mailed in from time to time, than for any other reason. No newspaper man of any repute seeks notoriety for himself. He is satisfied to toil year after year in his office without even the poor comfort, in many cases, of seeing his name appear in his paper as editor. The least known of all the great men of our community are the editors. Men who are so modest in the treatment of their own personality cannot understand the attitude of the preacher who describes himself as "the greatest of them all." The preacher's name must often appear in connection with the work of his institution and with the preaching of his message. There is a natural way for this connection to be made which is not offensive. There is no point, however, which the preacher should watch with greater care than the preservation of a proper modesty in his publicity work.

What are the questions that people ask about the strange church? They must be our guide in the kind of publicity we give our institutions. Some people in a new community look for the church with the good music. Others look for the church of the "leading people." Still others want to be assured of vital and human preaching. Others want the church of the "glad hand." The prohibitionist will want to be sure that the church is straight on the saloon question. Others will ask what the church is doing in the way of social service, or for the young people. There are unique features in nearly every church program that no one would ask about, but which, if known, would prove a drawing card for the church.

CAN THE CHURCH BRAG?

There must be delicacy and a measure of indirection in the presentation of a church's strong points. A church cannot afford to brag, any more than can an individual. One church near Chicago recently announced that it was the most liberal church in town and of the most liberal denomination. Such statements, even if true, do not leave a good taste in the mouth of the public. If a church is conscious of being weak in any matter that the public esteems of importance, the more publicity there is, the worse the case of that church. It is not dishonest for a church to "bull its stock" by throwing up into relief its strong points.

A church cannot say that its worship is this or that. But the printed order of service on a church calendar, scattered throughout the community might relieve someone's anxiety about what would happen if he went to church after twenty years' absence. This order of worship is noticed first by most people who pick up church calendars, so it is fair to infer that the order of worship is not a matter of indifference to the people.

We cannot brag in our advertising matter of our leading people. We can, however, connect their names in natural ways with church activity in our publicity. In this way, the public learns to associate these lay people with the local church to the credit of both.

The means of making the local church known to the general public depends upon the section of that public that may be in mind. We usually send our news to the religious weekly, if we send it at all, either as a favor to the editor which he is supposed to reciprocate, or as a means of personal aggrandizement. That the notice can ever mean anything in the promotion of our local work often escapes us. Yet many can testify that favorable account of our church doings may open doors to us. The Disciple newly moved into our community often comes with his mind made up about our church. If he reads a church paper, it is our fault if he comes to us unfavorably impressed. He does not care to unite with a church that "the brotherhood never hears of."

HOW TREAT NEWSPAPER MAN.

The matter of getting newspaper publicity for the church means first of all courteous treatment of newspaper men. People will be rude to a reporter who are not rude to any one else, but such rudeness is more expensive than almost any other . Courtesy brings a favorable interpretation for the church in any situation in which it finds itself.

It is the human story of church activity that gets into the newspaper. The newspapers had the story of a man who forged a check in our city once, but they never had the story of how men in the Disciple church raised money, and saved the poor victim of a first mistake from the penitentiary. The press had the narrative of how a man attacked his wife with a hatchet while in delirium tremens, but there was no story of how this man was sent to a sanitarium by our church and reclaimed to society. Any preacher knows that his work furnishes material for another book like Macfarlane's "Those Who Have Come Back," or Begbie's "Twice Born Men." Much of such material must be held with the same honor as that of father confessor, but some of it may be given to the world to prove that religion is as real now as ever.

The church printing is an important subject. One pastor among the Disciples asked his church for an appropriation for five thousand dollars for publicity, largely to be spent in printing.

The church bulletin is one of the most outstanding features of our modern church advertising. Some of them are so badly written, and so lacking in interest that they are not very useful. Frank Waller Allen of Springfield uses the designation on the announcement page, "The Church Life." The church bulletin is carried home by the children into households from which the adults do not come. It rides around in men's pockets and, when thrown away, falls into the hands of other men. It lies around in the house, and when the housewife throws it away, she thinks again of the church. I cannot doubt that a church bulletin is of more value than a series of advertising cards such as used by many churches, for it is a more interesting document when properly edited. The back page can often be used for a noble poem or doctrinal statement. Extracts from the best reading of the pastor are in place here.

A business house is judged by the quality of its printing and so is a church. We cannot afford to use cheap paper. Dodgers on cheap stock handed around the community are a sure mark of a church with a cheap conception of itself. Good printing costs a little more, but cheap printing is dear at any price.

PERSISTENCE IN ADVERTISING.

Any advertising campaign without follow-up plans is largely lost. If the announcement of a special service brings a large audience, there should be cards in the pews to secure the names of the strangers who may be present. These should then receive the weekly bulletin of the church through the mail for awhile as a follow-up idea.

The gathering of a mailing list and keeping it in order is one of the important tasks of a live church. Some pastors keep all the new names they get at the church door for the mailing list. Once a month, all year round, the people on the list get something from the church, either the monthly parish paper, or the bulletin, or a post card announcement of some special event. Occasionally the list is revised. . A person who has received the mail a year without result is taken from the list, unless there are special circumstances to justify retaining the name. This advertising campaign costs some money but it has been demonstrated again and again that the results achieved bring the money back again several times within a year, so we should never hesitate to spend our funds wisely on postage.

It is the continued effort in advertising that pays. The prize fighter tries to find his foe's weakest spot. Then he hammers at this spot until he gets results. The men that have made money on advertising have not been quitters. Nothing but a year-in and year-out program brings success.

Most preachers reach but a relatively few people with their message. Compare the influence of such a prince of pulpiteers as Dr. Gunsaulus with that of Pastor Russell. The former has the ideas but the latter has known how to circulate his stuff all over the world. Pastor Russell's sermons go in boiler plate to the country weekly. The printed volumes of his millenarian doctrine run into over a million volumes in the various languages. I venture the assertion that there is in the world today no more widely circulated religious literature than that of Millenian Dawn, except the Bible itself. If Pastor Russell is a real factor in church life, it is not because of his ideas but because of his being master of the art of publicity.

HOW THE TOWN PAPER HELPS.

Seventh Day Adventism is a sect that understands the use of the printed page. They have in the world 37 different publishing plants with an investment of $ 1,488,388.46 in these various plants and issue printed products in 87 different languages. Their product of literature last year amounted to over two millions of dollars.

The Unitarians, also, have been great believers in the printed page. Many local churches operate a postal mission and advertise through national journals to furnish tracts free of charge. It is no accident that everybody knows what Unitarianism is, even if the nature of its religious life has prevented much growth. There are thirty times as many Disciples as Unitarians. Are they as well known? Certainly the Disciples have been far better prepared to have their essential ideas see the light of day than any of the sects we have mentioned.

Preachers who preach good sermons on interesting human themes in religion, can get the town paper to print their stuff. Send some in to the editor if he doesn't ask for it, so he may judge of its interest. Copy written on a typewriter, double spaced to admit of corrections, and arriving well in advance of the date of publication, has the most chance of publication.

Our people often ask us to print our sermons. A printed sermon left behind is of more value than many photos. The people will remember a man's face, easier than his ideas.

PRINTED SERMONS.

The printing of sermons is not so expensive as many have imagined. They should go on a page the size of a book, and a sufficient number of them can be bound up for future reference by any one who is interested. Between ten and fifteen dollars will print a sermon in such form, and the copies sold will materially reduce the net cost. After the pastor does it a few times himself, individuals and organizations may wish to do it for him. A thousand copies of a good doctrinal sermon on the history and purpose of the Disciples would be a good investment for any church.

It is impossible in the compass of a single article to speak of bulletin boards, electric signs, street car signs, and many another up-to-date method of commending religion to the attention of the public. This much has been written to insist that if the great plea of the Disciples of Christ were given the same diligent press-agenting as, for instance, Christian Science has, we should go forward by leaps and bounds. Efficient preaching of the gospel of Christ must include the intelligent use of the best methods of modern publicity.

The Scandal of Sectarianism

BY R. W. GAMMON

In the Congregationalist.

"WE REGARD no community adequately churched until we get there." Thus spoke a petty official of one of the great religious organizations of America. Another official of the same organization predicts that the denomination which he represents will in a few years absorb all others of the United States and then contest the field with the Roman Catholics.

These are extreme statements of the sectarian spirit that is the curse of small communities and mission fields in the middle and farther west. It emphasizes how far this spirit can go in denial of all that is fundamental in the spirit of Jesus. The following incidents are typical of a situation that some of us thought had ceased to exist. The spirit that led a prominent member of a great church to say when he heard of Henry Ward Beecher's death, "Oh, well, that's just another Congregationalist gone to hell," still lives. Residents in small towns or pioneer mission fields will multiply examples.

A STORY FROM REAL LIFE.

In a small Illinois town there were two churches, the A's and the B's. The B's called a meeting to plan for a new building which was badly needed. The A's heard of this meeting. They immediately got together and though their need of a new building was not great they voted to proceed at once to the erection of a structure and sent their solicitors to obtain all the outside money possible. The B's waited two years more before they were able to build. For a month during these two years the A's sent a member of their congregation to count the people at the services of the B's. This person would come near the close of the service, stand just inside the door of the audience room and openly count those present. Announcement was then made the next day of how much the audience of the A's exceeded that of the B's.

So great was the bitterness in this community that when the B's had finished their church and seeded down what promised to be a fine lawn about it, they were astonished and grieved to find that horses had been ridden through it again and again and it was completely ruined. It afterward developed that this had been done by young men who were members of the congregation of the A's.

AFTER THE UNION REVIVAL.

Small cities have a good deal of this spirit in their midst. Not long ago in a city of 30,000 population, after a great union revival meeting, the pastor of the largest church in the city—a church that had received large accessions to its membership, sent to the people who were admitted a pastoral letter concerning their relationship to the church. Among other things he admonished them to have all their dealings so far as possible with the membership of their own church and to keep all their business affairs within its circle. This pastor is considered one of the most highly educated and progressive men of his denomination.

Only a few days ago an official of a great missionary society belonging to a leading denomination, said that an agreement of comity or federation in religious work with certain missionary organizations of some denominations was treated by the officials of these organizations as a scrap of paper. An agreement is held binding by them only so long as it seems to serve their interests to abide by it. It is counted perfectly fair by some missionary organizations for their workers to steal members, strategic positions for new work or church buildings. So aggressive do some workers become that they have been known to stop children on the way to another Sunday-school and persuade them to attend theirs. Every sort of trickery is used, even to the making of a sensation in the administration of one of the ordinances or the use of a demagogue or a mountebank in the pulpit. The strange thing is that some of the most formally orthodox and pious talkers are those who sin deepest in this regard.

SPIRITUAL IDEALS SACRIFICED.

I have wondered if high church officials in denominations so given to sectarianism know what their petty officials are doing. If they do not know and do not call a halt, are they not equally guilty with those who serve them? Sectarianism makes church extension difficult for organizations that have high-minded officials. It is comparatively easy to imbue people who are busy and who do not think much of the consequences, with the world spirit of competition. It is a spirit that easily becomes inimical to all spiritual ideals. Much of the trouble in church circles in small towns and the difficulty of Christianizing the frontier may be attributed to it. It also adds to the burdens of the denominations in securing adequate supplies for the ministry. Self-respecting young men do not wish to dedicate their lives to ecclesiastical thievery. That is what seems to be demanded in many quarters for denominational success.

HEAVEN'S SPEECH

If there be memory in the world to come,
  If thought recur to some things silenced here,
Then shall the deep heart be no longer dumb,
  But find expression in that happier sphere;
It shall not be denied their utmost sum
  Of love to speak without or fault or fear,
But utter to the harp, with changes sweet,
  Words that, forbidden still, then heaven were incomplete.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE WORLD'S MORAL CRISIS

IT IS manifest that unique and trying conditions confront the Church of Christ throughout the world. The appalling war now raging among Christian nations over almost the entire continent of Europe has placed a very heavy burden upon the resources, the courage and the moral stamina of the members of the Christian community everywhere on that continent.

In our own land the spiritual depression caused by the war, the scepticism and cynicism resulting from the apparent failure of Christianity to prevent such a tragedy among the very nations who have stood historically as its exponents and defenders, and the wave of materialism which has been generated by speculative opportunities produced by the war, have combined to place the Church in a position at once apologetic and difficult.

In such a time the cause of Christian missions suffers acutely. The revenues contributed in the past by the European churches are greatly reduced, and in many instances entirely lacking. Disturbed conditions in the industrial and commercial circles of America have materially decreased the usual contributions to all benevolences, and missionary funds have borne a heavy share of the loss.

It is clear that the American churches must assume a much larger proportion of the financial support of the work of missions, both in the centers of Christendom and throughout the non-Christian world, if the cause of Christ is not to sustain serious damage in this trying time.

It is of the utmost importance that the Christian forces, regardless of denominational differences, shall work in the fullest measure of unity to counteract the influences of atheism, secularism, moral indifference and the drag of materialistic tendencies.

Every voice making for partyism should be hushed. Those voices that interpret to the Church its basic unity and that call the Church to act upon its unities rather than its differences should be given the right of way in our souls.

We cannot meet the call of God to succor His distracted world while the clamor of sectarian doctrines sounds in our ears.

A NEW PROHIBITION WEEKLY

JUST how big an issue the liquor question has become in the nation is indicated by the multiplication of newspaper organs in the various parts of the country to tell the news of progress and to push the cause along.

The latest to make its appearance and by far the most significant of all newspaper organs of this character now in the field is the National Enquirer, published in Indianapolis, the initial issues of which are now before us.

It is edited by the two most effective prohibition speakers in the United States, Gov. J. Frank Hanly and Mr. Oliver W. Stewart. It is a big seven-column blanket-sheet affair with its matter organized and featured like a city daily and with a whole page devoted to signed editorials.

There is a throb of vigor and victory in both the news columns and the editorials that is, of course, characteristic of all prohibition literature today, but that seems to be more firm and intelligent in this case than elsewhere.

Through the personalities of its two editors, the paper combines the points of view of both the Anti-saloon League and the Prohibition party, uniting these two methods in a synthesis that all lovers of the great cause, irrespective of particular ways and means of advancing it, will be glad to behold.

PRESIDENT BURNHAM WAS MISTAKEN

WE HAVE been hoping to be furnished with a word of explanation from President F. W. Burnham of the American Missionary Society, relieving the critical situation in which his letter to Rev. C. C. Cline placed the General Convention and the missionary societies, but since the publication of this correspondence in our issue of October 14, no word has been received from him.

It is far from the purpose of The Christian Century to discredit Mr. Burnham's leadership of the American Society in any degree in these days when that society is in dire need of every ounce of loyal support its friends can give. And our affection for him personally is such that only the most serious matters of principle could persuade us to put him in the position of being flatly contradicted by facts and by his colleagues who know the facts.

But the principle involved in the General Convention seems to us to be so vital to the well-being and progress of the Disciples of Christ that personal considerations ought not to deter us from giving the facts to our readers. The principles involved in the General Convention are more important than any one man, more important—we speak advisedly—than the continued existence of the American Society. The benefits that will accrue to the Disciples' cause through the unification of all their general interests under the guidance of a General Convention representing the churches, far outweigh the service that any single society can render, great though that service is.

Therefore when the president of the American Society gives aid and comfort to the enemies of this great progressive achievement, enabling them to quote his words and gloat over them, words which array not only his own society but all the societies against the future usefulness of the General Convention, it seems an evident duty to say as plainly and bluntly as we can that Mr. Burnham was altogether mistaken, that there was no ground in fact for his statements but that the very contrary of his statements is true.

Secretary Graham Frank's letter as published in The Christian Century last week shows conclusively that Mr. Burnham was altogether mistaken when he assured his correspondent that the General Convention would henceforth have no co-operation whatever from the national missionary societies. In addition to Mr. Frank's letter we have received letters from officials of all but one or two of the national societies, many of them reciting at considerable length the same sort of facts set forth by Mr. Frank, and all of them indicating that no action has been taken changing in any essential respect the relation of the societies to the General Convention since that relationship was established at Toronto in 1913.

In a personal interview we were assured by Mr. Burnham's colleague, Secretary Grant K. Lewis, that the American Society had taken no action whatever which would justify its presidents in saying that it was "not in any sense subject to the advice, direction or co-operation of the General Convention."

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

Several officers of the General Convention besides Secretary Frank have written us expressing astonishment at Mr. Burnham's statements, both the sentence quoted above and that in which he declares that even "if the General Convention continues to live, as it may in name, it will do so without any co-operation on the part of the societies." That there is any disposition justifying such a prophecy is bluntly denied also by most of the letters we have received from the officials of the various societies.

From all this it is plain that Mr. Burnham was mistaken, and, as one secretary put it, that there was absolutely no ground for his declarations except, possibly, his own wish to have them true.

While we will gladly publish in The Christian Century any statement Mr. Burnham may deem it desirable to make, we do not regard any further discussion in this paper as necessary for getting the truth clearly before our readers.

But we hold it to be the very urgent duty of the president of the American Society to inhibit a certain other newspaper from further exploiting his indiscreet and unfounded utterances, and to do so with promptness.

If the situation is thus met promptly and unequivocally no serious harm need come to either the General Convention or the American Society as a result of this unfortunate episode.

THE FIRST AMERICAN HIGHER CRITIC

THOSE Disciples who rage at higher criticism should pause long enough to consider that Alexander Campbell was really the first higher critic in the American theological world.

This is a fact that has not been sufficiently dwelt upon. In his treatment of the Bible Mr. Campbell was a heretic in his day. And his heresy consisted in his teaching virtually the same principles of interpretation as modern historical criticism stands for. His principles of interpretation were not so well developed for the very reason that he was a pioneer. But his sermon on the law, preached when he was a very young man, and which marked him as a "dangerous teacher" brought a new view of the Bible into the religious world. At that time men thought of the Bible as a level book. All parts were of practically equal value. It was more or less magically used. Many were accustomed, when in need of divine guidance, to let the Bible open of its own accord and whatever portion the eye fell upon was taken as providentially adapted to the need of the hour.

Against this Mr. Campbell revolted. He declared that we had to discriminate within the Bible. Some portions of the Bible were truer than others—for us. The Old Testament was for the Jewish people. We are not bound by it, he declared. We are under the New Testament. Even the ten commandments are not law for us.

That was strange doctrine. It startled and maddened the Church.

The principle of the three dispensations each with a literature of its own, the literature of the Judaic dispensation succeeding that of the Patriarchal dispensation, and being itself in turn succeeded by the literature of the Christian dispensation—what have we here but the conception of the progressive nature of revelation stated in terms as clear as it could be stated before the appearance of modern evolutionary terms.

Rev. E. B. Barnes, in the Christian Evangelist, states the service rendered by the Campbells, father and son, thus:

> If the Campbells reduced the matter of conversion to a rational process, they insisted that we apply rational methods of interpretation to the Scriptures. In their hands it ceased to be a book of dead levels. They made clear the distinctions between the law and the gospel, between the Old Testament and the New. They brought to it the methods of the scholar. They allowed it to speak for itself. It became a book of human interest. They urged that men read it as they would read any other book, under the same principles of interpretation. At once it lost its mechanical, magical, and mystical meanings. The hap-hazard method passed out of date. We were exhorted to bring to it the best judgment we possessed, and to read with our minds open to its teaching. When we think of it, what else could be done? We read the Bible with the same eyes, we understand its words according to the lexicon, the same memory reproduces its teachings as the teaching of any other book, we contemplate its beauty and its wonders with precisely the same faculties that we bring to the perusal of Shakespeare.

Mr. Campbell's adumbration of the modern critical movement was sufficiently explicit to have rendered the Disciples, had they been left to their normal development, for a place in the very front rank of that movement.

It is perfectly justifiable in the light of history to regard Mr. Campbell as the pioneer of historical criticism in the American Church.

OPPORTUNITIES IN THE ORIENT

A COMBINATION of inherent defects in the ethnic religions of the east and of the corroding influence of western thought and example in the realms of business and science has brought about a condition of affairs in China and in Japan which is giving much concern to the ruling authorities.

The moral basis for future individual and collective action is becoming obscured. Laxity of conduct is becoming too frequent. Pessimism is too common.

Hence the effort of the President of the Chinese republic to reinstate the authority of Confucianism, not in an exclusive way hostile to Christianity but as a prudential measure, on the ground that the state needed the sanctions of religion for the moral demands henceforth to be made upon the Chinese citizen as a patriot and as a lover of his race.

Hence also the repeated efforts of Japanese officials to bring about a reaffirmation in the generation trained in the universities and colleges of Japan and of the Occident of that ancient ardor and devotion to religion as such which, in the opinion of the officials, is necessary if the moral issues facing that nation internally and externally are to be solved rightly and in a way to prolong the national life.

It was the misfortune of Japan that her first break with her native faiths came at a time when the western world was concentrating so much of its thought on a materialism, practical and theoretical, which it since has found wanting and is rejecting today.

Japan is now similarly repentant of its unwisdom.

Witness the deliverance recently put forth by prominent Japanese who form a society called Concordia. In it they distinctly relate their immediate, present national laxity of ethics to too ready acceptance a generation or more ago of a materialistic philosophy, and to an undervaluation of idealism.

Thus Japan must be included in that wide circle of the nations today who are revolting against irreligion and moral indifference and are seeking for the way to set up truth and righteousness.

The opportunity for Christian direction of the religious life of the Orient was never more wide and more appealing than just now.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Ministerial Salaries in the United States.

In connection with the work of the men who are raising ministerial pension funds in the United States, in the different denominations, there has been collected some very valuable statistics on the ministrial salaries of the various denominations. These are given as follows: Unitarian, $1,221; Protestant Episcopal, $994; Universalist, $987; Lutheran, $744; Presbyterian, North, $977; Presbyterian, South, $857; Methodist Episcopal, $741; Northern Baptist, $683; Methodist Episcopal, South, $681; United Brethren, $547; Disciples, $526; Southern Baptist $344. It would seem from these figures that the more evangelical of the denominations are not the more liberal in their treatment of pastors.

Oklahoma City Gives School Bulding to Methodists.

The city of Guthrie, Okla., gave the Methodists the old capitol building for the use of a proposed Methodist University of Oklahoma. Some citizens protested this action and suit was brought which was carried to the supreme court. The highest court of the state has just affirmed the right of the city of Guthrie to act as it did and the Methodists will now go forward with their plans to found a strong educational institution there.

Seeking Scholarly Preachers.

In an effort to encourage habits of study on the part of its ministry the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has a post-graduate reading course for its preachers. The works include this year are: "The Doctrine of the Person of Jesus Christ," Mackintosh; "The Divinity of Our Lord," Liddon; "Christianity and the Nations," Speer; "John Hus: His Life, Teachings, and Death after 500 Years," David S. Schaff. The bishops, in accordance with a vote of the General Conference, urge all the preachers to pursue this course.

Congregationalists Hold National Council.

The national body of the Congregational fellowship is the National Council. This just closed its session at New Haven, Conn. There has been some opposition to the organization of such a body, as to the delegate convention among the Disciples, and also a careful restriction of the functions of the body. The meeting this year faced the problem of the relationship of the Sunday School and publishing interests with the home missionary organization of the denomination. There seems to be some overlapping of function, and the strict delimitation of the field of each organization was expected from this meeting. Dean Brown of the Yale School of Religion presided over the national council this year. In his opening address were the following significant sentences:

"He who breaks the nations with a rod of iron is showing the costly and deadly futility of suspicion and hatred as a basis of international life."

"Right here in our own land there is a latent capacity for heroism and for generosity, for moral adventure and for self-sacrifice, which once called into action will yet write some of the finest chapters ever written in the moral history of the race."

"The Master taught us to take the long view. In his eyes the religious worker was not a hustler, but a sower of seed."

"The huge task of Christianizing our social order means the introduction of a more democratic spirit into the control of all those great industries."

Care for Tuberculous Ministers by Presbyterians.

The Presbyterians have a sanatorium at Albuquerque, New Mexico, in which they care for tuberculous ministers. It is conducted by the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation. There is now a total of about a hundred thousand dollars invested in the plant. The institution is able to take pay patients at the rate of $45 per month and hopes to secure endowment so patients may be received for five dollars a week.

Question of Union Between Congregationalists and Methodist Protestants Raised Again.

The question of union between the Methodist Protestants and the Congregationalists is being raised again. The former body regards itself more in sympathy with the Congregationalists than with the Methodist Episcopal church from which it divided years ago. For a time a triangle union proposition was talked of including the United Brethren but this is no longer discussed.

The Episcopal Breach Over South American Conference.

Simultaneously with the plan of World Conference on Faith and Order to promote Christian Union, the Episcopalians are divided over the question of sitting in conference with other Protestants over the religious needs of South America. In view of the threatened break of a considerable number of churches from active fellowship with the Board of Missions, the more progressive journal of the denomination proposes as a compromise, not the withdrawal of the denomination from the Latin-America Congress but the following rules for the delegates:

"1. They shall have no power to bind this Church or the Board of Missions for any purpose by any agreement, expressed in resolutions or otherwise, or implied.

2. They shall abstain from criticism of any other religious body; and especially they shall recognize by due respect the position which the Church of Rome holds in some countries as established by law, and in some countries as having been for three or even four centuries the representative of Christianity.

3. They shall inculcate, so far as in them lies, a spirit of sincere charity toward all other Christian bodies.

4. They shall remember that the purpose for which this Church maintains missions in Latin-American lands is not to proselyte from other Christian bodies but to minister to our own fellow-citizens, and to convert to Christ unbelievers, be they pagans, as so many of the Indians are, or lapsed Christians who have forsaken the Christian faith and the Christian profession; and they shall approach all questions which may be considered by the Congress in the light of this purpose."

Phillips Brooks' Old Church Remembered.

Trinity Episcopal church of Boston was the scene of the long and fruitful ministry of Phillips Brooks. It has recently received $5,000 for a stained glass window, and three thousand has been given for the Trinity Home for Aged Women. The church conducts a good library where books are easily secured by anyone.

An Archbishop for Dublin.

The most Rev. Dr. Peacocke has resigned as Archbishop of Dublin, in the Episcopal fellowship, and an effort is being made to secure a successor. The Dublin Synod met recently and was unable to secure a two-thirds vote for any one candidate. The two leading candidates are Dr. D'Arcy, Bishop of Down, and Dr. Bernard, Bishop of Ossory. The Bench of Bishops will have to choose the archbishop and will probably take one or the other of these two candidates.

We live in an age when most of us have forgotten that the Gospel of our Saviour Jesus Christ, which he came to preach, and the sanction of which he sealed with his blood, in addition to all else that it was, besides scattering blessings over every class of the community, was above all the gospel of the poor; that the lot of the poor was that which he chose for himself; that from the ranks of the poor he selected his apostles, who went forth into the world to found the most glorious kingdom ever exhibited to the eyes of men; and that from this Master proceeded the words which showed us, in reference to temporal circumstances, that a time would come when many of the first shall be last and the last first.—W. E. Gladstone.

JONAH A MISSIONARY TO NINEVEH.

(Foreign Missionary Lesson.)

Golden Text: Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Matthew 28:19, 20.

Lesson Jonah 3:1-4:11; verses 3:1-10, printed. Memorize verse 3:10.

(1) And the word of Jehovah came unto Jonah the second time, saying, (2) Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee. (3) So Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of Jehovah. Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city, of three days' journey. (4) And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and he cried, and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.

(5) And the people of Nineveh believed God; and they proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them. (6) And the tidings reached the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes. (7) And he made proclamation and published through Nineveh by the decree of the king and his nobles, saying, Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste anything: let them not feed, nor drink water; (8) but let them be covered with sackcloth, both man and beast, and let them cry mightily unto God: yea, let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the violence that is in his hands. (9) Who knoweth whether God will not turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger that we perish not? (10) And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil which he said he would do unto them; and he did it not.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. The word of Jehovah came unto Jonah. When you have an inner consciousness of something that ought to be done, and it won't leave you, it is very likely the voice of Jehovah is speaking to you.—Jonah. Jonah signifies a dove. He lived in the time of Jeroboam II. He was the son of Amittai, see Ch. 1:1.—The second time. See the first two chapters. Like St. Peter Jonah is not only forgiven, but restored to his office and receives anew his commission.

2. Nineveh. On the east bank of the Tigris, the capital of the ancient kingdom of Assyria, and one of the most magnificent of the old world.—Preach The word is rendered "cry" in 1:2. The literal is "cry to it the crying." (Cam. Bib.)—I bid thee. Speak the message which Jehovah gives. This is the lesson for all time, and all conditions.

3. Jonah arose, and went. He is now as ready to obey as before to disobey. The decision of character has not been lost by learning to obey.—Word of Jehovah. See notes on verse 1.—Nineveh was. That is, at the time Jonah visited it.—Exceeding great city. Literally, "great to God."

4. Entered into the city a day's journey. A day's journey brought him to a suitable place; here the people were gathered, so he proclaimed his message.—Yet forty days. The number "forty" in scripture seems to be the period of probation. See Gen. 7:4, 12 and Ex. 24:18.—Shall be overthrown. This is also the word used for the destruction of Sodom, see Gen. 19:21, and Amos 4:11. A brief message like Belshazzar's.

5. The people of Nineveh believed God. These people believed that Jehovah would carry out his threat, and proclaimed a fast in the hope that God would see their deep repentance and avert the disaster.—Sackcloth The custom of changing the dress was not confined to the Hebrew people in token of their mourning.

6. He arose from his throne, and put his robe from him. This was a sign of humiliation and grief, on the part of the king. He is not named.—Sackcloth and ashes. The change from a throne and royal garments to sackcloth and ashes portrays very strikingly the mental storm going on within him.

7. Proclamation. He was not satisfied with his own personal example, but proclaimed throughout Nineveh.—Published. Heb., "said," RVm. Let neither man nor beast, etc., It was to be a general and comprehensive sign of repentance.

8. Let (man and beast) be covered with sackcloth. As we put trappings on horses at funeral occasions.—Cry mightily. With intensity. It also means, let many cry mightily.—His evil way. This may be a general reference to conditions.—Violence that is in his hands. This was the social sin practiced by them and their chief sin.

9. Who knoweth whither God will not turn and repent. They thus express their hope that God will save them out of this calamity. He has in mind the one true God.

10. God saw their works. Deeds count with God, not mere words.—That they turned from their evil way. Had genuinely repented.—God repented. The fact that they ceased to do evil kept them from the consequences for the same. The verse does not indicate that God waited until the time was fulfilled to make them free, but did it just as soon as he saw their whole-hearted penitence. God always deals thus with his children.

A Penitent Prophet

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

Our lesson is the story of a special mission to a heathen city. From it we see what God is to those who truly seek to do his will. We are taught that obedience is the great word in life.

Jonah was changed from a coward to a dauntless and heroic prophet. He thought himself free when he fled, but his first real freedom came when he started to fulfill the command of God which was plain, pointed, and uncompromising. He found, as every man must sooner or later find, that true freedom is found in the path of fulfilling one's highest self.

The other lesson which the story gives us in graphic language is that God is no respecter of persons. His love and mercy are for all men and all time.

Men are still living who need the same lesson that Jonah learned for with many the sole motive for foreign missions is to hold back the heathen from that bottomless pit into which they are tragically marching, as the Russian soldiers marched into the fatal ditch of Schweidnitz. They have not received the larger vision of the Father's love.

There is nothing more remarkable about Jonah than the fact that, in those dark and far-off days, he had caught even this glimpse of the universal Fatherhood of God. To miss this in the history of religion is to miss the very heart of God's dealing with men in all ages.

God gave remarkable power to the message of his servant, so that Nineveh was aroused to deep concern about its sinful condition. Jonah's was a simple, direct message, one that was intended to shock the Ninevites.

The authority of missions lies in our appreciation of the needs of humanity, inspired by the life and spirit of Jesus Christ in the world.

In addition are to be considered also the marching orders of the Christ of God who said, "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I command you: and lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the consummation of the age."

There are thousands who do not go or give to missions because they do not recognize the authority found in the social redemption of the race. No mere dictatorial authority of missions will ever save the world or inspire men to the great world task.

The aim of missions is to make the spirit of Jesus the controlling factor in the social order of all lands and among all peoples. It is to so present him that the people will live like him in all the relations of life. It is to make his spirit live again in the world in a practical sense, thus making it help in the great problems of life.

The life of Jesus is vital and helpful to us in just so far as it finds us and influences us to live toward our fellowmen just as he lived toward his fellowmen.

Hence the missionaries preach and teach and heal the people in all lands. They live as near as they can like Jesus in their day and with their people.

The method of missions is simple, as all God's plans for us are simple. He simply finds the man or men who will go and fills them with the divine spirit and sends them forth. Jonah was sent to Nineveh. Isaiah was sent to the sinners of his generation. Paul was sent to Macedonia. Carey was sent to India. Judson was sent to Burma. Moffat was sent to Africa and all their successful followers in missionary succession were God-called men and heaven-sent to the people of their generation in all lands.

The call of the world today is for men, men touched by the Spirit of God. For—

"There's a wideness in God's mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in His justice,
Which is more than liberty.
There is welcome for the sinner,
And more graces for the good;
There is mercy with the Savior;
There is healing in His blood.
For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind;
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind."

* * *

"It is not so much where you are as what you are that makes your heaven. The bright, cheery soul who lives the life of trust sees only the sunny side of everything, and has learned to endure cheerfully and with a bright face where everything looks dark."

The more people know the less they brag about it.

If you're in a stormy mood,
Try to quell it;

If you think an unkind thought,
Do not tell it.

Disciples Table Talk

Disciples at Yale Hold First Meeting for the Year.

The Campbell Club of Yale held its first meeting this year at the home of Prof. and Mrs. J. C. Archer. The meeting was well attended, reports F. W. Shorter, corresponding secretary. The new men spoke on the questions: "Why I Am a Disciple," "My College," and "Why I Came to Yale." Two honorary members, Prof. B. W. Bacon, Congregationalist, and Prof. D. C. Mackintosh, Baptist, addressed the club. The following Disciples are in attendance at the Yale School of Religion: C. W. Longman, E. H. Longman, and E. N. Griggs from Cotner; S. J. Burgess, C. D. Grubb, E. E. Higdon and E. K. Higdon from Eureka; H. A. Blanning, R. Hueston and F. A. Poffenberger from Bethany; A. Leitch and C. Reidenbaek from Butler; H. P. Lovell and F. W. Shorter from the Bible College of Missouri; C. E. Pickett, W. A. Tate, Hiram; C. B. Swift, Canton; and F. E. Livengood from Drake. In the honor list for last semester appear the names of two Disciples of the Senior class: R. L. McQuarry (first honors) and F. A. Poffenberger (second honors).

On Friday, Oct. 22, the Campbell Club enjoyed a visit from Pres. H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka College, who gave a very enthusiastic speech on the inadvisability of Disciple students leaving their own brotherhood for other denominations.

Virginia Disciples Hold Fortieth Annual Meeting.

Several hundred ministers and other delegates attended the Virginia state meeting, held at Seventh Street church, Richmond, the last week of October. George W. Kemper, pastor of Hanover St. church, Richmond, presided over the sessions. H. C. Combs, field secretary of the state organization, is rounding out his fourteenth year as the active head of the church's missionary work in Virginia. He has accomplished a great deal in that time, and the growth of the denomination in many sections is due largely to his efforts. Guy L. Carter is secretary of the Bible-school work. The Disciples of Christ have more than 320 churches in Virginia, with a total membership of approximately 32,000. Their church property is valued at $1,000,000, with the property of Virginia Christian College, Lynchburg, conducted under the auspices of the church, worth $100,000.

Ohio State Missionary Society Successful.

In five years the Ohio State Missionary Society, of which I. J. Cahill is secretary, has brought to self-support twenty-two mission churches. In the same length of time state evangelists have held 213 meetings. The total number added to the churches in that period is 6,275. "Ohio Day" will be observed next Sunday with offerings from the churches of the state for the work of strengthening the Disciple cause in Ohio. The work of W. H. McLain, State Bible-school superintendent, is meeting with marked success. He will hold institutes soon at Ironton, Felicity and Portsmouth.

P. C. Macfarlane's New Novel to Begin Publication.

Peter Clark Macfarlane attained wide fame as a writer of timely articles. Now he has completed a vital modern novel, which will begin publication in the November 20 issue of Collier's Weekly. The story will later be put out in book form. The title of the novel is "Held to Answer," and the leading character is a man who finds himself in many roles in his progress from book agent to minister.

Central Church, Portland, Holds Last Service.

Central church, Portland, Ore., held its last service as an organized body on October 31, and immediately after this meeting the East Side Christian Church was organized. The first service of the new organization will be held next Sunday with A. L. Crim, formerly pastor of the Central church, as pastor. The Central Christian church was first organized in 1902, and a temporary building was used for the services until the building of the present stone structure in 1911. In 1913 two separate mortgages, one for $15,000 and the other for $16,000, were placed upon the property and filed one minute apart. Since that time the burden has been so great that many of the members did not feel like carrying the load of debt. It would probably take nearly $40,000 to settle the debts of the organization, according to Mr. Crim.

Bible-school Works for Two Thousand Members.

Franklin Circle church school, Cleveland, O., is now working toward a membership of 2,000. It is expected that the new Bible school will be completed by December. W. F. Rothenburger, pastor of this church, is planning a meeting for January, in which L. N. D. Wells, of High Street church, Akron, will do the preaching.

Native African a Remarkable Scholar.

Thos. B. Kalane, a native born African who was baptized by W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., three years ago, has completed his course at Wilberforce University and will spend one year at the Southern Christian Institute, Edwards, Mississippi, and then go back to his native land to preach the gospel. Mr. Book says that in many ways Mr. Kalane is the most remarkable man he has ever seen.

Geo. W. Wise Teaches Large Men's Class.

George W. Wise, pastor at Camp Point, Ill., teaches a men's class of 118 enrollment, although Camp Point has a population of only 1,220. The class is one of the largest in western Illinois. It has an average attendance of 79. There were 97 present on a recent Sunday. Mr. Wise reports a very successful Every Member Canvass in the Camp Point church.

South America's Only Disciple Pastor to Represent Southern Continent at Panama Meet.

Tolbert F. Reavis, Disciple pastor at Buenos Aires, Argentina, S. A., sends two dollars in United States gold for a year's subscription to The Christian Century, and sends also the report that he has been honored by his selection as representative of the Disciples of Christ for South America at the Christian Workers' Congress at Panama, which is to be held next February.

Chicago Laymen Adopt Policy for Mission Advance

Chicago Disciple laymen held a small but representative "rally" at the Jackson Blvd. church during the Laymen's Missionary Convention. President A. McLean, representing the Foreign Society, and Mr. A. M. Harvout, of Cincinnati, a member of the board of the American Society, spoke on behalf of their several interests. Talks were made by Lloyd Miller, of Metropolitan church and C. G. Brelos, of West Pullman church, on the Every Member Canvass. City Secretary W. G. Winn presided. A committee consisting of H. L. Willett, Dr. P. L. Prentis and Mr. Leon L. Loehr, brought in a report on a policy for the Disciples' churches of Chicago with reference to an advance move in mission work for the coming year. The report was carried and later read at the great meeting at Medinah Temple. The report recited the recent action taken by the city missionary society in an effort to bring greater unity and larger results to its co-operative work in Chicago: the election of Mr. E. M. Bowman to the presidency, Dr. P. L. Prentis vice-president, and Mr. W. E. Palmer, treasurer, and the modification of certain portions of the constitution at the request of one or two of the churches. "The society was never so united as at the present time and determined to prosecute with vigor the task of city evangelization." Ten definite items of policy were then set forth touching the following points: Careful revision of church-membership lists; a church attendance campaign; a competent plan of missionary education; equally competent instruction on systematic giving; the Every Member Canvass; participation in community training schools for religious education; increased devotion to city evangelization as represented in the establishing of new churches, the fostering of missions and the care of the foreigner; abiding loyalty to all Disciples' missionary societies; recognition of the claims of interdenominational fellowship in all offices of comity and co-operation; adequate and consistent plan of evangelism in all the individual churches. It was recommended that a committee be appointed to foster this policy among the churches of the city.

Mr. E. M. Bowman, president of the Chicago Disciples' organization.

Study of Bible Literature at Fort Worth, Texas.

The latest venture of Magnolia Avenue, Ft. Worth, Bible-school is the launching of Dr. Clinton Lockhart's Wednesday Evening Class at the prayer-meeting hour. Mr. Lockhart will give ten lectures, as follows: "The Value of Proper Bible Study," "The Authors of the Books," "How the Books Have Reached Us," "Kinds of Material in the Bible," "The Poetry of the Bible," "Methods of Interpretation," "Figures of Speech," "The Parables of Our Lord," "Prophecy," and "The Study of the Bible, Book by Book." The pastor of Magnolia Ave., Church, E. M. Waits, is lecturing every Thursday morning at 9:30 at a local Presbyterian church on "The Literature of the Bible." These lectures are held under the auspices of the Browning Bible-class.

Mark Wayne Williams Booms William Shaw for Massachusetts Governership.

Mark Wayne Williams, pastor at St. James St. church, Boston, reports that the temperance campaign for William Shaw as governor is going strong. Mr. Williams states it is possible that the Republicans, who refused prohibition, may be defeated. The ministers of the state are working hard for Mr. Shaw. The work at St. James is reported as progressing.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE DISCIPLES' DIVINITY HOUSE OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO.

The Disciples' Divinity House desires all its friends to have in mind the relation of this institution to the Men and Millions Movement. It is in hearty sympathy with all the objects of the movement and is exerting its influence in every way to promote the success of the same. While denied the privilege of direct and active participation in the work of the team, the Divinity House is freely accorded the right to solicit its constituency with reference to designated gifts. We would remind our friends and well wishers that they may help the Divinity House by simply writing across the face of their pledge the words, "DESIGNATED FOR THE DISCIPLES' DIVINITY HOUSE OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO." Thus they will help the Men and Millions Movement to reach its goal and also aid the Divinity House. Otherwise the latter would receive no financial benefit. We trust our friends will heartily support the Men and Millions Movement the ideals of which we believe to be harmonious with those of our institution of higher education.

Forward Steps at Jacksonville, Ill.

Central church, Jacksonville, Ill., recently enjoyed for a week a "Boy's Friend Chautauqua" conducted by A. W. Conner and Miss Soeger of Indianapolis. As a direct result of their services M. L. Pontius, writes, there has been organized a boys' club and choir and to date about fifty have joined in the work. Mr. Pontius praises the lectures of Mr. Connor as being unique and helpful. He believes he should be kept in the field all the time. On Oct. 17, Jacksonville Church enjoyed two addresses by Clifford Roe of Chicago. This "man with a message" told something of his successful conflict with the white slave traffic. On Oct. 24, came to Jacksonville,, Secretary Bert Wilson. As a result of his helpful message the church will adopt the Every Member Canvass plan of raising money for current expenses and missions. Oct. 31 will see the beginning of an evangelistic meeting conducted by John L. Brandt, of St. Louis. Anticipating this meeting 110 men and women recently spent an afternoon in visiting every home in the church, making a social call at each home and leaving literature advertising the special meetings.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—Louis R. Patmont faced trial in Newark, N. J., last month on the charge of having set fire to the Polish Christian church in that city two years ago. Evidence had been offered incriminating Patmont by his divorced wife.

—The Loyal Men's Class of the Decatur, Ind., school recently debated the question whether the Bible should be taught in the public schools. The affirmative received the favorable verdict of the judges.

—W. T. Adams, pastor at Santa Rosa, Cal., has been presented by one of his members with a first class motion picture machine.

—First church school, Salem, Ore., where F. T. Porter ministers, had an attendance of 1,500 on Oct. 17.

—The Sunday-school of First church, Bryant, Okla., was represented in the street parade of the county fair by a number of attractive floats.

—J. S. Hughes, of Holland, Mich., has written a new book on the Book of Revelation, which will be printed soon.

—The men of First church, Warren, Ohio, where E. A. Hibler ministers, made the Every Member Canvass, Sunday, October 10. As a direct result of the canvass the church had the largest Sunday evening audience in many months on that day.

—Robert Hindle is Leslie Morgan's successor at Hornsey, London.

What Disciple Preachers are Saying on Vital Issues

H. D. C. Maclachlan Believes in National Self-Defense.

"In the present state of international relations," said H. D. C. Maclachlan, in a recent sermon at Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va., "it is nothing short of a crime for any nation to be defenseless against foreign aggression. The law of self defense is written indelibly into the great book of nature. And the good God who gave the bee its sting and the cactus its spines and the stag its antlers does not will that any nation whose life is worth preserving should be content to live in a fool's paradise of unarmed neutrality."

Rev. H. D. C. Maclachlan.

Continuing his sermon, Dr. Maclachlan said: "This country—this State—is the guardian of the liberties of its people, those priceless liberties so dearly bought, so hardly won. These liberties may be attacked in two ways—either from the inside or from the outside.

"When attacked from the outside, we oppose to the attacks what we call public opinion—the voice of the people expressed in legislation and police control. When attack from the outside by the menace of a foreign foe, we have only one weapon we can use—force.

"It may not be in itself a spiritual weapon, but it is the guardian of spiritual values. It protects our hearths and homes. It permits us to develop our national ideals and aspirations. It allows us free play to develop those distinctive features of our civilization which make us a nation among nations. It is like the protective covering of the nut which allows the kernel within to grow to maturity. The liberties of America were won by the sword; they must be kept by the sword until that day when all nations shall have learned that the civilization of the world is the common task of all the people in it, and that no one nation—in the name of empire or culture or what you will—may seek to impose its will upon the rest.

"Our influence in the councils of the nations depends upon the respect they bear towards us, and respect between nations is founded in the last analysis upon what the nations have done or are prepared to do.

"A conquered America would be a discredited America—an America whose example would not be followed by others and whose ideals, even if she could still maintain them, would be no better than whistled down the wind. I shudder to think how much poorer, spiritually, the world would be without the contribution of the United States. Yet if we do not prepare ourselves to defend our ideals, the voice that once thundered from the mountaintop of a victorious past, may be hushed in the dark valley of failure and defeat."

Edgar D. Jones Discusses American Morals.

At First church, Bloomington, Ill., Edgar D. Jones spoke recently on the theme "Are American Morals Getting Better or Worse?" He said among other things:

"Are American morals growing better or worse? This is a difficult question to answer. Ten years ago I could have answered glibly enough in the affirmative. Nowadays, I can only answer it after some hesitancy and some misgivings. And this despite the fact that I belive myself a long ways removed from the pessimist. On the one hand, are conditions that give the thoughtful American solemn pause, and on the other hand, conditions that hearten us and increase our faith in America's destiny.

Facts that Give Pause.

1. The problem of home and family life with divorce on the increase and marriage on the decrease, the high cost of living and the cost of high living, the breaking down of parental discipline and the lack of religious instruction with the consequent disappearing of family life in America. 2. The unbridled passion for pleasure, the demand that amusements must be of a high pressure nature and the thrill producing kind, with the consequent result that we are an amusement mad, pleasure-loving, thrill-seeking, light magazine reading people. 3. The increase of crime and lawlessness with America leading all other countries in homicides, individual and corporate crimes, commercialized vice and frequent lynchings, making us notorious in the eyes of the world. 4. The problem of poverty which is in many ways the primal cause of grave conditions in home and state, and industries with ten millions of people in our land living in abject poverty and an army of unemployed presenting a most difficult and far-reaching peril.

Conditions That Hearten.

"Over against these ominous conditions may be catalogued: 1. The increasing sensitiveness of the public conscience upon moral questions. The fact that we demand more of our leaders today than ever in the great basic virtues of character. 2. The waning power of the saloon, with the man of science against it, the man of commerce against it and the fact that even where the saloon power is still entrenched the patronage is steadily falling off. 3. The growing sense of social obligation, the fact that society is slowly but surely recognizing the truth that none liveth to himself or dieth to himself, the awakening of the church to a new interest in social justice, and a greater passion for carrying out the full program of Jesus. 4. A certain wistfulness and a yearning note on the part of many for spiritual power, the realization that man cannot live by bread alone, the reaching out of the deep darkness that enthralls Europe for God,—these are significant and help to offset the conditions that alas! are only too well known to every American who uses his eyes and ears."

Union Meeting at Kirksville, Mo.

R. W. Lilley, pastor at Kirksville, Mo., sends the following characteristic message: "Evangelist E. J. Forsythe and company have just closed a union tabernacle meeting in this city. All the churches united. About 1,100 of 1,200 cards were signed, among this number being many church members who had been out of the harness for months and years and have now gone to work. Out of this number 192 have already united with the Christian church; 142 were baptized. The meeting did good. It strengthened the moral tone of the community. Of course I could point out many weak points and file numerous objections, but I'll wait. I went into the meeting with all my heart. I do not regret it. So did my people. We did not indorse all that was done or said, I do not suppose God or the devil did, but I believe in union and try to practice it. As Disciples of Christ we have done more talking about Christian union and as little practicing it as any people I know. I'm not seeking a quarrel. But I joined the union meeting and will join again if it comes this way."

President Kershner to Lecture at Drake.

President F. D. Kershner of Texas Christian University, has been secured to deliver the annual course of lectures under the Drake University Ministerial Association this year. Forty-nine preachers are taking work in Drake this year.

Loving Cup for J. H. O. Smith.

J. H. O. Smith, retiring pastor of First church, Little Rock, Ark., was presented with a sterling silver loving cup at the farewell reception given at the church. Mr. Smith left for Hammond, Ind. Later he will open a revival service at Rushville, Ind., the first in his new evangelistic work, in conjunction with H. H. Saunders, formerly of Kingfisher, Okla. The cup bears the following inscription: "Dr. J. H. O. Smith, from the congregation of the First Christian church, Little Rock, Ark., 1913-1915. God will take care of you."

W. P. Shamhart Leaves Tennessee Pulpit.

W. P. Shamhart, who has served the church at Rockwood, Tenn., for several years, has resigned from that pulpit, and will locate in Indianapolis temporarily. Future plans have not been definitely decided. Mr. Shamhart may enter the evangelistic field. He has been a pastor and church leader for over thirty years, and has proved a most valuable servant. His Indianapolis address will be 4049 Bryan St.

Des Moines Church Declines To Release Dr. F. S. Idleman For New York Church.

P. F. Jerome, of Central Church, New York, sends the following word under date of Oct. 25: "At the close of the morning service on Sunday at Central Church, Disciples of Christ, Manhattan, the Board of Officers considered a telegram and letters of protest from the officers of the Central Christian Church of Des Moines, Iowa, in regard to the calling of Dr. F. S. Idleman to the pastorate of the New York church. Dr. Idleman read his resignation on October 10 to the Des Moines congregation and announced his acceptance of the New York call to the Central Church. Reports indicate that great pressure is being brought to bear on Dr. Idleman to have him reconsider his resignation. After discussion of the unequaled opportunities of leadership awaiting Dr. Idleman in New York the officers of Central, New York, voted to decline the request of the Des Moines church. A number of members in the New York church formerly belonged to Dr. Idleman's church in Des Moines and they are enthusiastic over his coming Plans are being formulated for the Installation service to be held January 2, and it is expected that Dr. Peter Ainslie of Baltimore and Dr. F. W. Burnham of Cincinnati will assist the acting minister, Dr. J. M. Philputt on this occasion." The following statement from Mr. Idleman regarding his intended action is reported in a Des Moines paper: "It depends altogether upon the New York church. I have accepted their invitation to become their pastor and I will keep my agreement if they insist upon it. I have asked to be allowed to say nothing toward securing my release and I imagine that the New York church will insist upon the arrangements as they have been made. I will not ask to be released from my promise."

Norfolk School of Religious Training Successful.

The School of Religious Training and Social Service held in First Church, Norfolk, Va., is now entering its second year. The enrollment last year was over two hundred; the average attendance, one hundred thirty-five for sixteen sessions. Twenty-five Sunday Schools of the city were represented in the attendance. The School meets on each Tuesday evening 8—10, beginning October 12, to December 14, 1915, and January 4, to March 21, 1916. The closing exercises will be held Tuesday, March 21. The school was decided upon at a conference of leaders of Sunday School and Church work the churches of Ghent It was the sense of this conference that not only the churches of Ghent but all Evangelical churches of the City of Norfolk have a part in the work undertaken. The response has justified this city-wide co-operation. Chas. M. Watson is the pastor of First church, Norfolk, and one of the foremost leaders in the school's work.

Dr. Ainslie Recovering.

The last word from Baltimore brought the good news that Dr. Ainslie is now on the way to recovery. Dr. Chilton S. Ehlers, who has recently completed a two-year post-graduate course at Yale University, is acting-pastor of the Christian Temple during Dr. Ainslie's illness and convalescence.

Philadelphia Churches in Mission Rally.

A Missionary Rally for Philadelphia Disciple churches and those in nearby towns is being planned for December 7, to be held in First Church. A. McLean, president of the Foreign Society, Alexander Paul of China and H. C. Hobgood of Africa will be leaders.

Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas Have Few Schools.

"The Southwest District embraces Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas. It has a total area of nearly 400,000 square miles and a population of almost eight million. It calls for you to help in supporting a growing Bible School work in the District. In Texas alone there are sixty-five counties in which the Disciples of Christ have neither church organization or Bible School. There are only thirty Bible Schools among our people in the whole state of Louisiana. Arkansas is in great need of an efficiency campaign. In this district we have the negro and the Mexican together with other doors of opportunity. Pull for a large offering. Help us to win 'Victories Under the Flag.'" S. W. Hutton, Southeastern Bible School Superintendent.

NEW GENERAL SECRETARY FOR TEMPERANCE BOARD.

The American Temperance Board through its president, David H. Shields, of Kokomo, Ind., announces that L. E. Sellers, pastor at Logansport, Ind., has been induced to accept the general secretaryship of the Board. His church board has very graciously yielded to the request of the Temperance Board for an early release from the pastorate, and Mr. Sellers was to commence work November 1. He is moving his family to Indianapolis, and his permanent address will be 3151 North Ruckle street. All requests for literature, posters, addresses etc., should be sent to this address. Mr. Sellers will begin an active campaign to place the Christian church in the forefront of the battle against the saloon. Mr. Sellers is well known among Disciples. He has held a number of good pastorates and is a man of fine ability as a speaker and a thinker. Mr. Shields also reports that Andrew Wilson has been appointed special representative of the Board at Washington, D. C. He is on the Committee of Nineteen which has in hand the shaping up of the Amendment to the Constitution, for National Prohibition. Mrs. Flossie Sloan Hyde has been appointed as special lecturer for the Board and is authorized to make engagements and take offerings and pledges. All money for the Board should be sent to E. L. Day, Financial Agent, 2822 North Illinois street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

—The new $15,000 church at Mentor, O., was dedicated last month by President T. E. Cramblet, of Bethany College, and L. P. Clark, pastor at Mentor. Nine thousand dollars was raised on or before dedication day. Mentor was for years the home church of President Garfield. It was also President Cramblet's first pastorate 28 years ago.

WHY YOUR SCHOOL SHOULD MAKE A LIBERAL OFFERING FOR HOME MISSIONS ON NOVEMBER 21.

Bible Schools will make their offerings for American Home Missions on the Sunday before Thanksgiving. This offering has a widespread influence. Its effect is felt over the entire United States and in Canada. It will be of interest to all our Bible School leaders to read these brief words from men who are at work in the field supported by these contributions.

The Appeal of the Rockies.

"In this great new Rocky Mountain Region the Bible School makes an appeal to an unchurched community that will interest and use more types of religious people than any other method of approach. Hundreds of weak and inefficient schools need to be organized. Hundreds of weak and inefficient schools need to be strengthened and hundreds of strong schools need to be made partners in the ministry of giving, The Bible School Department of the American Christian Missionary Society is planning to make this the greatest year in Bible School filled extension work that we as a Brotherhood have ever known. Charles Wm. Dean, Superintendent Rocky Mountain District.

California, "The Greatest Mission Field in the World."

"Does California need missionary money spent in it? That is a question never asked by those conversant with the facts. California North is at one and the same time the hardest and greatest mission field in the world. We have about eighty churches and ten thousand members, but many of our smaller churches are struggling so hard to maintain an existence. We have sixty-eight towns and cities of over one thousand population each in which we have no church. There is a stretch of two hundred miles of country between Red Bluff, California, and Ashland, Oregon, where we have no church. We have two churches in San Francisco which have a population of over half a million. We have only seven churches in the entire Bay City District which have a population of a million. Unless the orotherhood comes to the assistance of California North in the near future we will lose a priceless opportunity which will never come again." Geo. W. Brewster, Jr., Pres. of the State Board of California North.

Rockford, Ill., Pastor, Preaches on "Life Stories that Help."

W. B. Clemmer, pastor at Central, Rockford, Ill., is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons on, "Life Stories that Help." Here are four of the special topics: "A God-Sent Man," "A Woman's Best," "An Honest Doubter," and "A Brand from the Burning." A recent event in the Rockford work was the "Religious Home Visitation" to which the Disciple pastor gave thirty days of service. Twenty-four persons have been added to the church membership during the past year.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Volume XXXII NOVEMBER 11, 1915 Number 45

Not Untrue, But a Truism

"WHY DO WE HEAR SO MUCH LESS PREACHING OF 'FAITH, REPENTANCE, CONFESSION AND BAPTISM' THAN WE USED TO HEAR?"

That is a very common question in the mind, if not on the lips, of those whose connection or acquaintance with the Disciples' movement extends back twenty-five or more years.

That we do not hear the formula expounded so frequently and with such conviction as in the earlier days, is a fact that no one will dispute. These four steps that marked the "way of salvation" constituted the sum and substance of nine-tenths of the preaching of our Disciple fathers.

You could count pretty surely on hearing the "faith, repentance and baptism" formula expounded, no matter from what text the preacher took his theme. But nowadays one can scarcely detect any difference between their preaching and the preaching one is accustomed to hear from the pulpits of other churches.

Many preachers go from year end to year end without making a single reference to "faith, repentance, confession and baptism."

Some preach it occasionally, confessing that they do so in order to satisfy three or four or a dozen souls in the congregation whose minds were cast in the older mould and to whom this formula conveys an almost magical suggestion.

Amongst a small minority of Disciple pastors it is still regarded as an important and urgent theme. These pastors are usually found in the more remote or less progressive communities, and are, as a rule, a type of men who still live in the controversies of a past generation.

Almost without exception it may be said that among those ministers who have enjoyed the privilege of a liberal education the "faith, repentance, confession and baptism" formula is regarded with indifference. By some of these it is, unfortunately, regarded with disrespect.

In considering why this very radical change has come over the preaching of the Disciples a sharp distinction must be made between the formula and the contents of the formula. To say that the formula, "faith, repentance, confession and baptism" is not nowadays preached as it used to be, is not to say that faith is not preached or repentance or confession or baptism.

No distinctiveness ever attached to the Disciples in respect to the preaching of faith or repentance or confession or baptism. All evangelical churches have been as faithful as Disciples in proclaiming these evangelical themes.

But the grouping of these items into a formula for the purpose of illuminating the pathway of conversion was a distinctive device of the Disciples of Christ.

We can best understand the present-day disuse of the formula if we ask how it came to be used in the first place. For this purpose a little history will have to be recalled.

Walter Scott was an evangelist preaching in the Western Reserve of Ohio seventy-five years ago. He found men's minds filled with a sort of superstition about conversion. The preachers of the time were Calvinists. They held that a man cannot come to God until God by a kind of miraculous visitation effectually enables him. Faith is impossible, repentance is impossible, forgiveness is impossible until God vouchsafes some specific "experience" to the soul. This "experience" attests the soul's forgiveness.

Of course this kind of teaching left many souls in deep agony. They wanted forgiveness but they had received no divine visitation. Even among those who could testify to a "Christian experience" there was ever a lurking doubt as to its divine reality.

But Walter Scott declared that God was not holding any soul at bay, that He had made complete provision for all men and was yearning for all to come to Him.

A man's salvation, he declared, does not now depend upon some further special initiative on God's part, but upon the faithful obedience of man.

Carefully studying his New Testament, Scott found that the way was marked by four steps—faith, which comes by hearing the divine Truth; repentance, the voluntary renunciation of sin; confession, the public expression of one's faith; and baptism, which he taught was the immersion of a penitent believer in water.

These steps were the way to God!

They represented man's part in salvation, just as Calvary represented God's part in salvation.

If a man met these conditions he need look nowhere else for an attestation of divine favor. God had promised forgiveness on these conditions; to look elsewhere for a sign that He had kept his promise was essential infidelity.

This formula was held to express the law of pardon. The incoming of a spiritual law meant the passing of superstition and magic and hysterics and all the agonizing of mourners' bench revivalism.

Now, plainly, the reason we do not hear the formula preached today is because the false teaching it was meant to correct in the early days is itself virtually no longer heard. Practically, Walter Scott's view of conversion as the acceptance of God's will and obedience to it now obtains throughout the evangelical churches. The Calvinistic theory of conversion is practically unknown to our day. Men are not staying away from Christ in our time on account of any reason which the preaching of this formula would correct. They are staying away because they lack faith, or love sin, or are too cowardly to take a public stand with Christ's disciples.

The formula is not untrue. It is a truism.

It was tremendously and illuminatively true and pertinent in its time. But it is not relevant to anything in our time.

Men are not saved by such a formula except when they are being cheated out of salvation by the superstition it was designed to banish.

Disciples are grateful that a wholesome and rational view of conversion now so generally prevails that it is unnecessary for them to attack the teaching of their fellow Christians at this point.

It leaves them free to prosecute their essential mission of proclaiming and practicing Christian unity without the distractions that accompany theological debate.

Reginald J. Campbell

The Man Who Altered the Nomenclature of a Bogey.

BY LESLIE W. MORGAN

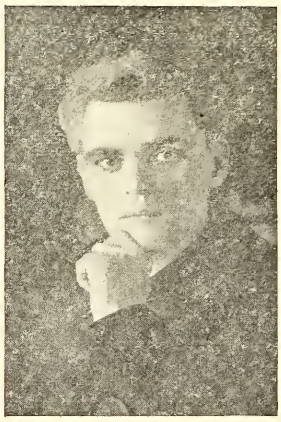
THE City Temple, London, is know to all Americans who travel, and to most who read. To many it has been a religious mecca, both from the days of Dr. Parker, who made it famous, and in the days of the Rev. R. J. Campbell who has maintained, or even increased, its fame. There is now to be a change in the ministry of the City Temple for the second time in forty-six years.

AT THE FAREWELL SERVICE.

I heard Mr. Campbell preach his farewell sermon to his Thursday mid-day congregation last week, and tried to hear him conduct his final service on Sunday evening, but in this I failed. Arriving in High Holborn a quarter of an hour before the service was to begin I found a throng on one side extending to the center of Holborn Viaduct bridge, and in the western direction, nearly to Holborn Circus, in addition to crowds in the vestibule and on the gallery steps. Despairing of gaining admission, and with the native American's instinct for bigness, reinforced by a similar instinct of a born Disciple for numbers, I paced the length of the waiting crowd (I learned as a boy on my father's farm to pace a quarter of a mile to the exactness of a yard) and by means of counting a section estimated the number at one thousand, and then hastened away to hear another preacher, concerning whom I may have something to say on another occasion; suffice it for the present to say that it was Dr. W. E. Orchard, who is trying an interesting experiment in an attempt to bridge the chasm between a ritualistic and a free service. Since an honest confession is good for the soul I may as well admit that before hurrying away curiosity got the better of my reverence and I slipped into the Parish church of St. Andrew, which has always been literally and figuratively overshadowed by the City Temple. There were perhaps fifty present at the service which was about to begin. The officials about the door looked somewhat worried as they saw the waiting multitudes outside the City Temple and extending far past the entrance to this church of the establishment—a people sometimes proud and arrogant in places where they dominate the situation.

A THIRTEEN YEARS' MINISTRY.

In the few words of farewell which Mr. Campbell spoke at his last Thursday's service, he mentioned that he had been responsible for that service for thirteen years, and for the full ministry of the City Temple for nearly as long. He has always regarded the Thursday service with particular affection, and it is then that he has been heard, as a rule, to the best advantage. He claimed, and quite rightly, that this service has been unique in all the world. For forty-six years it has been maintained in the heart of the world's metropolis, at the mid-day hour of a busy working day. Dr. Parker was responsible for it for thirty-three years, until just before his death he made special request that Mr. Campbell should take it over. I have seen congregations of varying sizes, but none that could be called poor. In the early days of the "new theology" craze standing room was at a premium, and although of late years there have been no such scenes, the congregations have been such as might fill any minister's heart with laudable pride. At last week's service almost every sitting and standing space was occupied. If my memory serves me right the smallest congregations I have seen were toward the close of Dr. Parker's ministry.



Rev. R. J. Campbell.

The reason for Mr. Campbell's resignation is that his strength is not sufficient for the strain of three services per week and the work of the City Temple being essentially a one man job it would be impossible for any one to be associated with him to share the burden. It is generally believed that Dr. J. H. Jowett will receive a call to the pastorate and quite as generally believed that he will accept. His acceptance would not involve any agreement with the theology of Mr. Campbell. The congregation has not been drawn together by a theology—except those who came during the fitful days of newspaper discussion and publicity—but by the charm of a personality and by a power to interpret the deep problems of human life in the terms of a practical yet mystical religion. The power of R. J. Campbell is best illustrated by the incident of a commercial traveler who gave his reason for going to the City Temple upon every opportunity, because when he came away he always heard "a voice" saying, "Jones, you ought to be a better man."

MR. CAMPBELL AND "HIGHER CRITICISM."

One theological feat for which Mr. Campbell will be remembered, whatever may be his future career, is his achievement in altering the nomenclature of a bogey, to the great relief of people of moderate mind who had become almost nauseated with tirades against "Higher Criticism." By the help, or hindrance, of the press he diverted the attack to the "New Theology." Those who were incensed by these vague and usually undefined things thought they were the same thing, and most people who cried out against them could not define either of them to save their lives, any more than could many who were charged with being affected by the heresy. I am reminded of an old lady who was a member of the church of which I was pastor a few years ago. It was in the days of the ping-pong or table-tennis craze. It was suggested that provision should be made for the young people to play this game at a social gathering. This good woman was scandalized, and said she thought it was perfectly wicked to think of it. On the evening of the social the sewing circle, at which she was in attendance, had not closed when some of the young people arrived and began to play the game which had come under her ban. Watching it with great curiosity and interest for a time, she finally could contain herself no longer, and exclaimed—"That's a nice game! What do you call it?" She was a most saintly old soul, but this left her quite unsaved from both prejudice and ignorance. On more than one occasion after I had preached some of my most "advanced theories" and in my youthful ambition had hoped to be charged with heresy by some conservative hearer, she met me as I descended the pulpit and taking my hand in both of hers she said, with tears in her eyes: "It was perfectly lovely!"

IS HE A HERETIC?

It is generally believed, and probably not without warrant, that Mr. Campbell has swung back of late years towards a more orthodox position, although he probably never was so heretical as some of his one-time admirers and friends tried to make out when the heat of discussion was at its height and one by one they left him. It is probable also that he himself, under the lash of such men as Dr. Nichol of the "British Weekly," Dr. Forsyth, Principal of Hackney College, and the late Dr. Fairbairn, then Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, all of whom tried to discredit the ability of one whom some of them at least had previously greatly lauded, went to the extreme in some of his statements.

I believe I wrote an account some years ago for The Christian Century of the "reconciliation" of Mr. Campbell with the Congregational Union, in which Dr. Forsyth took a prominent part. This reconcilation embraced a dramatic moment. The two were down to speak at the same session on kindred topics, not far removed from things over which there had previously been special dissension. In the course of Mr. Campbell's address he said, "Christ is my all and in all, he is the center of my life." When Dr. Forsyth rose he extended his hand to Mr. Campbell and said before the assembled company, "I give to you this hand of fellowship for we have all gladly witnessed your confession, 'Christ is my all and in all, he is the center of my life—I trust my sinful soul to him forever.'" Mr. Campbell said afterward that he did not remember using the latter clause, and was at first rather startled when Dr. Forsyth so quoted him, but upon second thought he had no desire to cancel the words. One of the points of special contention had been Mr. Campbell's definition of sin, a definition which some claimed was a practical denial of it.

HIS RETURN TO ENGLISH CHURCH.

At his last service in the City Temple Mr. Campbell intimated to the general public, what before had been revealed to the members of his own church, and had, indeed, been announced in the public press, although unauthorized, that he was returning to the communion of the Church of England after twenty years in the free church ministry. This is a step which many of us free churchmen lament, although at which no one is greatly surprised. He had seriously considered entering the ministry of the Church of England upon leaving Christ church, Oxford, and he has always been a broad and catholic spirit. He spoke in his farewell of liking the freedom of the Church pulpit. One can scarcely conceive, however, of a greater freedom than he has been given from the pulpit of the City Temple—a freedom of which he has spoken with appreciation; he has said, however, that he feels that he could not preach for another Congregational church after having ministered at the City Temple: and perhaps this means that he fears the same freedom would not be accorded. One cannot help wondering what Mr. Campbell's feelings will be when he once realizes by experience that it will be impossible, after his ordination to the ministry of the Anglican Church, for him to again occupy a Free Church pulpit—not even the pulpit of the City Temple. That he will feel this there is no question, if his oft-repeated statement is perfectly sincere, namely, that he refuses to say "good-bye" to his City Temple congregation, that he hopes often to meet them and that no people will ever seem quite so dear to him as are they.

AT PRESENT AMONG THE SOLDIERS.

Mr. Campbell is returning to the field hospitals in France, where he recently paid a brief visit, and where he expects to minister amongst the soldiers for two months or so. After this he will endeavor, if possible, to regain his health by a period of rest, and then he is to be ordained—re-ordained—by the Bishop of Birmingham and will be associated in the services at the Birmingham Cathedral.

The New Testament Church and the Modern Church

BY IRVING S. CHENOWETH

Let us look on two pictures of the New Testament Church. The first is the picture, which many see, showing an organization formally launched at Pentecost consisting of the followers of Jesus, to whom was unfolded by the apostles the divine plan preordained for the salvation of men. This plan resolved itself into a Church with a fixed initiation for membership and with divinely ordained rules for organization which came through the apostles, principally Paul. This is a fixed order for all generations—a pattern for the Church in all ages, and any Church organized rightly must be so organized as to conform to this pattern.

But I see a different picture of the New Testament Church. In various towns companies of people were meeting together to talk over the life and message of Jesus; they ate together, spent evenings together; they broke bread after the manner shown by Jesus and listened to apostles and others who came with news from different congregations and with counsel of various kinds. There was a general state of confusion, there was excitement about the new faith, expectancy about the coming end of the world, enthusiasm over the new gifts of prophecy and of tongues and miracles. Beneath all this confusion and enthusiasm there was an earnest desire to know the truth, and earnest leaders—Paul foremost of all—sought to teach the truth and to bring order out of chaos.

IS A CHANGED ORDER NEEDED?

The whole order of the Church grew to meet actual needs; and from this are we not to infer that changed needs should find a changed order? The organization of the New Testament Church was the one the leaders conceived could do the work most effectively. And patterning our institution after theirs we must be guided by the same principle. Thus we will see in the Church of New Testament days not a pattern for the organization of the Church in all countries and for all ages, but groups of followers of Jesus seeking to meet the tasks outlined by his mission in his spirit.

Since that day conditions in the world have greatly changed, old needs have disappeared to give place to new and more complex needs. The functions of the Church and the spirit of its service based on the message and life of Jesus, remain and will go on unchanged, but its methods and organization must change if its work is to be efficiently done.

Rev. Irving S. Chenoweth, First Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

CHANGES SINCE PAUL'S TIME.

The larger service rendered by women throughout the world, the greater freedom granted them by the very spirit of Christianity itself, their devotion to the Master has brought to the Church an utter disregard of Paul's injunctions concerning the place of women in the church. His emphasis upon order at the Lord's table has been received with favor and even increased in the Church because it is profitable for such a service and the old common meal idea has faded away. Many of his exhortations and his denunciations against current doctrines of that day we can understand only by minute study of the religious conditions of that day in literature far removed from our Bible. He expected gifts of miracles, tongues and prophecy to be granted a place in their meetings and our day does not expect these things. A division of the service needed by the church is recognized in some such form as these early Christians saw it, so we have retained the officers corresponding to elders and deacons in all churches though their names may vary.

While the organization may vary, the functions of the Church remain the same throughout all times, and in order to organize a local church we must know what we are expected to do. There are three great functions of the Church: First, maintaining worship for edification; secondly, missionary activty; and thirdly, the care of the weak and dependent. These were the tasks of the early Church, and the early Christians sought the best ways in their small world to accomplish their mission. Paul was their great helper and counselor, and while he spoke for the needs of the church in that day he was gifted with such foresight and such sympathy with divine purposes that much of his advice has never been equaled and we profit by his words.

AT THE MISSION TASK.

Some of our work has outgrown the local congregation and to try to manage it as they did in Jerusalem or Corinth would be fatal and quite contrary to the spirit of the Christian program of that day. The missionary enterprise is a vast undertaking demanding the leadership of experts who give all their time to a study of fields and needs, and churches must be combined to work through various agencies for the accomplishment of this purpose. We are beginning to feel that we need not more local organizations grappling with this great problem, but perhaps a union of our biggest ones to be efficiently organized. We see the Foreign Mission Boards in frequent counsels about the world problem, likewise the Home Boards co-operating in the evangelization of America. If we were true to the spirit of the New Testament Church, I think there would be one big Foreign and one big Home Board doing what many are attempting today.

CHARITIES, ETC.

Then there is the problem of dependents. The individual churches have not even been able to take care of their own, let alone all those not connected with the Church, so we have Charity Organization Societies, Hospitals, Asylums, inspired by the Church but not a part of it. The New Testament Church would have a part in all this and seek to meet the existent needs as it did by setting apart deacons to attend to this work in the early day.

Then how shall the local church organize itself to care for the spiritual welfare of its community? As the early churches organized, and to do just the same things? Not if some better way can be found. We have our elders and deacons formed into an Official Board and usually this has worked pretty well. But not long ago a minister said to me, "Why not have an executive committee instead of your Board and let this committee be made of the heads of all the departments of the church work?" Why not indeed? If it would work better than the old way, then that is the thing to do.

THERE IS NO SET ORGANIZATION.

I am not trying to prescribe a fixed organization, which I shall call the efficient organization for a New Testament church. Rather, I am saying there is no such thing. A church to be efficiently organized must study its needs and the condition of its work, the people whom it may expect to reach, and then make an organization that will enable it to do its work most perfectly. If it has poor folks, it should try to take care of them, if there are young people who need recreation but have no chance to find it in good surroundings, the church should try to give it to them. It should do its best to bring spiritual culture to its communicants and it should recognize the many ways in which this comes to different people. There should be committees to meet the various problems of the church life and these committees should be made of the people who can best do the work, not simply because they are elders or deacons.

Then there comes the problem of societies and organizations How many shall we have and what shall they be? Shall we have Senior, Intermediate and Junior C. E. Societies, Boy Scouts, Boys' and Girls' Clubs, Ladies' Aid, Young Ladies' Guild, Girls' Circle, C. W. B. M. Auxiliary, Men's Brotherhood, Organized Bible Classes, etc? There will be representatives of these societies telling you that you should have them all and they will show good reasons.

A while ago all our Protestant churches thought we should have Brotherhoods and forthwith we had them, with secretaries, monthly papers, buttons, meetings, etc. Your church was behind the times if you didn't have one, so you organized one. But what has happened? These brotherhoods have all died or are dying for want of something to do—all save the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the Episcopal church, and it still has definite work assigned to it.

A church has a Christian Endeavor Society whose members are no longer young but they have always been Endeavorers and they keep on meeting and trying to get members. The whole thing is a waste of energy and your church would be better off if it were dead but you have the feeling that you should have a C. E. Society.

Or, is it a Ladies' Aid Society that was started way back with the laying of the corner stone a hundred years ago? Then it was a live organization, taking care of new members, tending to the social needs of the church in novel ways, always looking for new methods and seeking to interest the women of the neighborhood in the church. Now it is dead, it moves on in the same way it's been going for forty years. New people are barred—they don't know the ropes. Yes, you could kill it, but then you ought to have a Ladies' Aid—every church has one.

THE CHURCH AND DEPENDENTS.

We've been working on this principle too long, until we are over organized, weighted down with dead or dying or useless societies just because they have always been. I think it is a mistake even to have a C. W. B. M. auxiliary just because the state secretary visits your church and says you should. The only reason for such an organization is that it renders a full service to the women of your church, to your church and to the world. That is one society that knows how to put folks to work and I don't know a church where an auxiliary can't be a good thing, but be sure this is the reason you have one. If the men had only had as definite and worth-while a program the Brotherhoods would have had a longer life.

ST. GEORGE'S, NEW YORK CITY.

St. George's church in New York City is perhaps the finest example of what a church can do to meet the needs around it. Here was an aristocratic Episcopal church once surrounded by handsome homes but lately its membership had scattered and German and other immigrants were filling the big houses full. The audiences in the church were small, the neighborhood remained untouched. They wanted Dr. Rainsford to come to them from Canada. He made a visit, looked over the situation and finally said, I will come on these conditions:

1. A salary which he named.
2. A sum of money to be turned over to him annually to be used for church purposes, as he saw need.
3. All church organizations were to be disbanded—everyone—and new ones were to be formed only as they saw need for them.

Now most of us, perhaps the preachers best of all, know what a startling request this third one was. It was granted, however, and that church was revolutionized and it transformed the neghborhood.

We can't do this kind of thing quickly. We can't say to societies of long standing and of honorable service, "You die and I'll create another." We can't always control the methods of church Boards. This, however, I think we can do—we can refuse to form new organizations unless we honestly feel a need for them.

WHAT IS THE "NEW TESTAMENT CHURCH?"

Now if we see in the New Testament Church not a divine pattern foreordained for all time, but a group of people inspired by the Holy Spirit of God to render a service in the name of Christ, a people not over confident but ready to conform to those methods that mean greater achievement and more Christlike lives, then we can safely follow that church and the Lord will add to us day by day such as are to be saved.

A PRAYER FOR SUNDAY MORNING

O GOD, we rejoice that today no burden of work will be upon us and that our body and soul are free to rest. We thank thee that of old this was hallowed by thee for all who toil, and that from generation to generation the weary sons of men have found it a shelter and a breathing place. We pray for thy peace on all our brothers and sisters who are glad to cease from labor and to enjoy the comfort of their home and the companionship of those whom they love. Forbid that the pressure of covetousness or thoughtless love of pleasure rob any who are worn of their divine right of rest. Grant us wisdom and self-control that our pleasures may not be follies, lest our leisure drain us more than our work. Teach us that in the mystic unity of our nature our body cannot rest unless our soul has repose, that so we may walk this day in thy presence in tranquility of spirit, taking each joy as thy gift, and on the morrow return to our labor refreshed and content.

AMOS, THE FEARLESS PROPHET.

(Home Missionary Lesson.)

NOVEMBER 28.

Golden Text: He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. Jeremiah 32:28.

Lesson Amos 5:1-15. Memory verses 14, 15.

(1) Hear ye this word which I take up for a lamentation over you, O house of Israel. (2) The virgin of Israel is fallen; she shall no more rise; she is cast down upon her land; there is none to raise her up. (3) For thus saith the Lord Jehovah; The city that went forth a thousand shall have a hundred left, and that which went forth a hundred shall have ten left, to the house of Israel.

(4) For thus saith Jehovah unto the house of Israel, Seek ye me, and ye shall live; (5) but seek not Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beer-sheba: for Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, and Beth-el shall come to nought. (6) Seek Jehovah, and ye shall live; lest he break out like fire in the house of Joseph, and it devour, and there be none to quench it in Beth-el. (7) Ye who turn justice to wormwood, and cast down righteousness to the earth, (8) seek him that maketh the Pleiades and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night; that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth (Jehovah is his name); (9) that bringeth sudden destruction upon the strong, so that destruction cometh upon the fortress.

(10) They hate him that reproveth in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly. (11) Forasmuch therefore as ye trample upon the poor and take exactions from him of wheat: ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink the wine thereof. (12) For I know how manifold are your transgressions, and how mighty are your sins—ye that afflict the just, that take a bribe, and that turn aside the needy in the gate from their right. (13) Therefore he that is prudent shall keep silence in such a time; for it is an evil time.

(14) Seek God, and not evil, that ye may live; and so Jehovah, the God of hosts, will be with you, as ye say. (15) Hate the evil one, and love the good, and establish justice in the gate: it may be that Jehovah, the God of hosts, will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph.

VERSE BY VERSE.

1. Hear ye this word. Amos came with a message from Jehovah, and earnestly desired their attention.—A lamentation A term applied to dirges or formal lament over a departed friend. O house of Israel. The Northern Kingdom.

2. The virgin of Israel. The country conceived as a young girl whom Jehovah loved. The oldest extant example of the personification of a nation as a woman.—Is fallen. A prophetic past tense. As the matter lies in his imagination it is already accomplished.—There is none to raise her up. The Northern Kingdom never returned from captivity.

3. City that went forth a thousand shall have a hundred left. The statement is general, meaning any city. It is evident that in Amos' time the basis of military enrollment was the towns and villages, rather than tribes.

4. For thus saith Jehovah. The more formal proof here begins, that Israel has merited her punishment.—Seek ye me. An expression used in the Old Testament to denote religious devotion.—Ye shall live. That is, escape from the impending destruction.

5. Seek not Bethel..Gilgal..Beersheba. What a warning this was, for God was not found in mere formality. Today he would say, Away with mere church-going, sacraments, formal prayers, and seek me in spirit and in truth.—Bethel shall come to naught. Bethel shall become vanity. RVm. Here is a play on words which cannot be expressed in English.

6. Break out like fire. God is called a consuming fire in Deut. 4:24 and Ex. 24:17 and Heb. 12:29—The house of Joseph. The Northern Kingdom is called the house of Joseph, because Ephraim and Manasseh, its most powerful tribes, were sons of Joseph.—Bethel. Is especially mentioned as being the center of the religious cults.

7. Ye who turn justice to wormwood. A species of plant which has become the symbol of bitterness. The charge against the Israelites is that they have substituted the bitterness of oppression and crime for the sweetness of truth and justice.—Cast down righteousness to the earth. Righteousness here means civil justice. We would say, trample it under foot.

8. The Pleiades and Orion. The poet seizes upon two of the heavenly constellations which are most conspicuous to depict the omnipotence of the God for whom he pleads. Shadow of death into the morning. This is not the darkness of death, but the changing from night to day, a very common phenomenon.—Who calleth the waters of the sea. In great inundations rather than in clouds and rain. He is a God whom even the winds and the sea obey.—Jehovah is his name. Some suggest that this phrase should stand at the beginning of verse 8. And indeed this seems quite probable.

9. Bringeth sudden destruction. Or causes destruction to flash forth, RVm.—Destruction cometh upon the fortress. The Septuagint version reads "ruin" instead of the second "destruction" which is more elegant. The fortresses may mean palaces, see Amos 3:11.

10. They hate. The Israelites not only do unjustly, but hate those who attempt to maintain the right.—Reproveth in the gate. The one who brought the charge against the offender, before the judge or elders. Matters were adjusted in the gate.—Speaketh uprightly. The word means sincerely, blamelessly, without reserve, keeping nothing back.

11. Take exactions from him in wheat. This is the manner of their trampling the poor.—Hewn stone.. Pretentious dwellings in contrast with the brick dwellings of the less favored. Ye shall not dwell in them. This is their punishment.

12. The just... That is, the innocent. A bribe. The bribe was accepted and the offender set free.—Turn aside the needy in the gate. Those who could not afford the bribe.

13. He that is prudent shall keep silence. In such a time the prudent, the one acting wisely, keeps silent. Amos was acting a higher part than mere prudence.

14. Seek good, and not evil. The prophet calls upon the people to change their manner of life. Repent is the great word.

15. Hate the evil and love the good. Still stronger language than before used.

The Fearless Prophet

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By ASA MCDANIEL.

Israel's only condition of safety was amendment. There is no escape for a nation or an individual who goes on breaking any of the laws of God, but by ceasing to do evil and learning to be good.

The people of Israel lived in careless ease, enjoying all manner of luxury. No fear of God or man disturbed their rest or caused them to pause from their oppression or idolatry. Injustice was the usurper of righteousness in the Northern Kingdom. Here religion had grown formal and external, and like all external religion, it was destined to fail in the presence of a grown tide of spiritual life. Jehovah has no pleasure in empty forms either in that or this generation.

Amos was a Judean who lived in the hills of that rugged country, and cared for his sheep. He had time for meditation about God and his world, and to commune with him in his own temple beneath the stars. This fellowship enabled him to look at life from the standpoint of the Divine. He was interested in the practical problems of human life, and touched it at many points. He was in every way a statesmanlike adviser on questions of public policy. Notwithstanding he was a son of the hills of Judah, he did not hesitate to preach righteousness to the unrighteous of Israel.

The message of Amos is twenty-eight centuries old, and yet it is the message needed in our luxury-loving and pleasure-seeking day.

The ground of appeal in home missions must ever be the need of a fellow man. To an obedient, loving disciple of Jesus Christ, there is no passing by on the other side with respect to any representative of suffering humanity. The opportunity is also the claim upon all we have and are in this life. At home or abroad the need is the call of God to that field and the love of Christ is the constraining power.

Dr. Babcock said: "Intensity and extensity are wrapped up together. Intense devotion to Jesus Christ means extensive sympathies."

If a light is bright it will shine a long way. It is only a precious ointment that can fill the house with its fragrance. If our lives are full of the spirit of Jesus they will go out to all the world in the same natural way.

When Jesus said, "Love thy neighbor," he meant the man who needs you, and he illustrated that principle by the story of the Good Samaritan. The man in need is your neighbor no matter where you find him.

One of the underlying principles of the kingdom of God is that he "hath made of one, every nation of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth."

Our artificial divisions break down before this universal brotherhood, and we ask ourselves the question, again, Why condemn the heathen for idolatry, when there are idols at home?

Is the African, with his nose jewels and anklets, any more to be condemned than the fashion devotees, mincing along the street bedecked with jewels, and wearing extreme styles of apparel?

Is the immorality of the old world any more of a sin than the white slave traffic of America?

Is the praying machine of India any worse than the mechanical prayers of thousands in our churches?

Is their worship of a dumb idol any worse than our unbridled greed for gold?

The place to begin in "home missions" is in our own hearts and when they are clean and full of the love and spirit of Jesus, the whole world will sooner or later feel the influence.

A POLICY FOR SECRETARIES

NATURALLY the secretaries and other officials of the missionary societies of the Disciples of Christ wish to avoid taking sides in any controversy that lies outside of their own special fields.

They are the servants of the brotherhood, each one for a particular task, and it is quite right for them to avoid even the appearance of partisanship.

In the prolonged discussion over the General Convention a few society officials seem to have found themselves in a somewhat embarrassing position. No official, unless we make an exception of President Burnham, of the American Society, has been willing to take sides with the noisy opposition. But a few have tried to carry water on both shoulders. The effect of their ambiguous attitude has been to encourage the opposition to keep up its attacks.

Nothing is clearer to those in close touch with the mind of the brotherhood than that it has been the timidity and ambiguity of these secretaries that has been mainly responsible for the prolongation of the controversy.

Had the executive officials of all the missionary societies gone straight forward in line with the action taken by the representatives of the churches assembled in successive conventions the opposition to the General Convention would have vanished in thin air.

The fact is—and it should be stated in almost unqualified terms—that except for a certain newspaper there is not, and has not been, any substantial or considerable opposition to the General Convention. What opposition there seems to be is simply the reflection of partisan attachment to the newspaper whose commercial interests are bound up with the defeat of every effort at co-ordinating or unifying the Disciples' communal affairs.

All the hue and cry has come from a single source, a source that was able, just because it was a newspaper, to make a great volume of noise. A few secretaries have been scared by this noise. They have thought it unwise to seem to participate too openly in the General Convention organization.

We believe this a short-sighted policy. We believe there is a safer and better policy for these servants of the churches to follow. Every secretary will in the long run do the best thing for his society if he adopts the policy of doing what the churches decide shall be done.

That is a safe course.

And it is the only right course.

The churches have determined, after an absurdly long deliberation, on unifying their missionary and benevolent activities under the control of a single representative convention. There is practically no opposition among the churches or the leaders of the churches to this determination. In a series of national conventions this purpose has gathered to itself increasing support, at last approaching unanimity.

No convention will ever reverse it.

There will be no going back to the rivalry and anarchy of former days.

The one thing now needed for the controversy to be automatically closed is for every official of every missionary and benevolent society to stand forth without timidity in frank co-operation with the policy adopted by the churches through their conventions.

When this is done—definitely and openly done—the newspaper opposition will cease to find pleasure or profit in further troubling Israel.

AN UNESCAPABLE ISSUE

SPECIFICALLY what President Wilson had in mind when in his New York speech last week he delivered his sharp warning against raising the religious issue in American politics, is not easy to infer from the context of his remarks. But whatever he may say to arrest the emergence of the Roman Catholic issue in our national affairs will have at most but a temporary effect.

The joining of that issue is inevitable.

It is well-known that below the level of newspaper comment certain states like Massachusetts and Illinois are seething with religious partisanship.

Now and then something happens to goad the Catholic press into utterances that break through their usually discreet restraints and betray a purpose to carry their church interests into the arena of national politics. The recognition of Carranza by President Wilson is the latest occasion of this sort. All Roman papers have condemned this act of our government. But some combine threats with their condemnation. The Morning Star, official journal of the archdiocese of New Orleans, uses this violent language:

> "Mr. Wilson's recognition of Carranza, the avowed enemy of the Catholic Church, is an insult to the Catholics of this country. It it is a direct challenge to them, and we hope that not only Catholics, but every true lover of religious freedom, for which the glorious flag of our country stands, will give him such an open answer at the polls as will prove to him that no President of the United States can so flagrantly ignore the lawful and respectful request of 16,000,000 fellow citizens without paying the penalty."

There are multitudes of hot-headed Protestants who would be only too glad to have the Roman Catholic issue joined in our national politics in terms of the interests of clericalism in Mexico! On second thought it will be clear even to the densest and most partisan Catholic that his church could allow no greater blunder to be made at this time.

But it is not in specific instances like this that we find our ground for declaring that the ultimate joining of the issue is inevitable, nor is it in the silly belief held by many that Catholicism is involved in a conscious and sinister conspiracy against our country. Our declaration rests upon the fundamental and historic incompatibility of Roman Catholic ideals and institutions with our American ideals and institutions.

The most elemental and determinative factor in our democracy is the public school. But there is growing up a generation of Catholics American-born but not American-educated. This generation is trained in the parochial schools that are growing with such prolificacy in all parts of the land, and especially in the cities. Increasingly there is being withdrawn from our democratic schools vast multitudes of children to become pupils in these non-democratic institutions.

The product of these schools is not the kind of product that will maintain the traditions and ideals of American democracy.

Soon or late—and the aggressive attitude of many Catholics make us believe it will be sooner than later—the issue created by the presence of an alien and uncontrollable educational system in our midst will have to be met.

It is not to be met by misrepresentation, nor by hysterical appeals, and certainly not by the silly A. P. Aism that would turn the basements of our Protestant churches into military barracks against the day of a Catholic uprising. But it will have to be met by a deliberate restudy of the principles upon which our American institutions rest and a deliberately organized propaganda of those principles and of the kind of religion that those principles grow out of among the Catholic population of the country.

It must some day be seen that American ideals and Roman Catholic religion are inherently incompatible—not because of particular abuses that can be found in Catholic institutions, for these can be matched by almost similar abuses found in Protestant institutions, but because ideally, at its best, the Roman Catholic scheme of things does not fit into our American political and social structure.

THE ROMAN CHURCH AND PROTESTANT MISSIONS

ONE NEEDS all the patience of all the saints to think tolerantly of those high-church Episcopalians who are raising a fuss against the participation of their church in the Latin American Congress to be held in Panama in February.

How anybody who draws his scheme of values from Jesus Christ could get those values so inverted and mixed up as to imagine that because the Roman Catholic Church is a well-established institution in the state of South America we Christians of North America have no right to go there and preach the gospel, is past comprehension.

But that is what a lot of these good Episcopalian brethren are doing. A half-dozen of them—some bishops and Dr. W. T. Manning of Trinity church, New York—resigned from their communion's board of missions last week because by a vote of 13 to 26 the board decided to go ahead with its plans to send representatives to the Congress at Panama.

One of their newspaper organs has been carrying on a long-winded opposition for many months and now writes dolefully on the imminent division with which the Episcopal church in America is threatened on account of the action of the board of missions.

Concretely, the facts seem to be these:

The Roman Catholic Church is the "whole thing" religiously in South America.

But moral and social conditions are as bad or worse there than in the pagan countries of the Orient to which we evangelical Christians send missionaries and where a Church wearing Christ's name is altogether unknown.

There is considerable material and social civilization in Brazil and Argentina and Chile and the smaller countries, but life is secular and pleasure loving.

A single indicator of the moral level of South American peoples will suffice: In one of the nations fully one-half of the children born are illegitimate.

There isn't an argument that can be put up for sending missionaries to non-Christian Japan that is not applicable with equal force to Roman Catholic South America—not one.

Now, for a body of Christ's followers to stand in the presence of the vast spiritual appeal of South America and justify a refusal to answer it, on the ground that a Church wearing Christ's name is already there, is anything but a Christ-like way of doing.

The fact is that though a Church wears Christ's name, yet if it does not do his work among men it is not his church. Its history does not make it Christian. Only its fruits make it Christian.

And the Roman Church in South America is not bearing Christian fruit—its fruit is hardly more Christian than is the fruit of Buddhism in Japan.

To stand off from an enterprise looking toward the bringing of the living gospel to lands as obviously in need of it as are these South American lands, on the pretext that to do so will jeopardize their chances of organic unity with the Roman Catholic Church, makes these Episcopalian brethren seem almost as far removed from vital fellowship with the rest of us as is the Roman church itself.

Most Protestants, we venture, will agree with us when we bluntly declare that we haven't a moment's interest in uniting with the Roman section of Christendom until Rome herself is evangelized.

SIN'S DISILLUSIONMENT

YELLOW journalism does some good, after all. The unrestrained elaboration of the details of people's private life in the public press is one of the neurotic and degrading factors in modern life. But the publication of the private details of the irregularities of a noted Chicago architect in last week's papers has been in its net effect a wholesome thing.

This architect left his family some years ago and built a beautiful home in the Wisconsin hills where he lived with the wife of another Chicago man. About a year ago she and two of her children were horribly murdered by a colored laborer who worked on the place.

The public let itself get worked up into a state of sentimentalism over the tragedy—not alone the tragedy of the killing, but the "spiritual" tragedy of the man who had thus horribly lost his "affinity." Lots of silly talk was heard. The man was pictured in the loneliness of his bereavement and a sort of halo was flung over the man and his long existing relations with the murdered woman.

The revelations of last week, however, dissipate all this nonsense. Another woman took the place of the dead affinity. Without marriage she lived with him for a time and then left him.

But she wrote letters to him. These letters were stolen by a servant who gave them to the authorities, and thus they reached the public.

In this correspondence the architect over whose domestic irregularities so much sentimentalism had been spilled is lashed for his wantonness, his cruelty and his utter infidelity.

He is pictured as an out-and-out roue.

Ordinarily the printing of such letters would be harmful. In this case they showed the agony of soul brought on by sin. The letters lifted the filmy curtain of false idealism with which many morally indirect people had allowed the realities of the man's and woman's deportment to be obscured, and laid bare the depravity and unhappiness and spiritual desolation that yawn in the depths of their souls.

What they called "freedom" proves to be—as it always has proved to be—a terrible bondage of soul.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

President Sets Apart Thanksgiving Day.

The President of the United States has set apart Thanksgiving Day by special proclamation. Some interesting statements in the official document are as follows:

Our ability to serve all who could avail themselves of our services in the midst of crises has been increased, by a gracious Providence, by more and more abundant crops; our ample financial resources have enabled us to steady the markets of the world and facilitate necessary movement of commerce which the war might otherwise have rendered impossible; and our people have come more and more to a sober realization of the part they have been called upon to play in a time when all the world is shaken by unparalleled distress and disasters.

The extraordinary circumstances of such a time have done much to quicken our national consciousness and deepen and confirm our confidence in the principles of peace and freedom by which we have always sought to be guided. Out of the darkness and perplexities have come firmer counsels of policy and clearer perceptions of the essential welfare of the nation. We have prospered while other peoples were at war, but our prosperity has been vouchsafed us, we believe, only that we might the better perform the functions which war rendered it impossible for them to perform.

Week Day Religious Instruction in New York.

The project of giving religious instruction on week-days in New York on the Gary plan is making favorable progress. A permanent committee has been formed with representatives of Catholic, Protestant and Jewish organizations. One public school now has co-operation with a Roman Catholic church in the matter of religious instruction.

Congregationalists in Episcopal Churches.

For the first time in the history of the country, Episcopal churches in New Haven, Conn., opened their pulpits to Congregational ministers on Oct. 24. Special dispensation was received from the bishop that this might be done. Doubtless the Christian Unity movement headed by Rev. Newman Smyth of New Haven has borne some fruit. The visiting Congregational ministers that preached in the Episcopal churches were: the Rev. Dr. M. L. Burton, president of Smith college, at Trinity Church; the Rev. Dr. E. C. Moore of Harvard Theological Seminary, at St. John's Church; the Rev. Willard Sperry of Boston, at St. Paul's Church; the Rev. Shepard Knapp of Worcester, Mass., at St. Thomas' Church; the Rev. W. I. Maurer of Northampton, Mass., at St. James' Church.

Dr. Zwemer Returns to Egypt.

Dr. Samuel Zwemer has returned to the field of his missionary labors, Egypt, having sailed from New York, Oct. 16. He has recently been giving a course of lectures at Princeton University. He asked for forty thousand dollars for some special missionary projects, during his recent travels through the United States and he has received $25,000 of this amount.

Romanists Become Presbyterians.

Louisiana has been throughout its history a Roman Catholic state on account of its having been settled by the French people. The Presbyterians have a church in the delta country, southwest of New Orleans, which has been prospering greatly. Since May 30, Dr. John C. Barr, the pastor, has received fifty people upon profession of faith. On a recent Sunday 142 people were present of whom 141 were former members of the Roman communion.

Proposed Federation in Massachusetts.

At Lenox, Mass., a proposal has been made for a federated church, composed of the Congregational and Episcopal churches. The program involves the merging of the men's clubs, Sunday school services, mission study classes, weekly prayer service, a combined choir and union Sunday evening services, the two preachers preaching alternately. The proposal has been put up to Bishop Davies for his approval and his decision is awaited with much interest. The case is a sort of test case with reference to the possibility of co-operation between the two denominations.

Baptist Young People Have New Leader.

The Baptist Young People's Union of America is just now being congratulated upon securing a new executive secretary in the person of Rev. James A. White, of Louisville, Ky. His term of service began on Nov. 1, and he will have offices in the Baptist building on Wabash Ave., Chicago. He is a graduate of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, from which institution he has master's and doctor's degrees. The president of the organization is Rev. Frank L. Anderson of Chicago, who is also the executive secretary of the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago.

Universalists Remember Founder.

The Universalists are marking the centennial of the death of the founder of their denomination. Rev. John Murray died in Boston, Sept. 3, 1915. He was born in England in 1741. His father was a high Calvinist and taught him that if any who was not of the elect should say "our Father" he had committed blasphemy. The son continued the Calvinistic notion of election but said that God had elected the whole race. Murray became a Methodist class leader, and was appointed by John Wesley over a class of forty boys. He soon began to preach and joined himself to Whitefield. After coming to America, he had still wider doctrinal divergences. From such conservative origins, the movement later developed in the direction of Unitarianism.

Gypsy Smith Evangelizing in America.

Gypsy Smith, the well-known English evangelist, is now in America doing evangelistic work. He opened a campaign at Memphis, Tenn., on Oct. 31, in which the churches of the city are quite generally joining.

Methodists Will Win China.

A movement in the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal church is to have a "Win my Chum" week this fall in which every member of the League will be urged to win a friend for Christ.

To Succeed J. Campbell White in Leading Laymen's Movement

The Executive Committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement held its first regular meeting of the season on September 28. All the reports concerning the National Campaign and other plans of the Movement were most encouraging, and the committee faces the future with fresh courage and hope. While it was recognized that the resignation of Mr. J. Campbell White was an unmeasured loss to the Movement, the committee reaffirmed in no uncertain way its faith in the mission of the Movement, and laid plans for the future with great confidence. The Executive Committee elected Mr. White as a member of the committee, and will thus have the invaluable aid of his counsel. Mr. William B. Millar, who became joint general secretary with Mr White in 1910, will continue as the general secretary. Regarding Mr. Millar's preparation for the work of the Movement, we quote from an article which appeared in the November, 1910, issue of Men and Missions:

"Mr. Millar is a native of Wisconsin, a graduate of Lawrence College. In the early days of his religious life he was led toward missionary service in Calcutta but was unable to go there because of the ill health of a member of his family. He became general secretary of the Twenty-third Street Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association in New York, remaining there until 1895, when he joined the field department of the International Committee, having charge of the eastern section of the United States, a territory extending east of Pittsburgh and north of the Potomac River. On the breaking out of the war with Spain, in 1898, he took charge of the Association work for the army and navy. After the conclusion of the war it was determined to constitute this a permanent department and Mr. Millar became its organizing and directing secretary. He had the initiative and guiding hand in the comprehensive work done for the Japanese army during the war with Russia, and which attracted the interested attention of the whole world."

Mr. Millar has had charge of the administrative side of the Laymen's Missionary movement's work from the beginning of his term as general secretary. The Movement is extremely fortunate to have at its head as general secretary at this time a man with pronounced administrative ability as well as other conspicuous gifts. He will speak at many of the conventions during the autumn and will lead one of the teams after the holidays.

LET THE PESSIMIST TAKE NOTICE.

"Let those who think Christianity is a spent force ponder the following: When Carey, the first Protestant missionary of the world, went to India, the whole number of nominal Christians in the world was about 200,000,000. Now there are 500,000,000. When he, in the eighteenth century, went out from Christendom as a missionary to the dark world of heathendom, the population of the world was about one thousand millions. It is now supposed to be about fifteen hundred millions, which is only another way of saying that while the population of that world has increased during this period 50 per cent. Christianity has increased 150 per cent, and the ratio shows that the cause of Christ advanced more within the last 25 years than it did in 75 years preceding. Our God is marching on."

FACTS ABOUT THE BOOK OF BOOKS.

The Bible sells better than any other book in the world. Every year seventeen millions of Protestant Bibles, Testaments and Scripture portions are printed in more than five hundred languages. Ten millions are sold by Bible Societies below cost price; the remaining seven millions are printed commercially and yield a handsome profit to the publishers.

In the fifteenth century a plain manuscript of Wycliff's Testament sold for a sum of money equal to L45 in our time.

A century ago the cheapest Bibles in England were sold for 4s. 6d., and the cheapest Testament at 10d. To-day an English Bible can be bought for 5d., and a New Testament for one penny.

Michael Faraday, one of the most distinguished scientists of his age, was one day found by his friend, Sir Henry Ashland, weeping, with his head upon his Bible. "I fear you are not so well to-day," said Sir Henry. "No," answered Faraday, "it is not that; but, oh, why will men go wrong when they have this blessed book to guide them?"

The value of simple Bible reading is illustrated by an anecdote about a trader on the West Coast of Africa, who, seeing a native, a converted cannibal, reading a book, asked him what he was reading. "I reading the Bible," said the native. "Oh," remarked the trader, contemptuously, "that book is out of date in my country." "If," retorted the native, "it had been out of date in mine, you would have been eaten long ago."—(Liverpool Daily Post, August 17th, 1907.)

A MODERN ELEVENTH OF HEBREWS.

"The trouble is," said Harold Raymond, on his return from his second year in college, "that when you enter the sphere of religion, you deal with something quite different from anything that you meet in science. In the one you move step by step along lines of induction or deduction, and in the other you fling a highway through the air in a bold and beautiful manner, but in a way quite different from science."

"I am not sure that the difference is so great as we are accustomed to suppose," replied his friend. "I have been thinking how scientific faith is, or, rather, how large a part faith plays in science. No man ever made a great discovery that was wholly an accident. I have wondered how it would seem if we were to try to add some modern names of science to the great muster-roll of faith in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews."

She Knows What She Wants

The well informed housekeeper insists upon using only a baking powder which is made of cream of tartar. She might read in an advertisement or be told that alum and lime phosphate, which are used as inferior substitutes in cheap baking powders, were all right in the quantities used but she would not buy them or permit them to enter her kitchen. Why?

Because she knows that cream of tartar has always been accepted as the most wholesome agent, with soda, for raising cake and biscuit, and she wants a baking powder made of cream of tartar, like Royal.

This conclusion is the result of unconscious absorption, either her own or her mother's, of the opinions of the highest authorities on hygiene and home cooking.

The prudent housekeeper, when she uses baking powder, reads the names of the ingredients printed on the label. She knows what she wants.

"I should like to hear how it would sound."

"By faith Columbus, when he was called of God to discover a new world, went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sailed strange waters, with Cabot, Magellan, Vespucius and Balboa, the heirs with him of the same promise.

"By faith Copernicus lifted the earth from its solid base and set it to moving in rhythmic order round the Sun; and all the suns that circle round the Throne of God. This he beheld by faith.

By faith the men of science, who did not always call themselves men of faith, found substance in the things hoped for, and moved from experiment to hypothesis and from hypothesis to theory and from theory to fact and from faith to sight. And all these were the children of faith.

"And what shall I more say? For time would fail me to tell of Stephenson and Fulton, or Morse and Roentgen and Edison and Lister; of Cyrus Field and Alexander Bell and Marconi and Wilbur Wright, who through faith made iron float, yoked chariots to the visible power of steam, caused the voice of man to be heard by his fellow man at a distance of a thousand miles, filled the air with voices inaudible to the ear but intelligible to the mind of faith, and lifted the bodies and the minds of men on wings of wonder, and set them to sailing amid the clouds.

"And wherein we have learned from saints and apostles and the Lord of life, and have found sure footing for faith, let us not count it unreasonable that still we follow, and live the life of faith."—Youth's Companion.

CAUSES OF FAILURE.

If a man, professional or otherwise, fail in his work, the causes will probably be found among the following:—

1. Lack of love for his task.
2. Lack of tact in his methods.
3. Lack of care for his appearance.
4. Lack of regard for the views of others.
5. Lack of thoroughness in doing things to a finish.
6. Lack of faculty in winning support.
7. Lack of organizing power to keep out of the ruts.
8. Lack of gumption in making knowledge practical.
9. Lack of patience in doing drudgery, and too great haste to cull the flowers.
10. Lack of moderation in things desired, and an overestimate of actual needs.

A "Billy" Sunday Story.

I heard of a lady who had an engagement to attend a meeting of a missionary society one day, but she stayed a little longer at the milliner's display than she intended, and when she got there they were just opening the meeting. She was to lead the meeting. She grabbed a hymn-book, Presbyterian, and said, "We will sing Four Dollars and Seventy-eight Cents."—The Strand Magazine.

Kansas Church Supports Three Living Links.

The Highland, Kans., church of only 340 members, is now supporting three living links, and paying up the apportionments to every board in full. For several years, the church supported O. F. Barcus, of Shanghai, China. Recently Dr. Dye and Bert Wilson were with this congregation and the result is that twelve men have banded together as a living link club and will provide support for Wm. Edwards, at Bolenge, Africa. One of the deacons, a business man, will alone support Herbert Smith at Lotumbe, Africa. This is the first "living link club." reported and is an idea that can be carried out in many churches, each man being responsible for one month's salary, and thus having his own missionary one month with direct report of work done.

Wets Attack Leaders of Evanston, Cincinnati, Church.

Justin N. Green, pastor of the church at Evanston, Cincinnati, O., recently received an anonymous communication, in which the writer threatened that if the dry posters in front of the church were not removed by the following Saturday noon certain information which the person claimed to have concerning an incident in the past life of A. M. Harvout, an elder in the church, would be published. Mr. Green immediately turned the letter over to Mr. Harvout, who made light of the affair. He says that he cannot recall any incident in his past life that would cause him any annoyance if published. The dry posters were not taken down, and it is stated that the letter would be turned over to the Federal authorities.

Efficiency Campaign at Flemingsburg, Ky.

During the week of October 24-31 the Flemingsburg, Kentucky, Church held an "Efficiency Campaign" under the leadership of the minister, H. M. Stansifer. On the first Sunday an effort was made to clear the church of all indebtedness, which amounted to about $1,800. Part of this debt was of ten years' standing. The giving did not stop until over $2,270 was pledged. Meetings were held each night during the week in the interest of the Every Member Canvass which was made on the following Sunday afternoon. Twenty teams of two men each went out and visited the families of the church. The result was that the number of pledges was increased 94 per cent and the amount pledged for current expenses shows an increase of over 28 per cent. For missions, benevolence and education, there is an increase of over 100 per cent in the amount pledged. The motto of the "Efficiency Campaign" was "Every Member Helping Every Cause." Reverse this, the pastor writes, and you have the result of the campaign: "Every Cause Helping Every Member." Dr. R. H. Crossfield assisted very materially in the Every Member Canvass. During the campaign over $5,100 was pledged for all purposes.

State Convention Meets Next Week in Florida.

The Florida Christian Missionary Convention meets in Miami, November 15-18, beginning Monday evening. The district Christian Endeavor Convention meets at Miami, November 12 to 14 and the Florida Sunday-school Association begins the evening of the 18th and extends to the 21st. The Florida East Coast Railway from Jacksonville to Key West, has granted a rate of one fare plus twenty-five cents for the round trip, and other roads will make the same rate, conditioned on an attendance of 400 at the three conventions combined. A strong program is being arranged and suitable arrangements for comfort, sight-seeing and pleasure are being made. Ira E. Adams is the pastor at Miami.

Berkeley Pastor Treats Ibsen in Sermon Series.

"Ibsen, the Mystic and Prophet," is the topic of a series of three lecture-sermons being preached at First church, Berkeley, Cal., by the pastor, H. J. Loken. Three of the great Norwegian's most typical plays are discussed in the following order: "Brand" or The Church and the Changing Order. "An Enemy of the People," or Sin and Society. "The Lady from the Sea," or The Quest for Personality. Mr. Loken is a native of Norway and a close student of the great dramatist. Motion pictures of typical scenes of Norway gave atmosphere to these occasions.

Aiding the New Christian Hospital at Kansas City.

An active canvass has been begun for the securing of $50,000 for furnishing Christian Church Hospital, Kansas City. A cordial invitation is extended by the National Benevolent Association to Disciples everywhere to have fellowship with their less fortunate brothers by making a contribution toward the furnishing of this hospital. Gifts are invited ranging from a thousand dollars for a general ward to $500 for private ward, $500 for private room, $100 for a bed, to the greatest variety of smaller things, as for instance, spreads, 43 dozen, at an average cost per dozen of $17; sheets, 134 dozen, $10.10; pillow cases, 75 dozen at $1.86 per dozen; blankets, 104 dozen, $14.02 per dozen; towels, 103 dozen, $2.89 per dozen. Subscriptions should be sent to Christian Church Hospital, 1202 Commerce Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Evanston, Chicago, Church Discusses Boy Problem.

On the first Sunday of this month, the Evanston, Ill., Church, which O. F. Jordan leads, took up the problem of the boy. Three ten minute speeches on the general topic "What Evanston Does for her Boys," were made by Secretary Dale of the Evanston Y. M. C. A., Prof. Bronson of the Olympic Club, and Mr Freeman of the Boy Scout movement. The pastor made some concluding remarks on "The Church and the Boy Movement." A chorus of boys sang. Mr. Jordan recently reviewed Winston Churchill's "A Far Country."

Dr. Powell Appreciates Burris A. Jenkins As Evangelist

E. L. Powell, pastor at First church, Louisville, writes that the two weeks' meeting held by Burris A. Jenkins, of Kansas City, has closed. Including additions received prior to the meeting but coming through the preparatory service and therefore a part of the meeting there were ninety-three additions to the membership, of this number forty-seven coming by confession of faith and baptism. A number of fine young men were in this company. Dr. Powell states that in several ways this revival is profitable for study, and offers the following reasons for such consideration:

"First there were no outward accessories usually associated with great revivals. It was a quiet, steady and continuous cooperative effort with no excitement other than that of deep spiritual feeling. Secondly, the evangelist came to a church thoroughly united in prayer and having in advance something like one hundred pledged personal workers. The whole month of September was given to spiritual preparation in the mid-week meetings and in two mass meetings—one for the men and the other for the women. The Board of Officers of the church had pledged themselves to give unstinted support to the work. Thirdly, the material preparation, or in other words the finances, were disposed of before the revival began. There was no stress or strain in this material preparation, but so quietly was it accomplished that we wondered at the ease of the achievement. Fourthly, we proved the worth of dignified and continuous advertisement. This advertisement was both in advance of the meeting and during the meeting. The whole community was informed in regard to the revival. Fifthly, the revival had begun before the opening date in the additions received to the membership, some nineteen in number, and in the spiritual interest awakened in the special meetings already referred to."

Of Dr. Jenkins as preacher, Dr. Powell says: "Each sermon escaped the average and attained in one particular or another to real greatness. The great essentials of Christianity were convincingly and eloquently presented. The attention of the audience was always tense. It would be difficult to say that one sermon or another in particular was the greatest. From the standpoint of this writer no stronger presentation of the claims of Jesus Christ on the soul could have been presented. There was no mechanical note sounded in any utterance. Each sermon was born of profound conviction. There was excellency of speech but the message was delivered 'in demonstration of the spirit and power.' If Dr. Jenkins has ever been an academic preacher he is no longer such. His message was profoundly spiritual and he spoke as one who knows what it is to dwell in the presence chamber of the white Christ. Splendid were his denunciations of ecclesiasticism. Heart-surging was his portrayal of the righteousness required by Jesus Christ as contradistinguished from the Scribes and Pharisees. Clear and fine was his interpretation of Christian liberty. Some of his utterances were trumpet-voiced and others sweet and tender as the breathing of an Aeolian harp."

New Members of Eureka Board of Trustees.

Two new names were added to the Board of Trustees of the College at the Annual Election this year, W. C. Darnall of McLean and Howard Leonard of Eureka. Mr. Darnall was a student of the college in his early life and has cherished a very friendly feeling for it through the years. Mr. Leonard was a student in the late '90s and has always taken a keen interest in its welfare. Mr. Darnall was elected for the full term of six years: Mr. Leonard was chosen to fill the unexpired term of H. O. Breeden, resigned.

P. J. Rice Doing Far Reaching Work in El Paso Field.

The fact that El Paso, Tex., is just across the border from Mexico lends interest to the work which Perry J. Rice is doing as pastor of First church in that city. On October 31, Mr. Rice celebrated the sixth anniversary of his coming to the Texas city. During these six years the strength of the Disciple cause there has been doubled. At the time of his coming there was only one Disciple church in the city, now there are two independent congregations. The total number of enrolled members is double what it was then. There are more than twice as many people in the Sunday-schools and the Christian Endeavor societies. The C. W. B. M. auxiliary enrolls more than twice as many members. There is being raised about twice as much money for missions and benevolences and for local expenses as was raised six years ago. First church gave considerable of its strength to the Austin Park church at the time of its organization, but it has much more than recovered its loss. The equipment has been very greatly improved at a total cost of approximately $10,000. Through all of these years a very splendid harmony has characterized the congregation, and there are now reported the largest audiences and the largest attendance upon the Sunday-school in the church's history. Ever since Mr. Rice came to El Paso, he has been a member of the Board of the New Mexico-West Texas Christian Missionary Society, and for the past two years, as president of the board, has had practical direction of all missionary operations in this territory. The city of El Paso, which has grown with remarkable rapidity, has a unique place as the metropolis of the southwest. It is the meeting place of Home and Foreign missions, located as it is on the border of Mexico and being the distributing point for practically everything that goes into Mexico from the United States. The Republic of Mexico, Mr. Rice writes, is one of the neediest foreign missionary fields in all the world. The territory of New Mexico and West Texas stretching away to the north and east is all Home Missionary territory. Mr. and Mrs. Rice were recently given a delightful reception by their congregation on the occasion of the twenty-sixth anniversary of their marriage.

First Church, Richmond, Ind., Free From Debt.

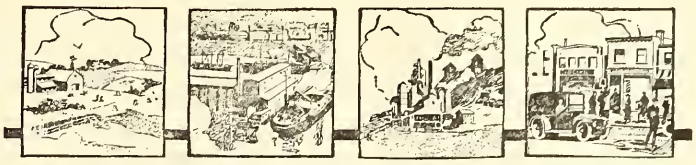
First church, Richmond, Ind., announces that all church indebtedness has been paid off. On Sunday, November 14, this event will be celebrated by an All-Day Church Rally, beginning with the Bible-school. The mortgage will be burned at the morning service. A picnic dinner will be served in the church basement and the day will be made one of rejoicing and whole-hearted fellowship.

W. A. Fite Begins Work in Ashland, Ky.

W. A. Fite, formerly of Paducah, Ky., had been in the new field at Ashland, Ky., only a month and a half when he started off a "spiritual revival." Mr. Fite did the preaching and D. Emmet Snyder the singing. The meeting has just closed. Twenty-five persons were added to the membership, and at a Sunday-school rally held during the meeting there was an attendance of 745. Mr. Fite states that the Ashland church home is one of the most beautiful in the brotherhood, having cost $60,000. The building was erected under the ministry of H. M. Stansifer, now of Flemingsburg, Ky.

C. R. Scoville Leading Union Meeting At Jefferson City, Mo.

A. R. Liverett writes enthusiastically of the work C. R. Scoville and his eight helpers are doing at Jefferson City, Mo., in the leadership of a union meeting. Over five hundred responded to the first invitation. A total of 1,502 came in six days, including reconsecrations. The combined attendance at the Sunday-schools has been already increased from 1,260 to 2,400, the Christian school having the largest increase.



Business is booming!

Dayton, Ohio.

Merchants everywhere tell our 800 salesmen that business is booming.

Farmers have had two record crops, at big prices, with big demand at home and abroad.

Stocks of manufactured material are short, and labor is in great demand.

Exports largely exceed imports.

Factories are busy, many working overtime.

More freight cars are needed, and steamers are taxed to capacity.

People are living better, and spending their money more freely.

This country has the best money in the world, and more of it than ever before.

Such a combination of favorable circumstances never has occurred before, and probably will never occur again.

Billions of dollars are passing over the merchants' counters.

The people who spend this money want the best service.

They demand it in all kinds of stores, from the smallest to the largest.

They get it in stores which use our up-to-date Cash Registers, which quicken service, stop mistakes, satisfy customers, and increase profits.

Over a million merchants have proved our Cash Registers to be a business necessity.

The Hamilton College enrollment is rapidly approaching the grand total of last year. There are 256 names upon the roll in all departments. The year 1914-1915 closed with a total enrollment of 265. A number of new students will be received at the beginning of the next semester, January 24, 1916. A $2,000 addition has recently been made to the physical equipment of the college.

Six Volunteers at Portland, Ind., for Disciple Mission Fields.

For two weeks a union missionary evangelistic campaign was held at Portland, Ind., where John D. Hull ministers to the Disciple church. A. McLean was present and had a place on the program. As a result of the effort eight young people volunteered for missionary work, six of these being Disciples. Many took the tithing pledge. The Presbyterian church voted to support a missionary.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—First church, Bloomington, Ill., recently enjoyed an address from Hon. John B. Lennon, member of the United States Commission of Industrial Relations. Under the topic "The Work and Finding of the United States Commission of Industrial Relations" Mr. Lennon gave some account of the many conferences held by the commission when such celebrities as Andrew Carnegie and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., appeared before them.

—The death is reported of Frank M. Coulter, son of B. F. Coulter, who founded Broadway church, Los Angeles. The funeral service was held in this church. The deceased was one of the leading figures in Los Angeles' business and social life for nearly forty years. A public tribute to his memory was made throughout Los Angeles by flying flags on all public buildings at half mast.

—In a recent issue of The Century it was stated that Ira M. Boswell had refused a call to Frankfort, Ky. This should have read Georgetown, Ky. Roger T. Nooe, as is well known, is the successful and much appreciated leader of the church at Frankfort.

—W. T. Adams, pastor at Santa Rosa, Cal., writes that he has more than doubled his evening audiences by the use of the motion picture machine recently presented to him by a member of his congregation.

—Frankfort, Ky., Bible-school has recently organized a men's class of "Minute Men." About forty young men are enrolled. A "Committee on Young Men" has been appointed from the board of deacons to co-operate in the promotion of this class. Roger T. Nooe is the Frankfort pastor.

—Sheldon, Ill., church recently celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary. J. Miller Ice is pastor of the church.

—First Church, Lincoln, Neb., has a new assistant pastor, J. L. Kohler. Mr. Kohler was several years ago a member of this congregation.

—Liberty, Mo., congregation has completed the new parsonage and installed therein its pastor, Graham Frank. A reception "at home" has been planned for Nov. 6.

—Dallas, Tex., Disciple churches are promoting an "Every-One-Win-One" campaign H. D. Smith is president of the Dallas and Vicinity Preachers' Meeting, and he has appointed the following men to lead in this campaign: W. P. Jennings, George F. Cuthrell, J. G. Slayter, A. K. Scott and A. E. Ewell.

A War Bulletin From Headquarters

To The Churches of Christ in America

The fight upon the American Saloon grows fiercer every day. The battles are on; the issues are joined. The liquor people reading the signs in the stars, in very desperation are putting everything into this struggle for existence.

The crisis hour is come. Against whiskey men and their money and nefarious methods are arrayed the Temperance forces of every kind. Organizations of many names are fighting for their lives. Upon the outcome of this present struggle turns the welfare of home and school and church.

Some of the great religious bodies of the land are pouring their gold into this fight. The Presbyterians spend $50,000 yearly. Many of their greatest and best men are at the battle front and dealing telling blows. What will Our Church do? Will the Churches of Christ be a power just now when Christ and Country calls us? It is a critical hour. No religious body is so bound by every consideration to meet the issue. We are the logical people to lead in this temperance crusade. This is our native land. Our cause and our Church were born in America.

When the victory is won and the American saloon no longer exists, may God grant that it may be said the Churches of Christ did right nobly their part.

Many churches and individuals have answered former appeals and made contributions recently. But thousands of churches and friends must come to our aid very soon to enable us to have a share in various local and state campaigns planned for the immediate future. The services of the National Secretary and a staff of effective speakers are the gift of the Temperance Board to these campaigns. It is our wish to have campaigners from our church in every fight throughout the nation in 1916. The hearty contributions of our churches and hosts of individuals make this possible.

There is no time to lose. Pastors, if when you read these lines, your churches have not contributed this year to this fund, may I entreat you as your servant that you give your people an opportunity at once to help us in this crucial hour. May I urge upon the thousands of others, not pastors, who read these lines to please send a gift direct to this office by return mail.

Dear friends of the Church of Christ, I shall await your answer with prayer and profound anxiety. Help your chosen officers now to get into every local and state wide campaign that shall be carried on during the next twelve months.

Let us have a share in a mighty fellowship whose task is the freedom of home and state and church from the dominance of the American saloon.

L. E. Sellers,

National Secretary American Temperance Board, Box 501, Indianapolis, Ind.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—The Men and Millions Team was represented at Liberty, Mo., by R. H. Miller, E. M. Todd, R. J. Dye and Bert Wilson.

—Hugh McLellan, of San Antonio, will conduct the Bible Studies in the School of Methods, San Antonio, December 13-17.

—First church, Philadelphia, Irving S. Chenoweth, pastor, is planning a Fall Festival for Nov. 18-20. A supper, a mite box ingathering and a sale will be special features.

—President H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka, while on his visit to Yale,, to attend a reunion of his class in the Yale school of religion occupied the pulpit at Ninth Street and the old Garfield church.

—The congregation at First, Winnipeg, Manitoba, recently presented its pastor, J. R. Blunt, with a handsome Bible with his name engraved thereupon.

—The church at Bowling Green, O., burned a few days ago. Arthur Stout, pastor, writes that the congregation will rebuild at once.

—Austin church, Chicago, made the Every Member Canvass Oct. 24, with results that went beyond the most sanguine expectations of the church leaders. The budget asked for was raised and nearly $200 more. This church is going forward in every department under the pastoral guidance of A. R. McQueen.

—S. M. Martin, evangelist, has been spending several weeks in Chicago as the result of an unexpected cancelled engagement for a revival meeting in Oklahoma. He left last week for his home in Seattle where he will hold meetings during November and December. Mrs. Martin who was recently seriously ill preceded her husband to their home by two weeks. She is getting well nicely and hopes to resume he duties as Protective Secretary of the Seattle Y. W. C. A. by Jan. 1.

—First church, Washington, Pa., held an interesting meeting October 10, the occasion of an Every Member Rally. The auditorium was blocked off in sections, according to the different years since 1849, when the oldest living member, Mrs. Ellen Keeney, took membership. Twenty different sections of years were represented by some one on the program. Walter Mansell serves the Washington church as pastor.

—W. A. Moore, pastor at Tacoma, Wash., has been presented with an automobile by members of his congregation and other friends.

—Judge Charles S. Lobingier, judge of the United States Court for China, delivered an address on "American Education in China," at First church, Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 28. Judge Lobingier is a former member of the First church,, and is a son of Mr. and Mrs. George Lobingier, former members there.

—Chas H. Hood, pastor at Coshocton, O., has recently been elected president of the Coshocton County Sunday-school Association.

—The Twin Falls, Ida., church reports itself entirely out of debt, the congregation having recently subscribed to cover all obligations.

Notes From the Foreign Society

Leslie Wolfe reports 110 baptisms from the Tagalog District in the past four months. Two of the converts came from the hospital in Manila. One is a young man who is a hospital nurse and who has just recovered from a severe illness, the other is an intelligent woman from the Provinces who underwent an operation that caused her relief from an infirmity of long standing. Among the converts is a German sailor who has been interned in Manila for a year.

Dr. L. B. Kline reported the opening of a library and reading room in connection with the hospital at Vigan. The books and magazines were furnished by private contributions. He hopes that other books will be added from time to time.

The Disciples in Aparri decided to rebuild their house of worship. They plan for an iron roof and a cement floor and board sides, if money enough can be secured. A subscription list is being passed around and work will be begun when $200 has been subscribed.

The burning of the chapel at Singalon left the congregation there without a home. One of the brethren has placed benches in his home where the church and Sunday-school meet. To accommodate all, the Sunday-school meets in two sections—first the children's section, followed an hour later by the adult section.

Frank V. Stipp is now in Laoag, Philippine Islands, with Dr. Pickett. He remained in Manila only one day and then hastened on to his proper field.

Since his return home from the Congo, H. C. Hobgood has spoken four times in Lexington, once in Louisville, twice in Williamsburg, once in Nebor and once in Madisonville. He is received everywhere most cordially.

Miss Minnie L. Vautrin reports the first commencement of the Luchowfu Girls' School. This school was begun by Mrs. Justin E. Brown six years ago. It was started in an unused room in a gate-house with a teacher who had a few hours to spare each day. It was soon discovered that the school filled a real need and it attracted girls from the best homes. The first class consisting of seven girls, was graduated this year.

Charles S. Settlemyer reports that the University of Nanking opened with about the usual number of students in most departments. The Department of Agriculture and Forestry has a large number of students. This department is now connected with the Chinese government and the students come from many provinces. A number of new professors have been added, several being Chinese graduate students who have just returned from America. The department has a budget of $18,000 Mex., which is all provided for this year. The day schools are doing quite well.

Miss Gretchen Garst, of Akita, Japan, reports that the kindergarten opened on the first of September with almost every child in its place.

L. D. Oliphant and family reached Akita, September 25, just two years after their appointment. Mr. and Mrs. Oliphant have been spending a year in the Language School in Tokyo. They consider Akita a fine city and we know that they will be happy in the work there.

Dr. George Wm. Brown, of Jubbulpore, India, writes that the main event in August was the summer school. Including the Bible College students, about sixty were present. Lectures were given by O. J. Grainger, D. O. Cunningham, W. G. Menzies, E. C. Davis, Dr. Jennie Crozier and Dr. Brown. Dr. Brown reports the Sunday-school work growing in Jubbulpore. There were over 1,300 present the last Sunday in August.

One of Many Similar Letters We are Receiving These Days

"I want you to know how sincerely grateful I am for The Christian Century. I ofen wonder what our brotherhood would come to if it were not for the strong, clear note you are striking each week. A Christian journal with your lofty aims and your courageous and masterly grasp of the truth that needs to be spoken deserves not only to be read by all thoughtful men and women among us, but also their active service and support. As a token of the way I feel I am enclosing herewith two new annual subscriptions, one of which I solicited and the other of which I am paying for myself."

Our Regular Readers Are Our Best Agents

Most of the increase in our subscription list comes from the spontaneous activity of our regular readers. They are as much interested in the truth The Christian Century stands for and the work it is doing as are the editors themselves. Hence many of them have formed the habit of securing new readers for us. We wish their number to be increased. Now is the season of the year when subscription-getting is easier than at any other time. Will you, appreciative reader, try during these months of November and December to pass this "good thing" along to your friends?

There are many among them who would welcome the opportunity of receiving fifty-two issues of The Christian Century. We are again and again receiving letters from new subscribers who have gotten the paper through some friend's activity which read like this: "I did not dream that there was published by the Disciples a paper with your broad outlook and your reasonable interpretation of our plea, and every week when I tear off the wrapper I inwardly thank Mr.———for calling my attention to The 'Century.'"

In reciprocation for your kindness in sending us a new subscription we will extend your own subscription four months. Three new friends added to our list would mean a year's subscription for you without charge.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

The Church and Its Critics

WHO'S TO BLAME WHEN THE CHURCH FAILS?

A subscriber writes a long letter to The Christian Century urging us to take up arms against the horde of writers whose main theme seems to be to criticise the Church. He complains that these critics are putting upon the Church too heavy a load of blame for the moral lapses of society and even for the failure of the Church in particular instances to grow. Here are some extracts from his pungent communication.

> There is too much of what I call knocking the Church today. Everybody seems possessed with a passion to find fault with the Church. It's gotten to be the style to kick Christ's body around, and I for one resent it. The Church is held responsible for everything under heaven that ought not to happen but does happen. All this talk about the "failure" of the Church in Europe because the nations went to war makes me indignant. The nations went to war because of great economic and racial forces that are at work in human life. The Church had nothing to do with the war, either positively or negatively, no more than had the socialist party or the Ancient Order of Free and Accepted Masons.
> And when the critics place the blame upon the Church itself for its failure in many instances to grow in numbers and strength, they are equally beside the mark. The conditions under which the modern church must make headway are much more difficult than in any previous age. The real explanation of the failure of many churches is to be found in such things as automobiles, Sunday golf, Sunday newspapers, moving picture theatres or the general frivolous temper of the times. When the critics ask why the pews are empty they will find their answer among such things as these, not in the Church itself.

We regard the letter from which the above extracts are taken as one of the most remarkable communications we have ever received, and we welcome it as an unusually clear and vigorous formulation of a point of view which is more ore less vaguely defined in the minds of many slack-thinking churchmen.

And we begin by saying that there is nothing at which the Church should be more deeply gratified than the fact that there are those both within her borders and outside who hold her responsible for her own failures and for the failures of righteousness in the social order about her. The criticism and "knocking" to which the Church is today subjected both by friends and foes is the highest compliment that could be paid her.

Before churchmen wax indignant as does our correspondent, let them pause and consider what is implied in the widespread criticisms of the Church circulating today.

Does it mean any less than this, that the whole past history of the Church, her present character and her oft-repeated message, have at least gone so far home to the souls of men as to create a certain unique sense of dependence upon the Church for the progress of the world and the cure of the world's evils?

Men do not criticise the Masonic lodge for the moral failures of society, because they do not conceive of the moral welfare of society as being committed to the keeping of the Masonic lodge. But they do think of the moral welfare of modern society as being dependent upon the Church of Christ, and when the forces of evil are allowed to dominate the social order it is inevitable that the Church should be held responsible and charged with unfaithfulness to its high and unique obligation.

A wise Church, a Church truly and deeply Christian, will not resent such criticisms, even though they sometimes come as taunts, but will seek to profit by them while it addresses itself with fresh resolution to the great responsibility involved in meeting the trustful expectations of mankind.

But it is not enough to deal thus tolerantly and humbly with the critic and accuser.

The Church must itself adopt the essential criticism of its critics and find the cause of all its failures not in the world about, nor in the unregenerate human nature with which it has to deal, but in its own bosom.

That is a hard saying, and the hand that writes it trembles with the absoluteness and audacity of it. But a clear perception of what the Church is, leaves no room for the admission of any qualifying terms of leniency whatever.

Perhaps a detached, disinterested, unregenerate observer of social conditions and forces would be warranted in saying that the automobile, the moving pictures and such things were responsible for the empty pews and the unused baptisteries of the churches.

But no Christian is warranted in saying so.

The Church of Christ has no right to find the cause of its failure outside of itself.

To do so is Christian disloyalty to the Christian gospel.

The moral hypothesis upon which the Church of Christ is founded is the faith that no adverse condition in the secular world can prevail against it.

On this hypothesis, therefore, the Church may not complacently lean back on its virtue and blame worldly conditions for its failure without thereby convicting itself of unfaith in its Lord.

The Christian course for a failing Church to pursue humbly and penitently to acknowledge that in some vital thing it manifestly has not understood the mind of its Lord. If by prayer and reflection and experiment it strives to know the mind of Christ it will be astonished at the inflow of power it will receive and the miracles it will be able to work out before its own eyes.

When now we turn from the Church's own growth to the question of its failure to influence the social order for Christian ideals the point of view of our correspondent is, as we see it, equally far from the truth.

We say boldly that the Church of Christ must bear the blame of allowing the great war in Europe to happen.

For the Church to hide behind such fallacies as its partisan defenders suggest—the economic, social and racial explanations of the war—is to lose the power to prevent another war.

One of the chief businesses of the Church of Christ in the world is to prevent war.

And it can prevent war.

It could have prevented this present war. If it had taken its Christian gospel seriously through all the Christian centuries the present lapse of civilization into barbarism would have been unthinkable.

The Church's failure to prevent this war is a horrible

The Iron Cross*

BY JAMES CHURCH ALVORD

I HAD wandered around Strassburg all the afternoon. It was my first visit, returning to my quarters in the old Nunnery wearied to the bone. The march of the night had been ferocious, fifty miles with knapsacks and weapons, no horses for anybody below the rank of major at that; and there was no reason for hurry. Somebody is always doing that sort of thing in our German army, yanking the men along at the pace that kills when there's no place to go to and no haste about reaching it. Just as I managed a comfortable sprawl on the poor-excuse-for-a-lounge which failed to decorate my office, Sievald marched stiffly in. Sievald out-militaries militarism.

"Captain, your new orderly," he announced and saluted, the way a moving-machine might do it

"Lug him in," I bawled, cross at the interruption.

The new orderly entered.

Now it would be absurd to say that I was awed, a gentleman isn't awed by his servant; but I was—well—impressed. The man was rigged in his regimentals as my soldier, having accepted the white coat and apron before he had seen me; he stood a ghostly figure in the fading glow. Behind him the lone tower of Strassburg's Cathedral was visible through the window, springing out of a flood of saffron light, etching itself against the western sky; a rush of human desire towards the Divine, it seemed, a solid prayer hacked from granite and chiseled with individual petitions all the way up. And the man belonged to it in some strange way. He was august, stately, not tall but with a slenderness that gave height, and with intense eyes—Jewish eyes smouldering under auburn hair—which added to the aloofness of his aspect. He towered when he didn't tower at all. I sprang to my feet and was furiously angry with myself for having done so.

"What is your name?" I demanded.

"Josephsohn, Honorable Sir."

"And your age?"

"Thirty-two, Captain."

"Where do you come from?"

"I am a Jew—and I come from—everywhere."

He sighed as he said the last and then smiled softly to himself. I started to ask him his town, his district; but there was something that kept me still; I don't know what it was. I can't analyze the man at all. He was, and is, a mystery to me, something I didn't like, almost dreaded.

"I wish you'd strip that cursed apron off," I snorted. "It makes you look altogether too fantastic. Then you can get to work on my regimentals, they're in the other room and no end dirty."

The new orderly bowed and passed softly into the chamber.

He was a good fellow and a good servant, Josephsohn, if he did come from everywhere; but he had stiff principles and I was forced to punish him more than once. The first time came at the execution of a spy, a confounded Frenchy who had been discovered masquerading among the ranks. He spoke German like a native—Frenchman; but then there's no end of men from Alsace-Lorraine who hug to a Parisian accent on their Prussian, so his soft elisions had not counted. He was caught with maps and photographs, caught acid-handed in his tent at development. He was shot that noon. Josephsohn was in the firing squad and I had charge of the execution. My man marched in with the other five, took his place with a precision beautiful to see—he was a superb soldier at the drill—then lowered his gun.

"What do you mean by this conduct, Josephsohn?" I shouted. "Present arms—ready——"

He kept his weapon pointed to the ground.

"What do you mean by this, Josephsohn?" I howled again.

"It is written, Honorable Sir, 'Thou shalt not kill.'"

"But you are a soldier."

He twisted suddenly around and faced me squarely. "I am not a soldier by choice," he spoke gently but proudly, "I was drafted, hauled here though my mother pled for mercy down all the long village street, though all the village knows that I belong to The-Brothers-of-Peace, that we do not kill, that we are forbidden to take human life. I did not come voluntarily—I will not kill—I will not kill."

"I'll have you flogged."

"I will not kill, Captain."

I sent for two burly young peasants from another company, had him tied up against the very wall where the execution was to have taken place, then ordered him flogged. The peasants, rough brutes from the hills, laid on the lashes with a hearty will; but all that orderly of mine said was this—"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." It made me mad clear through to hear that illiterate, insensate hunk of flesh praying for me and against every tradition for which I stood. It was the prayer of the dough-face, of the sickly-sentimental school of ethics. No man accepts it. It is the code of old maids. Finally I released him, his back all scarred and bleeding.

"Now, men," I commanded, "you five that are left—do your duty!"

The whole five lowered their rifles, pointing to the ground, on their faces a set, bigoted, sappy, sort of look.

"Present arms!" I stamped my foot, but not a man obeyed.

"Shall we flog 'em, Honorable Sir?" inquired my young peasants, with a grin. But I sent them to quarters to await court-martial. After that we shot the spy. Yet the picture of Josephsohn, standing there with the scarlet trickle oozing down his back, left a shudder in my mind. The man wore an abnormally long white shirt, which he had stripped from his back and which hung, dabbled with blood, almost to his feet; he resembled a certain painting by Rubens—a world-famous painting—I did not enjoy that resemblance. I am an orthodox Lutheran, I believe very fully in my creed—no, I did not feel comfortable for I had seen the picture many times.

That night Josephsohn made ready my bed and cleaned my sword with perfect punctuality. He limped slightly; but he offered no reference to the occurrence of the afternoon, nor did I. The peasant is sullen, still he forgets. I felt sure that we had had enough of this rebellion, the no-fight spirit had been scourged out of this humble creature. To prove him I found fault with the polish on my sword—he really was a supremely good servant—and he said nothing; I slapped him roughly across the cheek. I wished to teach him to stand round in little things the better to curb him on the big.

The amazing creature turned the other cheek, I slapped that.

At a little hamlet outside of Brussels Josephsohn did us a surprising service. I had never suspected him of an ability to speak French, he did not look educated, seemed the simplest of the simple; was in fact the son of a village carpenter. That item I had gleaned from him, for he was an expert with tools. Something went wrong in the town, so the General was forced to order the execution of the burgomaster; to make it impressive, we hung him on a Haman-like gallows hastily patched together in the central square. The people were furious. Lieutenant Sievald was for shooting them down by the squad. A breach of discipline among the commoners he considered it and all breaches-of-discipline with him were worthy of death; but he did not get his way. All the afternoon the men growled around the great square, an odd place, with its low Dutch homes, its decorated beams protruding everywhere, its squat church and its community-house all massed over with Gothic lace-work, the very latest intertwinings of arches from the latest moment of the Gothic decadence. The men were picturesque themselves, having as strong a predilection for red shirts as their women had for huge white caps. In the late evening succeeded a strange silence, a silence that palpitated with emotion—I looked out from my window.

There stood Josephsohn, above a bonfire that blazed at the foot of the scaffold on which still dangled the body of the burgomaster. Even as he spoke, for the fellow was orating, he held that grisly corpse in one fond arm, he touched it with a reverence that fairly glowed. I could not hear his sermon, but caught stray phrases now and again.

"Brothers," he called them over and over again, "blood of our blood," and then he cried aloud that the Germans, too, loathed the war, were driven to it by centuried hates and superstitions, that the men who marched in the ranks around him had been stolen from their fields, that two wrongs do not make a right, two murders a sanctity. "When

There are many stories of war, but few with the peace motive. War offers plot, intrigue, color, excitement. Peace is supposedly colorless, undramatic, without thrills; it lends itself rather to essay, sermon or poem. Has the peace motive, then, no romance? The attention of our readers is called to the little book of stories recently brought out by the Christian Women's Peace Movement. ..The story here printed is one of the group, and won the prize offered by that organization this year for the best story of peace submitted. .This little volume bears the Christmas Message, the keynote of each story being "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men." you are beaten, don't strike back, my brothers," he cried, "my poor, wronged brothers!" I heard no more. Late at night the red-shirts went home, soberly, quietly, murmuring soft talk as they passed. Their wooden shoes clattered over the cobbles of the pavement, then faded into distance——

I called Josephsohn to my room.

"You have done very well," I said, "and shall have a corporal's place."

"If you please, Captain, I don't wish to be a corporal."

"You prefer to stay with me—I thank you, Josephsohn; but you shall have a decoration."

If you please, Captain, I don't wish a decoration."

"You don't like war, Josephsohn?"

"Thou shalt not kill, is my rule, Honcrable—Sir—and you?"

It was impudent of the man to ask me that, I knew it, but answered:

"Of course I wish war. Killing's my trade and I wish to practice my trade. Besides, how can I gain promotion—show I'm clever and deserve high place—except through war? Do you suppose I wish to stay always a captain? I was a mere lieutenant when the war commenced—was that good? Even if it was endurable—isn't this better, a captain's place, captain's pay?"

"And you would kill—kill men—for promotion, for more wages a week?" His eyes bored me through and I shook myself to answer.

"It isn't that—it's the dead monotony of a garrison town, the doing nothing all day but drill-drill-drill—I can't endure it. Why there was not an intelligent man or a pretty woman in the whole village where I was stationed; I was bored to death. Anything was better."

"And you would kill men in order to escape boredom?"

"But it's the glory, the clangor, the splendor of the deed. Oh, my God! I'd rather die to the shout of trumpets than live to the snort of snores."

"And you'd kill men for the glory of it?"

"You are saucy tonight, my Josephsohn, but you've done well so I'll forgive you. You know they don't feel—these peasants—they grieve as a beast grieves; howl today, laughter tomorrow. The widows will find other husbands, the mothers seek consolation in the beer-halls, the dead are soon dead.

"Oh, fools and slow of heart," he cried, "to believe all that the soul of man has testified! Place and education make no difference in human pain and human tears." It was a queer speech.

He passed out of the room with an exalted look on his lips; it became him well; for indeed he was a handsome beast with those eyes like mausers, tearing right through you, yet dark, pathetic; that aquiline face with its pointed chin, its clustering curls of chestnut. It was always a wonder to me that the fellow, a peasant born from generations of workers on the soil, should have that look of fineness, aristocracy; while I who have descended from ten generations of barons, am squat and swart, huge-handed, clumsy-footed. We were a real little caricature of beauty-and-the-beast, Josephsohn and I. There was even an element of womanliness in him, though he could be stern and stiff enough. It was the womanliness one sees in many big men, Raphael, Goethe, the face of the young Milton and of—Another.

A few days later on I was obliged to speak roughly to the man. We were riding through the little park outside this same Belgian town, he quietly behind me; when I turned on him.

"Josephsohn," I said sternly, "I have been hearing very unpleasant stories about you. Your sub-lieutenant has complained twice, has even brought the matter to the General, who's ordered a rebuke."

"Yes, my Captain."

"You have been promulgating those ridiculous principles of yours concerning peace. Now it's all right if you desire to be a crank in private—we'll say nothing; but you can't be a crank in public. Do you understand?"

"I understand," his face was meekly defiant. He had the stubbornness of a saint and there's nothing so stubborn.

"And you will obey?"

He answered with another question: "What do you think about it—is it best to obey me or God?" He looked me quietly in the eye.

"You are a fool," quoth I wrathfully, for I had begun to feel an intense, personal affection for the man, though I still disliked that—something.

He did not answer, his eyes were elsewhere.

We had come to the ragged edge of the park, where it shelved off into the market-gardens of the Belgians, gardens all gone rank with weeds. A little clump of wine-red beeches raised their bullet-haggled forms just this side of the border and under them was a green sward and a couple of iron benches, for some reason the whole stays vividly impressed on my brain. It was focused. Beneath the trees a girl was wrestling with seven lads, German soldiers. She was a pretty girl in a flaxen-haired, doll-baby sort of way; but her cheeks were painted, her dress grossly immodest, her colors flaring. Everything about her, even the scarlet sunshade she whacked over the solid polls of the men, proclaimed her; she was common, cheap. Why she resisted I could not tell until her shrill voice answered my question. "No—no—no"; she squealed, "you are enemies of my country. No—no—no—!" The men gripped and grabbed her with rough, coarse giggles.

Without waiting for my permission, my orderly was off his mount in a minute. He snatched the head-gearing from his horse and ran towards the woman and her brutes and wooers. Once there he whipped them, thrashed them, whirled that cutting bunch of leather in their faces; the louts withdrew a moment.

"How about peace principles?" roared I, shaking with mirth.

He did not answer; but one of the men slapped a pistol from his pocket and pointed it straight at Josephsohn.

This story will be concluded in next week's issue, and the same number will contain articles by Henry Ford and Ex-President Roosevelt presenting the two sides of the "Preparedness" question.

A PRAYER FOR PEACE.

O LORD, since first the blood of Abel cried to thee from the ground that drank it, this earth of thine has been defiled with the blood of man shed by his brother's hand, and the centuries sob with the ceaseless horror of war. Ever the pride of kings and the covetousness of the strong have driven peaceful nations to slaughter. Ever the songs of the past and the pomp of armies have been used to inflame the passions of the people. Our spirit cries out to thee in revolt against it, and we know that our righteous anger is answered by the holy wrath.

Break thou the spell of the enchantments that make the nations drunk with the lust of battle and draw them on as willing tools of death. Grant us a quiet and steadfast mind when our own nation clamors for vengeance and aggression. Strengthen our sense of justice and our regard for the equal worth of our other peoples and races. Grant to the rulers of nations faith in the possibility of peace through justice and grant to the common people a new and stern enthusiasm for the cause of peace. Bless our soldiers and sailors for their swift obedience and their willingness to answer to the call of duty, but inspire them none the less with a hatred of war, and may they never for love of private glory or advancement provoke its coming. May our young men still rejoice to die for their country with the valor of their fathers, but teach our age nobler methods of matching our strength and more effective ways of giving our life for the flag.

O thou strong Father of all nations, draw all thy great family together with an increasing sense of our common blood and destiny, that peace may come on earth at last, and thy sun may shed its light, rejoicing on a holy brotherhood of peoples.

WALTER RAUSCHENBUSCH.

"Hand over the wrench or I'll shoot," he stormed.

Josephson struck the weapon from his fist with one swish of the reins. The fellow howled as the leather bit home and then, turning, fled. My orderly, a great, stormy figure, drove them out of the garden.

"What's your name?" I asked of the young woman.

"Maddelena, Monsieur," she answered.

I did not like it; in fact, I squirmed. The coincidence was too strange. But as Josephsohn returned, her face lighted, the blood flushed through the paint; she flung herself at the feet of the orderly, kissing his rough shoes over and over again with passionate scarlet lips, twisting her loosened hair into a brush and wiping the dust off from them as she wept and kissed.

"Here, Josephsohn," I tittered, "you're a saint and she's a sinner. You'd better leave her alone."

"She'll go and sin no more," he responded gravely.

"Here, Maddelena," I barked, "that fellow's a German, an enemy of your country—leave off smacking his boots."

"He is not a German," she lifted her eyes and they flashed into mine, "he has no country. He's everybody's brother."

Women are a puzzle.

We came to our first engagement at St. Mihiel and met trouble. Five hundred men refused to fire at the enemy. They entered the trenches, accepted their positions, obeyed their officers with machine-like docility until the order came; then they lowered their guns and stood, patient, rather gentle, but determined. They were ordered out of the trenches at nightfall; the battle had not swung visibly our way. The General called a council of his officers.

Into this council crept a man named Jude, a sergeant, the creature who had at first informed on my orderly. He had been raised a notch for that office; but we all disliked him, for there are spies honorable and spies dishonorable, the glory of the one equaling the shame of the other. He was ready to tell it all.

"Josephsohn has preached peace everywhere." he smirked. "He has told the men that the only way to stop this war is for all soldiers to lay down their arms, says openly that there are proselyters going in and out of the French and English armies, calling for peace, bidding the men to refuse to fire. He has preached it at the mess, he has preached it on the march, he has talked it in private, he has proclaimed it in public. Even one or two of the officers have visited him at night to hear him talk. He's some talker, Josephsohn."

We ordered the man before us. He came calmly, serenely; but he made no answer to our questions. I tried it, then the Major, then the General; he was hounded from tent to tent, from officer to officer—still he answered nothing. So we sent for the chaplain of the regiment, Josephsohn was awfully religious. The chaplain berated him—he answered never a word.

A cry arose among the young officers, the recent graduates of the military academies, "Shoot him!"

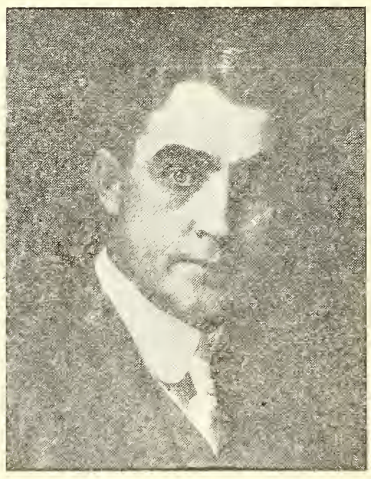
The Meditations of a Pastor

By George A. Campbell.

I HAVE re-read with some care the Convention Sermon of Perry J. Rice, delivered at Los Angeles. It is an honor to be asked to preach the outstanding sermon at one of our national gatherings. If thirty years mark a generation, only thirty ministers could be honored as convention speakers in a generation. I forget how many preachers we have, but some thousands would never have the opportunity.

Now when an invitation comes to a minister to give the annual sermonic message he must be overwhelmed by the sense of responsibility, and be humbled by the sense of the task imposed upon him. In some degree he must realize that he is to speak for the whole brotherhood. It is to be his to interpret the divine Word as he is working in individual hearts and in the communal life of today. His subject and field of choice is very wide. He will choose that word which he considers most important. His very choice therefore becomes interesting and revealing.



Rev. George A. Campbell, Hannibal, Mo.

The human mind develops. It is constantly, if alive at all, gathering, sifting, refusing, accepting, forming conclusions. There are often great surprises. The individual mind often seems to break with itself. R. J. Campbell's conclusions of today as he goes to the established church seem radically different from those he reached when he was the leader of the New Theology movement in England. One never knows whether the friend of other years is going to be the same man intellectually or spiritually when one meets him after intervening years. Some go forward in a straight line of progress, some turn at certain angles, others right about face. Nor do enthusiasms always remain the same or continue in the same degree.

Consequently it is romantically interesting to read a word on the meaning of life from a friend who has been somewhat obscured from you by separating miles and years. You open the page and you say: I am about to learn how the universe has dealt with my friend, how he has dealt with the universe; I will see his soul in his words; if he has become a cynic I will discover it; if he has had his enthusiasm burned out, his words will disclose the fact. Have there been battles? the scars will be impressed in his sentence; is he still exultingly believing? his words will be shouts of triumph. Words are holy symbols of the inner soul.

Mr. Rice's sermon reveals the fact that he moves forward in a straight line. There has been no break in his life or his thought. Even the form of his word has not materially changed in twenty years. He thinks in brief sentences, not in pictures. His style is that of the essay, not of the orator. In writing his sermons he chooses sentences that will do his subject justice rather than make it easier for the uninterested to be wooed to give attention. Mr. Rice was not speaking at Los Angeles to the uninterested; but I am not sure he was speaking to those who listen with ease. Most preachers are restless auditors. I find myself when listening to most preachers wondering why they preach so long.

Mr. Rice in the form of his sermon is typical of our age. Sermons are more direct, and less ornate, than they used to be. And for good or ill they are less emotional. I doubt not that Mr. Rice has worn the same color and same general style of clothes for a quarter of a century. He is a conservative—progressive. He moves consistently forward.

There is one short poem quoted in the Convention Sermon; but I would think that Mr. Rice never formed the habit of reading much poetry. He is too direct, too business-like, too immediate a descendant from our propositional fathers for much poetry.

As to the message, it is one of faith. It is a plea for true, discerning intimate, vital discipleship. Are there great wrongs in the world? Is there slackness of faith? Is there despair in many hearts? Is there separation of church and labor? Is there separation between Christ and his professed followers? Is a crude militarism dominating civilization? Is there dogmatism instead of vital communion? Of these or other evils the cure is to be found in a more intelligent discipleship of our Lord. He must become supreme.

This is an old, old plea that has sounded down through the ages. John voiced it. Polycarp was burned because he professed it, as were Huss and many others. Luther based his reformation upon it. Wesley and Campbell heralded it forth. Mr. Rice is thus in the true apostolic succession.

He gives his message in a very well-balanced way. This preacher of the Convention Sermon could scarcely be a leader of a party. His mind is too judicial, too inclusive. Mark some of his complementary statements Discipleship must be intellectual: but also spiritual. We must go back to Christ, back beyond all intervening disciples, but we we must also go forward with him. Christianity in its essence is the same: but at the same time it is ever unfolding, ever progressive. We must go back to the Gospels: but Christianity is not a creed, not formal: it is a spirit. It is both gentle and heroic.

Here is the essence of the sermon: "To see things as Jesus saw them, to feel about them as he felt." To bring Christians up to this standard is a mammoth task.

There are marks of scars in certain sentences. The author was conscious of battles when he wrote, "Christianity is not a creed, but spirit." This sen-

UZZIAH'S PRIDE AND PUNISHMENT.

Lesson for December 5.

Golden Text: A man's pride shall bring him low; but he that is of a lowly spirit shall obtain honor. Proverbs 29:23.

Lesson II Chronicles 26; verses 8-10, 15-21 printed. Memorize verse 16.

(8) And the Ammonites gave tribute to Uzziah: and his name spread abroad even to the entrance of Egypt; for he waxed exceeding strong. (9) Moreover Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem at the corner gate, and at the valley gate, and at the turning of the wall, and fortified them. (10) And he built towers in the wilderness, and hewed out many cisterns, for he had much cattle; in the lowland also, and in the plain: and he had husbandmen and vinedressers in the mountains and in the fruitful fields; for he loved husbandry.

(15) And he made in Jerusalem engines, invented by skilful men, to be on the towers and upon the battlements wherewith to shoot arrows and great stones. And his name spread far abroad; for he was marvelously helped, till he was strong.

(16) But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up, so that he did corruptly, and he trespassed against Jehovah his God; for he went into the temple of Jehovah to burn incense upon the altar of incense. (17) and Azariah the priest went in after him, and with him fourscore priests of Jehovah, that were valiant men. (18) and they withstood Uzziah the king, and said unto him, It pertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto Jehovah, but to the priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be for thine honor from Jehovah God. (19) Then Uzziah was wroth: and he had a censer in his hand to burn incense; and while he was wroth with the priests, the leprosy brake forth in his forehead before the priests in the house of Jehovah beside the altar of incense. (20) And Azariah the chief priest, and all the priests, looked upon him, and, behold, he was leprous in his forehead, and they thrust him out quickly from thence; yea, himself hasted also to go out, because Jehovah had smitten him. (21) And Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a separate house, being a leper; for he was cut off from the house of Jehovah: and Jotham his son was over the king's house, judging the people of the land.

VERSE BY VERSE.

8. The Ammonites. If this is the correct reading the Ammonites lived East of the Jordan and North of the river. Arnon.—Gave tribute to Uzziah. It is the action of an inferior acknowledging the superiority of another.—Uzziah. Uzziah is called Azariah in the Kings.—His name spread abroad. That is, his fame or better still his power.—Entrance of Egypt. This marks the breadth of the land, and describes the breadth of Uzziah's influence.—Waxed exceeding strong. His success met with more good fortune. "There is nothing succeeds like success." Nothing so dangerous, either!

9. Built towers in Jerusalem. These were for defense.—The corner gate. The northwest corner of the wall.—The valley gate. On the west of the city at or near the Jaffa gate.

10. Built towers in wilderness. These were for the protection of his flocks in the pasture land of Judah.—Cisterns. The Hebrew word may mean wells. It was a place where the flocks secured water.—Lowlands. The stretch of low hills between the Maritime Plain and the central range.—The plain. Or, tableland. RVm. East of the Dead Sea and the Jordan valley.—Fruitful fields. Or, Carmel, RVm.—He loved husbandry. He enjoyed farming, the care of the fields and flocks.

15 Read verses 11-14. Engines. Machines for throwing arrows and stones. It resembled the Roman catapult and ballista.—Skilful men. Good workmen. Battlements. Literally, corners.

16. His heart was lifted up. His heart was filled with pride. So that he did corruptly. Or, to his destruction.—He trespassed against Jehovah. He did not have the proper regard for holy things. He went into the temple to burn incense upon the altar of incense. It was not lawful for any one not a priest to go into the Holy of Holies. See Numbers 18.:7.

17. Azariah, the priest. That is the high priest. Valiant men. Powerful men, men of courage. These may have been the regular priests of the temple.

18. Withstood. Opposed the king in his wrong doing.—It pertaineth not unto thee. This is none of your business, and therefore is not proper for you.—The right belongs to the priests of Aaron, see Ex. 30:7, 8.—Neither shall it be for thine honor. Rather it shall be for thy dishonor, for it is a trespass.

19. Uzziah was wroth. His wroth was perfectly natural; for few men have grace enough to keep their temper under reproof.—Leprosy brake forth. This is not without its spiritual significance, for often men's rebellion at merited reproof has blighted their future lives. Fits of anger have severed connections never again repaired.

20. They thrust him out quickly. He was now unclean according to the law, so they urged him out quickly. They were horror-stricken at such happenings. Jehovah had smitten him. This is adapted from 2 Kings 15:5-7, which is here taken up. Anything out of the ordinary was an act of Jehovah in the early day.

21. Dwelt in a separate house. The king as a leper kept to himself and retired from royal functions. He may have been deposed from the throne.—Jotham, his son, was over the king's house. It seems probable that Jotham exercised a regency during the last eleven years of his father's life. He reigned as king after his father's death about four or five years. The historians represent him in a favorable light.

The Prosperous King

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

Under the youthful hand of the young king Judah had reached a state of prosperity not attained since the palmy days of Solomon. Success crowned success until his fame spread far and near. He became popular and strong with his people, and used his power for their good and the glory of his nation. His devotion to Jehovah, and the honor of the prophets gave him power with the deeply religious people of Judah.

The danger point was reached when he became possessed with ideas of his own importance. Success proved too much for him. He fell beneath its force. In an evil hour he forgot that though he was king he owed allegiance to a greater king.

It has ever been thus; men become intoxicated with success until their higher selves are dead to the appreciation of the higher values of life. God is neglected and man is disregarded, in their mad rush for the goal of their ambitions. At this point they become unsocial and disregard the fact that they are offering their lives as sacrifices to a law of selfishness that Jehovah never commanded, and the leprosy of society's disapproval is upon them. They live in a house by themselves the rest of their days.

We shall appreciate the lesson more if we note some of the things Uzziah had to disregard before he could resolve to enter upon his sinful course. He had to disregard the direct commandment of Jehovah. He had to ignore the long and wonderful history of his people. He had to reject the teaching of his childhood. He had to discredit the source of his own successful career. He had to defy and disobey one of the clearest precepts of the Mosaic law. All of this the young king spurned when his heart became filled with pride. His eyes were closed to the real issues of life, and the fall was inevitable.

The lesson for us is plain, namely that we should cherish and obey the values that Uzziah disregarded, and make our lives sublime. Professor Huxley tells us that "in the soil of England there lie buried tropical seeds in bewildering variety. They have been brought by birds, by winds, by many agencies. Some have fallen into your garden, and some into mine. There they lie deeply buried, these tropical potencies, waiting for what? For a tropical atmosphere. If for twelve months we could have in this country tropical heat we should be amazed by the coming out of strange seeds, and our little gardens would bloom with tropical luxuriance." Powers which we have never conceived, lie buried in your life and mine waiting for their proper atmosphere. Our lives are too cold, and so the seeds are sleeping through the long winter. But if the heart of heaven could come in benediction upon us these powers would come from their graves with all their tropical beauty, and we should be amazed to see how rich we are in Christ Jesus our Lord, who has lived the life of unselfishness he expects, and will help us, to live.

William George Jordan says that the great test of individual character is not struggle, but achievement; not failure but success; not adversity but prosperity. When nature wants to put a man through the third degree, she places near him his laurel wreaths of victory: she megaphones to him the world's plaudits of success, she clinks his money-bags in his ears, and she tells him confidentially of the world-changing power of his influence. Then she sends him for his test through the dark valley of prosperity.

It is called the dark valley of prosperity because it so often dims the vision of the finer realities of life. In the early stages, in the dimness, they can not see their friends as they pass. They fail to extend the hand to some one no longer necessary to them. They acquire a form of memory impairment which prevents them remembering past favors and debts of gratitude due to those who stood by them in their hours of need. Their life story recalls Cowper's lines:

"Beware of too sublime a sense
Of your own worth and consequence.
The man who deems himself so great,
And his importance of such weight,
That all around, in all that's done,
Must move and act for him alone,
Will learn, in school of tribulation,
The folly of his expectation."

CLASSIFYING THE DISCIPLES

SHOULD the Disciples of Christ be classified as a conservative or a liberal people? Of course, they have to be classified! How could the world get along without the party titles with which the many types of thought are distinguished? And whether we Disciples wish it or not others are bound to classify us, though we may be unwilling to do so ourselves.

Here is a reference to the Disciples in a religious newspaper which groups them with a number of the smaller sects known for certain doctrinal hobbies and for a very provincial interpretation of the Bible. Any Disciple who knows the history of his people and the A, B, C of their ideals must resent any such classification.

A letter lies before us in which the writer makes this statement: "Of course we all known that the Disciples are a very conservative people." That probably is the general opinion outside our own brotherhood. It is probably based upon a single bit of data more than upon all other considerations combined. When the religious world thinks of the Disciples it thinks of baptism by immersion. It doesn't think of Christian unity nor of Christian liberty, nor of a free scholarly interpretation of the Bible, nor of a distinctive enthronement of Christ.

All these things which bulk large in our own thought of ourselves seem to be eclipsed in others' thought of us by the single fact that we practice immersion and insist upon rebaptizing other Christians before they may have fellowship in our churches.

It is not difficult to understand how this outside conception has come to prevail. It is, no doubt, mainly due to two things: First, the feeling of inconsistency between such a practice of rebaptism and our talk about Christian unity, and second, the fact that Alexander Campbell was so conspicuous a champion of the immersionist position.

The general Christian world can hardly imagine that behind this rebaptism practice there exists a genuinely liberal and modern feeling for religion. But the fact is that if one can forget this sectarian and provincial practice one will find the Disciples in the very vanguard of progress.

Their ministers are more nearly free-lances than the ministers of any other religous body in America. They are deeply imbued with the social spirit of the age, and are less disturbed, taken as a whole, by the developments of scientific inquiry both in nature and in the Bible than any other evangelical group of religious leaders, allowing for only one or two exceptions.

It is purely a historical accident that a reactionary movement has organized itself among the Disciples. The reaction does not spring either out of our principles or traditions. It springs out of the commercialization of an influential newspaper and publishing plant which found that its material interest could best be advanced by a policy of exploitation and that a policy of exploitation was possible —not among Disciples alone, but in any social group—on a basis of conservative reaction and not on a platform of progress.

But in their instinctive attitudes the Disciples are not a conservative people, in the sense in which that term is usually applied.

They are in their own consciousness and by their main traditions a free people, with a passion for progress and a desire to have fellowship with all free and progressive souls.

THE LOST LEADER

WITHOUT taking sides in the pacifist-preparedness controversy we cannot refrain from registering the sense of loss felt by many men of moral insight that President Wilson has so completely surrendered to political exigency and gone over to the camp of the militarists.

It is true his militarism is not as militant as that of some others, but it does not on that account escape whatever condemnation the logic of militarism invites.

Mr. Wilson would have been an ideal leader of the peace movement. And that movement needs, sadly needs, a commanding voice to speak for it at the center of political power. The President made the nation feel by his earlier utterances that he had come to his place of political leadership in the providence of God to be the mouthpiece of this new ideal in national life—a Christian ideal that had never been seriously acted upon in the history of the world. His utterances about being "too proud to fight," and deploring the possibility of our citizenry being fired with the war spirit and organized into a general training camp, together with his patient handling of our foreign relations, guiding the nation through the most precarious and trying situations by admirable diplomatic skill, made it logical that his candidacy for re-election should be based upon the principles of peace, not upon the policy of preparedness for war.

We believe there are multitudes of citizens whose minds are unconvinced on the issues now raised, whose chief desire it is that both sides should have interpreters of the utmost competency, and who feel that Mr. Wilson could have given to the pacifist cause such an interpretation as no other leader now in the field can give.

Writers like Norman Angell and lecturers like David Starr Jordan have their important place, but they labor under the disadvantage of speaking from the margin and not from the center. Their utterances touch the few, but carry no such weight as would the words of the nation's leader.

Mr. Bryan, it is true, speaks a courageous and in many ways a convincing and illuminating word. He is the popular leader of the pacifist ideal in the nation today, and probably will continue to be such during the campaign.

But Mr. Bryan's message has its limitations. There are many who regard him with impatience. He does not impress the more sophisticated portion of our citizenship with having thought through and all around such an issue as this of which he is so successful an evangelist. Mr. Bryan's opinions have usually proved to be right—we grant that—but ofttimes the reasons he gives in support of them suggest that his mind is parochial and more or less naive.

A cause like that of pacifism needs a thoroughly sophisticated interpreter, a man who could match the clever mind of, say, Elihu Root.

Mr. Wilson has such a mind. He could have fought a great fight on a pacifist platform. His interpretation would have immeasurably forwarded the moral thinking of the nation.

The interested bystander whose mind is not yet made up, but who is now weighing the pros and cons of peace and war cannot suppress a regret that the President has surrendered his leadership.

POLITICIANS AND HIGHER CRITICS

IT IS a decidedly entertaining spectacle afforded by Mr. Bryan and President Wilson who are engaged in hurling the Old Testament prophets at each other. Mr. Bryan chooses Isaiah and Mr. Wilson answers with Ezekiel. Whereupon Mr. Bryan flees to cover under the New Testament, declaring that we are not now living under the dispensation of the prophets but under the dispensation of Christ.

The war-and-peace issue which our nation is facing promises to tear the Bible to tatters. Text is being arranged against text, and inspired writer against inspired writer. The untutored onlooker cannot help wondering what kind of a book this Bible is, anyhow, that its teachings can be made to support both sides of a moral question like the one everybody is now thinking about. It is probable the Bible will figure more prominently in the campaign next year than in any political campaign since the election of Lincoln. At that time the Scriptures were arrayed on both sides of the slavery question, just as they are now being arrayed on both sides of the preparedness question.

Fortunately, we of today are able to take the matter more calmly than did the religious leaders of 1860.

The higher critics—better called historical critics—have given us a principle of discrimination within the Bible by which we may be saved from the confusion of mind and heart to which the Bible's apparent ambiguity subjects us. It is now held that it is not necessary to "reconcile" one Biblical writer with another as to the content of their respective teachings. It is generally recognized among informed students that any such superficial "reconciliation" is impossible. Each Bible writer was as individual as men are today.

The four questions which Alexander Campbell, pioneer higher critic of American Christianity, insisted must be answered before an interpretation of a given portion of Scripture could hope to be satisfactory, are commended to Messrs. Wilson and Bryan in their Biblical discussion. The questions are these: In this passage of Scripture who is speaking? When is he speaking? To whom is he speaking? And under what circumstances?

These questions outline the method of historical criticism, and we would urge all statesmen and politicians to take a few elementary lessons from these much maligned higher critics before appealing to the Bible for the support of either side of the preparedness argument.

FAITH AT FORTY

WITH all the emphasis laid upon the religious training of childhood and with the church turning its efforts more and more toward the Sunday-school, there is a very real danger that our religious leaders will lose sight of their duty to adult life.

The assumption is quite general that the habit-forming period of adolesence is the most critical in the span of a life-time, but it is doubtful if it is any more critical than the stage of experience marked by the fortieth milestone.

At forty one has reached the middle of life. One begins for the first time to grasp the fact that there is a limit to one's possibilities. Youth dreams and projects high enterprises, never doubting that they can be and will be realized.

Moreover, youth tends to make an exception of itself. It learns little from the mistakes of others. It is not daunted by the failures it sees along the way. Somehow it feels that it is bound to succeed, no matter how others have failed—and to succeed extraordinarily.

But at forty this exuberant assurance has suffered many inhibitions. A man of forty is at the point of settling down to the notion that he is not such an exception, after all, that he is just one of the ordinary run of men, not a major general but a private soldier in the ranks.

This conclusion is, on the whole, a normal and healthful one for a man to reach. But there is a peril in it. It is the peril of disillusionment, leading to cynicism. Gladly and humbly to accept one's place in God's providential order, whatever place God through the development of events has assigned to one, is a normal and Christian achievement. It blesses the soul.

But bitterly and stubbornly to kick against the goad of humble circumstance is to bring down bane and tragedy upon the soul.

Yet there are, alas, so many who enter their forties with bitterness in their hearts. Where the earlier dreams reigned there is now disenchantment. Where there was once faith and simple love there is now cynicism.

Such a soul, compelled outwardly to effect an adjustmnt to stern reality, strives to make a home for its inner self on the level of unsympathetic and smart transcendentalism. Faith is gone, romance is gone, the love of simple ingenuousness is gone. Other men's motives are interpreted in terms of self-interest. The possibility of unselfish love is scorned.

Can there be a worse tragedy than this?

Religious leaders who have learned to keep their own souls simple have no more serious task than that of guiding the men and women of their flocks who have passed forty straight into the quietness and trustfulness, the simplicity and idealism which this adult "adolescent" period imperils.

CHURCH AND ITS CRITICS

commentary on the superficial character of Christendom's Christianity.

Let us not mince words. And above all let us not mince our ideas. Every wrong in the world is the Church's failure. Every unsaved soul, every unsaved state, every unsaved factory system, every unsaved political regime—every evil custom that stunts childhood, that oppresses womanhood, that gives unearned privileges to a portion of mankind and denies earned privileges to another portion, that robs any man or woman of the chance to have food and air and light and leisure and fellowship and culture and vision—every evil thing in the world registers the failure of the Church of Christ to do what its Lord set it in the world to do.

Why, then, resent it when the critics criticize?

Why not rather bow the head in acknowledgment of the Church's Christian guilt?

Not until the Church is willing to acknowledge its guilty share in every individual and social wrong will it be able to find the sources of power and grace whereby to cure and redeem the world and usher in God's kingdom.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Memorial of Henry Ward Beecher.

The friends of Henry Ward Beecher are raising a fund of fifty thousand dollars to endow a Beecher chair in Talladega College in Alabama under Methodist auspices. Mr. Beecher was not an abolitionist but he was a foe of slavery. His attitude on the negro question is now remembered by many as being eminently sane and moderate.

Methodists Dedicate Orphanage Building.

Twenty-one years ago the Methodist deaconesses started an orphanage at Lake Bluff, Ill., north of Chicago. The orphanage now has seven buildings and has under its care 150 children. Bishop McDowell assisted in the dedication of the seventh building recently. There is talk of a movement to provide $100,000 in endowment.

Shakers About to Disappear.

The United Brethren people are taking care of the last remnants of the Shaker denomination. Some of the surviving members are being cared for at Otterbein Home. There are now thirteen of the sect left. Eldress Mary is the official head of the movement. This denomination was named on account of its quietistic experiences and at one time was much maligned, though often without due regard for fact.

Methodists Face Problem of Comity.

The Methodists north and south have a problem of comity in connection with the proposal to erect a fine new church building at Atlanta, Ga. The new building would house three congregations which are now in inadequate buildings. This has been objected to by southern Methodists as an invasion of their proper territory. Some northern Methodists refuse to conceive of themselves as a sectional church and demand the right to work anywhere in the United States. In a few days the General Committee on Home Missions and Church Extension will take cognizance of the case again. It seems at this time impossible to prophesy the outcome.

Baptists Would Help Old Ministers.

Dr. Tomlinson, the executive secretary of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board of the northern Baptist denomination is now busy at the task of securing $125,000 in order to claim a fifty thousand dollar gift from an unnamed donor. In case this effort succeeds, there will be a total of $650,000 in the fund. In view of the $10,000,000 proposed for the Presbyterians and the $12,000,000 for the Methodists, the Baptists are insisting that the money they have raised to date shall be considered only a beginning.

A Methodist Mayor for London.

The non-conformist element in England is nearly one-half of the religious population of the country. The men of this persuasion are in official relationships in England in many ways. The new mayor of London is Sir Charles Wakefield and he is one of the most prominent Wesleyans of England. He is said to be the first Wesleyan mayor for London since the incumbency of Sir William MacArthur in 1881.

University Preachers at Harvard.

The university preachers at Harvard University continue to be chosen from the various denominations. Among the Baptists announced for service there this academic year are Prof. Harry Emerson Fosdick, and Rev. C. W. Gilkey, pastor of Hyde Park Baptist church of Chicago.

The Interpretation of the Apocalypse.

Religious journals are not always serious, and the Baptists are indulging in a facetious reference to the interpretation of the apocalypse being propagated by certain religious people. It is found that the distance from Saginaw to Chicago is the same as the phone number of the Morgan Park pastor and this is the same as the number of the beast in the book of Revelation. This is humorously represented as of deep and mysterious import.

Largest Y. M. C. A. in World Opened.

The largest Y. M. C. A. in the world was dedicated Oct. 31 in Brooklyn. This is the new Central branch, which will be known as the Clarence E. Smith Memorial, in memory of the son of Mrs. William Van Rensellaer Smith. Mrs. Smith, who has been the principal donor, has given $500,000 of the $1,600,00 which the plant cost. John R. Mott and Lyman Abbott delivered the dedicatory addresses.

The Y. M. C. A. Wins 5,424 New Members.

On October 11 the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago started out to increase its total membership to 20,000 and to bring in 5,000 new members. It fixed the goal for accomplishment of this for one week. The time was extended to two weeks. In that time goals were surpassed. The number of new members secured was 5,424 and the total reached 20,702. This puts Chicago ahead of New York in membership, and places it in the front rank of Associations in the entire world. The campaign, of course, did more than simply gather new members. It advertised the work as nothing else could have done. Almost every available man was personally spoken to. Good-natured rivalry spurred to the most self-sacrificing endeavor. The team work brought a spirit of unity. Five years ago a money campaign was carried on and $350,000 was secured within about ten days' canvass. It was the culmination of the campaign for $1,000,000, the $750,000 having been secured previously by quiet work extending over a longer period of time. The whirlwind campaign for the $350,000 waked up the whole city. These two successful, spectacular achievements are giving wonderful efficiency to the organization.

New Leader in Christian Endeavor.

Dr. Ira Landrith was a favorite at the recent World Christian Endeavor convention. Now comes the announcement that he is to assume official relationship to the movement as extension secretary of the United Society and the editor afield of the Christian Endeavor World. He will go everywhere but will specialize in his own southland. Dr. Landrith was once a Cumberland Presbyterian and was prominent in the movement which united his denomination with the older Presbyterian body. He is also favorably known as an educator and as a familiar figure in the councils of the Religious Education Association.

Russian Methodists Publish Paper.

The Russians of New York are largely under the influence of a revolutionary press. On the east side is a Methodist known as Pastor Hecker who is a doctor of philosophy and a leader of more constructive thought among his people. Realizing the need of a better interpretation of America for his people, he has started a newspaper called Prosveschcheniye. This name means in the Russian tongue, "Enlightenment." It is a monthly paper and will be largely subsidized by Methodists over the country.

Baptists Make Progress in Spain.

There is only one Baptist congregation in the interior of Spain and that is in the city of Madrid. There have been forty-three converts baptized in four months' time in that city. The work in that city is being supported by Swedish Baptists of Chicago and their friends.

Dr. Clark Tells of Illness.

Dr. Francis E. Clark, president of the World C. E. Society, is recovering nicely from a severe attack of typhoid fever. In a recent article in a Congregational paper he tells how it feels to have typhoid and speaks of the compensations of illness in a feeling and Christian way.

Book on Methodist Reunion.

Bishop Neely has recently written a book on "American Methodism—its Divisions and Unifications." The book treats of more than twenty Methodist denominations, showing how they sprang from the parent body. The book also treats of the work of bringing these bodies back into fellowship with each other.

Laymen's Missionary Movement Reaches Boston.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement will take possession of Boston, Nov. 14-17. There will be a notable list of speakers. Among these will be J. Campbell White; Bishop Kinsolving of South America; Rev. James P. McNaughton who comes from a Turkish prison; and a number of other eminent missionary speakers.

Catholic Prelate Forbids Church Gambling.

Few practices in the Roman Catholic churches in this country have more outraged the conscience of non-Catholics than the use of gambling devices at church fairs, often clearly in opposition to state laws. Bishop O'Connor of Newark, New Jersey, has forbidden the sale of chances in his diocese.

MEDITATIONS OF A PASTOR.

tence grew out of the feeling that some were emphasizing too much creed side; and so he wrote a battle sentence. Apart from all controversy, the fact is that Christianity is both a creed and spirit. Mr. Rice writes elsewhere in the sermon: "Christian discipleship is first of all an intellectual attitude." Here is another battle sentence that reveals a scar—(I do not object to the scar; life is enriched and ennobled by its scars)—"Better a thousand times that we should hold our convictions a little less confidently than that we should lash our brothers to the rack and turn the screws, or to the stake and light the fagots. Better far that we should have no crusaders than that we should leave behind them a trail of blood and war or broken spirits."

No crusaders! What would life be without crusades? That strong, militant sentence is the emphasis of suffering. Once, Mr. Rice would not have known its truth nor thought of writing it. Many preachers will not be able to weigh its meaning. The sentence itself is a crusading sentence. Life, perchance, in its deepest values is to be found in the wreckage of the crusades Mr. Rice would not want less conviction. His whole sermon is a plea for stronger conviction, but he wants conviction to be rooted in love. He wants Christian conviction.

Still, it is not in ease, not in freedom from the critic or the opposer that spirituality is gained. Perhaps we seek too much the untroubled path. God seems to be able to reach us best when others misunderstand.

Mr. Rice has moved forward in a straight line. He has not given up the cause. He has not turned his back upon his soul's early faith. He has not switched to another fellowship. He gives confidence in his intellectual and spiritual integrity. The sermon reveals his awareness of this time of stress and storm. The cure for the world's bleeding, in his mind, is the same as that for the sin of the little Ohio village in which he first preached. But while he has moved in one direction he has gone deeper in his fellowship with Christ. There is a greater spiritual hunger. Things, organizations, churches, do not have proportionately as large a place in his mind as once they did. He now wants God. A deep spiritual note characterizes the whole sermon.

Out of the midst of past years comes this word of a friend who used to talk with me about the things of God; and that word is a prayer, a vision, a cry for a closer communion with God. My soul is steadied. I take new heart. If another has seen God's face, has felt him, has talked with him "as a friend talks with a friend," why not I, why not every preacher in the fellowship of Christ?

President Faunce of Brown University

Expresses his estimate of

"THE MEANING OF BAPTISM"

by Charles Clayton Morrison

Dear Dr. Morrison

I have read with the greatest pleasure and profit your little book entitled, "The Meaning of Baptism." Your argument is in the main sound and adequate.

You probably know that many of the leading Baptist clergymen in America have moved out from the old legalistic point of view and will never return to it. Our recent union with the Free Baptists is one factor in this change in the point of view.

Your protest against re-baptism will find echo in many places. Some of our strongest Baptist churches while teaching the beauty and desirability of the original form of baptism, now receive members of Pedo-baptist churches without re-baptism into associate membership. This, of course, is a sort of half-way house, in which we cannot rest. We are all moving onward, and it is interesting to see the steps which different leaders take. Your book will help many of varied views and positions.

Sincerely yours,

W. H. P. FAUNCE.

LET SOMETHING GOOD BE SAID.

When over the fair fame of friend or foe
The shadow of disgrace shall fall, instead
Of words of blame, or proof of thus and so,
Let something good be said.

Forget not that no fellow being yet
May fall so low but love may lift his head,
Even the cheek of shame with tears is wet
If something good be said.

No generous heart may vainly turn aside
In ways of sympathy, no soul so dead
But may awaken strong and glorified,
If something good be said.

And so I charge you, by the thorny crown,
And by the cross on which the Savior bled,
And by your own soul's hope of fair renown,
Let something good be said.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes wish to study the life of Jesus this year. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

Charleston, Ill., Church to Celebrate Seventy-Fifth Anniversary.

Since its organization, in 1840, the Charleston, Ill., congregation has had three homes. Among its preachers have been such men as B. B. Tyler and O. A. Burgess. Among recent leaders are F. W. Burnham, W. F. Shaw and Geo. H. Brown. John McD. Horne is the present pastor. The anniversary preachers will be Newell Dwight Hillis of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Stephen E. Fisher of Champaign, Ill., and J. Boyd Jones, of Terre Haute. November 21-26 is the date set for the anniversary services. An unique feature will be a series of educational addresses by Prof. W. S. Athearn, of Drake University.

$20,000 Educational Endowment for First Church, Norfolk, Va.

At a meeting of the men of First church, Norfolk, Va., Charles M. Watson, pastor, J. Frank East made the announcement in behalf of himself and his brother, W. B. East, of the gift of $20,000 for missions and education. This gift has been placed in the hands of the trustees of the congregation and the interest it earns is to be used regularly for missions and education. On October 17, First church celebrated its first anniversary in the new building.

Twenty-thousand Dollar Bequest to Bethany College

President Cramblet has announced the receipt of a letter from the safe deposit and trust company, of Baltimore, Md., informing him that the late Mr. Jas. M. Beall, of that city, who died October 18, 1915, left the following provision in his will: "To Bethany College, at Bethany, Brooke County, West Virginia, twenty thousand dollars; the income to be used for the purposes of the college, and this fund to be known as the Wilson Beall Endowment, in memory of my father."

Men's Bible Classes Erect Tabernacle in a Day.

Thirty-nine men and boys were the building force on the new chapel-tabernacle erected by the two Men's Bible-classes of First church, Moline, Ill., two weeks ago. Every detail with the exception of the wiring and the plumbing was finished on the building by 6 o'clock Saturday night and the finishing touches were put on on Monday morning. A Moline contractor supervised the job while Rev. James A. Barnett acted as his assistant. The structure is 50x70 feet and will seat about eight hundred persons.

Vachel Lindsay Receives $200 Poetry Prize.

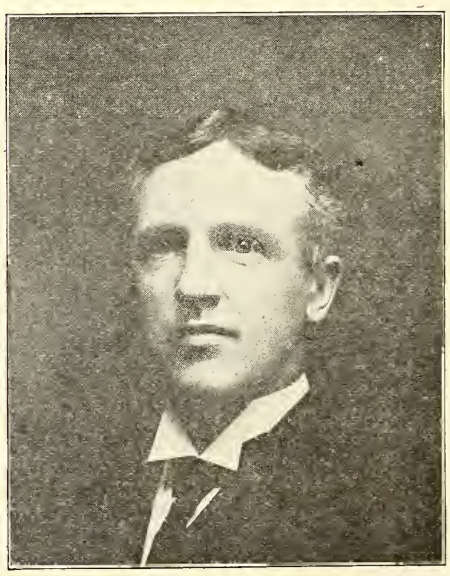
"Poetry," the magazine of verse, published in Chicago, offers prizes each year for the best poems printed during the year in its pages. This year the Helen Haire Levinson prize of $200 was awarded to Vachel Lindsay, of Springfield, Ill. The prize winning poem is entitled, "The Chinese Nightingale."

Clifford G. Roe Appointed to Influential Post in Chicago City Hall.

Clifford G. Roe, president of the American Bureau of Moral Education, implacable foe of the white slave traffic and crusader against vice in all its forms, was appointed assistant corporation counsel last week by Corporation Counsel Samuel A. Ettelson, who recently stepped into this important position. Mr. Roe is a Disciple, being a member of the Hyde Park church. Mr. Roe has convicted more white slavers than any other man in America. So prominent was his work that in 1911 John D. Rockefeller, Jr., engaged his services as attorney to aid in the organization of a similar work in New York. One year later Mr. Roe became counsel of the American Vigilance Association a national organization backed by the leading men and women of this country. He resigned this position two years ago to take up again his private practice of law. Through his legal work and lectures Mr. Roe has become widely known in Chicago. He is a member of the University Club, City Club, Quadrangle Club and the Chicago Bar Association, and is the author of several successful books, namely, "The Prodigal Daughter," "The Great War on White Slavery," "The Prosecutor" and "The Girl Who Disappeared."

Carrie Jacobs-Bond, Composer, Visits Lincoln, Neb., Church.

There is probably no American songwriter more beloved by the people than Carrie Jacobs-Bond, of Chicago. Mrs. Bond has been secured by First church, Lincoln, Neb., to give a concert there Nov. 22. The Chicago composer came to Lincoln last January in a blizzard, but in spite of storms, snow-drifts and intense cold, an audience of over 900 greeted her.



Rev. C. M. Watson, of First church, Norfolk, Va., who is rejoicing in a gift of $20,000 recently made to his work as an endowment for religious educational purposes.

Champ Clark Gives $1,000 for Church.

Speaker Champ Clark of the National House of Representatives, subscribed $1,000 for the rebuilding of the church at Bowling Breen, Mo., which was burned down a few days ago. Mr. Clark has been an elder in this church for thirty years.

Pomona, Cal., Has New Cure for Drunkenness.

Sermon and Sunday-school lessons in weekly doses are to replace the Keeley cure plan in the effort of Judge Mason, of Pomona, Cal., and C. R. Hudson, pastor of the church there, to aid one Frank Moore, of that city, to lose his taste for intoxicants and lead a better life. Moore was sentenced by Judge Mason in the police court a few days ago to attend the Christian church Sunday-school each Sunday morning and the regular evening service each week for one year. He had his choice of this or a jail sentence. If he misses a Sunday service except through illness, he must go to jail.

A Word from Transylvania College.

The Secretary of Transylvania College asks the "Century" to announce to its readers that the title of this institution has been changed from Transylvania University to Transylvania College, this action being taken at the last meeting of the Board of Curators, June 9.

Kimberlin Heights Loses College Buildings by Fire.

W. H. Book, pastor of the Tabernacle church, Columbus, is in receipt of a telegram telling of a fire that destroyed most of the buildings of the college at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. This school has been largely supported through contributions made by members of the Tabernacle church and some of the students for the ministry now attending it are from Columbus.

Oklahoma City Church Proves Itself Liberal.

The First church of Oklahoma City, Okla., aside from carrying a loan of $60,000, provides a budget of $10,000 besides supporting two Living Links in the foreign fields at a cost of $1,200 annually and giving $300 to city misions, but this church made a cash offering of $125 for the state work together with forty-five life members for the coming year, a gain of twenty new life members. They will make it fifty which will mean an annual gift of $375 to the state work. H. E. Van Horn, as a member of the State Board knew conditions and made a strong plea and his people responded gladly.

Unique School of Instruction at Boone, Ia.

J. E. Babcock, pastor of the church at Boone, Ia., is conducting a series of Sunday evening meetings which are rather unique in character. It is hardly an ordinary revival, but is more like a school of instruction. The meetings are conducted on schedule time. Commencing at 7:30, twenty minutes are devoted to an opening service. At 7:50 ten minutes are given to a rapid fire drill on points brought out at the previous night's meeting. At 8:00 p. m. sharp the pastor speaks for twenty-five minutes, after which ten minutes are given those present or the speaker an opportunity to ask or answer questions on the subject of the evening. The meetings close each night at 8:35 unless those present by unanimous vote desire meetings to continue a few minutes longer.

Missouri County Disciple Pastors Visit County's Churches for Every-Member Canvass.

A novel method of conducting the Every Member Canvass is reported from Sedalia, Mo. Six Disciple ministers of the county agreed to conduct a campaign of education on the Every Member Canvass and are visiting the churches within the next two weeks, giving two addresses each night. The subjects discussed are as follows: "Why Have the Every Member Canvass?" by G. M. Walker. "How to Make the Every Member Canvass," by J. F. Quisenberry. "The Value of the Every Member Canvass to the Local Church," by A. W. Kokendoffer. "The Christian Stewardship of Money," by F. C. Barrow. "The Budget Plan of Giving," by E. H. Williamson. J. S. Mills discussed still another phase of the canvass plan.

Douglass Adam Visits Butler College.

On October 21 at the College of Missions and on October 22, at the Butler College Chapel, Dr. Douglass Adam, of the Hartford School of Theology, made heart-searching addresses to the students of these two institutions. Dr. Adam has recently come to America from Scotland, and has been recently on a tour of colleges and universities. He bids fair to become a popular and effective university preacher with a profound influence on the college youth of America. Butler is fortunate in securing him early in his American residence.

E. S. Muckley to Serve National Benevolent Association.

E. S. Muckley of Portland, Oregon, has just been employed to look after the National Benevolent Association's interest in the Northwest. Mr. Muckley was for years pastor of First church, Portland. He has a wide acquaintance, a rich experience, charm of personality, and gift as a speaker. He will have charge of the work in Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana. He will give especial attention to the Home at Walla Walla.

Appreciation of A. W. Kokendoffer.

John E. Pounds, of Hiram, O., writes that he has had a rich experience in working with A. W. Kokendoffer, pastor at First church, Sedalia, in the recent revival meetings, during which 68 persons were added to the membership. Mr. Pounds says of the Sedalia pastor: "The experience was an altogether delightful one. A. W. Kokendoffer has been with the church for seven years. He has grown into the life of the city. He is regarded as the promoter of every good enterprise and the personal friend of every household. Behind him is a splendid official board, made up of men whose names stand for character and service. The Bible-school is admirably organized and managed. One interesting feature is the presence of a large number from outlying districts, who are brought to the school in wagonettes and on a special street car. The adult classes are not only faithful in attendance but are fully awake to their opportunities for personal evangelism."

Dr. Ainslie Asks for Balance of Federal Council Apportionment.

The following important notice comes from Dr. Ainslie and is postmarked Hot Springs, Va., where he is regaining his strength after a hard fight with pneumonia. He writes that he hopes to be in his pulpit at Christian Temple, Baltimore, on the Sunday before Thanksgiving. In all parts of the country there will be gratitude that Dr. Ainslie's life has been spared and that he is so well forward on the way to health again. There will, no doubt, be a special personal sentiment accompanying the contributions which the following statement from Dr. Ainslie will call forth:

"As has been announced, the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will meet in Columbus, Ohio, the second week in December. The Disciples of Christ are part of this organization and have been from its beginning. The organization is supported by definite sums, contributed by the thirty-two communions that are in it and by individuals. The Disciples are asked to give six hundred dollars a year. We have paid five hundred dollars of this through the council on Christian union. We desire to pay the remaining hundred, and to that end we are asking for contributions covering that amount by December 6. Please heed this call for it is of first importance. Address, Peter Ainslie, President Council on Christian Union, Seminary House, Baltimore, Md.

At First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

Edgar D. Jones, of First church, Bloomington, Ill., has just finished a series of evening addresses under the general topic of "Impressions of a Wayfarer in the Great West." These addresses, seven in number, were heard by audiences that taxed the seating capacity of First church edifice. The annual meeting of First church was held on Thursday evening, November 11. During the year the receipts of the entire church were $12,652.97. One hundred and forty-two persons were received into the membership of the congregation, eighty-nine by confession of faith and fifty-three by letter, and statement. Mr. Jones is to conduct a three-weeks' special service with his church beginning November 28. Mr. Fred Butler, of Yonkers, New York, who was formerly with J. Wilbur Chapman, will direct the music. Mr. Jones will speak for three weeks from the Book of Mark, giving a consecutive exposition of the life of our Lord as recorded by that evangelist. The young people of the congregation, under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society, are to have a Sunrise Prayer Meeting on Thanksgiving morning when especial attention will be given to the series of services soon to be conducted. This will be one of a series of such services to be held the week previous to the beginning of the evangelistic meeting, in preparation for same.

Carterville, Ill., Reports New Organizations.

Harley Swift, pastor at Carterville, Ill., reports the organization during the year of a C. W. B. M. auxiliary, Senior and Junior Chrisitan Endeavor organizations and a Cradle Roll. Among the good deeds of this church reported was the sending of four crates of eggs and a barrel of clothing to the St. Louis orphan's home. Mr. Swift made 1,096 calls during the past year, preaching 113 sermons. Nine persons were added to the church membership.

Baxter Waters Declines Carthage, Mo., Call.

Baxter Waters, of Lathrop, Mo., writes that he has declined the call recently received from Carthage, Mo., church. He states that the Lathrop work is urgent. A new church building is soon to be completed there. Mr. Waters is beginning his seventh year at Lathrop.

Kendallville, Ind., Pastor Enters Newspaper Field.

The Rev. W. D. Trumbull, who recently announced his resignation as pastor of the Christian church, has completed negotiations for the purchase of the Daily Express and Weekly Express at Defiance, Ohio. He will assume active management of these two publications, beginning this month. Defiance is a city of nine thousand people and is in the center of a rich agricultural district. In leaving the active ministry and entering newspaper work, Mr. Trumbull states that he does not feel that he is abandoning his Christian activities. He looks upon his change as entering a field that offers even greater opportunity. In speaking of the change he said: "I am not renouncing my religious convictions by leaving the ministry where I have spent many years of my life. I am just as firm in my belief of the gospel of Jesus Christ now as I ever was in the past. It is simply a case where conditions have arisen, so that by making a change I feel that I can do even greater good."

Through the columns of my papers I can talk to one thousand homes every night, to fourteen hundred other homes every week. We hope to increase the circulation of the papers and then I can talk to an even greater number of homes. I will have a wonderful opportunity to attend to business and to preach what I believe is right, at the same time."

—C. J. Sharp will hold evangelistic meetings for Columbus, Ind., Tabernacle church, in January.

—M. E. Chatley, of Memorial church, Rock Island, is preaching a series of sermons on "The Devil."

—The Decatur, Mich., church celebrated a Home Coming on Nov. 12.

—The city officials of Osawatomie, Kan., voted to the Disciples' church there the use of the court room of the city hall for the Sunday-school classes, during November, while revival services are in progress.

—H. E. Sala, of Central church, Peoria, Ill., has closed a series of sermons on early reformers of the Disciples. A recent sermon by Mr. Sala discussed the topic, "Do the Liquor Interests Own Peoria?"

—M. L. Pontius, of Central church, Jacksonville, Ill., has moved into his $6,000 parsonage, just completed.

—H. H. Peters, of Paris, Ill., who has been taking treatment in Chicago for nervous trouble, has returned to his pulpit work.

—J. R. Perkins is beginning his fourth year at Sioux City, Ia., the second longest pastorate of the church's history.

—First church, Richmond, Ind., L. E. Murray, pastor, burned its mortgage Nov. 14.

—Fifty-two groups of workers in fifty-two autos started out from First church, Los Angeles, Sunday, October 31, under the direction of R. F. Thrapp and canvassed every member of that church, increasing the current expense offerings thirty per cent.

—C. E. Underwood has just closed the temporary supply for Second church, Vincennes, Indiana. The church, Mr. Underwood writes, has passed through a recent crisis splendidly, and is now in condition for the new pastor. The church welcomes to its leadership Harry Martindale, a Butler graduate with the degrees Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Divinity.

—Jasper T. Moses, formerly missionary in Mexico, and later pastor at Canon City, Colo., is teaching Spanish in Centennial High, Pueblo, Colo., and in the Extension Departemnt of the University of Colorado.

—On October 17, the church at Cambridge City, Ind., had a rally day and inaugurated a movement to enlarge and remodel their house of worship. C. W. Cauble was the speaker of the day and the pleader for funds. The minister, Charles E. Shultz, writes that Mr. Cauble did fine work.

—The Christian church at Watts, Cal., known as the Shorb Ave. church, had its building burned to the ground October 30.

—Texas Christian University has a valuable addition to her faculty in the person of E. C. Wilson, who has taken his Ph.D. in Clark University.

—Cedar Rapids, First, school is becoming famous. A request has been made by H. F. Cope, secretary of the Religious Education association, for an eight hundred word article with pictures portraying the work of the Sunday-school at Cedar Rapids. This is to be used in an early issue of the magazine, "Religious Education." Dr. Gray, editor of the Baptist Standard, has made a similar request.

—Two novel services were arranged by Jesse McKnight, pastor of Wilshire Blvd. church, Los Angeles. One was a "Woman's Service," with women ushers and musicians. Bruce Brown spoke on "If I Were a Woman." Later came a "Man's Service," at which Mr. Brown spoke on "A Man's a Man for a' That."

—William V. Nelson, of Lyon Street church, Grand Rapids, Mich., recently addressed a body of printers and newspaper men. This is one a series of sermons recognizing the various trades of the city.

—Second church school, Bloomington, Ill, will celebrate "Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for America" on Nov. 21. Church and Sunday-school services will be merged into one.

—By an inadvertence which is regretted the "Century" news editor failed to mention in the recently published note concerning L. R. Patmont, the full acquittal of Mr. Patmont from the charge of arson put upon him at Newark, N. J. The jury was out only ten minutes. The state failed to connect Mr. Patmont with the fire at all.

—The federation of Missionary Societies of the Christian churches of Fort Worth, Tex., had an all-day meeting at Texas Christian University on October 28. The Domestic Science Department of the university furnished lucheon. At the time of this meeting a table linen shower was given to the university by members of the auxiliaries.

EUREKA NEWS NOTES.

Professor J. Lawrence Erb, of the University of Illinois, will lecture on "Hymnology" Wednesday evening, Dec. 1.

President H. O. Pritchard has returned from a visit in the east. He attended the tenth annual reunion of his graduating class of the Yale School of Religion. While in the Capital City, Mr. Pritchard occupied the pulpit of the Ninth St. Christian church in the morning, and the church of James A. Garfield in the evening. Mr. Pritchard also visited the George Washington, U., Washington, D. C., and the Chicago University during his trip.

The graduating class of eighteen from Yale, of which President Pritchard was a member, has made a remarkable record. From it have come three college presidents, namely, President H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka College; President Burton, of Smith College, the largest woman's college in the world; and President Cowling, of Carrolton College. Three of its members have become college preachers, and three have gone as missionaries to China, India and Japan Another member, Mr. Shearle, of Springfield, Mass., is one of the foremost rural experts in this country.

Eureka has a number of graduate students in Harvard, Yale and Columbia. President Pritchard said on his return that he was glad to report that they are all making good, and that several have won high honors.

Eureka College won the first football game of the season, 6—0, against the Macomb Normal team. It was evident from the first half that the teams were evenly matched both in weight and playing ability.

HOW YOU CAN FILL YOUR PRAYER MEETINGS

Order a sufficient number of copies to supply every home in your church with one copy of

The Training of Church Members

By Orvis F. Jordan and Charles Clayton Morrison

Distribute them at Sunday services and mail copies to every home not represented at the Sunday services. Announce that this booklet will be used for the next thirteen weeks (or twenty-six weeks, spending two weeks with each lesson) and you will find that there will be the largest attendance and the most eager interest you ever had at your midweek services.

This little manual is just off the press and the prompt and widespread demand for it from pastors and teachers of young people's classes and adult classes shows how eagerly something of this sort has been desired.

Cost? Only $12.50 per hundred copies. Other quantities in proportion.

One of Many Similar Letters We are Receiving These Days

"I want you to know how sincerely grateful I am for The Christian Century. I ofen wonder what our brotherhood would come to if it we re not for the strong, clear note you are striking each week. A Christian journal with your lofty aims and your courageous and masterly grasp of the truth that needs to be spoken deserves not only to be read by all thoughtful men and women among us, but also their active service and support. As a token of the way I feel I am enclosing herewith two new annual subscriptions, one of which I solicited and the other of which I am paying for myself."

Our Regular Readers Are Our Best Agents

Most of the increase in our subscription list comes from the spontaneous activity of our regular readers. They are as much interested in the truth The Christian Century stands for and the work it is doing as are the editors themselves. Hence many of them have formed the habit of securing new readers for us. We wish their number to be increased. Now is the season of the year when subscription-getting is easier than at any other time. Will you, appreciative reader, try during these months of November and December to pass this "good thing" along to your friends?

There are many among them who would welcome the opportunity of receiving fifty-two issues of The Christian Century. We are again and again receiving letters from new subscribers who have gotten the paper through some friend's activity which read like this: "I did not dream that there was published by the Disciples a paper with your broad outlook and your reasonable interpretation of our plea, and every week when I tear off the wrapper I inwardly thank Mr.———for calling my attention to The 'Century.'"

In reciprocation for your kindness in sending us a new subscription we will extend your own subscription four months. Three new friends added to our list would mean a year's subscription for you without charge.

Why "The Conquest" Wins

What Some of the Disciple Leaders Say About Our Attractive Weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes, Christian Endeavor and the Home.

Rev. Chas. M. Fillmore, Indianapolis, Ind.
It has fine ideals yet is practical; it is newsy but not full of chit-chat; it is progressive but not radical; it is literary but not scholastic; it is substantial but not heavy. It is just what the young people need, and what more and more they will come to want.

Rev. John Ray Ewers, Pittsburg, Pa.
A clean, newsy, well-edited, constructive journal for older students. We use one hundred copies.

Rev. L. J. Marshall, Kansas City, Mo.
It is stimulating and attractive Very popular with the members of our Bible school.

Rev. Frank Waller Allen, Springfield, Ill.
I think "The Conquest" is the best edited Bible school publication of its kind. It is clean, wholesome and interesting.

Mr. J. H. Fillmore, Norwood, Cincinnati, O.
My class of boys, average age 17, say that "The Conquest" is the best paper they have ever had, and I say Amen.

Mr. E. P. Williamson, Supt. Christian Temple, Baltimore.
One of the best papers we ever had in our Bible school. Liked by all.

Rev. W. G. Loucks, Akron, O.
"The Conquest" is improving with almost every issue.

Rev. J. H. Goldner, Cleveland.
I like "The Conquest" immensely. The treatment of the Sunday-school lesson, C. E. and midweek prayer-meeting topics is fresh and satisfying. In addition there is an abundance of readable and informing matter of a high order.

Rev. G. L. Lobdell, Stockton, Cal.
I am very favorably impressed with "The Conquest." It is Christlike in spirit and scholarly in tone, yet sufficiently simple to meet all needs. The department of Modern Science and the World's Work is alone worth the subscription price.

Rev. E. F. Daugherty, Vincennes, Ind.
Spicy, with variety, and well balanced in treatment of devotional and study topics in church life. I believe this paper fills a real want in the brotherhood.

Rev. R. H. Heicke, Kansas City, Kan.
I consider "The Conquest" the superior of any Sunday-school paper for seniors and adults among us.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Religion in the Coming Political Campaign

IT IS QUITE CERTAIN THAT RELIGION WILL PLAY A LARGER PART IN POLITICS DURING THE NEXT TWELVE MONTHS THAN IN ANY CAMPAIGN SINCE SLAVERY DAYS.

It is well for Christian people to make themselves aware of this prospect and to shape their thoughts in anticipation of it.

At this time a moral issue has arisen in our national life that touches vitally one of the cardinal principles of the Christian faith.

We are asked by our President to begin at once the construction of a military and naval force adequate for the aggressive protection of our land against any possible enemy.

That there is any enemy in sight is not claimed by the President or the supporters of his proposal; we are asked simply to make ready to defend our shores from any enemy that may appear.

The proposal involves the expenditure of vast sums of money, either by taxation or by imposing a debt upon the future. It involves a clean-cut departure from our national traditions. By adopting the proposed policy our nation will have thrust itself into the seductive and unending rivalry which during the past one hundred years has laid upon European nations a cumulative burden none of them was able to bear without groaning.

With considerations like these, however, religion, as such, has no vital connection. It is with a consideration that lies deeper than the economic or the traditional or the prudential consideration that religion concerns itself.

Religion comes into the issue at the very root of the proposal, and the way it comes in is unique, both in the history of nations and of religion itself.

For the first time in history a great nation is being brought deliberately to consider a war program in the light of the moral ideals of Jesus Christ.

This never occurred before.

The reason it never occurred before is the simple fact that never until our time have the moral ideals of Jesus Christ been taken by his followers as if they were seriously intended for practice in this present world.

Perhaps it would be a somewhat truer statement to say that the moral ideals of Jesus Christ have never before been clearly perceived by his followers. It is only in our generation that Christians have become aware of the revelation of a moral order of life in the example and teaching of Jesus. Hitherto his followers have approached him as an other-worldly being who possessed power to open the gates of the other world to those who accepted him, while his own actual manner of life had but incidental significance for their manner of life.

Now, however, there has grown up amongst Christians a lively conscience toward the moral ideals of Jesus. This conscience is rooted in the new understanding of the Master as a man among men. There probably never was a time in the history of Christianity, not excepting the most primitive years of the Church, when the human life of Christ was so well understood as today.

And the one clear insight about which all modern students of his historic personality are agreed is that it was Christ's intention to show men and women how to live together happily and justly in this present world so as to make of this human social order of ours a veritable kingdom of God.

In a long stretch of peaceful study of the teaching of the historic Jesus it has been driven into the souls of American churchmen that war is the antithesis and contradiction and arch-enemy of the kingdom of God. Insight into the teaching of Jesus, based upon a still unshaken allegiance to him as the revelation of God's wisdom and power, has had fifty years of breathing space in which to mature itself into a strong conscientious conviction against war, and in favor of following the leadership of Christ in abolishing war from the face of the earth.

No Christian nation ever felt the pressure and goad of that conscience within it as it faced a program of war-making or war-preparation until now, and the United States is the only nation that feels it acutely now.

The clean-cut issue of preparedness versus pacifism was never joined in England or Germany or France. These nations, nominally Christian like our own, were far embarked upon a policy of militarism, re-enforced by all their traditions, before ever the modern insight into the moral ideals of Jesus was awakened. But the United States, whether through national carelessness or divine providence, has dwelt in virtual unconcern of any possible enemy for many decades, only now to be made aware of the ridiculously unready state in which an invading foe would find us.

It is under cover of this unconcern, this assumed security, that the pacifist ideal and conscience have had a chance to grow in our national life as they have had no chance to grow in any other nation.

So that when, on this dark day of international chaos and hatred, it is proposed that the United States arouse itself from its helpless unpreparedness and put on the whole armor of militarism, the proposal strikes the very quick of the Christian conscience that has been growing in the Church throughout the years.

It is a thrilling prospect that awaits us in the coming political campaign. Every alert churchman must be able to see that the issues are such as to make the campaign the greatest religious revival the nation has ever seen. The Bible will be in the lead of all campaign documents. High above Wilson and Bryan and Root and Roosevelt and all outstanding human leaders will be projected the figure of him whose name is above every name.

What would Jesus Christ have this nation do?—that question will be asked with a clean-cut urgency never known before and answered with an intelligence and fidelity which no Christian nation has ever before brought to the solution of any moral inquiry.

What the outcome will be a twelve-month from now no man may guess. We can only wait to see what we shall see.

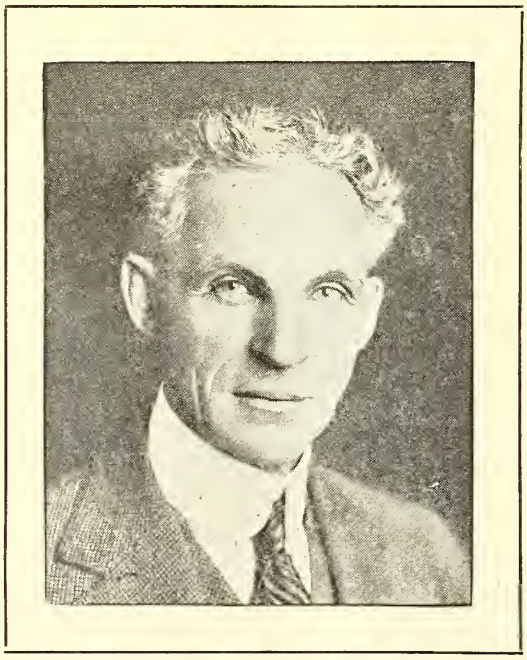
We can wait—not in helpless passivity but in prayerful faith that the hour may have at last come for Christ to appear as King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

Henry Ford on Universal Peace

Will Devote Life and Fortune to Combat Spirit of Militarism

Reported By THEODORE DELAVIGNE

I HAVE prospered much, and I am ready to give much to end this wasteful "preparation." Not by building palaces af peace, not by inspiring fearful peace by powerful armament, but by teaching the men, women and children of America that war does not threaten us, that war will not reach us, that the fullness of peace is their inheritence, not the burden of militarism with its heavy hand that curbs liberty and its foul sustenance upon the blood, the labor and the toil-earned happiness and good of the worker.



Henry Ford.

This I would make a world work, for all the world cries for peace, and there can be no peace while there remains one set of these militaristic parasites who encourage war and who damn all whose idea of patriotism and love of their fellow men does not call for arming brother against brother.

I confess I do not know how it is best to undertake this work in an organized manner. I realize it is a vast undertaking. Yet I want to see this nation and all the nations of the earth nourishing that feeling, already deeply implanted in the minds and hearts of millions, that is expressed in the words: "We do not want war. We will not have war. We will not have amongst us the breeders of war, be they men who cry out that the enemy seeks us, and we must prepare for him, or be they only those who would dazzle with the false glory that has been the cloak of murder for centuries."

The seed of this project is right here in the Ford organization, in hundreds of organizations throughout the country.

PEOPLE OF ALL LANDS CRY OUT AGAINST WAR.

By some remote and providential scheme a little good might result through the use of guns, warships, shrapnel and torpedo. To my mind this is the last and most remote means that could possibly be suggested to gain the national or world-wide end that most sober-minded men wish to obtain.

When men think and work, they do right, and the voice of the people, I do believe, in every land under the sun, cries out against war. The trouble is that they do not make enough noise, and the yell of the few who, for monetary gain, want war just at this particular time, seems to prevail.

We who can, ought to help in the right direction. It's a pathetic sight and positive fact that most men who pose as standing for the best things in life and who pray to God in churches on Sunday for peace (the very pillars of the church, they are called,) are busiest nowadays in obtaining the orders that will enable them to convert their factories into workshops for making shot and shell for destroying mankind and defeating the finest and loftiest things in the world—homes, happiness, prosperity.

We want to make everyone realize that everybody's business is too often looked upon as nobody's business, and that the men who are appointed to sit in high places to represent the people, shall truly represent the spirit of the people.

PUBLIC MUST CONTROL ACTION OF "RULERS."

Nowadays men are prone to think they have nothing to do with and cannot control their own destinies. It is everybody's business to know how the moneys of the country are spent and how the wisdom and judgment of the chief executives are directed, and the sooner we come to understand this, the sooner will be stopped the wanton waste of money for murderous and destructive agencies, such as warships, guns and arms.

It may be necessary to form committees, but what is needed is a committee of all of the people of the earth to help in developing the natural resources of the earth for the pleasure and benefit of the inhabitants thereof.

It may be a peculiar arrangement that the military spirit and military people are being returned to the earth, from whence they came, and that is the only possible good that can come out of the war. After it is all over, hundreds of millions will have to be spent to put the world back where it was before this awful carnage started.

The amount of money and effort that has been spent in the war, directed for the betterment of the earth, would have without doubt produced men and minds that would have forever made war impossible.

I hate war, because war is murder, desolation and destruction, causeless, unjustifiable cruel and heartless to those of the human race who do not want it, the countless millions, the workers. I hate it none the less for its waste, its uselessness and the barriers it raises against progress and the development of the world, human and material.

WORLD BIG ENOUGH TO GIVE PEACE TO ALL.

Surely the world is big enough for all to live in at peace with all. If nations want colonies they can have them without killing their sons and devastating homes and lives. If Germany, as many of her opponents claim, wanted colonies, she could have secured a very extensive "place in the sun" by direct purchase—a business transaction—for a fraction of the terrific cost she is now paying in warfare.

I could today make vast sums from warfare if I so chose, but it would be better to die a pauper than that anything I have helped to make, or that any thought, word or act of mine should be used for the furtherance of this slaughter.

I shall expect the sneers and condemnation of those whose business is war and of those who profit by war. But I can weigh against this the feeling for peace and against war and the spirit that brings war, which, I know, burns in the hearts of the masses the world over, and in this I will feel that I am right.

I shall raise my voice in no controversy with those who cry out that such peace would bring destruction upon us by martial nations, but who really mean that they would have peace by enforcing their will upon others with cannon, and whose constant cry of "prepare" cloaks their damnable aims. The very thought of such men and such ideas cannot but bring the strongest words of condemnation and reproach from any man.

STRIFE ENGENDERED BY HUGE ARMAMENTS.

The building of armament by the United States is not only a waste of itself and war-breeding policy, it is worse still, it is an example that the nations of Latin America and all the world have followed, adding the burden and the danger to the peoples in those lands.

The nations of the world need an example to lead them away from war, and this, the country we live in, is, I believe, the land destined to show the world the way toward the end of this murder. The world has followed the United States for generations in all that goes for progress. Let us have disarmament; let us show that we mean peace when we say the word, and the world will follow in that too.

I feel, and I have the world's history and the spirit of a world's people back of me, that the "preparedness" now being preached is nothing but criminal waste, a call to slaughter, and a disgrace to a nation that has been the guiding star of the world towards liberty, happiness and peace.

I realize only too well that since the beginning of history the overpowering, unanswerable weapon of wealth always, down to this very day has been on the side of slaughter, and this, I know, has stood as the great barrier to the peace that men have craved since civilization was born.

If I can but see the world—and America is the brain of the world and the brain the guide of all—moving toward that day when war shall cease, when nations shall not burden the workers with the enormous expense of huge armaments and then destroy the workers with those very armaments, I shall be content to end my days where I began, an humble worker in a peaceful world.

MILLIONS ARE MURDERED BY MILITARY PARASITES.

Millions of men, every one of them a husband, a son, a father or a brother, have gone to their death within a year on the battlefields of Europe. There is sorrow in millions of homes, a dozen nations are paralyzed and filled with mangled, crippled men and boys who by the laws of nature can only produce children who will in some way bear, in part, the burden and mark of their parents' suffering. And all for nothing.

It is horrible to contemplate. If these men who brought on the war were insane, we could comprehend the cause of the war. But when we think that all is done coldly, deliberately by these militaristic parasites, and that millions of men are torn from the life that is theirs by right of birth, and driven to slaughter by the system of murder that envelops these nations we are crushed by the enormous crime.

The very thought of this makes me feel that I know of nothing to which I would rather give my life, nothing that would give me a more certain feeling that I was doing a man's work, nothing that would make me feel more content in the knowledge that I had done a great duty that had been placed before me, than to use that which I have to help bring to an end 6,000 years of this unjustified hatred, ruthless waste, destruction and murder.

I feel, and every American who is not carried away by the fatal mirage of glory and empire or dragged by the chains of greed for the personal benefits that war brings to certain vampire-like traders, also feels that we will never have a war in this country; that our shores are as safe from invasion for the next 100 years as they have been for the past century. I feel that this cry for the training of men to kill other men and for the placing of an army and navy as a burden on the backs of the people, is a false conception of patriotism and treason to the life of a people.

WAR NOT JUSTIFIED BUT BRANDED AS CURSE.

In all the history of civilization I cannot find one man who has justified war, who did not publicly brand it as the curse of man and the work of Cain. Yet these same men are often the very ones who call for the "preparedness" that brings on war. What can we think of men who cry aloud against murder and yet fly eagerly to place in the hands of their children, or more frequently the children of their more humble brothers, the implements of murder?

Aside from the burning fact that war is murder, the waster of lives and home and lands, and that "preparedness" has never prevented war but has ever brought war to the world—aside from all this is the utter futility (from a cold, hard business view alone) of the equipment of an army today with weapons that are obsolete tomorrow.

We build a vast naval machine today. A few months hence it is surpassed by that of another country and is practically useless. We give our soldiers a death-dealing rifle. Tomorrow another nation's soldiers have a weapon that surpasses ours.

The United States has spent more than a billion dollars on a navy and army that was to cope with an invasion that never occurred and never will occur. And yet the very "war experts" who were responsible for that burdensome army and navy admit that our army and navy never would have been able to meet, with any hope of success, those of other so-called powers.

And with all their prophecies of war fallen flat, they cry for still greater waste.

The people of the United States have been compelled to throw a billion dollars into a junk pile, and these men would have another billion go the same way. If one-tenth of what has been spent on preparation for war had been spent on the prevention of war the world would always have been at peace.

Why, if the United States is threatened by another nation, have we lived in peace for 100 years? Our army and navy never were able to stop the "paper invasions" that the war-breeders talked of, and yet we have lived unmolested, happy and at peace with all races of men.

ISOLATION IS THOROUGH PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES.

The isolation of the United States is a perfect safeguard against successful invasion, and if this fact would not prevent a landing of hostile armies the very vastness of the country and the enormous population would make such an attempt futile. We are neither Aztecs nor East Indians.

The writers of military treatises showing how Japan, or Germany, or any other nation could invade the United States, under the guise of history and "military probabilities," are trying to fill the minds of the people with fear by the use of their high-sounding nonsense—that is what the whole thing is, nonsense. It's a good joke to see these big business men, now in the newspapers, spending a few weeks' vacation learning the art of soldiering. I wonder if they are really frightened by the stories.

The pity of it is that this same war talk is allowed to take up the columns of newspapers and magazines that could be used toward the inspiration of peace.

The advice of militarists as to the need of a vast army and navy is about the same as the advice of a group of professional gamblers would be in the framing of civil laws. The only difference is that the military men would gamble with human lives and the peace and plead for "national honor" when they mean "personal glorification" or "blood-money."

ENORMOUS SUMS ALREADY SPENT HAVE BEEN WASTED.

I firmly believe that if we had had an army equal in size to those of the great European militaristic nations we would long ago have flown to a bloody battlefield. If our navy had been able to cope with any and all the nations we would have been constantly at war. It has always been this competitive arming, this deadly invitation to a test of strength, that has spelled death and sorrow to millions. We have had none of it. We should have none of it.

Even as it stands today, think of the enormous waste that comes with our small army and navy. Latest figures show that there are about 85,000 men in our army and about 60,000 more in the navy. Here we have 145,000 of the country's best specimens of manhood who produce nothing, who are as much a burden to the country as the insane and the poor would be under national supervision.

These men, we must remember, are taken into the service at an age when they are just framing the characters that will stamp the conduct and thought of their whole life. This deliberate training in the killing of their fellowmen can never be used in making these young builders, but rather instills into them at the time when teaching makes the most lasting impression, the ideas, the aims and the self-vindicating but false apologies of murderous militarism.

Even when the forest fires were raging in Michigan a few years ago none of these 145,000 idle men could be spared to save the region. That is the curse of Europe under its present system. A million non-producers swagger around living upon the workers. The war people would have the same conditions here. But I believe the worker of America realizes too well his own power to permit of such a condition.

EDISON WON'T AID IN DESTROYING HUMAN LIFE.

They have called in Thomas Edison to help their war plans. Let me say that Thomas Edison never has, and in my opinion, never will use his great brain to make anything which would destroy human life or human property. He could destroy nothing. His mind is a constructive mechanism that abhors destruction, and war is destruction. He is a man of peace for he realizes the true meaning of war—wanton, unnecessary and unreasoning destruction, death and disruption of all that peace has builded.

I believe that the time is at hand when the man who works will forever put an end to the system that can tear him away from his home and family to send him forth to a death against his will; death inflicted by another human worker who bears him no ill-will and to whom he is a brother; death that can bring nothing but sorrow to those he leaves behind; death hurled out by the pressure of a finger moving at the order of one whom the worker has placed above him as a leader and who thus betrays him to murder and the danger of death.

I believe that this same worker is going to end the conditions that allow the man he places above him to give that murderous order; to cause him to seek the life of a brother worker in another land and send that brother searching in turn for his blood.

And I would assist this worker to educate his children from the cradle to think only in terms of peace, to hate war and all the accoutrements of war, and strive forever to drive from the world this spirit of murder, destruction and chaos.

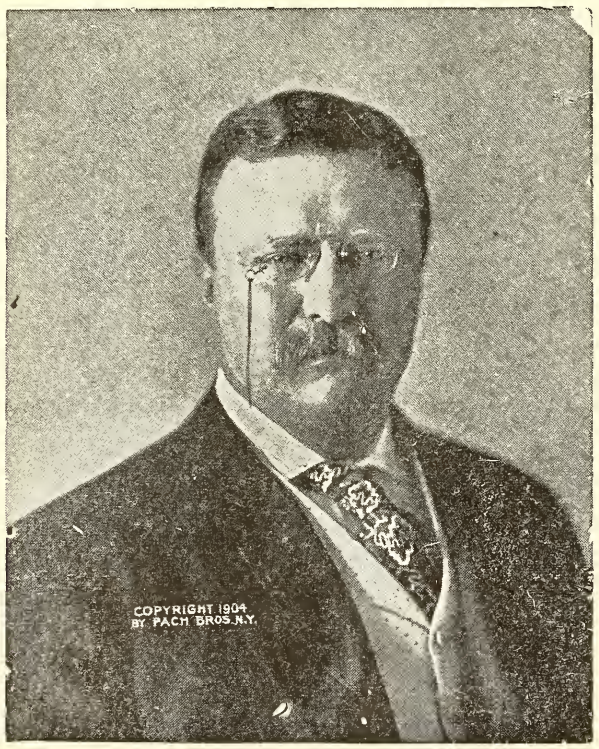
The present war's end will, I believe and hope, see the end of the military spirit and the military castes in all Europe; the death of the military party in Germany; and those very workers who are today performing wonders of arms against the whole of Europe under the eyes of an emperor and a Fatherland may be the very ones who will end that reign of militarism.

So that it may be said: "We have ended war forever. We have done away with the parasites that breed war in the world." And from every nation in Europe, in the world will come the echo of the words, "We have ended war forever." That cry will be the cry of a man who works, the man created to love and be loved by his fellows, to enjoy peace and to share that joy with all.

Theodore Roosevelt on Preparedness

In the Metropolitan Magazine.

WHEN the world war broke out over a year ago, it was simply inexcusable for this people not at once to begin the work of preparation. If we had done so, we would now have been able to make our national voice felt effectively in helping to bring about peace with justice—and no other peace ought to be allowed. But not one thing has been done by those in power to make us ready. On the contrary, in his message to Congress of last December, the President elaborately argued in favor of keeping ourselves unprepared, expressing the hope that, if we thus preserved immunity from hatred by keeping ourselves beneath contempt, we might create a situation where he would be employed as a go-between, as the man to fetch and carry among the warring powers when the time for peace negotiations arrived. The attitude of the German-American press in this country toward the subsequent notes of the President to Germany throws the true light on this fond anticipation. These hyphenated American newspapers have shown that their entire loyalty is to that portion of the compound term which precedes the hyphen, and that they translate the term German-American as meaning that they are Germans who use their position in America as a means for endeavoring to force America to sacrifice its own honor and the interests of mankind in order to serve the German government. The professional German-Americans here, acting, as has been shown by President Wilson's ardent supporters in New York, with the connivance of the administration, and by the direct instigation of the German government, have deliberately campaigned against the United States, have exulted in the German atrocities, and have openly stated that the support of the German-American vote was conditioned upon the administration's attitude toward Germany, and that Germany would let President Wilson play a part in the peace negotiations only if he actively or passively helped Germany in the war.



Colonel Roosevelt believes that "Our safety and therefore the safety of democratic institutions rests on our own and only on our own strength."

DEMOCRACIES AND DEFENSE.

Men are not to be seriously blamed for failure to see or foresee what is hidden from all but eyes that are almost prophetic. The most far-seeing Americans, since the days of Washington, have always stood in advance of popular feeling in the United States so far as national preparedness against war is concerned, although on the other hand not a few of the leaders have been much less advanced than the people they led. But under right leadership the people have always been willing to grapple with facts that were fairly obvious.

We in America claim that a democracy can be as efficient for defense as an autocracy, as a despotism. It is idle to make this claim, it is idle to utter windy eloquence in Fourth of July speeches, and to prate in public documents about our greatness and our adherence to democratic principles and the mission we have to do good on earth by spineless peacefulness, if we are not willing to make our words count by means of our deeds. Germany stands as the antithesis of democracy. She exults in the fact that in England democracy has broken down. She exults in the fact that in America democracy has shown itself so utterly futile that it has not even dared to speak about wrongdoing committed against others, and has not dared to do more than speak, without acting, when the wrong was done against itself. She openly exults in and counts upon the fact that the professional German-Americans are disloyal to the United States. She uses the politicians who are afraid of the German-American vote.

THE LAW OF SELF-PRESERVATION.

Every professional pacifist in America, every representative of commercialized greed, every apostle of timidity, every sinister creature who betrays his country by pandering to the anti-American feeling which masquerades under some species of hyphenated Americanism—all these men and women and their representatives in public life are at this moment working against democracy. If the democratic ideal fails, if democracy goes down, they will be primarily to blame. For democracy will assuredly go down if it once be shown that it is incompatible with national security. The law of self-preservation is the primary law for nations as for individuals. If a nation cannot protect itself under a democratic form of government, then it will either die or evolve a new form of government.

I believe that our people will realize these facts. I believe that our people will make democracy successful. They can only do so if they show by their actions that they understand the responsibilites that go with democracy. The first and the greatest of these responsibilities is the responsibility of national self-defense. We must be prepared to defend a country governed in accordance with democratic ideal or else we are guilty of treason to that ideal. To defend the country it is necessary to organize the country in peace, or it cannot be organized in war. A riot of unrestricted individualism in time of peace means impotence for sustained and universal national effort toward a common end in war time. Neither businessman nor wage-worker should be permitted to do anything detrimental to the people as a whole; and if they act honestly and efficiently they should in all ways be encouraged.

There should be social cohesion. We must devise methods by which under our democratic government we shall secure the socialization of industry which autocratic Germany has secured, so that business may be encouraged and yet controlled in the general interest, and the wage-workers guaranteed full justice and their full share of the reward of industry, and yet required to show the corresponding efficiency and public spirit that justify their right to an increased reward. But the vital fact to remember is that ultimately it will prove worse than useless to have our people prosper unless they are able to defend this prosperity; to fight for it.

THE HAGUE CONVENTIONS.

The United States has—and deserves to have—only one friend in the world. This is the United States. We ourselves treated the Hague Conventions as scraps of paper; and we cannot expect anyone else to show the respect for such treaties which we have lacked. Our safety and therefore the safety of democratic institutions rests on our own strength and only on our own strength. If we were a true democracy, if we really believe in government of the people by the people and for the people, if we believe in social and industrial justice to be achieved through the people, and therefore in the right of the people to demand the service of all the people, let us make the Army fundamentally an army of the whole people. Therefore let us have universal military service, taking the Swiss system as a model and developing it and adapting it to our own use. We need a first-class Navy, in size and efficiency the second among the navies of the world. We need a small but highly efficient professional Army of at least a couple hundred thousand men. Then, and above all, we also need to have every young man in the United States trained so that in the event of the country being assailed he shall be at once available to render with reasonable efficiency military service to the land to which he owes everything.

This will be carrying out the democratic ideal.

The Iron Cross*

By James Church Alvord.

WE HEARD it howled through the night, as the youngsters pressed and wrangled outside of the tent. The General looked at the chaplain.

"It is expedient that one man should die for the army," proclaimed the chaplain.

He was a haggard ascetic, with pallid blue eyes and lips which cut a thin violet line across his face. Never had I seen lips so thin, so colorless. Beloved by the soldiers, he was indefatigable in visiting them, nursing them in sickness, thundering against their sins.

"But Josephsohn has but followed his conscience and that's what you're always telling us to do," this was an elderly captain who objected.

"The fellow has sinned against my country. My Germany—may she ever be right! But my Germany, right or wrong." He faced the captain, his eyes scintillating with wrath, the blood purpling through those parchment cheeks of his. "He has preached against the Lord's Anointed, my Kaiser; he would cut the nerve of patriotism; he would drive The Fatherland down upon disgraceful knees before the peoples of the world. The times demand a sacrifice—" he whirled suddenly around and pointed one melodramatic finger at Josephsohn, "here is the sacrifice."

A roar of applause swept in from the darkness outside the tent, a buzz of approval hissed around the circle of the officers.

I sighed. Josephsohn must be shot, shot before the whole army.

They brought him out just as day broke over the desolated land of France. The regiments followed in stiff parade. At the edge of the town a long road slipped over the plain to Brussels, a road that gloomed with the wreck of war. Its prim line of Lombardy poplars had been mowed by bullets or hacked down by the unskilled hands of soldiers, their towseled heads, covered with brown and withered leaves, bulged out on either side of the stumps; here and there was a wayside cross. Most of these were beaten down or splintered; but one still stood, a mile from the city, built of black iron, grim in the flush of morning light. It was a crucifix, fitted for a life-size figure; but the Jesus had been shot away. Apparently no relics of the image remained save that on the cross were still the nails and the crown of thorns. This crown was metal-made and had been painted a dismal brown; it stuck out baldly into the air.

There were tens of thousands marching four-abreast along the highway which rose and fell in languorous curves, so that looking back it seemed to me as if some monstrous drab anaconda—the General and his staff making the glittering head with their parade uniforms—was nosing over the fields in search of prey. Behind the officers came one company of soldiers, then a band of rude Bohemian peasants, men who had never come under the influence of the prisoner and, as Catholics, were opposed to his strong Protestant spirit; Josephsohn, though of Jewish parentage, was a Lutheran, a modified Lutheran for he held Quaker principles. The peasants dragged him on, his hands bound behind his back, his face flung up to the morning, his lips moving in silent prayer.

At the cross we stopped.

"Josephsohn," proclaimed the General, "if you are willing now to confess your fault before the army, to bid these men follow their country's flag into the last ditch, you can be forgiven. Are you ready?"

He answered never a word.

"Do you not know that I have power to loose you and power to kill you?" asked the General gruffly. A low murmur swept through the thousands of men assembled around the rude cross, their guns rattled on their shoulders, their lips muttered rebelliously. It is better to get it over, I thought, and touched the General softly with my gloved hand.

"They won't dare to do a thing," sneered Sievald in my ear. "Discipline's too good in a German army." His little dry face puckered in unconcern.

My orderly stepped to the summit of the mound on which the cross stood. He lifted his hands to speak to the soldiers. At once the under-officers took up their cry, "Shoot him down! Shoot him down!" It screamed up to the sudden glory of the rising sun.

Through it, above it, beneath it, thundered a solemn bass, a bass so strangely musical that it made itself heard through all that clamor, that it reached the rim of that vast circumference. "Thou shalt not kill!" thundered the bass, and we all knew that Josephsohn spoke. The under-officers bawled on and on; but the voice spoke only three times.

At the top of the hillock the executioners bound him to the arms of the cross. He was just the height of the figure shot away, apparently, for the crown of thorns fitted down upon his forehead. He was obliged to stoop a moment and then press his head into it. The men stripped down his shirt once more; so that he stood, bare-breasted, thorn-crowned, his arms stretched out and tethered at the wrists to nails, that long white cloth flowing down below his waist, his face lifted towards the sky. His beard had not been shaved for the last two weeks and had grown incredibly, it was even forked at the end. His dark red hair caught the rising sun and glistened, it threw an aureole around his face.

"Oh, my God!" cried the General. "He looks——"

The General did not finish and we none of us replied; we all knew Whom he resembled, knew only too well.

The dull Bohemians took their place, six of them, and lifted their rifles. It was my duty to give the order, but the General excused me.

"One," counted Sievald; he minced it out.

"Two," his dry voice cracked with doom.

"Three—fire!"

Out from the cloud of smoke, for the guns primed with some ancient powder vomited smoke by the storm-full, cried a great voice: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

I stood shivering.

Suddenly I was aware of the clack of arms, a clack which grew and grew, mounted and mounted; it filled the air. Officers yelled. The General stormed and entreated. Swords flashed. Once—twice—thrice—a pistol barked. But silently, stubbornly, their faces lifted towards the day, the soldiers swept up to the form drooping on the cross at the top of the mount. They were young, blonde, coarse-featured lads, animal, almost brutish in their forms, unshaven, sunburned, caked with mud and slush, clad in dull gray; but in their eyes burned the fierce light of sacrifice. It was more than sacrifice, it was bigotry. Never before had I realized how young they were. By the file—by the company—by the regiment—by the thousands, they swept on and up. As they passed each man threw his rifle and cartridge-belt at the feet of the dead orderly. The pile grew swiftly. It covered the hill, inundated the cross, hid the body—still up they marched and down they stumbled, each man hurling his weapons into the pile. At last one Captain at my side, an elderly man, the officer who had come to Josephsohn at night, sighed deeply, gazed around among us for a moment, mounted the hill and dropped his unsheathed sword upon the heap. No other officer followed.

The General was stupefied, the Majors were deadened with horror, even Sievald had not a word to say; but on and on came the regiments, the ring and clang of their flung arms wailing through the day.

I have nothing else to add. Everybody knows the peace to which we were forced to submit, the generosity of the Allies when they realized the facts. But there was one strange thing. When soldiers took up the body of Josephsohn for the burial—it wasn't a corpse. I can't explain exactly what I mean—but it was a shell—a mask—a thing somebody had lived in; it wasn't the remains of a dead man. Its feet were pierced with one bullet, each hand with a bullet, and in the side was a gory gash. The iron cross of thorns, too, had left scars across the forehead.

As we carried Josephsohn down from the mount into the glory of the sunset, the guns of both armies were stilled, the white flag of peace floated everywhere and dazzled in the scarlet light; for the generals conferred together in a space between the trenches. And soldiers by thousands, tens of thousands, knelt in the slosh of the half-melted snow, praying before The Iron Cross.

AS TO BROTHERHOODS.

Rev. Charles Stelzle, widely known in this country as a Christian worker, is credited with saying in an address at Winona Lake, not long ago, this: "Speeches and sandwiches have killed the brotherhood movement in the churches. The brotherhoods have literally dug their graves with their teeth. Instead of being inspired with Mazzini's call, 'Come and suffer,' they were fooled by the swan song of 'Come and eat.'" The Wesleyan Advocate aptly says: "Banqueting Christianity is not apt to be a spiritual type of religion, and when it expends its energy in the banquets it has little for real work that religious people should do."

CAN WE PAY GOD?

IF A man will sit down and count over the blessings with which God has blessed him, as the Thanksgiving season invites every soul to do, there will arise in his heart an emotion not of appreciation and gratitude alone, but of obligation—a desire to make some return to God for all his goodness.

But what can a man give to God?

His are the cattle on a thousand hills. His the gold of the mountains. His already is the substance that I call mine.

How can a mere man bring satisfaction to the heart of the great God, how compensate the Creator for his unnumbered benefits?

A psalmist felt that problem long ago, and found its answer. "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?" he asks, and replies to his own question, "I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."

We cannot pay God back in kind.

The only way we can pay him at all is to take all that he gives.

To accept his salvation is payment for all his other gifts.

To let him forgive and heal and inwardly furnish our souls and fashion us in the likeness of his Son is all the pay he desires, as it is also all the pay we can give.

This is the paradox of Thanksgiving—that we can discharge our obligation to God only by increasing it!

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON, PRAGMATIST

THE DEATH of Booker T. Washington removes from American life one of its most interesting, picturesque and significant personalities. The story of his rise from slavery as told in his autobiography is hardly surpassed in human interest by any volume on our library shelves. The service he rendered in the past twenty-five years to his race is as distinctive and far-reaching a piece of work as any of his white brother-statesmen may claim to their credit.

This was the distinctive and appealing characteristic of Dr. Washington: He approached the negro problem from a concrete, human and pragmatic point of view, in contrast to those leaders both black and white who approach it from a theoretical and doctrinaire point of view.

There is no use wasting time, said Booker Washington, and irritating our white brothers by forcing our claim to political and social recognition on the grounds of our rights to such recognition. We must rather make ourselves deserving of such recognition and then we will not have to urge our claim.

So he approached his black brothers in a very practical way. He tried to get out of their heads the ideas that fomented a spirit of discontent and inhibited their practical endeavors, and to fill their heads with ideas that would prompt them to earn, to save, to own a piece of ground, to put a house on it, to invest their savings, to take a place in the business community, to build up a real self-respect and thus to deserve the respect of the white community.

Tuskegee Institute was founded and developed on this practical principle. In this way Booker Washington has not only carried forward his own cause, enlisting the support of men of large affairs and leaving an institution with property valued at a half million dollars, but he has illustrated the only successful method of working at any problem involving human prejudices.

It may seem to some a far cry from the negro problem to that of, let us say, Christian unity. But leadership and progress in Christian unity demand the getting down from doctrinaire generalities and sentimentalism to the actual practice of unity in specific and concrete instances. Those who are working at it in this pragmatic fashion are making far more significant contributions to the ultimate triumph of unity than are those who keep harping on the abstract basis of unity and refuse to practice it at all.

WILLING BUT SKEPTICAL

QUOTING at length from the page editorial appearing in The Christian Century, entitled "Made for Each Other," in which the complementary qualities of Congregationalists and Disciples were set in inviting juxtaposition, the "Congregationalist" comments appreciatively on the editorial but skeptically on the possibility of such a union as the editorial pleads for. Our Boston contemporary says:

> Where will you find the expediency of a marriage more attractively and winsomely set forth than in extracts from the following editorial, which appeared in The Christian Century? It proposes that Disciples and Congregationalists talk it over a while, and then get married. Where will one find by one of the high contracting parties a better and more sympathetic analysis of the life and character of the other than in this editorial? . . . If the ministers and leaders of Disciples of Christ and Congregationalists were—a majority of them—of the irenic spirit and broad sympathies of Editor Charles C. Morrison and Dean Willett of The Christian Century the banns of the marriage might be announced immediately.

With all due appreciation of the personal compliment in the above The Christian Century does not feel comfortable in being regarded as so much broader than the Disciples generally, as the "Congregationalist" assumes. It thinks the Disciples would not stand with us in our proposal of marriage with the Congregationalists and cites the following in support of its skepticism:

> At the General Convention of the Disciples, meeting in Los Angeles a few months ago, it was voted that a church at Berkeley could not be received into fellowship because the church received members by letter—members coming from communions that did not require immersion. At the National Council of Congregational churches missionary societies that had grown into the life of the church for seventy-five years were radically changed in form and relationship without a dissenting vote or a sharp word.
> These two incidents indicate that our theological thinking, our points of emphasis and our methods of doing things are so entirely different that I am afraid we would not make a harmonious household. We Congregationalists sadly need what our brother Disciples have to contribute, but our points of contact are not yet numerous enough for us to have a happy marriage.

You greatly err in the case cited, Bro. Editor. It was not at the General Convention at Los Angeles that the Berkeley church was denied representation, but at the state convention of Northern California. The delegates of Berkeley church were received without question at both the Atlanta General Convention in 1914 and the Los Angeles Convention in 1915.

Moreover, the action of the Northern California convention rests under the disapproval of the sentiment of the great body of the Disciples as voiced by their most influential and trusted leaders.

It is doubtful if there is another state convention in the land that would do what Northern California did, and there is little doubt that California will itself reverse its attitude at its next summer's meeting.

That the General Convention would disfellowship a church for receiving Congregationalist and Presybterian Christians into its membership, is altogether unthinkable. The Disciples, we confess, have those among them who lack the spirit of unity, but the great weight of sentiment in their body falls predominantly on the side of the larger fellowship with all Christ's people.

Meanwhile we quite agree with our esteemed neighbor in the practicability of encouraging "trial marriages" between churches in local communities. That, we believe, is the way Christian unity ought to be brought about in most cases, and in this it is peculiarly appropriate and feasible.

REVIVALISM AT A DISCOUNT

PHILADELPHIA gives the Church a very good illustration of the illusion of modern sensational revivalism. No one, of course, can reasonably hold Mr. Sunday responsible for the recent reaction in Philadelphia's politics to the old-time corrupt regime, but it is not at all unfair to go over the claims of those who reported the great Billy Sunday meetings and mark them down at a big discount.

Among the beneficent results of those meetings was set down, in addition to the forty thousand converts, a thoroughgoing clean-up of the city. That the meetings did not get very far into the social conscience is evidenced by the repudiation, within less than nine months, of the ticket that stood for honesty and progress and the return to the old conditions of looting and graft.

This same thing has happened so many times—and in the nature of the case is so much more likely to happen than not—that Church leaders ought by this time to be learning the lesson that moral progress is not to be made by any such short-cut or spectacular methods as this highly artificial revivalism employs.

The pathetic and costly thing about it all is that a Church under the illusion of this kind of revivalism cannot be persuaded to work at the problem of individual and social salvation adequately in any other way.

The quiet, steady, constructive, character-making forces of religion cannot compete with religious vaudeville. The only way to get these forces into operation is definitely to choose to use them, to stand or fall by them, and to have no recourse to devices and methods which contradict them.

MAY THE DOCTOR CONSPIRE WITH DEATH?

AN ETHICAL problem of the first magnitude in the practice of medicine was thrown into public relief by a case at a Chicago hospital last week. A defective baby was born to parents who, acting upon the counsel of their physician, consented not to let the baby live.

The physician's diagnosis revealed conditions upon which he predicted that the child would grow up deformed, imbecile and possibly criminal. He declared that the child's life would be a burden to itself, a cause of suffering to its parents and a burden on society.

In addition to its more serious but not fatal defects the doctor found a closed intestine which could be opened by a simple operation. If this operation was performed the child would live; if not the child's death in a few days was certain.

The doctor refused to operate, both parents consenting to let nature bear the consequences of her own "blunder" and undo by death what she had defectively begun.

The child died. The newspapers, naturally, made a sensational story of the case, raising the question of both the moral and legal right and wrong of the doctor's course. A coroner's jury of six distinguished medical men acquitted the physican of legal guilt, but the moral question still remains to be settled by public sentiment and the judgment of the medical profession.

It will probably be a theme for debate in medical literature and in the general press for some time to come.

THE TWO VIEWS

OPINION seems to be divided into two views. One view holds that life in itself is not to be regarded as sacred and inviolable, but that its sacredness depends upon such considerations as its usefulness, its possibility of making a contribution to the welfare of society or at least being able to take a person's place in the social order, its possibilities of happiness for itself as a person among persons, and its possession of the elements of moral responsibility.

Lacking these a life is better out of the world than in it, and the world also is better. From this point of view the practice of euthanasia, or the painless hastening of death, for such incurables, is approved. The physician in this infant's case held this view and allowed the child to die.

We believe this is a shallow and vicious point of view, and we rejoice in the vigor with which the larger proportion of the ethical leaders of the medical profession condemn it.

The other view holds that life is intrinsically sacred. It is the one elementally given fact in the world. Life is alive with unpredictable contingencies. What curve it might take, what undiagnosed conditions will affect its development, what curative resources may be resident within it human intelligence cannot determine. Even the combined wisdom of the most highly trained scientists may be upset by some factor of which the Creator knows.

God gives life; only God may take it away. It is the duty of physicians to save life, and it is the duty of society to accept whatsoever consequences the presence of life brings with it. It is by the acceptance of these consequences and by the struggle to correct the consequences and to improve the conditions of birth and growth so that such consequences may at last be eliminated that society makes moral progress, not by the easy avoidance of the consequences through the usurpation of the Creator's prerogative.

To a mind not corrupted with the conceits of science the ethical aspects of this case are neither obscure nor ambiguous.

The man who comes into the world with the notion that he is really going to instruct it in matters of the highest importance, may thank his stars if he escapes with a whole skin.—Schopenhauer.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

A Decade With a Bishop.

There is a church in North Brookfield, Mass., which ten years ago went over bodily to the Protestant Episcopal fellowship, taking its property along. The ministers became Episcopalians. The congregation has been happy in the new fellowship. In former days it was known as Union Congregational church. This church recently celebrated a decade in this fellowship.

Dr. Clark Goes Away for Winter.

Having recovered sufficiently from his attack of typhoid fever to travel, Dr. Francis E. Clark of the Christian Endeavor movement has gone to Honolulu to remain for the winter, where he will have an ideal climate in which to regain his strength. Next spring, if he is able, he plans to go on to Japan and China to participate in some Christian Endeavor gatherings there. During his illness he received three personal letters from President Wilson.

Revive Interest in Prayer.

The Christian world seems to be giving new attention to the subject of prayer. Two recent books of note bear upon the subject, that by Hastings, entitled "Prayer," and Prof. Harry Emerson Fosdick's "The Meaning of Prayer." A number of churches are providing special classes this winter for the special study of this Christian doctrine, among them Pilgrim Congregational church of Seattle, of which Rev. Hugh Elmer Brown is pastor. He has organized the One Hundred Religious Study Club.

A Go-to-Church Stamp.

The American Tract Society has gotten out a "Go-to-church stamp." This is affixed to the back of the envelope on the flap. The society sells the stamps and uses the profit in circulating Christian literature in Spanish in South American countries.

Encouraging Building of The Manse.

The Presbyterians have a definite movement to encourage the building of homes for ministers. The Board of Church Erection helps in the building of manses and are now collecting a number of photographs to show "before and after taking" in the matter of erecting these buildings. They state that the building of the manse means the lengthening of the pastorate.

New Educational Leader for the Presbyterians.

The Board of Publication and Sabbath school work of the Presbyterian denomination has spent some time in looking for a leader to take the position of Director of Religious Education. The choice has fallen upon Dr. Robt. W. Veach of Rochester, and has just recently been announced. His work in his synod in promoting plans for religious education, and his equally great interest in pastoral evangelism has seemed to offer a combination that was pleasing to the board that called him.

Canadian Presbyterians Vote Again.

Although the provincial bodies have voted overwhelmingly in favor of union with the Methodists and Congregationalists, the Presbyterians of Canada face another kind of a vote. The antis have threatened a split if union is forced, so it is proposed to poll the membership of each local congregation to ascertain, to the last man, how many Presbyterians are opposed to the union in Canada. The interesting fact is that the government proposed for the united church is more Presbyterian than anything else, the Congregationlists and Methodists having agreed to this as a proper compromise. The opponents of union propose agreements of comity to remove competition in the home mission field.

Rural Church Experts Meet.

The Commission on Church and Country Life of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has been making a rural survey in Ohio of a most exhaustive character. The commission will meet at Columbus, December 8-10 at which time the executive committee of the Federal Council will also be present. The Commission on Church and Country Life is headed by the Honorable Gifford Pinchot as chairman, and the secretary of the commission is Rev. Charles O. Gill. Among the speakers at the conference will be Fred. B. Smith and Rev. Harry F. Ward. President Wilson has promised conditionally to be present and sit as one of the Presbyterian delegates.

Help Persecuted Armenians.

Some of the Armenians who have been persecuted by the diabolical fury of Mohammedan hordes took refuge in the mission premises of the American Presbyterians recently. Some fifteen thousand people were herded together for four months and four thousand people died from infectious diseases, chiefly typhus and measles. Of the eighteen missionaries, thirteen were ill sometime during the period, and some of them died. Bishop Stileman of the Anglican church of Persia has made a report of some very stirring facts:

"Other refugees were cared for by the French Roman Catholic Mission, but sixty men were taken from their premises and carried off to be murdered. One prominent man escaped by flight; his two little sons were put to death in his stead. Some Christians at Salmas took refuge in Moslem houses. In order to obtain their names a testimonial was circulated from house to house, to be signed by the Christians, stating that they had been protected by the Moslems. All who signed were assured of their safety. But the men were then seized and led out to a place about two miles distant, where arrangements had been made for their massacre. Two fields were covered with the corpses of the men, whose arms had been tied together before they were shot down. In other places ladders were brought and the men were tied with their heads sticking through the rounds of the ladders. Then their heads were hacked off, and their bodies flung into the wells and sewer pits. More than seven hundred men were killed in Salmas, and over eight hundred in neighboring villages. It is known that forty-nine Christian villages were entirely destroyed. No doubt this diabolical work was carried out chiefly by the Kurds, but they were assisted by Turkish troops. In one place 200 Turkish soldiers were expected to behave decently and to keep the tribesmen in check. But instead of doing so, they went to two villages which had been spared. They found fifty-one men there, all of whom they led out to the graveyard at night and massacred. They then took away the women and children, who were absolutely in their power."

Friends of Christian Hebrews Meet.

The Chicago Christian Hebrews Mission of Chicago called a conference of all those who were interested in the conversion of the Jew to the faith in Jesus Christ and this conference was held Nov. 16- 19. The list of speakers included the Rev. John Timothy Stone, D. D. pastor Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago; the Rev. C. I. Scofield, D. D., editor Scofield Bible; the Rev. Robert M. Russell, D. D., Moody Bible Institue; the Rev. George L. Robinson, D. D., professor of biblical literature and English Bible, McCormick Theological Seminary; the Rev. Canon F. E. Howitt, D. D., Anglican Church, Canada; the Rev. S. B. Rohold, pastor Hebrew Christian Church, Toronto, Canada; the Rev. Paul Rader, pastor Moody Church; the Rev. Delavan L. Pierson, D. D., editor Missionary Review of the World, and other well-known Bible students.

Nation-Wide Preaching Mission.

Something very like a simultaneous evangelistic campaign is in vogue in the Protestant Episcopal church this week. Most Episcopal churches began on November 21 the holding of special mid-week services in which churchmanship is to be explained and the membership of the churches called to a more devout life. In most parishes, there will be a visiting rector from some other parish. The evangelical dioceses are taking special interest in this movement.

Religious Liberty in Peru.

The Congress of the republic of Peru in South America has recently amended the constitution of the republic by removing the disabilities under which Protestants have worked. The old constitution read, "The nation professes the Roman Catholic Apostolic Religion, and the state protects it, and does not permit the exercise of any other." The last nine words of this clause were stricken out. There has been Protestant work in Peru for the past ten years but it has operated under handicaps which are now removed. President Partio did not sign the amendment, as he is a brother of a priest but allowed it to become a law without his signature. There were violent scenes in the Congress during the debate on the matter, and a priest rushed into the building and tore up the copy of the amendment a speaker was reading. In spite of this and other disorderly incidents, the Congress passed the measure by a very large majority. It is thought that this happening will further the movement to secure larger religious liberty in Chile.

America May Lose Dr. Jowett.

Since Dr. R. J. Campbell has been received into the fellowship of the Anglican church, there has been much speculation as to who the next pastor of the well-known City Temple would be. There are persistent rumors that a call will be issued to Dr. John Henry Jowett of New York and that he will accept. He is British by birth and has had only one pastorate in America.

Baptists Oppose Union in Philippines.

The Evangelical Union of the Philippines has formulated a program for the union of Protestant bodies on the islands and in December a conference will be held to perfect the plans. The Baptists have taken no definite steps officially with regard to the proposed merger, but some Baptist missionaries are consuming much space in the denominational press opposing the plan. These writers assume that the Baptist denomination represents New Testament religion, and that to join in the merger would be to leave this kind of religion without an advocate.

A Denomination That Tithes.

We may well study the statistics of the Seventh Day Adventists. This Church has grown from a body of 5,440 people in 1870 to one (at home and abroad) of 104,526 in 1910. They are tithers and the result of their faithful giving is worth noting. In 1870 this amounted to $2,182.46; in 1913, to $1,771,989.60. This represents a total per capita gift of $23.42. In America the per capita gift is $28.93.

Congregationalists Meet President.

One of the most important acts of the National Council of Congregationalists held at New Haven, was the appointment of a committee of five, consisting of Rev. C. F. Carter of Hartford, W. W. Mills of Marietta, O., Rev. C. S. Mills of Montclair, N. J., D. P. Jones of Minneapolis, Guilford Dudley of Poughkeepsie and Judge Epaphroditus Peck of Bristol, Ct., to present to President Wilson at the White House, Oct. 28, the memorials of the Council touching national preparedness and the Armenian atrocities. The former said; in part: "Recognizing the weighty responsibility resting upon the President of the United States and commending the wisdom and strength he has shown, we appeal to him and to the members of Congress highly to cherish, in all their deliberations, as an advocate of peace and to take no steps toward increased armament not necessitated by grave considerations of national defense. We urge them to bend the energy of our government at this crisis in human history to working out in co-operation with other governments a plan of international organization that shall render the recurrence of the present world tragedy impossible. We trust that nothing may be done which shall hereafter hinder the republic in any office of leadership or mediation to which in the providence of God she may be called." President Wilson received this delegation with marked courtesy and consideration. The members were impressed with his openminded attitude and with his evident desire to receive any hint or suggestion that might throw light upon his course. The President's reply was substantially as follows: "I thank you, gentlemen, for the presentation of these resolutions and particularly for the manner in which you have presented them. You bring to me, I may say, that which is more deeply upon my heart than anything else. The course of the nation has been such that any construction of its attitude as other than the advocate of peace could only be the result of willful misinterpretation. I assure you I am in entire sympathy with the spirit and intent of the resolution you present."

THE WAY TO HEAVEN.

"Who seeks for heaven alone to save his soul
May keep the path, but will not reach the goal;
While he who walks in love may wander far,
Yet God will bring him where the blessed are."

Will You Read This Twice?

A very important question to-day which every housekeeper must decide for herself is whether she prefers pure, cream of tartar baking powder like Royal or whether she is willing to use baking powder made of inferior substitutes which do not add healthful qualities to the food.

One kind is easily distinguished from the other, since the laws of various States require the ingredients to be printed upon the label. If anyone is in doubt which kind is most healthful, it is worth while to ask the family doctor. Then decide.

And when once a decision is reached let no advertisement or dealer's argument or canvasser's solicitation change the decision. It is not a question of a few cents or of pleasing a salesman. It is a question of health.

If this appeals to you as reasonable and sensible advice, it is worth reading twice. And it is worth remembering.

Disciples Table Talk

Senator Commins Speaks at Drake Chapel on Preparedness.

Senator Albert B. Cummins, of Iowa, talked recently at Drake University chapel on "Preparedness." He made a "middle-of-the-road" speech, it is reported. He called attention to the amazing fact that the so-called civilized nations have not taken a step forward in the settlement of international diffieulties in the last two hundred years. We are still under the sway of the old diplomatic ideas of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, so far as international law goes. And he stated that "until the world turns its attention to this we will have war, prepared or unprepared." We need a world-wide education in the interests of international mediation and arbitration. "Our first and paramount duty," he declared, "is to prepare for peace—not war."

Atlanta, Ill., Sunday-school Supports Best Scholar at Eureka.

A plan that is worthy of trial by other up-to-date schools is carried out with success by the Atlanta, Ill., school, where R. H. Newton leads. This school pays for a scholarship in Eureka College each year for the young person who makes the highest grade in Bible-study during the year. This honor was won by Miss Harvel Crandell the past year, and she is now at Eureka. At the Atlanta annual meeting, which was held Nov. 7, it was reported that 99 persons were received into the membership during the year, and for all purposes a total of $7,000 was contributed. The building secretary reported that $14,000 besides interest has been paid on new building pledges during the past two years and that there remained $7,000 to be paid, which is covered by pledges that are considered good. On Sunday afternoon, Nov. 14, forty men of the church made the annual Every Member Canvass and the evening was given over to hearing the reports of the canvassers. The reports showed that over two hundred had signed pledges. Mr. Newton has closed his fifth year of service at Atlanta. His anniversary sermon was on "Lives that Count."

W. N. Briney at Wabash Avenue, Kansas City.

The preacher during a recent ten-day revival at Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Mo., was Rev. W. N. Briney, of Broadway church, Louisville. L. J. Marshall writes that in every sermon Christ was held up above all else, and that each evening Mr. Briney brought an important message both for Christians and non-Christians. Mr. J. M. Sexton, a teacher in the Independence High School, led the music. Seventeen persons were added to the membership during the services.

Kansas City Ministers to Meet Nov. 29.

The Christian Ministers' Alliance of Kansas City and vicinity will hold its November meeting on the 29th, at 10:30 a. m. in First church, Kansas City. Evangelist James Small will read a paper on "The Revival We Need and the Way to Get It." Every preacher in reach of Kansas City at the time is invited to attend. These meetings are being well attended and are resulting in good, writes W. M. Mayfield, secretary. Within a radius of fifty miles and less the Alliance shares equally the railroad expenses of those attending. Those living beyond the fifty mile limit pay the excess themselves, but benefit by the pooling for the fifty miles.

Every Member Canvass in Los Angeles Results in Religious Revival.

After a month of diligent preparation, the Every Member Canvas was conducted in First Church, Los Angeles, Russell F. Thrapp, pastor, Sunday afternoon, October 31. The program included work by many committees, special sermons by the pastor, prayer meeting topics considering different phases of the canvass, and the service of several people in the office for some time. Forty-nine groups went out in forty-nine automobiles and covered over one hundred square miles. The amount pledged for current expenses was raised from $100.30 per week to $160 per week. One hundred and fifty-six new pledgers were enlisted. The first Sunday after the canvass nearly one hundred new envelopes were found in the plates. A great mass meeting was held on the Wednesday night following the canvass when reports were heard and tabulated upon the blackboard. The canvass has resulted in a great revival of religion in the church. Attendance upon the services has increased and the men of the church are delighted with the discovery that it is possible for them to do personal work, and are eager for further tasks. Discovery was made that the work of preparation is very important and the result of the canvass depends largely upon this. The consecration of those who pledged for service was shown in the fact that every man who had pledged was present on Sunday of the canvass to do his work.

George A. Miller Preaches in Car Barn.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, D. C., holds meetings regularly in the car barn at Lincoln Park, Washington, every Tuesday morning. George A. Miller was one of the recent speakers at these services. Mr. Miller is preaching a series of sermons at Ninth Street Church, dealing with "First Century Christianity, With Practical Lessons for Today." The following are the topics for November and December: "World Preparation for Christianity." "The Wilderness Cry." "The Fountain Head." "From Earth to Heaven." "The Divine Messenger." "A Preacher's First Sermon." "Baptism with a New Meaning." "The Power of Memory."

Bible Study Conference for Spokane Church.

J. E. Davis, pastor at Central church, Spokane, Wash., writes that he is conducting a "Bible Study Conference" in his church, and suggester that the idea may work well in other downtown churches. There is a class Wednesday night at 8 o'clock, and one Sunday morning at 9:45; also two midweek, midafternoon classes. It is expected to enlarge the number of these midweek, midafternoon, suburban classes. The three months' Bible study is closing with a study of the Book of Luke. Five lectures are given on this book, three of them by selected lecturers, the other two by Mr. Davis. During the period of this study the pastor asks the people of the church to read studiously through the Book of Luke.

Studying Religion at Pontiac, Ill.

Ernest Reed, pastor at Pontiac, Ill., writes that this congregation has just completed the study of Frank Waller Allen's series of articles on "The Religion of Jesus" at the mid-week prayer-meeting. This series recently appeared in The Christian Century. That the articles were appreciated is shown by the fact that several requests have been made to take them up again in the near future and make the study even more intensive. On Sunday evening, Nov. 14, this church enjoyed the presence of Edward Scribner Ames, of Chicago, who brought a timely and helpful message on "The New Enthusiasm for Religion." The Pontiac church is becoming increasingly interested in all forward movements.

The Fillmore Genius Continues.

The musical genius of the Fillmore family, beginning with A. D. Fillmore of the early days and continued by the sons, James H., Charles M., Fred A., and Aden L.. Fillmore is heard of also in the third generation. Miss Fred Fillmore, daughter of James H. Fillmore, of Norwood, Cincinnati, has won praise from churches which have enjoyed her assistance in evangelistic meetings, as soloist, song leader and personal worker. Miss Fillmore is a graduate of the Metropolitan School of Music, Cincinnati. She has a rich contralto voice.

Professor Athearn's "Church School" Reaches Fourth Edition.

The popularity of Walter S. Athearn's work is evidenced by the fact that his "Church School" has now reached its fourth edition. Marion Lawrance declared at a recent state Sunday-school convention that this is "the best Sunday-school book published in the past twenty-five years." Professor Athearn's new book, "The City Institute," is having a good sale.

A New Edition of Edgar D. Jones' "The Inner Circle."

The Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, publishers of Edgar De Witt Jones' volume "The Inner Circle" is bringing out a second edition, of this book. The first edition was published a little over a year ago.

In Memory of F. M. Coulter.

Charles F. Hutslar writes further of the death and funeral of F. M. Coulter, son of B. F. Coulter, who was for many years a leading pastor among California Disciples. Mention was made in last week's "Century" of the death of Mr. Coulter, who was a prominent business man of Los Angeles. The funeral services were held on Oct. 29 at Broadway church, in that city, and were conducted by Mr. Hutslar, assisted by Baker P. Lee and Judge Bledsoe. Mr. Coulter was an active and popular member of this congregation, and it is estimated that fifteen hundred friends and business associates attended the funeral.

Graham Frank as Evangelist.

W. F. Richardson. pastor at First church, Kansas City, Mo., writes that three weeks' evangelistic services conducted by Graham Frank, of Liberty, Mo., have just closed, with thirty-six persons added to the church membership. Gordon Brown, Jr., led in the singing. A significant feature of the effort was that many strangers were interested and enlisted through Mr. Frank's preaching.

John L. Brandt at Jacksonville, Ill.

The revival services conducted by John L. Brandt, of First church, St. Louis, at Jacksonville, Ill., are meeting with success. An unique feature of the services is brief talks by the evangelist at the close of the regular programs, on customs in foreign lands, illustrated by stereopticon slides. Several times during the course of the meeting Mr. Brandt has emphasized the fact that it is the Lord's work he is engaged in and not the work of the denomination only and that anyone making a confession during the meetings stands at perfect liberty to take fellowship with any other church today.

PRAY-LISTEN-GIVE

of C. W. B. M. Day will occur on the first Lord's Day in December. For twenty-five years this has been a great day in the churches, for the education of the people in the work of Christ at home and abroad, and for inspiration to larger giving, both of service and money.

The appeal of the day for this year should be the strongest in its history, for the demands upon the treasury of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will be greater this year than ever before.

We are maintaining Missions in India, China, Africa, Porto Rico, Jamaica, Mexico, Canada and South America, besides the great work being done in the United States. Our force of 500 workers must be maintained, together with necessary facilities in buildings and equipment.

WE GO FORWARD trusting God through Christian people to make this great service possible. We appeal to you to help us, that we fail not.

WHAT ABOUT THE NICKEL?

Our churches expend annually over $4,000,000 per year in the building of new houses and about the same amount in the support of their ministers.

Plainly they count these their two chief assets.

Between the two the ministry would undoubtedly be ranked the greater, but, in one respect, we act just the other way.

One of the especial cares of the Trustees is to keep the building insured against fire, and in certain sections, against cyclones. And yet only rarely is a church burned.

But what church ever insured its minister against old age, death or disability? And yet these are certain events.

We have too much invested in our preachers to leave them unprotected, except as they may look after the matter themselves.

Never mind just now what either church or preacher ought to do in larger salaries or better management, the majority of preachers are actually unprepared to die, to live into old age or to be crippled.

And the church is the chief sufferer in the long run, for hundreds quit preaching to go into business, hundreds take on "side lines" that reduce their efficiency and the makeshifts of these and the hardships of others discredit the ministry and the church. In the eyes of many promising young men whom we ought to claim for the greatest work in the world.

Why continue such ruinous losses when an amount equal to 5 per cent. of each minister's salary, paid to the Board of Ministerial Relief, with their other receipts, would build up an adequate pension system?

If our ministry is worth $4,000,000 a year and its efficiency can be doubled by a mere nickel on the dollar additional, will we withhold the nickel?

New Officers of Nebraska State Organization.

At the Nebraska convention recently held at Bethany, the following officers were elected for the new year: C. R. Neel of Bethany, president; George L. Peters, vice-president; L. C. Oberlies of Lincoln, treasurer; H. J. Hill of Humboldt, secretary; Dan Troxel of Falls City, Bible-school superintendent; and H. G. Knowles of the North Platte Christian Endeavor, superintendent. Manson E. Miller of Kearney was elected as chairman of the board, and will have the direction of the work for the year.

Springfield, Ill., C. W. B. M. in Successful Rally.

A total of twenty-two names were added and seventeen who will probably join later to the membership of the C. W. B. M. of First church, Springfield, Ill., is the result of a three-days' rally held by the local organization. A thorough canvass was made of the entire church membership. The canvass continued throughout one day and in the evening returns were made at the church in connection with a banquet. Covers were laid for one hundred at the banquet. Besides the reports of the canvass, Mrs. Lura V. Porter of Carthage, state president of the C. W. B. M., gave a talk on "International Work" and Miss Jennie Call, state corresponding secretary, of the state work.

Brass Band Leads Des Moines Congregation to Its New Church Home.

Headed by a brass band, the congregation of Grant Park church, Des Moines, 1,000 strong, marched from their old house of worship to their new church home, on a recent Sunday. Frank W. Mutchler, pastor, conducted the services. Mr. Mutchler announced that revival services would be begun in the church Nov. 19. The meetings are being conducted by Wm. J. Minges.

Donate Winter Supplies for St Louis Orphans' Home.

Under the leadership of B. L. Smith of Moberly, Mo., and W. A. Morrison of Huntsville, Randolph County, Missouri, is preparing to send a car load donation of winter supplies to the Christian Orphans' Home of St Louis. Word has just been received from Pettis County, Mo., that a car load donation will be sent from the churches there for Thanksgiving. This has been a practice with the Pettis County people for years.

New Church at St. Louisville, Licking County, Ohio, Dedicated.

The hopes of the Disciples of Christ in the vicinity of St. Louisville, for the past twenty-five years, was realized Nov. 7, when a splendid new church was dedicated by W. R. Walker of Canton, Ohio. The building and grounds cost about $6,000, practically all of which was raised by the conclusion of the evening service. Myers W. Cooper, of Cincinnati, writes that much credit is due Clarence A. Hill, the pastor, who has worked night and day that the good people of St. Louisville might realize the splendid results attained. One of the happiest persons present at the dedication service was Mrs. Clara Coffman, who has kept the interest alive in the St. Louisville community for the past quarter century. Mr. Cooper was born and reared near St. Louisville and delivered the afternoon address on "The Value of Churches to a Community."

I. J. Cahill at Zanesville, Ohio, Rally.

The church at Zanesville, Ohio, observed November 7 as rally day. It was the first anniversary of their entrance into their new house of worship. I. J. Cahill, state secretary had charge.

Home-Coming at Coleta, Ill.

Former members from Sterling, Rock Falls, and other towns were present at the Rally Day and Home-Coming service at Coleta, Ill., on Nov. 14. There were seven persons present who had been members of the congregation for forty years. C. H. Hands has done a good work in this important field, but is closing his services here. He will take up a settled pastorate or evangelistic work.

What Disciple Preachers are Saying on Vital Issues

Frank Waller Allen on "The Gospel for the Modern Mind."

The necessity of loving one's neighbor better than oneself was brought to the attention of the congregation at First church Springfield, Ill., by Frank Waller Allen, its pastor.

"The gospel for the modern mind," said Mr. Allen, "is salvation by service. The old order 'saves' the individual by some means outside of himself, the altruistic ideal saves him through what he does for human betterment. One is individualistic, for another world than ours, offering a 'get-rick-quick' salvation. The other is social, having to do with the life that now is. The first emphasizes creed, the second deed. The one is based on a formula, the other on conduct and character.

"According to the old idea a man's 'religion' is his private affair. He tells us that it is a matter strictly between himself and his God. It performs its chief function on Sunday. It calls the week day secular. The church has to do with the salvation of the individual from hell and for heaven, but must not tamper with life. It must have nothing to say about business, for business is business; nor politics, for the preacher, concerning himself with the hell which is to come, can certainly know nothing of the hell which is; nor with the cause of the workingman or the child-laborer, or the dwellers in slums, houses of prostitution or saloons, 'for the Lord will take care of them.' Its 'practical Christianity' works itself out in temporary remedial methods rather than in preventive constructive measures.

The Spirit of the Times.

"The dominant force in the religious world today is the social ideal. It recognizes that it is that which men do together which makes the world bad or good; that co-operation for welfare brings the only genuine salvation; and that to take up the cross means death to self while giving up service and love to the multitudes.

"It means that religion may not be separated from life, for it constitutes the permeation of life—the marketplace, the home and the social circle—with that same divine spirit of service to the whole which led a Galilean Carpenter from the shop to death upon a cross It means that a man's religion is the affair of the people, as well as of the sanctuary, for it is only as he serves men through Christ that he serves God. And the people have a right to know what a man is doing with the talent with which God entrusted him to be used in their behalf."

Scott Anderson, of South Park, Los Angeles, Asks, "Should the Church Be Active in Politics?"

"This is a momentous question and one the church must soon decide. On this decision her future very largely depends, for in this age of change and reconstruction an institution that claims to be 'the light of the world' and yet does not lead in national and social transformation is doomed to failure and death.

"The church, in her languishing condition, is now paying the penalty of duty neglected towards the organized life of the world. If she would live and be useful in the present and future, she must speedily awaken to the very evident fact that society and nations are not composed of so many individual units, unrelated and independent of each other, that there is a social and national life of all the people just as surely as there is a personal life of each one, and on a much larger scale, and as in the human body each member's health depends on the vigor of the entire body, so each individual's physical, mental and moral welfare is determined very largely by the status of society of which he is a part, hence each Christian's politicel responsibility.

"The church that seeks only to save souls, will fail in that, while the church that aims to save everything in sight will be honored by her Lord and will score in every sphere.

"I long to see all Christians in one political party cleaning up the nation for Christ."

Valparaiso Christian Hospital May be Rejuvenated.

Plans have been set upon foot for the rejuvenation of the Valparaiso Christian Hospital. This hospital has done splendid work, but it has been inadequately supported. The Board of Managers of the hospital, under the leadership of Claude E. Hill, pastor of the church at Valparaiso, are planning to inform the people concerning the work of the hospital in the confident belief that, if they knew of the splendid missionary service this institution is rendering, they would not permit it to languish for funds.

Detroit Gets Another Church.

F. P. Arthur, of Detroit, Mich., reports the dedication of the East Grand Blvd. church, Detroit last month. C. J. Tannar, pastor of Central, conducted the service. It was largely due to his plan and direction, states Mr. Arthur, that churches have been planted in three most stragetic centers of Detroit. This has been done within nine years. Philip H. Gray, of Central Church, has also been a leader in financing and directing the last two enterprises. He gave the lot for this church and will see to its financial interests until it is safe. The location is first-class and the building is planned for a large Bible school It represents an investment of over $18,000. A new man will soon be chosen for this field.

Iowa's Attorney General Addresses Ottumwa Church Brotherhood.

Attorney General George Cosson, of Iowa, recently spoke before eight hundred men of the Workingman's Triangle Brotherhood. The meeting was held at the Davis St. Christian church. The Iowa orator spoke on the theme, "Our Country," and emphasized the ideals of good citizenship. "Human life," said Mr. Cosson, "gets less protection in the United States than any place in the world." Speaking of crime, Mr. Cosson pointed out how the use of liquor combined with crime was a great detriment to the country. "You could gravel all the roads in Iowa, if those who would use liquor would taper off from the stuff in a period of three years." "While crime is running at large," said he, "we find that only four out of every one hundred offenders are brought to justice in our country, while in the European countries the lowest number of criminals prosecuted is eleven times more than we have in America. The people don't enforce laws or do not respect the laws, but all the time they want new laws. It is not the law, but the enforcement of the law that brings effect." What we also need is courage in our public officials," said the speaker in closing.

Evangelizing Negro Sunday Schools.

The American Christian Missionary Society undertook a greater task than it knew when it put Professor P. H. Moss as evangelist among the negro Sunday Schools. But it has proven to be one of those big tasks that are delightful in their bigness. Everywhere Prof. Moss has gone he has received an ovation. Those sections that he has not yet visited are clamoring for him to come. The Bible Schools of our land should be generous in their contributions for the American Society that it may go on in this great work. At present Prof. Moss is trying to cover all the states. This is expensive and makes his time divided to such an extent as to interfere with his real efficiency. He needs associates for his important service.

TRANSYLVANIA COLLEGE.

Dr. Thos. B. Macartney, dean of Transylvania College, Lexington, Ky., returned to the college recently from Nashville, Tenn., where he attended the twenty-first annual meeting of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools of the South. The meeting was held at Vanderbilt University. The application of Transylvania College was considered by the executive committee at this meeting and the institution was admitted to membership. Not until recently had Transylvania become eligible to membership in the Southern College Association because of the existence of the Preparatory Department. It was deemed necessary to maintain such a preparatory school in connection with the college on account of the retarded development of the high schools in those states from which Transylvania most largely drew her student body. However, a little more than a year ago the preparatory school was abolished and an application was made for membership in the Southern Association, with the result above indicated.

NEW MEXICO-WEST TEXAS NOTES.

S. R. McClure assisted O. W. Hearn in a meeting at Roy, resulting in the reorganization of the church, the dedication of the church building, and twenty-five additions. Mr. Hearn, who has served the church at Tucumcari for two years, preaching, also at Roy and other points in that vicinity, has resigned; he has done excellent work and the board hopes to retain him in the field.

Randolph Cook seems to be gripping the situation at Albuquerque firmly. Mr. Cook has received thirteen into the church since assuming the pastoral work.

Perry J. Rice, of First church, El Paso, is closing his sixth year of ministry there; these have been fruitful years; in practically every particular the cause has doubled its strength during that time.

Frank Talmadge has resigned at Roswell. Mr. Talmadge did a fruitful work at Roswell; two marked features of his success were an exceptionally large number of confessions and the addition to the church building; he will remain "at home" in Roswell.

Wm. LeMay, of Hennessee, Oklahoma, having purchased a ranch near Missilla Park, where the State Agriculture and Mechanical Arts are located, hopes to be able to lead the church there which has been without a minister for several months.

J. H. Whistler and wife are enjoying their work at Las Vegas. Mrs. Whistler is a member of the board of trustees of the Las Vegas Hospital and Mr. Whistler is president of the minister's association which covers a territory for fifty miles around Las Vegas.

J. H. Whistler,
Permanent Secretary.

A Letter to Pastors

Some pastors refrain from taking a hand in the selection of the Sunday-School Literature, leaving that entirely to the superintendent. But such pastors are few and far between in these better days of purposeful religious education. The pastor with a "conscience" concerning the literature used in the school is the outstanding man today. Such a man is Elmer Ward Cole, of Huntington, Ind. Over a year ago Mr. Cole saw a copy of The Conquest, our weekly for adult and young people's classes. He determined that The Conquest was the sort of a publication he wanted his people to read, and believed so strongly in the paper that he himself paid for a quarter's subscription to The Conquest for his organized classes. He did not have to pay for the second quarter. The Conquest won! Here is what Mr. Cole says of the paper, after his school has used it for over a year:

"The Conquest is a Bible-school journal of character, dignity and spiritual inspiration. There is nothing sensational or wishy-washy about it. It generates a passion in its readers for the worth while things of life. It has about it the atmosphere of culture."

Are you as a pastor interested in the literature that goes into your school? Are you willing to see to it that The Conquest has a trial with your organized classes? If so, fill out the following blank and mail to

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th STREET, CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

"The Meaning of Baptism"

BY CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, Editor of "The Christian Century"

"This is probably the most important book in English on the place of baptism in Christianity written since Mogley published his 'Baptismal Regeneration' in 1856."

That is what the New York Christian Advocate says of this remarkable volume.

The Congregationalist: "A daring and splendidly Christian piece of work."

The Homiletic Review: "The spirit of the book is delightful and raises new hopes where none had seemed possible."

The Churchman (Episcopal): "An interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism."

St. Louis Christian Advocate: "Good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents."

Baptist Standard (Dallas, Tex.): "This is a very interesting work, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this year!"

The Baptist Banner: "A new book of more than ordinary interest. It is learned, and is written in excellent spirit and fine style."

The Christian Endeavor World: "A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view but building a bridge toward the affusionist view."

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination): "Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God."

The Advance (Congregationalist): "We believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt."

The Christian Union Quarterly (Disciple): "The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines."

The United Presbyterian: "An unusual book. Written by a Disciple and the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion."

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren): "The significance of this work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement."

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist): "A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few."

The Presbyterian Advance: "The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which has often been asked of him by correspondents and readers—'What is the best book on baptism?'"

The Christian Intelligencer (Reformed): "The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal."

Zion's Herald (Methodist): "The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of the leading publication in the Disciples' denomination."

The Continent (Presbyterian): "It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity of immersion, and he writes that 'the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever stands behind the practice of immersion.'"

The Disciples and Militarism

A UNIQUE RESPONSIBILITY RESTS UPON THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST IN THE PRESENT POLITICAL CRISIS.

Let us look once again at the crux to which the developments in our national life have brought us. It is a profoundly moral situation which now confronts the United States—a moral situation whose prime factors are rooted in the religious convictions of a large proportion of the Christian people of this land.

A proposed national policy of elaborate preparation for war has run plump against a slowly formed but fairly well matured conscience that war is essentially anti-Christian, and that the fear of war and the preparation for war are among the chief causes of war. This conscience has been matured in a long-continued period of peace when the average mind could only with difficulty invest the possibility of war with any degree of vividness or reality.

But the present European conflict has aroused both the fear and the fighting spirit of many of our citizens, and the principles acclaimed in the piping times of peace as the very truth of God have become pale and unreal, or are held in actual contempt.

Among the most violent leaders of the militaristic movement are some of those who before the war began won international fame as champions of the peace ideal.

It is this lapse of some of our citizens and the pallid hesitation of many others that constitute the moral crisis through which the nation will pass in the next twelve months. Ten years ago and two years ago the nation would have voted overwhelmingly against an elaborate increase in our naval and military equipment. We would have done so on moral principle, not merely because there happened to be no enemy in sight.

Are we now to abrogate moral principles because we are face to face with a concrete case—or fear that we may be face to face with one—to which these principles should be applied?

Are our moral principles, wrought out in calm and quiet, useless in time of stress and storm? Are the laws of human life revealed by Jesus Christ fit only to be used as aesthetic abstractions in formal worship, but wholly unfit for the rough and tumble of a nation's internal and international policies?

There are brave, strong souls in the nation in whom the light has not failed, though their comrades are driven by storm and fear into a panic of hysteria and unfaith.

It is to these leaders and their cause that the Disciples of Christ owe a peculiar responsibility. They have taken their stand upon an invisible foundation; they rest their case upon intangible powers; they make their appeal to the constructive forces of the spiritual order which the eye of Caesar cannot discern.

But this invisible foundation and these intangible powers and this imminent spiritual order have been revealed to them by Jesus of Galilee. Consciously or unconsciously, it is from him they derive their insight and their courage.

We Disciples of Christ have for a century been preparing, in theory at least, to be their support and inspiration. "Back to Christ" has been the motto over all our endeavors.

We have striven to recover Christ from the place where theology and ecclesiasticism had hidden him. We have tried to read his words as if they had been written only yesterday, removing from them the overgrowth of centuries of false interpretation. We have tried to approach Jesus as if we were meeting him for the first time, with virgin minds uncorrupted by the friendly falsehoods his followers have told about him.

We have become a great company of a million and a quarter of men and women—all of us bound together by no other tie than the purpose to find out what Jesus Christ teaches and to practice that.

Does not a crisis like this in the moral life of our nation throw a wonderful illumination upon the ideals of the Disciples? Is there one among us—is there one soul that reads these words—who does not wistfully wish that through all the years we Disciples had been more in earnest in our effort to know the mind of Christ and to develop among ourselves a high purposefulness for doing his will?

What an immeasurable force for a new and Christian order of political righteousness we Disciples might now be!

Suppose this virile and aggressive body of Disciples of Christ was so fully dedicated to the practice of the teaching of Jesus and to the support of others in its practice that every one of its hundreds of thousands of voters could be expected to vote for a policy of pacifism and against militarism next year—would President Wilson have yielded so easily to the pressure of political expediency and sought re-election in a weak compromise of principles which in an earlier stage of his administration he seemed to avow?

As it is, the pacifist sentiment in America is unorganized. It needs an organ. It needs a religious organ—not merely a political party—for it is essentially a religious sentiment.

It is not too late for the Disciples of Christ to consecrate themselves to this providentially arranged opportunity. From every pulpit in the land sermons like that of Dr. Medbury in his great Des Moines pulpit should blaze forth with prophetic flame.

Whether other Christian leaders share our convictions or differ sharply and even scornfully from us—let us stand together having one mind and a social conscience that cannot be overborne by the taunts of those who put their trust in arms and armies.

Back to the mount of transfiguration our Christian nation must be led that in the presence of Christ the Voice may say again: "Hear ye him!"

Upon whom more than upon the Disciples of Christ has God laid the responsibility to lead the people back to his Son?

The Master Book

BY JOSEPH FORT NEWTON

TIME is a river and books are boats. Many volumes have started down the stream of years only to be wrecked and buried forever in its sands. Few indeed are the books that live out a single century. Here as in all else the law of the survival of the fittest applies, and there is no critic so terrible as Time. No book lives save as it tells of that in the life of man which grows not old and fades not away. Homer lives not simply for his art, but for his story of great adventure, his pictures of man and woman, of love and joy and death in the days when life was new. Virgil lives not only because he fashioned some of the noblest lines ever molded by mortal lips, but because he sings of the wayfaring of the soul in a far off, unreturning past. Human things, not less than Divine things, never die.

A DIVINE LIBRARY.

Our Bible is not a Book, but a Divine Library, as St. Jerome called it so long ago. It is not the record of one mind or of one age, but of many minds covering a long stretch of time—the history of the life of a people having a genius for religion as the Greeks had a genius for art and philosophy and as the Romans had a genius for jurisprudence. Other nations had sacred books as a part of their literatures, but the literature of the Hebrews was wholly religious. The ruling trait of that race was its sense of the Unseen, its vision of the moral law, its passion for God. Here was a folk whose government was a theocracy, and whose patriotism was piety. Their poetry kindled its flame at the altar of faith. Their architecture was a House of Prayer. The Muse of their History was the Spirit of Holiness. Surely it is not a thing strange that the poets of such a people became prophets, their faces aglow with moral idealism, their lips speaking words of fire. Nor is it a matter of wonder that the most religious race in all history should have written the sacred book of mankind, the moral classic of the world.

One may say, reverently, that the life of Jesus, so far as we can understand it, was the consummate flower of the piteous, passionate, aspiring life of that mighty race—just as Plato was the crowning glory of a race of thinkers. On his human side Jesus was surely the focus, the glow-point, at which the God-inspired soul of his people, melted by sorrow and purified by fire, became incandescent with heavenly light. It was as if the scattered atoms of an old chaos had at last been gathered into a planet—yea, a Sun to light our dark world; as if the wandering tones of many harps had found a home in the bosom of one sovereign Harmony. This does not account for Christ, but it does help us to mark the path by which he came and the tradition in which he stood. It is only to say that God appeared to a race that had eyes to see, and spoke to men who had ears to hear.

THE BIBLE LAND.

The land of the Bible is an enduring commentary on a Book which has in it the rugged grandeur of a work of nature. It is a tiny land, shut in on two sides by deserts, and on the other sides by mountain and sea; a rough and broken land where shaggy, thunder-split hills enclose narrow valleys, and beauty sits on the brow of barrenness; of mutable climate and varying moods; lorded over by blazing suns and deep lucid nights; a land ever in extremes—now dried up as in a furnace, now flooded with loud waters. An isolated land, with the Dead Sea at the south and snowy mountains at the north, yet it was a highway of trade and the battlefields of rival empires, its history a long-drawn tragedy of war and pillage and sorrow. The Bible is a mirror of its motherland, alike of its history and its scenery, where suns rise in beauty and set in splendor, and rivers flow, and flowers bloom, and lightnings rush like angry painters across the sky. As Emerson said:

Out from the heart of nature rolled
The burdens of the Bible old;
The litanies of nations came,
Like the volcano's tongue of flame,
Up from the burning core below—
The canticles of love and woe.

Open the Bible where you will, and the first impression is that of vastness. It has in it the curve of the earth and the arch of the sky. Great and wide like the world, it is rooted in the abyss of creation and rises into the blue mysteries of heaven. There are continents of truth, seas of mystery, rivers flowing from invisible springs, valleys rich with harvest, marshes of melancholy, depths sombre and sunless, and mountains that pierce the clouds. It is a world of reality and fact, a world in which men live and love, and sin and suffer, and hope and die, in the sight of the sun. It is the world as God made it, and is making it, with Divine power in his forces, Divine order in its ongoings, and Divine purpose in its end. This book has four characters in it, God and Man, the sky and the dirt. It has in it the strength and massive grandeur of elemental things, and no one can read it aright without feeling that he is in the presence of the big, eternal meanings of life.

NOT A BOOK OF ARGUMENT.

The Bible is not a book of philosophy. It does not argue. It is a Book of Vision whose story moves between two mighty seers—Moses, whose vision brooded over the dark chaos of old, whence order and beauty emerged, and St. John, whose insight forecast in solemn apocalypse the final issue of man and the world. What a history it recites! It begins at the beginning, with the wandering shepherds and wayfarers in the dim morning of time. We see the rise of the home and the family, of the tribe and the nation; a race passing through slavery into the vestibule of civilized life; the gradual building of a rich and complex social order; its prosperity, its splendor, its testing time, and its final fall, "because it knew not the time of its visitation." The story begins in a Garden and ends in the coming of the City of God, where there is no sadness nor weeping, and the whole is set against a majestic background of eternity—birth and death, promise and fulfillment, victory and defeat, all the drama of humanity in the presence of God.

As one reads there comes a shock of surprise that the essentials of human nature, its joys and woes and upward-leaping hopes remain seemingly unaltered by all the vicissitudes of time and change. Across the rise and fall of nations, over the feverish life of groping generations long since vanished, there sounds the unchanging music of faith and hope, of love and loss and longing.

In a remote story of a Moabite girl—a page let fall from an old picture of life, as if by accident—men and women find today the one perfect expression of undying affection: "Where thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, thy God my God. Where thou diest I will die, and there will I be buried; the Lord do so to me and more also, if aught but death part me from thee." In a record of fierce tribal war, amidst scenes of cunning and barbaric vengeance, we hear the most musical of all laments of friendship—the living for the dead: "I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan; very pleasant hast thou been to me; thy love for me was wonderful, passing the love of woman." An undated drama of the desert, full of its wide spaces and awful questionings—a book mysterious and magnificent which has drawn the deepest minds to its study—gives voice to a plaintive cry which not time nor fortune has modified: "As the waters fall from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more; they shall not wake, nor be raised out of their sleep."

MANY VOICES SPEAK IN IT.

Here, in this splendid spacious Book, one finds every variety of thought and mood and feeling, from a biting scepticism to a death-defying faith, from a sob of despair to a shout of ecstasy. It contains passages of the boldest denial—impeachments of the beneficence of God more fierce than any in the choruses of Swinburne—and an agnosticism more ultimate than even that of Omar the Tentmaker, without his scent and sheen of the flesh. A bit of sensuous love poetry is set side by side with the most bitter and shattering pessimism, crying like the wail of chill winds in a deserted city. Here are prayers that have wings, and songs of the victory of faith over death and time; confessions that lay bare the soul of man; pilgrim hymns; elegies portraying the majesty of God and the fleetingness of man; prophecies that flash the future in their mirrors. On the music marches until, at last, there breaks into it the sweetest voice that man has ever heard, whose words are the truth about life, and whose tones evoke melodies that echo forever.

At sundry times and in divers manners this music is heard, like a great organ with myriad keys on which a Master plays. In the Bible there is almost every form of literary art,—history, poetry, drama, fiction, biography letters, lyrics, elegies, epics, epigrams, proverbs, parables, allegories, and the dreams of apocalyptic seers. John was a mystic, Ezekiel a divine dreamer, David a lyric poet, and Solomon a kind of Biblical Benjaman Franklin. Each has his own imagery and thought, his own tone and style, but the whole is united by one spirit, one passion, one hunger for eternity. As men come to know the laws of great literature, how it grows and how it is interpreted, the variety and sublimity of the Bible will be unveiled. They will hush their debates and listen to its far-sounding, Divine cadences, many-toned and melting, knowing that a Book which grew out of a profound morality and a lofty spiritual life, if rightly used and obeyed, will produce in us, infallibly, the kind of life which produced it. They will know that it is inspired because it inspires them, revealing heights and depths unguessed before—heights where the Infinite wooes the finite into its mystery, and the depths where men find the heart of the world. It was not a Christian scholar, but a sceptic famous for his stinging wit—Heine, whose poetry is a blended smile, tear and sneer—who wrote these words:

NO TRACE OF ART IN THE BIBLE.

"What a Book! Stranger still than its contents is for me its style, in which every word is, so to speak, a product of nature, like a tree, a flower, like the sea, the stars, like man himself. One does not know how, one does not know why, one finds it altogether quite natural. In Homer, the other great book the style is a product of art, and the material always, as in the Bible, is taken from reality, yet it shapes itself into a poetic form as though recast in the melting pot of the human spirit. In the Bible there is not the least trace of art; it is the style of a memorandum book in which the Absolute Spirit entered the daily incident with the same actual truthfulness with which we write our washing list."

Some have denied that the Bible is an unveiling of the Divine nature, but no one doubts that it is a revelation of human nature. Here is a book that knows man, the road whence he came and what is in his heart. It finds us, as Coleridge said, strips us to the soul, and makes us see as in a mirror what manner of men we really are. No other book is so candid with us, so honest, so stern, so tender, so mercilessly merciful in its searchings of the strange soul within us. No man can stand before it and have any vanity left in him. It knows our innermost, secret sin—the lust that defiles, the passion that sears, the envy that gnaws, the pride that is foolishness. Righteousness is its one great word—righteousness in God demanding righteousness in man. It teaches, as does all great tragedy from Euripides to Shakespeare, the iron law of destiny—the sowing and reaping of sin. But in the Bible this law is suffused with a vast tenderness, as if to show that it is a law of love. The moral earnestness of this Book makes one tremble, as its ineffable pity makes one weep. No other book has in it such a blend of charity and rebuke. The mercy of God is in it, and he remembers that we are dust—hence its voice of many thunders and its whisper as of a mother over her child.

In other books we see humanity struggling upward, building a Tower of Babel; in the Bible we feel that something comes down to man, as at Pentecost. It moves under a whispering sky. All who read it know that our human life is from above downward, and that our help is from God. Other books have rafters and a roof. The Bible has none. In Shakespeare the unseen world appears in weird ghosts or flitting witches, as a thing uncanny and dreadful. Not so in the Bible. The subtle air of eternity blows through it, like the sweet winds that wander over the meadows. It talks of the eternal world with a simple artless faith, as a child talks of the stars, as if heaven were as real as is earth, and as natural. It makes us know that God is here, that eternity is now, that life has ageless fellowships—that every truth is full of Divine mystery, and every day charged with unknown, immortal meanings.

"GOD IS HERE."

Hence there is a power in this master book not found in any other—a power of faith, a sense of unseen reality, which makes men broad of mind and tall of soul. Look into the life of Gladstone, with his fine moral idealism, or into the life of Lincoln, with his cool sanity and his stern but delicate justice, and you will learn that they drew much of their strength from the Bible. It is no wonder that the prophetic eloquence of Lincoln echoes with Bible music, as do so many great passages of our literature—like that noble page in the "School of Saints," like that forest scene in "Westward Ho," like that unforgettable refrain in Thackeray when Henry Esmond returns from the wars. O let us take this wise old Book to our hearts, and not only love it but live with it, making it the prophet of our inner life, lest the faith that makes us men be crushed by the tramp of heavy years. If we use it wisely, we may commune with those in whom God dwelt, even as he dwells in us, albeit we do not yet know him whom to know aright is life eternal.

OUR LIVES HAVE A MEANING.

All men feel, at times, an oppressive sense of human insignificance. Millions of men lived here upon this earth before us, and have vanished. We do not know their names. Like us they were pilgrims and had to pass on. Soon we must follow along the same beaten path into the common oblivion, and our footsteps will be trodden out by the oncoming multitude. It is in the midst of meditations such as these that the dear Bible brings us its sweetest message. It fills us with a sense of the dignity of the human personality, its sacredness, and its august destiny. It tells us that our little lives, brief, broken and frail as they are, have a meaning for God; that death is not the end of all, but that beyond its shadow there hovers and waits a larger life. It makes life worth while and opens gates of wonder. God be thanked for a book which knows so much of the weakness of man, his wickedness and his waywardness, yet holds up so high an ideal and so grand a hope.

But there is something else in the Bible—a quality so delicate, so elusive, and yet so strong, which no words may ever hope to capture or define. We call it spirituality, a hallowing spirit, an indwelling presence, which gives to this book a nameless and ineffable power and charm. We know what it is; we feel it; it rises from the page like a perfume—but no one can put it into words. Religion is a Divine life, not a Divine science, and life cannot be turned into a book. The worth of the Bible is the witness it bears to the reality of God, its testimony that he is found of those who seek him, and that he lives in the souls of men. As such it is symbolic of a Book greater than itself—the volume of the Faith of Man, the book of the Will of God as humanity has learned it in the midst of the years—which Lowell had in mind when he wrote:

Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
And not on paper leaves nor leaves of stone;
Each age, each kindred, adds a verse to it,
Texts of despair or hope, of joy or moan.
While swings the sea, while mists the mountains shroud,
While thunder's surges burst on cliffs of cloud,
Still at the prophet's feet the nations sit.

THE BIBLE WILL LIVE.

Books are transient and will pass away. Homer, Sophocles, Dante, Shakespeare, and the Bible itself, are all doomed. When time is done they are done. But the life of God in the soul of man can never die. It will live when the globe itself, and all which it inherits, shall dissolve like a dream and leave not a rack behind. Of that eternal life the Bible bears witness in words the simplest, the deepest, the sanest, the truest and the sweetest that man has heard in his long journey, and it is therefore that we love it.

Peace

What was the first prophetic word that rang
When down the starry sky the angels sang,
That night they came as envoys of the birth—
What word but peace, "peace and good will on earth?"

And what was the last word the Master said
That parting night when they broke brother bread,
That night he knew men would not let him live—
Oh, what but "peace I leave" and "peace I give?"

And yet behold; near twice a thousand years
And still the battle wrath, the grief, the tears!
Let mercy speed the hour when swords shall cease
And men cry back to God, "There shall be peace!"

—Edwin Markham.

Recruiting in Trafalgar Square

HARRISON SMITH in The New Republic

TO MOST visitors to London the black shaft of the Nelson monument in Trafalgar Square lies at the heart of the city. The great shipping offices with their painted maps of the seven seas and models of steamers that ply from Java to Iceland lie about it. The columned porticoes of the National Gallery look down upon it, and historic streets branch from it. For years the monument has served as a public rostrum and from it the discordant voice of the nation has bellowed forth its ideals, its hatred, and sometimes its hunger. When I had last seen Trafalgar Square the four black lions at its base were sneering down on a band of excited and shrill-voiced women who seemed in danger of being annihilated by a hostile mass of Londoners. Since that time the war had come and the Trafalgar lions had been watching for months the enrollment of men to fight in the armies of England.

HARANGUING MEN TO BATTLE.

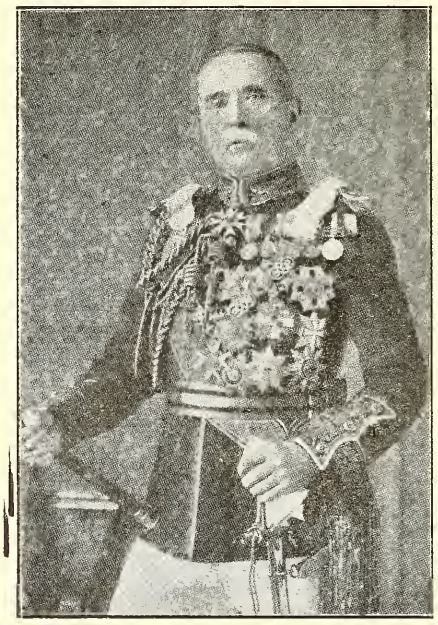
A recruiting meeting was scheduled for Trafalgar Square at noon on a day early in September. Around one side of the monument, which stood against the gray sky like a blackened sword, a crowd had collected, a smaller crowd than I had expected at the principal recruiting center of the city, but still a tightly packed mass. A man in uniform was speaking from the platform erected on the broad steps that ran level with the pediments of the lions. His hard, tense voice reached me from a distance, and as I wormed my way into the throng I saw from his chevrons that he was a captain. He was one of the race of aristocrats who have given England its empire. Tall and lean, his bronzed skin stretched tight over his jaws, he spoke with a terrible earnestness that shocked me into instant attention. Here was no prepared speech filled with windy patriotism. He was bitterly, angrily denouncing every man who stood before him who did not wear the king's uniform. His steel eyes swept over the lackluster crowd with withering contempt. His tense sharp sentences flung his hatred of their slackness and their ignorance into their faces. You could see that he was too proud to flatter or urge these truck-drivers and clerks before him, and that he would have preferred to jump into their midst and beat into them some comprehension of his convictions.

For an instant I caught his scornful glance on me and found myself trying desperately to keep in mind that war was not the holy thing he made of it and that my desire to stand there beside him was simply madness.

"Over there men are dying while cowards like you loaf through the streets," he cried. A Canadian in uniform shouted, "Go it, old horse!" while a gentleman with a weeping mustache mildly exclaimed, "Hear, hear!" for the tenth time. That broke the spell, and for the rest of the time I was able to watch the spectacle as an American should.

"PRESERVING LIVES."

With few exceptions the men in the crowd listened to the young captain with the polite indifference with which an American audience endures a bad play. He was appealing to their manhood in the name of chivalry and self-sacrifice. He called on them to join him in a glorious death on the field of battle. Apparently it was not enough, and he finally stepped back without another glance toward the men he had failed to stir. Groups of soldiers who were scattered through the crowd cheered so vigorously that I suspected that they were there for that purpose, until I discovered that they had a far more important duty to perform.



General French, of the English Army.

In the curiously strained silence that followed, the people stirred restlessly. Men looked at each other questioningly, and a few slipped away as if they were escaping from some danger that they feared. A pale little Scotchman in the center of the throng began to shout in a high voice something about peace and capitalism, and was howled into silence so effectively that he completely disappeared, as if the men and women around him had swallowed him.

WOMEN CALLING MEN TO WAR.

From the group clustered at one side of the platform a young woman came forward. More than one man stopped his retreat and faced the stand again, as if he thought that since war was the affair of men there could be nothing to fear from the persuasive powers of the opposite sex. She asked these men gathered from the streets of London what their women would think of them if they did not have the courage to fight. Perhaps their wives already thought them cowards, if they had wives, and if they had none, how could they hope to win any self-respecting girl? The men grinned at her argument. She gained no recruits, and one could even divine toward her an air of hostility and impatience. The issues that she brought forward were not vital, and she was delaying the show.

A gentleman with a piccolo was sent into the breach to revive our declining martial ardor with "Dixie" and other agreeable tunes. He proved more valuable to the empire than a dozen suffragettes because he was a humorist and walked with an amusing strut so that the crowd increased mightily. Utopia had indeed arrived, I thought, when governments produced vaudeville on the street corners to put citizens in good humor.

The crucial moment had come. An officer stepped from behind one of the lions leading a tall smirking man with a large and red face. The crowd surged forward; the soldiers cheered. This tall soldier must be a hero for certain, perhaps a V. C. who had saved a comrade from death. He did not look like a hero, but then heroes never do, and his foolish grin I took for bashfulness. Above the yells I heard the word "cinema" and then the officer proclaimed the hero's name, as a herald might have announced a knight in armor to the tournament of other days. "Pimples!"

THE CLEVERNESS OF "PIMPLES."

Eloquently the movie actor told us of the contract of fifty pounds that he had been about to sign when England's need had sent him to war. "Fifty pun'! Gawd," muttered a ragged cockney beside me: and I recalled that Israel Putnam had only abandoned a plow. The cheers died down, and he told us of the suits of clothes that hung in his closet at home and the sums he had paid for them. Pimples had given up fame and wealth, and he asked us to give up our petty interests to the same cause. He ceased, and the intensity that I had noticed before seemed to increase with every second. A year and a month the men about me had resisted the omnipresent posters, the appeal of regiments marching to the swirl of bagpipes, the silent call of wounded soldiers. Would they now offer themselves because this man had touched their hearts?

There was a pause. Pimples asked the men who were too old and the women to raise their arms to show that they would have enlisted had there been nothing to prevent them. Every man who could possibly be considered on the shady side of middle age and every woman courageously responded. As I looked around at the waving arms I was seized with admiration, not for these elderly and feminine warriors, but for the cleverness of Pimples. "Will all the young men who are willing to fight for their country raise their arms?"

RECRUITING IN EARNEST.

For a moment there was no response, except for an excited buzzing that rose from nowhere. Pimples thundered and shouted like a Methodist evangelist. The emotional agitation increased to fever pitch. You could read in their eyes the struggle at the minds of many of them. The issue had become more deadly because it had become personal. They had been trapped into a pit from which there was no escape except through a public exhibition of cowardice, so that the great decision that they had evaded in their souls so many months was now squarely before them.

Near the front an arm was suddenly held erect like the standard of a flag. A dozen slowly followed, then a hundred. Most of them immediately shot down again, but the mischief had been done. The keen watchers on the stand and the soldiers in the crowd had now something to work on.

Recruiting began in earnest. We cheered frenziedly when men were hauled off the pavement to the platform; we snarled when anyone held his ground. Pimples declared that no future success on the films could delight his heart as did every recruit dragged from a life of peace. He made Gargantuan jokes on his own name and we roared with laughter. The baker's dozen of recruits stood in a ragged line in front of us; tall men, stocky men, old men, sick men and youths under age. A few were patently relieved and proud of their action, others stared across the gray square as if they were thinking of what their women folk would say when they came home late for dinner.

"HERE'S ANOTHER."

The soldiers began to scatter through the crowd, surrounding individuals, badgering them and demanding papers to prove that they were on government work or were exempt through illness. On the outskirts an officer pointed out promising victims to his men. Whenever one began to waver his neighbors shouted to the sergeant who was now exhorting us, and of whose speech I recall only two arguments. He stated that the dangers of war had been greatly exaggerated and laid great stress on the coming of winter and the warm overcoat offered by the government free of cost. A few more had joined the first recruits, among them a man who had been refused by the doctor twelve times. A boy near me was suddenly surrounded by soldiers.

"Here's another!" shouted someone, and we took up the cry until the sergeant swung around toward him. The boy was well dressed and was pale with fright. He murmured incoherently to his captors, and one of them, an older soldier, shouted up, "He's all right; he's only fifteen."

Serbian Children Are Starving

A Message of Appeal.

BY HARRY P. BURTON

SERBIA is going to leave an almost humanless, lifeless country to the conquerors!

Except for the cries of the 10,000 starving babies wandering through the woods and devastated villages and towns, Serbia will be deserted, desolate, voiceless.

Over 200,000 war casualities and the wiping out by typhus of 600,000 mothers and fathers have left a nation of orphans, starving, living like scavenger dogs.

I have just heard from the trembling lips of Miss Helen Losanvitch, the beautiful daughter of a former Serbian minister to London, terrible stories of the utter wretchedness of these lost "Babes of the Woods."

PATHOS IS STAGGERING.

For gripping, pathetic, tragedy, history has never heard the equal of these tales. Their pathos is staggering. Their appeal must reach down to the very depths of the hearts of the most cynical and skeptical.

"You cannot possibly conceive what frightful unhappiness the war has brought to Serbia," began Miss Losanvitch.

"They have killed off the parents and have left the children to be starved to death. These 10,000 orphans—Mr. Wordsworth of the Rockefeller Foundation says they number 20,000—are flotsam and jetsam of a wrecked nation. They are groping in the woods and hills, living on roots!

"During the summer the army cared for many of the orphaned children, for the soldiers adopted the waifs they met, shared their food and blankets with them, and cared for the tiny tots with the utmost tenderness.

King Peter, of Serbia, who declared that if his people perished, he would die at the front.

"But when they were called to the battle front they had to leave their charges behind them, to the mercy of chance. Sometimes they sheltered and fed them in the trenches. Here is a letter I have received from my mother. My father, you know, is head of the Serbian war relief fund. My mother says:

" 'Now the cold is coming and at night the children generally gather near a village, and creep against a house wall to sleep. The older ones take care of the younger.

SLEEP AGAINST WALLS.

" 'I went to St. Roman's where the St. Helen's home is, the other day and the lady in charge told me a heartrending story. A poor soldier who was wounded, came home for ten days' leave. When he reached home he found his wife dead of typhus and his two children alone, starving. He was heartbroken.

" ' After his leave was up, and he had to return to the front, he did not know what to do with the kiddies. So he took them to this home, and, crying bitterly, pictured what would happen to them unless they were received there.

CHILDREN WERE SOBBING.

" 'The children were sobbing and the lady cried, too. It seemed to her so tragic that the soldier must leave them in the hands of strangers to save them from worse things that must befall were the enemy not to be kept out of the country.'

"So much for my mother's letter.

"The municipalities," Miss Losanvitch explained, "have tried to farm out these 10,000 orphans among the peasants by twos and threes. But as these peasants can scarcely maintain their own children, they generally keep them a few days, and then take them out into the streets and leave them there, where they are found by the police, and brought back to the municipality, which tries again to place them.

"I am sure that Americans will not let these innocent victims of the war perish by the roadside in thousands like so many noisome insects."

The noblest workers of our world bequeath us nothing so great as the image of themselves. It is with Christ-like minds as it was with Christ Himself. His divine work was not in the task that He did, but in the image which He left . . . and enabled Him to leave a Presence upon the earth, sufficient to soothe the sorrows, inspire the conscience, and deepen the earnestness, of succeeding ages. And so it is with the least of His disciples, whose mind is truly tinged with the hues of the same heavenly spirit.—Martineau.

THE GARY PLAN IN NEW YORK

GRADUALLY the Gary plan of public schools is being introduced into New York City. For some time Superintendent Wirt, of Gary, has been giving one week out of the month to the guidance of the New York school authorities in the reconstruction of their system. Prof. John Dewey, of Columbia University, under whose instruction Mr. Wirt was a student some years ago in the University of Chicago, and from whom the Gary superintendent derived his basic point of view,, is an active counsellor in the work of overhauling the New York schools.

The Gary plan is a complete revolution in educational ideals. Its essential principles are two. First, that children are not alike any more than men and women are alike and ought not to be made to submit to the same educational processes. Second, that the school, instead of being a thing apart from life and intended to fit the child for the real life upon which it is assumed not to enter until the end of school training, is itself real life.

The school is therefore organized as a children's world. The child deals with real things. Artificial classification is dispensed with and the highly formal situations obtaining in the conventional school room are done away. The child works responsibly in shop and kitchen and office and laboratory, plays naturally in gymnasium and campus, correlates his book studies with his practical tasks and follows his native bent of interest and capacity toward the making of an efficient member of the social order.

Over against this ideal of developing trained citizens stands the ideal of the traditional school which is hardly more than the training of thorough scholars. The conventional system of schools has been well called an "educational factory." The Gary system of schools is an organic human society of children and youth living and working and playing together at the real tasks and problems and diversions which belong to their stage of development.

That New York City has been persuaded to reorganize its schools on the social principle instead of the abstract academic principle is one of our most encouraging signs of progress.

EFFORTS FOR PEACE

IT IS not surprising that from many quarters there are arising many appeals looking to the inauguration of effective plans for peace among the warring nations of Europe.

Some of these plans seem at first quixotic and impossible of accomplishment, but to the least sensitive mind it would appear that no efforts which have the slightest promise of success ought to be spared.

We have become in a measure habituated to the war. For a year and a half it has gone onward with increasing intensity. Enormous losses in men and funds have not deterred any of the combatants from renewed determination to prosecute it to the end. In fact, new forces are gradually being involved in the struggle and it now seems certain that still other nations will participate.

This increasingly serious situation has in a measure stilled the sense of shocked surprise with which the struggle was first viewed. The beholder is in a measure paralyzed by the enormity of the conflict and is tempted to consider it as a part of the necessary program of our age. Particularly is this true in America, where vast fortunes are being accumulated as the result of the manufacture and sale of munitions and supplies. It is not difficult to look with a certain degree of complaisance upon even a tragedy when it appears to be so profitable.

But the horror of the situation deepens. It is apparent that none of the conflicting powers can make peace proposals without the loss of prestige. It was hoped in the early days of the struggle that on one side or the other success might be so soon achieved and so pronounced that the victorious party would be justified in offering terms to its adversaries. Thus far, however, the issue has been almost completely drawn, neither party having won more than a questionable success.

Is this sanguinary orgy to continue for indeterminate months? Is no voice to be lifted sufficiently urgent to compel the attention of the warring and wearied powers, all of which are straining every nerve to continue the fight?

If any voice is to be heard, must it not be that of America, which alone of the great Christian nations is exempt from the struggle? From what source is the appeal for peace to be expected? And if America is thus to make its plea when can that word be spoken more effectively than now? The winter will bring untold hardships to the armies in the field and the forsaken household at home. The sacrifices already unspeakably great will be increased many fold and we are just beginning to learn what the horrors of last winter in the trenches really were.

If the struggle continues until spring it will be much more difficult to persuade the contenders to a cessation of hostilities than now, for with spring comes the renewal of hope and the certain relief from the worst of hardships.

It was hard enough to see the last Christmas season go by without even an armistice on the day of our Saviour's nativity. Is another Christmas to pass in the same manner? Are not the least carefully planned efforts in behalf of peace worth while? Let us not hesitate to join in whatever efforts are proposed looking to this pathetically desired end.

THE STRIKE SITUATION

IN THIS city at the present time there is a condition of industrial unrest which has a pathetic meaning in at least one of the great manufacturing fields.

A large section of the great garment makers, aggregating some fifteen thousand, have been on strike for nearly two months. The strike was called in the effort to resist a reduction of nearly ten per cent in the prices given for the piece work upon which they were employed.

Five years ago a similar strike of the garment workers lasted for many weeks with great sufferings to the participants and without immediate results in bettering their condition. But as a result of that strike, one firm, Hart, Shaffner & Marx, probably the greatest of the manufacturing firms, acceded to the plea of their workmen and entered into an agreement which has since been kept with satisfaction by both employers and workers.

The present strikers regard those conditions as the ideal they are seeking, but thus far they have been unable to secure a hearing from their employers. Most of them are Polish Jews and a very large proportion of them are unable to speak English. But they know that they are fighting a battle which ought to make its appeal to every American citizen who is a lover of fair play, and they wonder naturally at public apathy at their struggle.

The employers have retained an attitude of persistent disregard of all requests for arbitration. One would suppose that not only for reasons of policy, but because of the wish to have fair play, and particularly because both employers and employees are of the Jewish race, there should be a willingness on their part to arbitrate, but this they have refused.

More than this, the public press of the city has fallen strangely silent on the entire question. Newspapers that are supposed to be anxious to give both sides of every question have referred to the strike only in the most casual terms. What are the inducements behind this silence?

The social workers of the city have been deeply interested in the struggle of the garment makers, and some of the ministers have devoted time in their behalf. But it is apparent that the public is almost entirely uninformed regarding the merits of the case, and meantime these thousands of half Americanized citizens are left to fight dumbly and almost leaderless their battle for the common rights to which every citizen is supposed to be entitled.

THE EDUCATOR AND THE EDITOR

FROM the important place given to the announcement in the Christian Evangelist of the fact that Frederick D. Kershner, president of Texas Christian University, has accepted the editorship of that paper, we assume that he is to leave his college position and devote all his time to his journalistic task.

If this is so, it is another one of many tokens of the exceptional place held by journalism among the Disciples of Christ. Probably in no religious body in this country would a man trained and experienced and successful in the college field exchange a position of leadership there for an editorial task on a religious newspaper. Mr. Kershner's decision is an indication of the relatively inferior place held by the college among Disciples as compared to the place given it by other Christian groups and of the relatively superior place held by the Christian newspaper.

We are not sure that this obvious interpretation is complimentary to the Disciples, though the fact itself will not be denied, but certainly there is no doubt that the capture of a college president by the Disciples' journalism is a compliment to that journalism.

It is a fact often commented upon, that the outstanding leaders of the Disciples from the beginning have been editors, which is simply another way of saying that the most effective organs of influence in this brotherhood have been the religious journals. Alexander Campbell and the Millennial Harbinger, Isaac Errett and the Christian Standard, J. H. Garrison and the Christian-Evangelist—these editors and their journals represent the constructive personalities and forces of leadership in three generations into which the history of the Disciples is divided.

Of no religious movement in the United States can a similar thing be said. With most of the Christian denominations it is the educator and the school that count for most, while the newspaper functions as a more or less pale reflection of movements and events in which its editor is hardly a secondary participant.

But among Disciples the newspaper is both the radiating and rallying center of movements and causes. The newspapers are the symbols of various points of view, and men and churches tend to classify themselves under the symbols of the journal which best represents their view and temper.

Mr. Kershner's entrance into the journalistic field goes to prove that this traditional ascendancy of the religious press has not been superseded by any other institution.

The new editor of the Christian-Evangelist will find himself greeted with a friendly welcome by his new fellow-craftsmen who have already learned to respect his qualities of culture and character and to hold in sincere affection the man himself.

The Christian Century congratulates the Christian-Evangelist and the brotherhood of Disciples on Mr. Kershner's acceptance of his new editorial labor. And we earnestly desire, as we do also confidently believe, that under his leadership we may have the co-operation of the Christian-Evangelist in a sustained effort to exorcise the spirit of harshness and arrogance and dissension that has made our journalism a not unmixed blessing to the cause it should whole-heartedly serve.

TWO OF A KIND

AT THE time of the Leo Frank case several Chicago papers gave expression to some violent sentiments in criticism of the South's wanton disregard of law. One paper particularly declared that the South was unworthy of the fellowship of the rest of the nation on account of its disgraceful tolerance of lawlessness. On a recent Sunday afternoon a big parade was organized by the liquor forces of Chicago to protest against the action of Mayor Thompson in closing the saloons on Sunday in accordance with state law. Most Chicago papers reported the parade with scarcely concealed sympathy, not one of them with disapproval. Southern newspapers are now rising up to say that no such organized demonstration of avowed law-defiers was ever held in the South.

THE DEPARTED GLORY.

We had thought we had builded a structure to stand.
Loud, loud, were our boastings and bold was our trust;
But charred are our cities and waste is our land;
Our glory departed, our heroes but dust.
We counted by millions our warrior men.
We applauded our prophets whose voices were new
As they scoffed at a gospel of sufferance when Might, might, was their watchword to carry us through.

We fancied that we were elected to bear
New culture to nations which knew not the light.
The weak ones should perish. Our strong arms would dare
To smite with their fury and smite with their might.
A gospel of hate, not of love we adored.
Despisers of women, we lauded the strong.
We wasted life's good by the edge of the sword
And we filled our cup of iniquitous wrong.

We, we who were mighty as leaders, became
A scourge to the nations, an object of scorn,
A hiss and a by-word, a vanishing name.
Damned, damned is the day that we ever were born.
Henceforward, forever, let nations beware
Lest prophets, false prophets, of men shall arise
With delicate cunning of skill to ensnare,
To deflect man's true vision from Bethlehem's skies.

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Dr. Manning Defeated.

The Protestant Episcopal diocesan convention of New York has been held recently and the issue of the attitude of the denomination toward the Congress on Latin American was to the fore. Dr. Manning, rector of the famous Trinity church of New York, the richest church corporation in this country, has represented his diocese in the General Convention of his church for many years. The diocese refused to elect him this year because of his hostility to the Congress at Panama and his resignation from the board of missions when the board refused to adopt his view-point. He has held the position of chairman of the executive committee of the Commission on a World Conference on Questions of Faith and Order. The denomination in New York has thus spoken most emphatically its disapproval of the "catholics" who talk Christian union only with their faces turned toward Rome.

Clergy May Become Conscripts.

England is facing conscription at an early date. One of the questions of English church life is that status of the younger unmarried clergy. In France the clergy have been compelled to do military service, and there seems to be a disposition in England to make no exceptions. The two archbishops of England have taken up the matter with Lord Derby of the government and are protesting against any possibility of the clergy being forced to take up arms.

B. Fay Mills is Evangelizing.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, who startled the public the past year by his return from Unitarianism to orthodoxy, is at work this year in his old occupation as evangelist. He recently held special services at Greenwich, Conn., and it said that young people were won to the cause of religion in large numbers.

Religious Secret Society in Philadelphia.

There has been a mild sensation in religious circles in Philadelphia this fall over a secret society organized in connection with the Holy Trinity chapel of the Protestant Episcopal communion. The secret society was formed as a men's club at the close of the Sunday meetings, and it adopted a ritual with three degrees. It is stated that the second degree of the initiation ceremonies included Christian baptism and the third degree required the laying on of hands by a bishop. As the membership of the organization was eighty per cent outside the Episcopal fellowship, neighboring ministers became much interested in the project. Sixty-five ministers organized to investigate the club, and reported its motive to be of a proselyting character. They asked that other Episcopal clergymen should be on the governing board since the organization claims to be non-sectarian. It is said that already there are 100,000 initiated members in various parts of the country. If this is true, it is a fact of some significance, as indicating a taste among men for more of the ceremonial in connection with religious matters.

Carranza and Religion.

The Carranza government in Mexico has been subjected to the bitterest criticism by the Roman Catholic press of this country. Since 1873 it has been written into the Mexican constitution that there should be separation of church and state in Mexico. Existing law prevents religious societies from holding property, and does not recognize monastic orders, which are opposed by Catholic prelates. A Constitutionalist president is bound to enforce these as well as other laws.

Regarding Catholicism, a prominent leader of the Carranza party is quoted as saying: "The Constitutionalists have prosecuted men connected with the church, whether priests or laymen, who have used their investiture or religious affiliations to pry into the minds of the people and endeavored to control their conscience in order that they may serve as political pawns to foster the ambitions of the clerical party. The Constitutionalists are not heretics or infidels. Ninity-nine per cent of them are Catholics, but they know that the interference in state affairs of the men behind the altar has been the cause of Mexico's past and present disturbances, and they feel that this practice should be brought to an end."

Methodists Issue New Year-Book.

The new Methodist year-book is just now coming off the press. It is prepared under the direction of Dr. S. Baketel and is now a volume of 250 pages, full of interesting facts about the northern branch of the denomination.

Union University Prospers.

The University of Nanking is a union enterprise in which Disciples, Methodists and Presbyterians join. From President A. J. Brown comes the tidings that the university opened Sept. 6 with an unusually large enrolment of students. There is now a department of forestry which has increased the student body by fifty men. The capacity of the university is taxed to the limit.

Talk of Lutheran Reunion.

There is considerable talk of Lutheran reunion in various circles these days. The General Council Lutherans gave serious consideration to this matter at their meeting last summer. Doctor Kunzmann's playful remark, dropped at the Rock Island convention of the General Council in September, bids fair to become embarrassingly popular. While discussing the subject of Lutheran getting-together, Doctor Kuntzmann suggested that it would be a good plan to put the leaders of all the various Lutheran synods on an ocean steamer and send them out to sea, with rigid instructions that they must not make port anywhere until they have reached the agreement to unite all the branches of the Lutheran Church in this country.

Baptists Plan Five Year Program.

The big Baptist plan of a Five Year Program has already been mentioned but one of the goals, that with regard to education, has already been charged, so that its emphasis is not on money exclusively but on students and their welfare. As amended, the goal is: "Twenty-five student pastors in universities, 1,000 Baptist students in theological seminaries, 15,000 Baptist students in colleges and universities and six million dollars for additional educational endowment at home and abroad."

Religious Trouble in University of Utah.

Last spring there was some sensation following the dismissal of four of the professors of the University of Utah. The removal of these men approved by a majority vote of the regents of the university. Following this, seventeen other instructors resigned. The American Association of University Professors then appointed a committee to investigate the case, and the committee reported that the men had not been removed for causes that were not sufficient. The professor's committee stated that "the president had of late been subjected to increasing pressure to fill important positions in the faculty with men selected because of their connection with the Mormon church." A man without a medical degree was made dean of the school of medicine. The Mormons have been criticising the university because the students tended to lose their faith in Mormonism and because they would not afterwards go out on missions.

A HEROIC CHINESE CONVERT.

Bishop Fowler gives the following: "A Chinaman had been converted, and after he had studied the New Testament not a little, he felt called on to preach to his countrymen the good news. He went into the crowded street, mounted a little box, and began to preach.

"Soon a mob gathered, knocked him down from his box, beat him, dragged him through the city, and threw him over the wall for dead. He came to, went down to a little brook and washed off the blood and dirt. Then he prayed, 'Lord Jesus, what wilt Thou have me do?' Having, as he felt, received his answer, he went straight back to the same box, and preached as before.

"Again the people treated him as before. Again he revived, washed away the dirt and blood, and said, 'Lord Jesus, what wilt Thou have me do?' Back he went to the same little box and preached as before.

"Again the mob rallied and beat him down. The magistrate sent the police who put him in jail that faced on a little open square, on which the mob gathered, howling and throwing dust. He put his hand out through the grating of the window, and beckoned for the mob to be quiet.

"When they quieted a little, he pressed his bruised and bleeding face up against the grating, and said: 'None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God.'

"He conquered that mob by the power of a deathless love, and now, at his own request, he has been sent to that people as his regular charge."

Disciples Table Talk

Chicago Pastors Do Picket Duty for Striking Garment Workers.

The Chicago Disciples' Ministers' Association voted its approval last Monday of all its members who would volunteer to do picket duty at the scene of the garment workers' strike now in progress in this city. Dr. Ames, of Hyde Park church, had previously visited the scene of the strike in the capacity of a picket and brought to his ministerial colleagues an interpretation of the situation which resulted in the association committing both its sentiment and its service to the cause of the workers. A group including E. S. Ames, O. F. Jordan, W. G. Winn, H. L. Willett and Basil S. Kensseff served as picketers on Monday afternoon and Austin Hunter and A. R. McQueen and C. C. Morrison gave their services on Tuesday afternoon.

Raising Church Funds Noiselessly.

Springfield, Ill., First church, is engaged in a noiseless campaign for $20,000 to reduce their building indebtedness by one-half. The amount is reported to be practically assured at this meeting. The pastor, Frank Waller Allen, is preaching to the largest congregation in the history of the church. He is just beginning a Sunday evening series on "The Religion of a Modern Man."

Men and Millions Leaders Still in Missouri.

The Men and Millions Movement, so far, has campaigned a portion of Texas, about one-half of Kentucky, and practically all of the Illinois churches. The leaders are at present in the campaign in Missouri. About $120,000 has been received as a result of their work in one district. They will continue in Missouri until February, and then will go into Iowa. At present they have received about $2,800,000.

Decision Meetings at East End, Pittsburg,

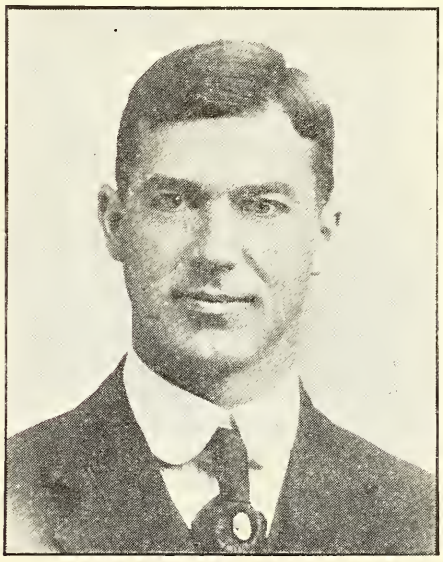
East End church, Pittsburg, John Ray Ewers, minister, closed a two weeks' decision meeting, Nov. 21 with twenty-three new members. Thomas L. Lowe, of the University church, Columbus, Ohio, assisted by preaching a series of vigorous and inspiring sermons, which showed scholarly preparation, and by superb personal work. The Every Members Canvass was made on Oct. 24. The aims set were reached; $8,500 for current expenses and $2,500 for missions The Bible-school has been most efficiently graded according to the best approved modern plans. This church prides itself upon its awareness of modern movements. The valuable adjoining property which was purchased some months ago will be paid for by next May and the building committee is considering plans for the new church to be erected very soon. Congregations tax the building at present.

Why Wm. Bayard Craig Leaves the Ministry.

Wm. Bayard Craig, former pastor at Iowa City, Ia.; Denver, Central and South Broadway; San Antonio, Tex.; New York, Lenox Ave.; Redlands, Calif.; and for several years chancellor of Drake University, will enter upon a business career at the age of sixty-nine, as mentioned in a recent issue of the "Century." Mr. Craig explains his move in a recent newspaper interview. He says: "I met with an accident two years ago and since then I have felt that I was losing my vigor. I did not want to continue preaching until I lost it all. So after a trip East last summer, I looked about me for something that would pay and keep me busy. I shall try to follow the golden rule in business. I told all of the agency employes to forget that I have been a minister—to remember that I shall try to treat them square. I don't care what church they belong to and I told them so. I'm their friend. All I want is the truth. You can't build anything on a lie." Mr. Craig's wife, the daughter of Dr. George T. Carpenter, the first chancellor of Drake university, where she served both as librarian and dean of women before allying herself with a religious publication, will be her husband's assistant and bookkeeper.

Frank M. Lowe for National Field Secretary of Christian Endeavor.

The National Board of Christian Endeavor has elected Frank M. Lowe, of Kansas City, as National Field Secretary, to begin service Jan. 1. Mr. Lowe has just closed a term of service as President of the Missouri C. E. Union, in which field he has done splendid work. Claude E. Hill, of Valparaiso, Ind., national superintendent, writes that the new work will entail about $2,000 additional expense, and urges every young people's society to forward contributions to him by Jan. 1 Christian Endeavor is certainly to be congratulated upon this forward move, and especially upon securing the services of so capable a young man as Mr. Lowe.



Mr. Frank M. Lowe, newly elected Field Secretary for Christian Endeavor.

Good Year's Work and United Purposes at Sheffield Avenue, Chicago.

Joy over the success of the past year found expression in a unanimous resolution at Sheffield Avenue church, Chicago, on Sunday morning, Nov. 14, which the church clerk was instructed to communicate to the three national papers of the brotherhood. The resolution recites that the congregation has contributed more money to missions and benevolences than in any other year of its history. The attendance at church services has increased, all obligations have been met promptly, all organizations are working zealously and harmoniously and the pastor and members have co-operated actively with neighboring churches in matters of community interest. The resolution declares a renewal of the confidence of officers and members in their pastor, Will F. Shaw, and specifies particularly their approval of his efforts in co-operation with his brother ministers of Chicago to preach the gospel in neglected places and at abandoned points. Mr. Shaw's work not only has the support of his own congregation, but is the object of admiration of all the churches and ministers of Chicago. He is a sympathetic and tireless pastor, and the spirit of his congregation is one of loyalty and piety.

Connellsville, Pa., Church Celebrates Eighty-third Anniversary.

The recent celebration of the eighty-third anniversary of the founding of the church at Connellsville, Pa., was in the nature of a home-coming of former members. A history of the church, read by one of the older members, E. T. Norton, gave an instructive insight into the trials of the pioneers who builded in such large faith and with well-grounded hope. The reading of a file of letters from former pastors and members who were unable to be present, revived long-forgotten memories. Cloyd Goodnight, pastor of Central church, Uniontown, Pa., gave able, forceful and pointed answer to the question, "Which Way Now?" as to the course to be pursued by the church henceforth. The concluding service brought a capacity attendance. Mrs. Mary Pickens-Buckner, wife of Geo. W. Buckner, pastor of the Mornington Road church, Southport, England, who is father of the present pastor of the Connellsville church, C. C. Buckner, preached a sermon of unusual interest. At the request of the Pennsylvania Equal Suffrage Association Mrs. Buckner recently canvassed the state in the interest of the proposed constitutional amendment, and by her convincing arguments won many persons to the support of the cause. She now has under consideration the acceptance of an offer to engage in lecture work for the Chautauqua bureaus.

An Old Veteran Returns to Oklahoma.

S. R. Hawkins, formely state secretary of eastern Oklahoma, has returned to the state to take up evangelistic or pastoral work. Mr. Hawkins is a man of ability and is well known to the Oklahoma churches. He will reside at McAlester.

B. A. Abbott's Son Goes to Front.

Dr. Fred B. Abbott, son of B. A. Abbott, of Union Ave., St. Louis, sailed on the "Noardan" on November 16 for the front. He has accepted a commisison in the British army as surgeon with rank of lieutenant.

Death of J. W. Carpenter at Jewell City, Kan.

J. W. Carpenter, pastor at Jewell City, Kan., died in that city Nov. 9. Mr. Carpenter was formerly in Hiawatha, Kans., and had just completed his second year at Jewell City. He intended to retire from active service because of the incurable blood disease from which he suffered a great deal. He is survived by his wife, a son at St. Joseph, Mo., and a daughter.

A. B. Philputt's Texas Lecture Subjects.

A. B. Philputt's lecture subjects at the Texas Christian Lecturship, at Vernon, Tex., were as follows: "The Preacher and the Written Word"; "The Inspiration of the Scriptures"; "The Preacher and the Modern Viewpoint"; "The Spirit of Our Movement as Incarnated in Our Earliest Leaders"; "The Preacher and His Books"; and "Recollections of Some Great Preachers."

Disciple Pastor Has Seven Brothers in War.

No one follows the war news more closely than does D. L. Milligan, pastor of the church at Arlington, Rush county, Ind. He has seven brothers fighting on the side of the allies, four of them soldiers and three of them in the navy. One was shot in the knee recently in fighting in France, but will recover. No two of them are together.

Boys' and Girls' S. S. Conference in Indianapolis.

Separate conferences for older boys and girls of the Sunday-schools of the South Side, Indianapolis, will be held Friday evening, Saturday and Sunday, December 3, 4, and 5. These meetings are promoted by committees of young people under the direction of the Cook County Sunday School Association. The conference will be officered and most of the programme will be carried out by the boys and girls themselves. Some of the adult speakers are: John L. Alexander, Chicago, International Secondary Superintendent. Mrs. Katherine Willard Eddy, St. Louis. Wm. A. Peterson, Chicago, Chairman Cook County Secondary Division Committee. Mrs. Carrie Stewart Besserer, Chairman Girls' Work, Cook County Secondary Division Committee. Mr. Burr Blackburn, Chicago, Secondary Division Superintendent.

Finis Idleman Reveals His Heart on His Change of Pastorate.

As New York Central church declined to release Finis Idleman from his responsibility as their newly-elected and accepting pastor, it was decided by Central, Des Moines, Mr. Idleman's church, to send a committee to New York to lay the matter before the congregation there. Mr. Idleman suggested that the committee go so as to be present at the annual meeting of the New York church, Wednesday evening, Nov. 10. The committee, on reaching New York called upon two leading members of the New York church. They at once saw that the New York people had no idea of releasing their new pastor, and brought back that message to Des Moines. Mr. Idleman writes in the Christian Worker concerning his going to New York as follows:

"On leaving Central it is not easy to analyze one's feelings as he contemplates breaking relations which have been nine years in forming. Under very ordinary circumstances that is a trying ordeal but the ministry is no ordinary experience. The open door it extends to the inner experiences of men and women, the lights and shadows, successes and defeats, births and deaths, fortune and misfortune, are all open to his coming.

"Any minister who cares for his people would sooner die than leave them if it were not for services yet to be performed. But even more and without egotism, one cannot feel that the pastorate such as the Central church affords is anything but extraordinary in its possibilities and friendships.

"The devotion of many years which can never be disturbed by the coming and going of the ministers stands sweetly by to bid adieu to one and welcome to the next. The devotion of its young people which seems as undisturbed by summer or winter, defeat or success, are here to cheer him who goes and him who comes.

"With all the limitless possibilities for service and the intimate fellowship in performing it, it seems sheer recklessness to quit so holy a task; but Central church has lived, moved, and had its being in the recognition of the vicarious in human society. To have shared it long is to know that only those who put their hearts to the burden of human sorrow and guilt and lifts to the breaking point, have vital place in its fellowship.

"It is quite natural that such an appeal as New York makes to every thinking mind and lover of his race, should take deep hold upon one who had ministered to such a people as this. The more the difficulties were enumerated and its crosses counted on the lonely hills of sacrificial isolation, all the more did the appeal grow upon the heart. It seemed only the next step and the normal thing to do after having shared the purpose and spirit of Central church for nine years."

"The Religion of a Modern Man."

During December and January, Frank W. Allen in speaking on the general theme, "The Religion of a Modern Man," submits the following list of Sunday evening topics: "The Man," "His Bible," "His Faith," "His Salvation," "His God," "His Church," "His Education," "His Character," "His Posessions," "His Relations to Society."

George B. Van Arsdall to Enter Business.

George B. Van Arsdall, who has resigned from the pastorate of Central church, Denver, will enter the field of insurance. He speaks for a local paper, as follows, concerning his change of work:

"Society challenges the church to produce a program for social betterment. The business man today can do more than the preacher to bring about the application of Christian principles to every day life. There is no higher calling than that of minister, but I must confess that I face my start in the business world with eagerness. The clergy are hedged in. There is a vast opportunity for doing good offered to those who have been trained in the ministry and who go out to work shoulder to shoulder with his laymen. The minister is the creator of sentiment and the teacher of ideals. It is the business man's task to direct this sentiment and these ideals so as to make them effective.

"Can a man who has grown to maturity in the ministry succeed in the business world? I should say his chances of success were above the average. There is a marked tendency in modern business life toward higher ideals of truth and honesty. There was a time not long ago when it would have been unsafe for a preacher to cast his lot and that of his family in a life of affairs. Today there is a premium upon high standards. More than ever before honesty, aside from any ethical questions, is the best policy."

Temperance Field Workers Wanted.

The American Temperance Board desires the services of a few good men for field work and is ready to submit a reasonable proposition to men who are qualified for the task. It is not necessary that one should be a minister; lawyers or physicians would be approved. All who offer themselves should bear highest endorsements as to character and platform ability and should believe intensely in the Temperance Movement now on, and the general purposes of this board. All who are interested are asked to send their names at once to the American Temperance Board, or L. E. Sellers, National Secretary, Box 501, Indianapolis, Ind.

What Disciple Preachers Are Saying on Vital Issues

Peoria, Ill., Pastor Accuses Newspapers of Aiding Saloons.

Charging that the liquor interests of Peoria own the city—that they own the officials of government and the newspapers, Homer E. Sala, of Central church, Peoria, Ill., recently gave vent to his feelings on the Sunday closing proposition being ardently discussed in that city. His theme was,

Rev. Boyd Jones, who sees the fulfilment of scripture prophecy in present day events.

"Do the Liquor Interests Own Peoria?" He declared it his conviction that newspapers were actually bought by the liquor interests and that liquor advertisements were run by them not to attract customers, but merely to buy the papers.

"There are three avenues through which the liquor interests may obtain their control over the public," he said, namely, the pulpit, the press and the city officials. I think I can safely say that the ministers are a unit against liquor and that there isn't a single preacher in town whose lips are sealed by liquor money. But I can't say that about the other two avenues.

"Have you noticed that our local Peoria newspapers have had distributed throughout their columns liquor advertisements? What is their purpose, I wonder?

"I have here clippings of advertisements from our three Peoria papers. See what the advertisements are based upon—personal liberty, health, contentment, happy family. They are all misrepresentations and yet the newspapers publish them.

"Now I hope you get my point, the newspapers are publishing them for money, because they are controlled by the liquor interests. The ads are run not to attract customers, but to buy the newspapers.

"Yet the newspaper is the greatest force we have to mold public sentiment. The only sources we have are the pulpit and the press, and I believe the press is the greater of the two.

"The liquor interests also control the city officers, for when these officers leave the saloons open on Sunday they are violating state statute and local ordinance. They are violating their oaths. I say, if the law is bad, it ought to be taken off the books; if it is good it ought to be enforced.

"We see about us the red light district preying upon young womanhood, open gambling and open Sunday saloons, and we can trace it all back to the controlling influence of the liquor interests behind the officers of the law.

"Not only is the saloonkeeper violating the law by keeping the saloon open on Sunday, but he isn't paying for it. His license gives him permission for only six days.

"I read an editorial in the Transcript the other day. I read the Transcript every morning. It was a very good editorial urging that precautions be taken because there are eighty cases of scarlet fever in the city, but yet we let 310 saloons which are a thousandfold worse than scarlet fever prey upon the fathers of families."

Terre Haute Preacher Sees Present Day Events Foretold in Ancient Prophecies.

Study of Bible prophecies in connection with the development of world events was urged by J. Boyd Jones in a recent sermon at Central church, Terre Haute, Ind. Mr. Jones suggested that the prophesies that are not fully understood may be revealed in present day affairs.

"During my seminary days I was told that the prophesies could not be understood hence we were not taught them," said Mr. Jones. "I had been in the ministry some years before I began a study of God's plan foretold in the writings of holy men. The thought occurred to me that if the prophesies could not be understood now, and they had not been understood in the past then in the name of high heaven why were they written. I have found them a most fruitful field of study and I want to urge upon you people to open your Bibles and make a prayerful study of God's plan of the ages.

"Many students of Holy Writ feel confident that God is closing up the Gentile age of the world and he is about to inaugurate a new era on the earth. The last thing Jesus told his disciples before he left the earth was that he would return again. He taught his followers to pray that his kingdom should come in all the earth and that his will should be done on earth as it is in heaven. We have been talking peace while at the same time bloodthirsty men have been building battleships and creating armies. Our own country is today preaching peace while at the same time we are getting ready for a death struggle. The plea of peace falls on deaf ears and it would seem that in the near future we, too, are to be engaged, in what let us pray God, will be the last great war. After the warring nations have exhausted their strength and wasted the flower of their manhood they will sit down in sackcloth and ashes and be willing to learn from the Prince of Peace."

A New Era of Constructive Evangelism Sweeps Oklahoma.

Secretary A. R. Spicer, of Oklahoma, writes that a new form of evangelism is abroad in Oklahoma. The big company campaign is apparently a thing of the past with the churches and ministers there. Instead of the exhaustive, exorbitant campaigns of the large troup of workers the churches are arranging for home forces, pastoral exchanges, two-by-two workers, preacher and singer, or as in some of the larger places, the simultaneous meetings. Pastor Dorby at Tulsa and C. H. Hulme at Bartlesville, are getting great and permanent results out of this kind of work. Claremore, Enid and El Reno are all enjoying quiet, constructive campaigns. Sumner T. Martin, of Nowata, and R. W. Clymer, of Okmulgee, are exchanging meetings. J. W. Burns, of Ardmore, and C. B. James, of Ada, are swapping songs for sermons. Mr. Burns furnishes the sermons and Mr. James the songs for both places. E. T. McFarland has just completed two excellent meetings for Pastor Davidson at Clinton and Pastor Taylor at Mangum. A. R. Davis of Anadarko, had a great service with Hamilton and his workers. Guy H. Findley, of Guthrie, is joining with other churches in a union meeting. G. A. Hendrickson, of Shawnee, began his evangelistic work at Chandler, December 1. H. E. Van Horn and the First church of Oklahoma City are planning for a great home force meeting January 1, led by Dr. I. N. McCash, of Seattle, Wash. "It is clear from these facts," writes Mr. Spicer, "that a quiet but great soul revival spirit is abroad in the state." "May we see a great revival of constructive evangelism," writes one of Oklahoma's best ministers to the secretary, "where time and talent are given to constructive upbuilding of the church, not the exhaustive, big company campaigns where the resident minister, church debts, improvement funds, missionary and benevolent enterprises pay the price of such exorbitant methods. Some few cities occasionally try evangelism on the gigantic scale but it is an experiment."

J. J. Tisdall Honored by Columbus, O., Public Schools.

It is not often that a pastor is asked to serve on the school board of a city, but that honor has recently come to J. J. Tisdall, of Wilson Avenue church, Columbus, O. He has just been elected a member of the seven-man board of education of Columbus by the greatest majority ever given a candidate for a municipal office in that city. It is expected that he will be elected president of the board at the next meeting. Mr. Tisdall is now in Detroit conducting a series of evangelistic meetings at the Central church. "How did I happen to run for the school board?" Mr. Tisdall said, in an interview. "We had a doctor's combination on the board that had to be broken up. Extravagance ran riot. The climax came when it was discovered that thousands of dollars more had been paid for a piece of school property than it was appraised at. Our school board is now composed of a rabbi, a minister's wife, a socialist who is a lawyer, a train dispatcher and two doctors. I believe in the Gary, Ind., system that permits many thousand more pupils to be accommodated in the same number of schools. I know some of our educators are criticising it but I am inclined to think that is because they didn't think of it first. It is more economical to fit your present schools for the introduction of the Gary system than it is to keep on building new ones under the present extravagant system."

Death of Jesse T. Craig.

The death is reported of Jesse T. Craig, former pastor at Austin and Brownsville, Tex., and editorial writer on the Brownsville Herald until he was stricken with paralysis in March, 1914. Mr. Craig died at Brownsville, at sixty-three years of age. He is survived by his wife, two sons and two daughters.

Doubles Membership in Two Years.

During the two years' pastorate of Ben M. Edwards at Vernon, Tex., Central, the membership has been more than doubled, and a debt on the parsonage of $1,000 has been paid off. Mr. Edwards is active in the work of commercial and civic organizations of the city.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DAY AND THE NATIONAL BOARD OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

As has been the custom for several years the National Board of Christian Endeavor will publish a program for Christian Endeavor Day, the first Sunday in February, 1916, for the use of all Christian Endeavor societies in our churches. The program for this year is of greater importance and its general use by our societies more urgent than ever before.

By this time all our societies should know that the first Sunday in February is the day on which our Endeavor societies are requested and expected to make their annual offering for our National Christian Endeavor work, and to this end, and to provide our societies with suitable material for the proper observance of the day which commemorates the birth of the Endeavor movement, our board puts out its program. But there are two special reasons why the program should be more generally used by our societies this year.

The first of these reasons is that a New Star Standard of Efficiency, especially arranged for our own societies, will be introduced this year, and the Endeavor Day program will be built around the ideas of this Standard. All our societies can use the program with great profit, and during the year will be given an opportunity to direct their work along lines suggested by the Star Standard Chart, which will be ready for distribution about February 1. But whether this Efficiency Chart is adopted by a society or not, the program will be found helpful. It deals with the fundamentals of Christian Endeavor and meets the actual needs of our societies today.

The second special reason for a more general use of our Christian Endeavor Day program lies in the fact that the National Board of Christian Endeavor has taken an advance step in the employment of a National Field Secretary. On January 1 Mr. Frank M. Lowe, Jr., Kansas City, late President of the Missouri Christian Endeavor Union, becomes National Field Secretary of Christian Endeavor for the Disciples of Christ. Mr. Lowe has already been introduced to our Endeavor societies through the columns of their papers. It only need be added here that our board congratulates itself and the young people of our churches on being able to secure him for this position. He will render Christian Endeavor in our churches a notable service.

But the extra expense entailed must be met and we are depending on the Endeavor Day offering to very largely provide the funds. We have only our societies to look to for support. If they fail us the work fails. For these two reasons, the merit and serviceableness of the program, and our pressing need for funds for this work, we appeal to our Endeavor societies to use our own program for Christian Endeavor Day and to take an offering at the close of the meeting and forward promptly to the undersigned. This program, in such quantities as may be desired, will be furnished free of all cost to all societies agreeing to use it on the first Sunday in February, or as early thereafter as may be possible, and to take an offering for our own Christian Endeavor work. It will be understood that all Endeavor offerings will go to the support of our National Field Secretary.

In all the history of Christian Endeavor in our churches we have never before had the help of a Field Secretary. In placing Mr. Lowe in the position, the National Board is carrying out the expressed wishes of our societies as expressed in the Los Angeles Convention. Our Endeavorers must now stand by us.

What Kind of Literature the Young People and Adults of Your Sunday School Read? Or Is It a Matter of Little Concern?

Are you using a certain paper in your school at present because you have examined the market and have decided after careful consideration that this particular paper is the best?

HAVE YOU CONSIDERED "THE CONQUEST?"

Note What Disciple Leaders Think of This Attractive Journal of Character-Building:

Secretary Robert M. Hopkins: "I read every word of it."

Rev. E. W. Cole, Huntington, Ind.: "Belongs in a class all its own."

Rev. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore: "A paper of real merit."

Rev. Claude E. Hill: "Ought to have a wide circulation."

Rev. Wm. Dunn Ryan, Youngstown, O.: "I am delighted with The Conquest."

Rev. J. H. Goldner, Cleveland, O.: "An abundance of readable and informing matter of a high order."

Supt. Garry L. Cook, of Indiana: "Neat, dignified and attractive."

Dr. J. H. Garrison, St. Louis: "A valuable contribution to our Sunday-school literature."

Dr. H. L. Willett, Chicago: "A live and attractive journal."

Supt. L. C. Oberlies, Nebraska: "A snappy, helpful paper."

Rev. E. F. Daugherty, Vincennes, Ind.: "Makes a bull's eye with me."

Rev. Austin Hunter, Chicago: "Splendidly adapted to our young people."

Rev. John R. Ewers, Pittsburg, Pa.: "A clean, newsy, well-edited, constructive journal for older students."

Rev. L. J. Marshall, Kansas City, Mo.: "It is stimulating and attractive. Very popular with the members of our Bible school."

Rev. Frank Waller Allen, Springfield, Ill.: "I think The Conquest is the best edited Bible school publication of its kind."

Rev. Chas. M. Fillmore, Indianapolis, Ind.: "It has fine ideals yet is practical; it is newsy but not full of chit-chat; it is progressive but not radical; it is literary but not scholastic; it is substantial but not heavy."

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Divine Contagion

THE influence of Jesus over his friends and disciples, and throughout the world in all the centuries, has been wrought less by his teachings or works of power than by the contagion of his life.

There is a terrible picture of plague presented in one of the chapters of the prophecy of Amos. A house stricken with the dread disease has become a scene of horror and apprehension. That is the type of contagion against which the world has learned to protect itself.

Then there was the contagion of holiness resulting from contact with religious objects and persons. Of that the priestly laws of Israel made emphatic use.

But the life of Jesus presents a new type of contagious power through the impartation of personality. No one ever came into contact with the Teacher from Nazareth without feeling that a new and vital force had entered his life.

Two disciples of his walked mystified and distressed to Emmaus. They were joined by a stranger who tarried with them at the journey's end, and in the breaking of bread was made known to them as the Lord. As they hurried back to Jerusalem in the gathering twilight they whispered one to another, "Were not our hearts burning within us while he talked with us by the way?" It was the contagion of his presence.

John at the Jordan and the centurion at the cross were caught by the contagion of that life and were filled with a new sense of reverence for all that was holy, because the divine-human Man made that holiness real to them. John exclaimed, "Behold, the Lamb of God," and the centurion turning away from the three crosses said, "Surely this man was a son of God."

How much of the power of early Christianity was due to this element of affection and good will caught from the Master we shall never know. But there is reason to believe that one of its vital elements felt so profoundly by the heathen society around was this love which seemed the characteristic of every follower of the Man of Nazareth.

Not less wonderful was the contagion of faith with which the friends of Jesus were inoculated by their contact with him. Men who were not easily moved to change their opinions responded to his call and followed him from fishing boats and from places of tribute. In his presence nothing seemed impossible. The dreams of the divine presence became real as he talked with them. And when the way was opened for their frank confession they cried out, "Thou art the Anointed." The centurion at Capernaum, carried away with his confidence in Jesus, astonished even the Master himself with the splendor of his faith. It was the result of contact with a life whose basic principle was trust in the divine.

How much of the wonder-working power of Jesus which brought new strength and healing to the sick of his time was due to the contagion of health, of which he was the resident center and dispensing power? If there is a contagion of disease, why should there not be one of health? Why deny the fact that some before and since the days of our Lord have possessed this singular and radiant gift? And why hesitate to believe that he, whatever other manifestation of power he may have given, was the conspicuous example of the contagion of health?

But far more important than any impartation of physical vitality was the contagion of goodness which men caught from him. The thief upon the cross looked at him and besought a share in the life he lived. Zaccheus, the publican of Jericho, was humbled and transformed by a few hours of contact with the one man of his time to whom wealth meant nothing and who was the brother of all mankind. There came one day a young man asking what good thing he might do to gain the life of which Jesus spoke, and we cannot doubt that the motive of that question was his perception of the goodness that was in Jesus and its inoculating quality which stirred him to the new emotion. The sinful woman who knelt at his feet and broke over them the jar of precious ointment had felt a new passion stirring within her as she came within the circle of his holiness.

This was Jesus' way. He did not arrange for great assemblies, nor placard his teachings with any publicity device. He talked with men and women as he met them, sometimes singly and sometimes in companies, but always it was the contagion of his presence and his interest that enlightened and transformed the people he touched. No moment was too short and no occasion too obscure for him to employ persuasively and convincingly that sublime power of imparted personality that was his dominant characteristic.

He touched a few men and women, and they went forth aflame with the new enthusiasm to arouse in turn as many as they could reach. Their desire was to be with him, to enjoy evermore the blessed fellowship which was a constantly renewed surprise and an ever increasing benediction. But he sent them forth to spread the contagion through the world. The healed demoniac was commissioned to go back to his own village. The disciples were sent out two by two, or singly, into the region round about and to the uttermost parts of the world. It was Jesus' way of inoculating humanity with the new virus of the life of holiness and sacrifice.

Nor is there any other way today. It is not by preachments, nor doctrines, nor ordinances, nor organizations, that the kingdom of God,—that is, the ideals and influence of Jesus,—can come to realization. All these are helps; but the power itself is the imparted life of Christ, the world's great interpreter of God. And today he moves among men in the person of those who have caught his spirit and point of view, and he touches again the suffering world with his healing, and the questioning world with his optimism and confidence. God becomes real wherever he moves in the person of his true disciples. The shadow of his blessing is over such as are sensitive to the divine reality.

Are not our hearts burning within us while he walks with us by the way, and speaks to us of the things of God?

Dr. Powell on Orthodoxy

A Sermon Recently Delivered at First Christian Church, Louisville

BY E. L. POWELL

IT IS NOT an easy matter to define the word "orthodoxy," nor is it an easy matter to bring very definitely before the minds of an audience all that is involved of condemnation in the word "heresy." The common acceptation of orthodoxy is that which is the very reverse of the spirit of orthodoxy as it is brought to us on the pages of the New Testament. We mean by orthodoxy the intellectual acceptance of certain dogmas, certain theological interpretations of Scripture, certain metaphysical and speculative deductions in connection with matters that are wholly beyond the reach and range of the finite mind. The orthodox man, if we shall understand the common acceptation of this word, is he who intellectually accepts the Apostles' Creed or the Nicene Creed or the Augsberg Confession or the Westminster Confession. He is orthodox who actually, as a result of supposed intellectual investigation, is willing to pledge his intellectual acceptance in all honesty and sincerity to the questions in the presence of which even inspiration hesitates and falters. Orthodoxy is virtual intellectual self-conceit, however sincere it may be. It claims infallibility of interpretation, otherwise it would not dare assert the right to make of the intellectual standard of its own creation a measurement of the validity and integrity of the faith of others. It is a man-made procrustean bed—if one is too short to get into it he must be stretched; if one is too long he must be trimmed.

AN OPPRESSIVE INFLUENCE.

Orthodoxy, as church history gives it to us, is the most oppressive of all the influences and agencies of man's creation. It is the virtual domination over the intellect of others on the part of a few men who have arrogated to themselves the right and who have presumed to put in stereotyped and crystallized fashion a standard by which to determine man's acceptance with God. It has narrowed the entrance of the Kingdom of Heaven in that necessarily that entrance is limited to a few who are intellectually fit. If in order to gain entrance into that kingdom men shall be required to give mental assent to the dogmas and theories and theological speculations which have been embodied in our historic creeds, then who of us shall be credited with a sincere and honorable orthodoxy? For is it not perfectly evident that the millions are wholly ignorant of these creeds and only the very limited few have even a passing intellectual acquaintance with them?

Now, my dear friends, I am here to affirm that the orthodoxy of the New Testament is just the reverse and antithesis of the sort of orthodoxy which I have been seeking to describe as the popular conception of the same. Orthodoxy, in the New Testament—and the word is not used in the New Testament—requires only and solely the simple acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ to the best of one's knowledge and ability. It nowhere requires subscription to any creed, to any theological dogma, to any theory, to any opinion. I am not here discussing the truth or the falsity of any of these dogmas that claim the right to be accepted on the ground of their accurate interpretation of scriptural truth. I am simply here affirming that nowhere does our Lord or do his apostles require subscription to any other creed than that enjoined in the confession of Simon Peter when, looking his Master steadily in the face, he declared from his heart and his head,

Dr. E. L. Powell, who declares that the orthodoxy of the New Testament is exactly the reverse of the orthodoxy of popular conception.

"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God."

A DEFINITION OF FAITH.

We read of those who were obedient to the faith; we read of those who were exhorted to be sound in the faith. What is the faith? Is it a philosophy? Is it an intellectual system? Does it consist in certain planks in a religious platform? What is the faith? Hear that grand orthodox representative, the Apostle Paul, as he comes to the end of his journey, declaring, "I have kept the faith." What could he have meant? Does he mean that he had been loyal to the New Testament? It was not written, and he himself helped to write it. Does he mean to affirm that he was loyal to the Nicene Creed? It had not been born. Does he mean to affirm that he was loyal and that he accepted intellectually the Apostle's Creed? It had not come into existence. He declares with all emphasis, "I have kept the faith!" What does he mean? Nowhere in the New Testament is the question, What do you believe? But everywhere is the question, In what do you believe? Paul means to say that he had been loyal to the personal Christ from the very hour when he looked upon his splendid glory in that memorable journey to Damascus. From that hour his soul was knit in a life-holding resolution to be loyal to Jesus Christ. He accepted him then and there as Lord and Master, and no lover was ever truer to his love than was Paul to this Master and Lord of his conscience and of his life.

So, then, it follows that heresy is a denial in faith and life of this simple faith in Jesus Christ. Who alone has the right to reign and to rule over the heart, over the life.

As between the boy in the parable who said, "I go not," and yet went, and the boy who said, "I go," and yet went not, which is orthodox and which is the heretic? As between those of whom Jesus speaks who said, "Lord, Lord!" and in speech were orthodox, and those who said nothing and made no claim, and yet did the things which the Lord commanded, which is heretic and which is orthodox? As between the Unitarian who lives the Christ-life and the Trinitarian who denies the Christ-life in his selfishness and in his hardness, which is orthodox and which is heretic? As between the Pharisee who observed all the requirements of his ritualistic code and who boasted of his loyal and thorough obedience to the traditions of his elders and in doing so thanked God that he was not as this publican—as between him and the publican who had nothing more than a sense of sin in the presence of God and a desire to be better and who could say nothing further than "God be merciful to me a sinner," which was orthodox and which was heretic? As between those legalists who stood in the presence of the sinful woman and who had absolutely orthodox authority to demand that she should be stoned, quoting no less a high authority than Moses himself, and the Christ Who simply wrote on the ground and said, "Let him that is without sin among you cast the first stone," which is orthodox and which is heretic? As between the errors of a Nestorius and the barbarities of Cyril, the great leader of religious orthodoxy in Alexandria, which is orthodox, the man who made the intellectual mistakes and yet who lived right, or the man who had intellectual accuracy and yet lived wrong?

"DAMNABLE" HERESIES.

As between the man who recites the Apostle's Creed on Sunday and lives in the spirit of a cruel commercialism every other day in the week, and the man who does not know the Apostle's Creed, and who says, "Write me down as one who loves his fellow men," which is orthodox and which is heretic?

Friends, when we read the great utterances of him whom we call Lord and Master, we have no sort of difficulty in determining what he means by orthodoxy and what He means by heretic. Now, in this wonderful chapter which I have read to you the Apostle speaks of "damnable" heresies. In the authorized version the harsh word is softened into "destructive" heresies. He has in mind no departure from any intellectual standard whatever. He has in mind the departure of men in their hearts and in their lives and in their affections from the Lord's will concerning them. He has in mind those who are guilty of such wickedness as to absolutely eat away the foundations of morality and spiritual aspiration and worship. It is the only heresy that is condemned in the New Testament. No anathema is pronounced anywhere against any other than those who love not the Lord Jesus Christ. There are no fulminations against any man who has been unfortunate enough—shall we say—to miss the way intellectually.

I want to particularize just a little. There is brought before us very clearly in the New Testament, first, the heresy of unbelief. Jesus says some severe words concerning the man who does not believe in Him. He that believeth not shall be condemned, not because he does not believe certain theories concerning the Divine Person, not because he does not believe certain dogmas which would seek to bring down the infinite into the limitations of propositional statements—he that believeth not in him shall be condemned. What is that heresy? It is the heresy of the eye which deliberately closes its lids and says there is no light for me, although the eye was made for the light, and cannot exercise its function apart from the light. It is the heresy of the ear, which deliberately stops the passageway of sound and says, "I do not believe in harmony," although the ear was made for sound, and cannot exercise its function apart from sound.

THE FATAL HERESY.

There is this moral sense in every man which is as truly made for Jesus Christ as the eye was made for light or the ear was made for sound. Jesus says: "If you do not believe in me you are denying the moral sense; if the light that is in you be darkness how great is that darkness!" This is your condemnation, that seeing the light you refuse to walk in that light. It is the condemnation of the world today. There is no deeper impoverishment than that which comes to a man who denies the claims, the longings, the aspirations, the yearnings of his immortal soul for those things, those realities, those sweet presences and influences and power which can be found alone in Jesus Christ. It is the heresy of unbelief and inevitably, logically, the man who refuses this sort of faith in Jesus Christ will find his moral nature slowly and gradually disintegrating, for such unbelief is a canker worm that eats away the foundations of all spiritual advancement.

Then I notice, too, the heresy of unshared knowledge and privilege. Jesus speaks to those who shut up the kingdom of heaven against those who desire to come in. It is the heresy of the dog in the manger policy. It is the deliberate attempt to monopolize Christian privileges and to hold this for our own religious comfort and self-indulgence. It is the heresy of the scholar who refuses to give out the truth which the world needs and which has come to him as a glorious discovery. It is the heresy of the doctor, who, himself a victim of tuberculosis, and who, having found out a specific for tuberculosis, withholds that specific for his own use, and allows the thousands to perish unhelped and unaided. It is the heresy of withholding any light and any knowledge, any helpful influence, any saving agency from the rest of the world. The deepest heresy of which the church has ever been guilty was not in turning away from any propositional creed whatsoever, but in refusing to give her gospel to the world and in so far as she is heretic today in the New Testament conception of the world her heresy consists in refusing to send out quickly and gloriously and splendidly his light and his salvation to those who dwell in darkness.

SECRET OF LARGE LIVING.

This is one of the damnable heresies, one of the destructive heresies, for to withhold any privilege for one's own selfish use is surely to lose that privilege. He that would save his life—his life of worship, his life of aspiration, his life of sweetness—for his own use, keeping it aloof and apart from the rest of the world, by this very nonuse will lose it. He that shares it, he that loses it, he that gives it away, he that regards it as common property for all the world finds it growing, enlarging, expanding. The heresy of unshared knowledge and privilege!

And close akin to that heresy is the heresy which divorces religion from life, which shuts out God from any governance over the affairs and concerns of society and of government. Perhaps the best illustration of the heresy is given to us in the story of the man who fell among thieves on the Jericho road. The priest and the Levite were the representatives of the orthodoxy of their time. That orthodoxy required that the priest should attend strictly to priestly duties, and that the Levite should attend strictly to the duties of the Levite. It imposed no sort of obligation whatever to go beyond the professional requirements of their respective offices; and so, as respects the requirements of their own orthodoxy they were justified in passing by the wounded man on the other side; and yet Jesus, once and forevermore, gives this ecclesiastical orthodoxy to understand that it is the worst heresy, by lifting into immortal fame the good Samaritan who did not belong to any church and who subscribed to no creed, and yet who joyously turned aside to be the ministering servant of the man in distress.

Sometimes the question is asked, do you think that this man who has just passed away will be saved? He was not in any church, he did not subscribe to any creed, and you begin to think of that man's life and you recall his quiet ministrations. There come before you his stealthy benefactions, and we cannot understand why it is that he did not identify himself with any church organization; but will anyone of us dare to say that he did not live the Christ-life, and is there doubt on the part of anybody that if there is a heaven he has gone to it?

THE HERETIC OF LOVE.

Remember that the heretic in this parable is the Man who is set before us as an example of love in all the coming ages and centuries.

One other thought. The heresy of falseness, the fundamental heresy! I do not believe that in any literature there can be found such denunciation of a false life issuing from a false heart as that given us in those wonderful words found in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew's Gospel. You cannot gather figs from thistles, you cannot get golden conduct out of leaden instincts. Jesus puts the ax at the root of the tree and says to His own generation and to all coming time, there can be no acceptable life in the sight of God that is not rooted in sincerity and genuineness and absolute honesty. Hypocrites! because you profess to sit in Moses' seat, to have the key of knowledge, to know the way of life yourself and show it to others, and all this profession is a lie. Hypocrites! because your pretended charity is a lie aggravated by the forms of devotion with which it is masked while the essence of it is most sordid avarice. Hypocrites! because your zeal for God is a lie, being really a zeal from the devil. Your converts being perverts worse than yourselves. Hypocrites! because your morality is a lie, making the law of God of none effect by your miserable casuistry. Hypocrites! because your devotion is a lie, consisting merely in punctilious attention to the minutest forms while the weighty matters of the law you set aside like those who strain at the gnat and swallow the camel! Hypocrites! because your whole demeanor is a lie, all fair without like a whited sepulchre, while within ye are full of dead men's bones and of all uncleanliness. Hypocrites! because your pretended reverence for the prophets is a lie, for had you lived in the days of your fathers ye would have done as they did, which is plain by the way you are acting now, for you built the tombs of the dead prophets and put to death the living ones.

That is par excellence the destructive heresy of the religious world. In so far as there is falseness, there is blasphemy. In so far as there is pretense, there is the open mockery of high heaven. Concerning such a life it may be said as literal truth, every plank in the floor is rotten, and every stone is dug from the quarries of hell.

There is finally the heresy of religious intolerance. Jesus was tolerant of intellectual unbelief. He was intolerant of insincerity. He was tolerant of sins of the flesh. He was intolerant of sins of the heart. Religious intolerance is another name for ecclesiastical tyranny.

ORTHODOXY THAT HELPS.

It has kindled every inquisition fire. It has looked upon a life of beauty and because not in intellectual conformity with its own cherished opinions and beliefs has denied to that life the favor of heaven. It has been the enemy of art and of science. It has sought to block every intellectual advance that the world has made. It is the Frankenstein of religious history; it is more cruel than war. It has slain its thousands of ideals; it has made millions to be shrinking slaves in the presence of a mighty call to enter upon a great splendid realm of truth and beauty. It has destroyed the most sacred altars. Religious intolerance! it is the negation of love, it is the denial of Jesus Christ. It is putting him to open shame. It is, to use the words of our text, denying the Lord who bought us, that One concerning Whom it was said, a bruised reed he will not break, and smoking flax he will not quench till he send forth judgment unto victory. That One Whose voice was never hoarse, but from which always came a musical benediction upon those that were struggling to do that which was right.

But, my friends, I dare not associate orthodoxy with religious intolerance for fear that you may think that I am speaking of the orthodoxy of the New Testament. I dare to associate it with that orthodoxy which has made paganism to be tame and insipid in its persecutions. It is the heresy of a smug, self-satisfied righteousness, which shuts up the kingdom of God against men, and which would put out all the light of God which is not kindled by the taperal light of man's feeble understanding.

Let us seek simple faith, love, loyalty and allegiance to Jesus Christ. Let us face the world remembering that if God be for us we need have no concern that man is against us. Let us know that to love and to serve and to endure and to worship and to try to live the Christ life is the orthodoxy which will bring heaven down upon earth, and which will make us to enjoy fellowship with the angels and the spirits of just men made perfect.

The Coronation of Yoshihito

Newly Crowned Emperor of the Land of the Rising Sun.

R. D. STEVENS, IN THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORLD

ON THE tenth of November there occurred in Kyoto, the ancient capital of Japan, which for nearly one thousand years was the home of her rulers, the final ceremonies in the coronation of Yoshihito, Emperor of Japan.

For more than two years Japan has been making ready for this ceremony, which would have taken place a year ago, had it not been for the death of the Empress Dowager; a veritable Aladdin's palace was built for the coronation banquet, only to be destroyed at the conclusion of the festivities; new hotels for the accommodation of the thousands of sightseers have sprung up like mushrooms; and during the few weeks directly preceding the coronation the roads leading over the mountains to the beautiful old capital city lying in its hill-encircled valley have been thronged with pilgrims journeying on foot, in jinrikishas, and in motor-cars. Eye-witnesses described the procession as the transport of a vast army.

The Japanese trace the origin of the ceremony which took place on November tenth back through seventy-five generations of rulers to the distant myth-enshrouded time when the sun goddess placed her child, Jimmu Tenno, upon the throne of Yamato. Be that as it may, recorded history vouches for the fact that it is one of the oldest rites in existence.

The material badges of which the Emperor became possessed on his accession to the throne were the sacred mirror, the sacred sword, and the sacred seal. According to tradition the holder of these three sacred objects is the real sovereign of the land. Two of them, the sword and the seal, have been in the possession of Yoshihito since the death of his father, July 30, 1912, when he became the virtual head of the nation.

During the serious illness of his late father, Meiji Tenno, the crown prince gave many an evidence of his thoughtfulness of others and of his remarkably democratic nature. On his frequent visits to the palace he and the princess had been in the habit of riding in separate carriages; but, observing that the progress of the imperial carriages through the streets necessarily delayed traffic, he soon gave orders that they would ride together, and also decreed that the customary spreading of sand over the street-car tracks to prevent any jar to the carriage in crossing be henceforth dispensed with. Such little acts of consideration won him, even before he entered upon his reign, a warm place in the hearts of his people.

In present-day Japan, certainly among the educated, the belief that the emperor is divine is dying out. While holding him in the deepest veneration and loyal affection, the Japanese recognize him to be a man and not a descendant of a mythological sun goddess.

While his father passed all the years of his life in the strictest seclusion, Yoshihito until he became emperor lived as a man among men. As a young lad he exhibited many boyish characteristics common among lads of less exalted station. Not being possessed of a very robust constitution, he was encouraged to spend much time out-of-doors. Walking, bicycling, and horseback riding were his particular delights. He often went about unattended; and indeed it used to be one of his particular joys to give the slip to the attendants detailed to accompany him on his excursions, causing them many an hour of anxiety over the whereabouts of their royal charge. The writer has often passed him riding horseback on the road near his summer villa at Hayama, unattended and apparently finding great pleasure in going about just as an ordinary citizen of the realm.

He has a kindly, genial face and a ready smile, and is, so we are told, possessed of an unusually keen sense of humor. There are many stories told to illustrate this. One relates how on a trip to the Hokkaido, when he was crown prince, he paid a visit of inspection to a certain high-school, and, learning that some of the rooms had been specially prepared to create a favorable impression, he went through them very hastily, and then, much to the consternation of the teachers, insisted on poking about in the classrooms and laboratories, which were in a state quite unfit for his royal consideration.

The most important dates to be recalled in the life of the emperor are August 31, 1879, the day of his birth; August 31, 1887, when he was nominated heir apparent, that year also being memorable for the promulgation of the constitution; November 3, 1889, the date on which he was proclaimed crown prince; and May 10, 1900, the day of his mariage to Princess Sadako. To the great joy of his subjects there have been born to the imperial couple three fine strong sons, Prince Michi, heir apparent, Prince Atsu, and Prince Teru, thus assuring an unbroken succession to the throne.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, Ph. D.

In Two Volumes at $1.00 each

A thrilling and luminous interpretation of the Old Testament prophets, setting forth the historical situation within which each prophet lived and toward which his message was directed, and reconstructing for the modern reader the biographical story of each one of the immortal preachers of righteousness in ancient Israel. These two volumes have a tremendous value for the time in which we live—a time of war and fear of war. Dr. Willett makes each prophet live anew. No Bible student can understand the full message of the Bible who does not have a vivid grasp of the messages of Israel's prophets. There is no writer or teacher in America or Europe who has come nearer weaving the messages of these ancient moral leaders into the warp and woof of his own soul than has Professor Willett. His treatment in these two volumes will be not only a standard among scholars but an inspiration to the rank and file of Christian people for years to come.

Meditations of a Pastor

BY GEORGE A. CAMPBELL

SIX MILLION three hundred thousand dollars is an immense sum of money. That is the amount the "Men and Millions Movement" has determined to raise. For the first time in our history we are thinking in terms of millions; and also for the first time we are thinking of our varied missionary and educational interests as a whole. Heretofore each Missionary Society and each college has pursued its course in lonely isolation.

The idea of doing a large thing in a co-operative way is a big one, and a good one. Whether or not we are a denomination we undoubtedly have a denominational consciousness. Our familiar, home-like terminology grows out of this consciousness. All of us have a sense of ownership of Bethany, Drake, Eureka, and the rest of the colleges. And the weekly newspapers that come from Chicago, Cincinnati and St. Louis we always speak of as "Our" papers. They may be unruly, but they are still members of our family. The Men and Millions organizers are capitalizing this denominational consciousness. Their appeal is for "our" institutions.

A BELATED MOVEMENT.

This movement seems belated in its birth. A hundred years of history of "our" people brought forth no general co-operative effort of our various interests. A mighty deep conviction delayed this day of co-operation; we were non-conformists of the non-conformists. We were Protestants of Protestantism. Every man and every church was a law unto himself and itself. (Except in doctrine.) Co-operation might mean undue influence from some strong men who would come to have too much authority. So for a hundred years we were uncompromising individualists.

It is difficult to trace accurately the genesis of any idea. The growing Catholicity of the Disciples, the vision and passion of the foreign missionaries, the increased wealth of America, the trend towards the large colleges, making it constantly harder for the small college —these and other tendencies in our twentieth century thought gave birth to this great co-operative undertaking for Men and Millions. The movement has now some twenty solicitors in northeast Missouri. I have had the privilege of seeing their work at close range. The reader might be interested in some details in connection with their visit to a particular community.

A "TEAM" VISIT.

A. E. Cory and R. H. Miller, secretaries of this cause, are in charge of the whole campaign. Choosing their helpers, directing them, mapping out the territory, organizing the material for presentation, keeping proper records and breathing into it all a spirit of optimism, courage and devotion is a mammoth task for any man. They have the brotherhood from which to choose their assistants. As their plea is chiefly for the missions and colleges they select men most familiar with these two fields. Leading representatives of the Foreign Missionaries, of the Missionary Societies, and of the colleges constitute nearly all the workers. I cannot now recall the names of any unofficial layman or any pastors who are among the canvassers.

A visit of a "team" to a local community is most interesting, at least to the pastor. The inner circle of the church, of course, has known of the movement since its inception. The Inner Circle of the church is, in a large measure, the church. It creates the atmosphere that determines the success or failure of every enterprise. The Inner Circle is most hospitable to the Men and Millions Movement. It is not made up mostly of just rich people; except rich in faith and exuberance of spirit. The Inner Circle believes in the redemption of the whole world.

The "team" so believes. The two sparks touch and the church is blessed. R. A. Doan, Dr. R. J. Dye, C. W. Cauble and Mrs. St. Claire Moss visited our church. Sunday morning they gave us a view of the world task. During the week they solicited. The most of the others were in Hannibal last week, but the four did all the soliciting. $5,500 was secured. One of the Inner Circle gave a $1,000 check before any speaking. Another man and his wife of the Inner Circle, especially the giving circle, gave $2,500. All other contributions were $500 each. Several would have given $100, or other smaller amounts; but the solicitors are adhering rigidly to the $500 minimum. The Bible College and the Divinity House were remembered by at least one donor. No one with us gave who will be greatly strained to meet the payment. Others will give later—if times get easier before the campaign closes. The canvassers do not over urge. Their visit is a spiritual stimulus to a church. In the week the five "teams" got in the neighborhood of $25,000. Many of the smaller cities gave nothing. In their visit to three quite strong churches in county seats, each of which three has full time preaching, they failed to get a single subscription. The churches are in great sympathy with the work; but there was none who felt like giving $500.

THE APPEAL FOR A THOUSAND WORKERS.

In the "Life Meeting" they make a strong appeal for the young to volunteer for distinctively religious work. I am wondering about this appeal. One cannot be sure. Often doubtless the less dependable of the young people are the first to sign—but the serious appeal must find response in many splendid souls. "A thousand workers" does not greatly impress me. We must not only call out one here and there; but we must spiritualize all. Mothers, fathers, carpenters, lawyers, doctors, laborers of all kinds. All Christian men and women are workers. All callings are sacred. If we make men, ministers will not be lacking. If we make Christians, missionaries for every task will be forthcoming. A thousand workers? We need a church sanctified. Decisions for life work ought not to be made under duress.

The visitors did not touch upon the war. One letter sent out by the secretaries said, "We have forgotten that there is war." Some of us cannot forget. It may be wise not to mention the war. It would be better to interpret it, to explain its religious significance, to show forth the good that is to result. But who is sufficient for such a disclosure? Every attempt I have read has been a lame one. Some seem undisturbed by this terrible cataclysm. Others hear the groans and cries of the soldiers at all hours. I am not surprised many are wondering as to God's part in the war. Nor am I surprised that many are less certain as to know where and how they can place their money, time and lives to count for the most. Nor was I surprised to read a bleeding letter from one of our missionaries. Why this war? Are they not Christian nations that are at each other's throats? You have not helped the problem much when you say it is not Christian civilization, but so-called Christian civilization. That "Christianity has not failed because it has not been tried," is rather bright; but to me, comfortless. Be patient with the troubled soul.

R. A. DOAN.

I had a rather close and intimate view of R. A. Doan, the new Laymen's secretary of the Foreign Society. The Foreign Society has proved it knows how to select men, and as usual it has made no mistake this time. A man of middle age, strong body, doing a large business, prosperous, successful. Why did he leave Nelsonville, Ohio? Why did he close his business desk? Not because of a notion. Mr. Doan is a conservative man. He is not spectacular or notionate. Why?

Because of a conviction. He came to see, through his Bible class of men, that Christ was a Redeemer. John and Jim and Dick and Harry, members of his class had been transformed by Christ. The thought grew upon him. "If Christ can redeem these, my friends, he can redeem the world." This conviction took him out of business, took him to the Foreign Fields, led him into the Men and Millions Movement. It re-made him. He is a thrice born man. The dedication of himself to his present task was his third birth. This conviction of Christ's redeeming power has made him gentle, considerate, quietly religious; but not less strong. Through this conviction he saw the Foreign Field—through it he is seeing the brotherhood of Disciples. "Genuine Regeneration" is his phrase in referring to many of the converted natives on the Foreign Field. That to Mr. Doan is the supreme apology of Christianity.

"IMPOSSIBLE BUT FOR GOD."

The sorrow of the world has entered his soul. That I believe is the great test to distinguish the true minister. When the world's sorrow has possessed a life, that life in the true mystical sense is connected with the cross and all its vicarious significances. I asked him about the immense heathen background, about the influence of the war and then about the likelihood of ultimate success. "Impossible but for God," was his reply. Paul knew the power and hope of "alla," but; so does Doan.

It seems to me it is the same with love and happiness as it is with sorrow, the more we know of it the better we can feel what other people's lives are or might be, and so we shall only be more tender to them and wish to help them. —George Eliot.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

WHO PAYS FOR IT?

WHEN one considers the very large amount of educational material which is now being distributed in the interest of "Preparedness," so-called, one wonders what is the source from which the revenue is derived that provides for this propaganda.

An enormous quantity of newspaper matter is being furnished to journals of every class wholly without expense. Stories purporting to tell of dangers to America from unnamed, but portentous, powers beyond the oceans, are running as serials, occupying large space in daily papers, east and west. This space is very valuable. Who pays for it?

Moving pictures displaying the menace of possible war and the havoc that would be wrought if such an experience were to befall the United States, are being exhibited in theaters in various parts of the country, and, as is well known, the houses are freely "papered," and the actual cash receipts do not in any manner cover the expenses of production and exhibition. These pictures have been run at a loss to the producers, yet they are continued, and the number of cities in which they are exhibited increases. Why pays for it?

One need not suggest that money is actually used to buy editorial opinion, for it is freely conceded that the cry of "preparedness" is a popular one at the present moment, and the editorial offices are doubtless sensitive to the sentiment of the time. Yet it is difficult to understand why sober and usually balanced journals are repeating day after day the arguments for armament. Are there inducements, either directly financial or in the form of advertising, or of the still more insidious sort by which pressure is brought to bear by great organizations, in the effort to create favorable public sentiment? If so, who is to pay for it?

A moment's reflection suggests the fact that the only people who can profit by the exploitation of "preparedness" are, on the one side, the military and naval group who are always legitimately jealous for the enlargement of their branches of the national service, and, on the other hand, the commercial interests which profit directly from the manufacture of arms and war supplies. What is the connection between this latter class, now reaping golden harvests from the war in Europe, and the determined and persistent education of public sentiment in America, in behalf of a vastly increased national armament?

JANE ADDAMS

THE serious illness of Miss Jane Addams is greatly disquieting her friends, and this means the entire country, for in the thought of multitudes she stands as the most typical and influential American.

No one can fail of admiration for this woman who has devoted her life to the public service to an almost unparalleled degree. Possessed of financial resources which would have enabled her to live a life of elegant leisure, she devoted her money, her strength and her marvelous intellectual endowments to the promotion of health and happiness in one of the most congested and depressed portions of this city.

Out of the simple and homely service rendered there grew her influence upon the entire city and the nation. No woman has been sought more persistently for public addresses, or for advice upon municipal and social themes than Miss Addams, and up to the limit of her strength, and beyond, she has responded to these calls.

Her written works, in books and in magazines, have interpreted to the world an almost voiceless side of our industrial and social life. She has made us understand more of the problems which make difficult the lives of working people, and especially the young men and women of the industrial class.

Not the least significant of Miss Addams' services to her city and time has been her valiant advocacy of unpopular causes. In most of the disputes between employers and employees in this city the influence of Hull House has been on the side of the worker, and its public rooms have always been at the disposal of those who had troubles to redress, or a cause to plead. This has brought sharp criticism upon Miss Addams and her work from those who feared the growth of the spirit of protest against the abuses of financial power.

During the past two or three years Miss Addams has given unstintedly of her time and strength in the effort to promote peace sentiment in this country and abroad. Nothing could appear more futile than such efforts in a time of war, yet Miss Addams and women of like spirit have bated no jot of effort in this cause.

She was the leader of the American delegation of women at the Hague Peace Conference last year, and later visited every court in Europe with urgent pleas in behalf of peace and arbitration.

Doubtless something of her present physical collapse is due to these constant labors in behalf of national and international amity. It is not a popular theme at the present time. The war spirit is in the air. Even those who profess to be horrified at the orgy of destruction going on in Europe are promoting with ardor perhaps unconsciously the danger of precisely the same calamity in America. It is conviction which has aroused Miss Addams and many of like mind to unremitting efforts in behalf of a trust in higher forces than those of armament and militarism.

It is the hope of every American that Miss Addams may be restored speedily to strength, and to that high and purposeful service which she is rendering the causes of industrial justice, social welfare and world conciliation.

A NEW ARCHBISHOP

A FEW days ago there was announced the selection of a new Archbishop for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Chicago and vicinity. The appointee is Rev. George W. Mundelein, of New York, whose successful career as promoter of Roman Catholic interests in that city, especially in the building up of parochial establishments, marked him out as an admirable choice for the chief executive of his Church in this city.

Whatever may be thought of the doctrines and practices of the Roman Catholic Church, there is no question that its administration is wonderfully effective in the conservation of all its forces and the promotion of its educational, benevolent and ecclesiastical purposes. It sets an instructive example of the control in which an organization without external authority can regulate the lives of vast numbers of people in the promotion of good morals and the creation of a spirit of benevolence and devotion. The great establishments which the Roman Catholic Church is erecting in every city testify to the zeal of its clergy and the generosity of its people. And when it is remembered that many of the members of the Roman Catholic Church are people of modest circumstances, the wonder is increased that the Roman Church is able to secure from its members such large sums of money for the prosecution of its work.

Most of these results are due to the masterful character of the organization and the zeal and enthusiasm of its ministry. In these regards the Roman Catholic Church sets to Protestantism an example of unity and absorbed interest that is worthy of careful imitation.

It will be interesting to learn the characteristics of the new Archbishop of Chicago. He follows a man of advanced years and strongly conservative tendencies. The new head of the Roman Church in this city will have a splendid opportunity to advance the interests of his Church and of Christianity if he shows himself to be of progressive and enlightened spirit. This, we believe, to be increasingly the policy of his Church in America, though as yet it labors under serious handicaps from the influence of the Curia at Rome, and the older and more conservative leaders in this country. But the spirit of democracy and intelligence is gaining in the Roman Catholic Church, and we hope the new Archbishop of Chicago may prove to be a wise and progressive leader.

A BLOW TO ZIONISM

AMONG the changes that have been wrought by the war the new conditions which have confronted the Jews in various parts of the world have not been least. It is difficult to imagine the distress which has fallen upon great communities of that unhappy people by reason of the military operations in Poland and Russia and the greatly disturbed situation in Palestine. Thousands of Jews are serving in the German and Russian ranks, some of them of free will and others under compulsion. In Palestine the weakness of the Turkish government and the reign of force and terror inaugurated by unscrupulous officials has reduced the Jewish population to poverty and terror.

Twice the people of Palestine were driven away from their homes; once when Jerusalem was destroyed by the Babylonians in 536 B. C., and again when the city was devastated by the Romans in 70, A. D. Once more, after centuries of practically peaceful residence in the Holy Land, under the broad, though somewhat contemptuous, toleration of the Turks, the Jews are being driven forth from the land which many hoped might become the home of their race some time in the future.

Under the stimulus of Zionistic aspirations many Jews have taken up their residence in Palestine, and others, some of the most resourceful of their nation, have expended large sums of money in creating agricultural and industrial communities for their poorer brethren on the holy soil. It is probable that not less than half a billion of dollars have been expended by the Rothschild and other Zionistic agencies for the promotion of this purpose. These little communities, scattered from Hebron to the Lebanons, have now all but disappeared. Their inhabitants have been compelled to fly before conscription and spoliation. Thousands of these refugees have gone to Egypt, Europe and America. It is literally "the third exile" of these unfortunate people, and withal, it is a blow to Zionism so serious as to seem practically fatal.

NEW ENDEAVOR IDEALS

AT THE great Endeavor Convention held in this city last summer a number of new and thrilling watchwords were adopted which ought to bring fresh enthusiasm to the hearts of all the young people of the churches.

One of these was the securing of a million new Christian Endeavorers during the next two years, which means, of course, a million new members secured for the churches.

Another splendid ideal was that of a million new dollars for missions. This implies the creation of the missionary spirit in these new converts and members, and an actual addition to the resources of the various missionary boards such as would be a vast help in their big enterprise.

Many years of history have proved the invaluable worth of Christian Endeavor. No single organization in the Church, with the exception of the Sunday-school, has ever rendered such efficient service.

These new ideals are worthy of enthusiastic adoption by every local society.

GARY'S PLAN FOR RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION

IN EXPLANATION of the Gary plan of religious instruction for which many New York churches are preparing in view of the introduction of the Gary system in the schools of that city, Superintendent Wirt recently gave out the following statement:

"Every church in Gary is giving religious instruction to children in the extra hours which are not used in the classroom. The children have come to regard it in a very matter-of-fact way as a regular part of their daily lives. They would be surprised to learn that there were children in other cities who had no religious instruction on week-days.

"I have not been able to find the slightest mark of sectarianism on any of the children or the least trace of ill-feeling between the Churches over the question of education. There is not in the religious instruction they receive daily at the various churches any teaching apt to produce such results. They are not taught much about creeds or the differences between denominations.

"I do not say that a religious teacher could not get them excited over the differences between Churches, but I cannot imagine a Church employing such a teacher. I cannot see that it is a strong argument against a good thing to say that it might be done badly. It is our business to see that it is done well."

If we consider cheerfulness in three lights, with regard to ourselves, to those we converse with, and to the great Author of our being, it will not a little recommend itself on each of these accounts. The man who is possessed of this excellent frame of mind, is not only easy in his thoughts, but a perfect master of all the powers and faculties of his soul: his temper is even and unruffled, whether in action or in solitude. He comes with a relish to all those goods which nature has provided for him, tastes all the pleasures of the creation which are poured upon him, and does not feel the full weight of those accidental evils which may befall him. When I consider this cheerful state of mind in its third relation, I cannot but look upon it as a constant habitual gratitude to the Author of nature. An inward cheerfulness is an implicit praise and thanksgiving to Providence under all its dispensations.—Addison.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Chicago Presbyterians Help the Poor.

There was concerted action among the Presbyterians of Chicago to help the poor this year at Thanksgiving time. Olivet Institute, a settlement on the north side, distributed nearly three hundred baskets. Other churches were not far behind. The men's Club of Fourth church aided materially in making the holiday a day of joy.

Mayor Angry at Ministers.

At a union meeting of the ministers of Chicago on Nov. 29, a number of matters were considered but none of them got the attention given to the garment workers' strike. The men who arranged the meeting brought in Miss Ellen Gates Starr of Hull House, Mr. Sydney Hillman, president of the International Garment Workers' Union, and Mayor Wm. Thompson. The employers were invited to have representation but rejected the invitation scornfully, it is said. The Mayor came to the meeting an hour after it was supposed to adjourn, and after repeated invitations. He told the ministers that he refused to be an arbiter in the strike situation because of the violence practiced by the strikers. All the other speakers denied that there was any disorder resulting directly from the strike situation, and said if there was, it was no reason to refuse arbitration. The mayor told the ministers that more murders would result from their meeting. This brought vigorous denials from the floor and only immediate adjournment prevented the meeting from considering a resolution of reproof for Mayor Thompson. Many ministers of Chicago have become open strike sympathizers. Dr. Helming of University Congregational church wes arrested recently for doing picket duty. Rev. Basil S. Keusseff of the Disciple Russian mission is also under arrest.

Christian Endeavor Launches Million Campaign.

Things have to be talked in terms of "millions" in the Christian World today, and Dr. Francis E. Clark, President of the World's Christian Endeavor is sounding forth a new shibboleth for his great organization. There are three aims for the next two years:

A Million New Converts.
A Million New Church Members.
A Million New Dollars for Missions.

The new aim set forth is significant of the broadening vision of Christian Endeavor for not a one of these great aims is directed to the building up of the society, but is for the benefit of the church universal. It is also planned to induce five thousand young people to devote their lives to Christian work in the ministry or the mission field.

A School of Civic Evangelism.

A School of Civic Evangelism will be held in the Moody church, Chicago, Dec. 28-31. The school will be held under the auspices of the International Reform Bureau of Washington, D. C. The school will be of special interest to evangelists who will develop this new type of effort as one of the possible outlets for their energy.

Fellowship of Reconciliation.

The international movement for a Fellowship of Reconciliation has spread to the United States. At a private conference held at Garden City recently, this movement was explained to about a hundred people, and about sixty joined. The purpose of the new organization is to apply the ethics of Jesus to the moral life of the nations, and to put down racial hatred. A statement of principles is shortly to be issued.

Claims Ministers are Becoming Episcopalians.

Bishop DuMoulin, writing in Church Life, declares that during the past year thirty ministers have received orders to become priests in the Episcopal church. Over against this, is a loss of only one man leaving the denomination to preach in another.

Two Congregational Leaders Attack Militarism

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, as reported by the New York Evening Post, began on November 7 a series of sermons on "the perils of preparedness," saying:

"We must free ourselves from the wizardry of the military and naval experts. It is assumed by many that the nation is under bonds to follow their advice. They are the last men in the world to act as the sane counselors of nations. They know the laws of explosives, but they do not know the laws of life. They understand the principles of mechanics, but not the principles of conduct. They can compute the curve of projectiles, but they are ignorant of the life-forces which determine the curve of a nation's career.

"Who advised the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars in forts in Europe, only to find that the best of all defenses is a hole in the ground? Military experts. Who advised the trampling of Belgium, thus depriving Germany of the sympathy of the civilized world? Military experts. Who ordered the sinking of the "Lusitania? Naval experts. Who has hurled all Europe into a ditch? Military and naval experts. Let them keep within the narrow circle of their legitimate province, working out the details of military organization and tactics, but let them not set themselves up as leaders of the nation, or as teachers of the world."

Dr. Washington Gladden, veteran preacher of Columbus, O., asks who the foe is we are preparing to fight. He insists that the enemy "be produced, identified, Bertilloned, photographed, ticketed, and pigeonholed." He says:

"It now appears probable that we are going to work to spend several hundreds of millions of dollars in getting ready to protect ourselves against the "enemy." The president says that we must; the cabinet officers all appear to agree, the congress has been canvassed and nine-tenths or more of the members of both houses are reported to have declared their purpose of rushing through an appropriation, no matter how large, for arming this nation to meet this enemy. I want to know where he is.

"I hear the suggestion that the enemy is purely impersonal, hypothetical, nobody in particular, 'most anybody—that this is the kind of enemy for whom we are to make this vast warlike preparation.

"Oh, come now! This will never do! The American people are not all so clean gone in lunacy as to accept such a proposition as that. They are not going to get ready for war with a purely conjectural enemy. There are nations sufficiently suggestible to be led into war by the leash of a wild imagination; I am still inclined to hope that the American people have advanced beyond that stage of semi-imbecility. We are not going to get ready to fight a chimera.

"No; there's an enemy somewhere, in the mind of every man who advocates increase in our armaments at the present time. Nobody names him, but everybody has some definite enemy before his mind's eye. Nobody could be sufficiently daft to propose to saddle a big debt upon this nation in order that it might be prepared for war with nobody in particular."

Dr. Gladden says of Germany as "the hypothetical foe":

"I am no apologist for Germany. Her policy and her purposes as they have been disclosed in this war have no charms for me and no illusions. But I am going to try to preserve my rationality in thinking about her.

"In the first place, it is not entirely clear who or what Germany will be when this war is over.

"In the second place, if there are no revolutionary or dynastic changes, if the powers that be continue to be, they have certainly made it very clear that they do not wish any quarrel with the United States. They are not exhibiting, at the present time, any animosity toward us.

"In the third place, we know and they know that we do not wish any quarrel with them; that we have no disposition to interfere with their growth or to place a straw in the way of their prosperity; that we want them to have as big a place in the sun as they can occupy without putting their neighbors in the shade, and no bigger; and that we are ready to co-operate with them in making this a roomier, a richer, and a happier world. This is, has always been, and will always be the attitude of America toward Germany, and every man and woman of German birth in this country knows it; and if there are any Germans in Germany who do not know it, it is high time that their kinsmen on this side of the sea were making them understand it. . . .

"If Americans will stop and think a day or two they can never be convinced that Germany is likely to adopt the role of a pirate, and start out to bombard and plunder our cities. It is a diseased and monstrous suspicion. It is not the result of thinking; it is the symptom of a craze which is sweeping over the country and paralyzing the judgment of men who on other subjects are fairly rational."

Death of Sir Robert Laidlaw.

A cablegram from the Rev. Carey Bonner, of London,, announces the death on November 3 of Sir Robert Laidlaw, M. P., President of the World's Sunday School Association. The news is a great shock to Sunday-school people in America, for Sir Robert was only fifty-nine, and no word had come to this side of the ocean of his declining health. For some months past, however, he had been suffering from heart attacks, especially after long railroad journeys, and it was from one of these attacks that on November 3 he failed to rally. Sir Robert Laidlaw was born in Bonchester, Roxburghshire, January 15, 1856. He was educated in the local parish schools, and began his successful career as a business man in India. At the time of his death he was Chairman of the Whiteaway, Laidlaw and Co., Ltd., and of the Dusun Darian Rubber Estates, Ltd. He was a Liberal in politics, and in 1906 was elected to Parliament from Renfrewshire, Eastern Division. He was knighted in 1909. Because of his wide travels and his knowledge of the Far East he was made a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. Sir Robert Laidlaw was never too much pre-occupied with his business and other interests to take an active part in religious and philanthropic work. When he resided in India he was chosen a delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1909 he was appointed British Commissioner to the International Opium Commission in Shanghai. At all times he has been a very generous giver to Christian work.

HOLIDAY BOOKS+

Living Without Worry. By J. R. Miller. If any American writer could claim the right to advise the rest of humanity not to worry, this hard-worked but calm-souled preacher and author could. Dr. J. R. Miller's books have a larger circulation than those of any other devotional writer. (Geo. H. Doran Co., New York. $1.25 net.)

The Adventures of Tom Sawyer. By Mark Twain. "Not only a great humorist, but a great philosopher, and his writings form one of the assets in America's contributions to the world's achievement, of which we have a right to be genuinely proud." That is what Theodore Roosevelt says of the evergreen Mark Twain, the most representative American humorist. Harper & Brothers, of New York, deserve the thanks of the American people for bringing out the new and splendid limp leather edition of their favorite humorist. Of this set "Tom Sawyer" is one volume. ($1.75

The Man That Corrupted Hadleyburg. By Mark Twain. When this story first appeard, all literary America shook its sides and became conscious of the fact that the country's greatest humorist had arrived. This is another volume of the new twenty-five volume edition of Mark Twain. (Harper & Brothers, New York. Net. $1.75.)

The Prairie Wife. By Arthur Stringer. This delightful romance of "newlyweds" living on the Canadian frontier appeared first in the Saturday Evening Post. It is presented in the form of letters from the wife of "Dinky-Dunk," and the reader is privileged to witness her early inner struggles against the loneliness of the frontier and her final resignation to her lot. The coming of a third member of the family of course helped! (Bobbs-Merrill, Indianapolis. $1.25 net.)

Prudence of the Parsonage. By Ethel Hueston. A glimpse at the remarkable family of five girls of the Rev. Mr. Starr, a Methodist preacher. Prudence, the oldest, the caretaker of the rest of the tribe, is a wonder. This story will especially delight readers who happen to belong to the ministry, either directly or indirectly. (Bobbs-Merrill, Indianapolis, $1.25 net.)

The Rainbow Trail. By Zane Grey. Lovers of stories of the great west will find what they are looking for in this latest book of Zane Grey. The scene is laid in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and is replete with both adventure and romance. (Harper & Brothers, New York. $1.35 net.)

Grimm's Fairy Tales. This new translation of the favorite tales of the Brothers Grimm has been put into attractive dress by the publishers. The art work by George Soper lends the atmosphere of fairyland. Here are those classics of childhood, Tom Thumb, Cinderella, The Sleeping Beauty, Hansel and Gretel, the Brave Little Tailor and three score other tales. This volume is an ideal gift for children. (T. Y. Crowell Co., New York. $1.50 net.)

Rivers to the Sea. By Sara Teasdale. Of modern American poets none is more exquisite than this writer. Her poems sing and at the same time are full of color. The present volume consists of love lyrics, with other verses on miscellaneous themes. Miss Teasdale is a direct descendant from Sappho and Christina Rossetti. (Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.)

The Story of the Christmas Ship. By Lillian Bell. This is the story of the adventures of the good ship Jason, which carried its gifts of clothes, food and toys to the war-stricken people of Europe last Christmas. The history of the ship is here narrated, from the first suggestion of the plan to the final unloading of the gifts in Belgium and other countries. (Rand, McNally Co., Chicago. $1.50.)

Two Different Effects

The quality of food is very largely determined by the ingredients in the baking powder with which it is made. Cream of tartar baking powders, such as Royal, add only healthful qualities to the food.

The cream of tartar of Royal Baking Powder as used in food has the same wholesome effect on the digestive system as the cream of tartar in grapes, from which it is derived.

On the other hand, it is in evidence that objectionable mineral residues exist in food made with alum or phosphate baking powders.

There is a clause on baking powder labels which names all the ingredients. Read it and let it guide you.

THE BIG BELL OF BURMAH.

You must leap in fancy, leagues and leagues over strange lands and stranger seas, into the proper territory of that marvel-maker, Kipling, whose tales and verse you love so well. You must set your steps straight on the road from Mandalay and keep a staunch stride until you find yourself in the heart of Rangoon. Here halt, and gaze in reverential awe upon the Golden Pagoda. Inside this gorgeous pavilion is hung the big bell of Burmah, the biggest bell doubtless in all the broad world.

For the rest of this and many other most interesting sketches which concern the famous bells of all time, send for a catalogue of celebrated Steel Alloy Bells to the old, reliable C. S. Bell Co., Hillsboro, Ohio, for many years the founders of sweet toned bells. Thousands of Steel Alloy Bells will soon peal forth with joyous note the coming of Christmas the world over. Now at happy Yuletide are all in best mood to enjoy the romance, sentiment and service of bells. We can heartily endorse the C. S. Bell Co., who make a special donation offer on Steel Alloy Bells—bells of quality, to churches and schools.

Community House for Indianapolis.

A community house to supply a need in North Indianapolis, is planned by members of the congregation of Seventh church and a campaign for money with which to erect a building suitable for this purpose will be begun in a few days. Under present arrangements $5,000 will be sought to erect the structure. It is planned to erect the structure on a lot adjoining the church. The size of the building has not been determined. A modern gymnasium will be arranged in such a manner that the athletic paraphernalia may be set aside to permit the hall to be used as an auditorium. The gymnasium feature, however, will be looked after carefully. "North Indianapolis, with its 22,000 persons, is sadly in need of an indoor playground for its young and old," said a member of the committee. "It has no building suitable for auditorium purposes. The Seventh Christian church members propose to build a suitable place. Entertainments of all kinds may be held in the proposed building. In fact, the house will be just what it is called, a community house, where all persons may gather for any uplifting purpose. It will be for the benefit of all.

Good Records at Knoxville,

"Home-Coming and Harvest-Home" day was observed last Sunday morning and evening at Fifth avenue church, Knoxville, Tenn. This marked the close of the fourth year of the pastorate of J. Lem Keevil, minister. During the four years that Mr. Keevil has been in charge of the church there has been a great material and spiritual advancement. The church membership has more than doubled. During the pastorate of Mr. Keevil a new church has been erected.

Hamilton, O., Church Closes Revival.

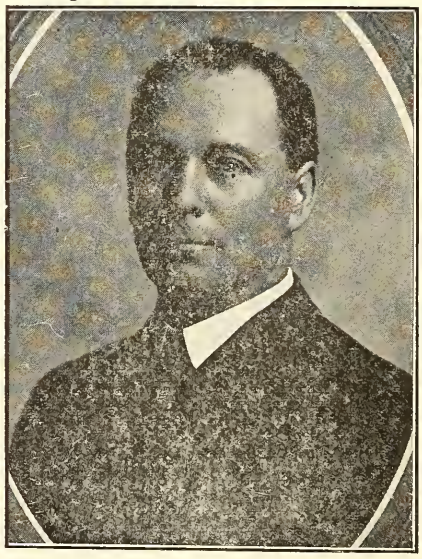
Charles R. Sine, pastor at First church, Hamilton, the First church pastor writes: added to the membership of the church there through the evangelistic services of four weeks just completed. Mr. Sine preached, and Miss Fred Fillmore aided with her solos through the second and third weeks. "Every song is a message," Mr. Sine writes of Miss Fillmore's work. Of the other churches of Hamilton, the First church pastor writes "Lindenwald church, under Craig Schwartz, is doing good service. Coke Otto church is making improvements under leadership of John Craycraft, and we are still pushing our Gordon avenue mission, for which we expect shortly to have a building."

Chicago Pastor Assails Strike Slugger.

Austin Hunter, pastor of the Jackson Boulevard Church, in a recent sermon discussed the present strike in Chicago, speaking on the theme, "The Bystander." Among other things he said: "Jesus took into consideration the bystander in his work. He sought his good, as well as the individual with whom he was dealing directly. His work was altruistic and unselfish. He also taught his followers to remember the bystanders. They were to let their light so shine that men might see. They were to be good neighbors to any men in distress, regardless of nationality or creed. There are multitudes of bystanders in our city toward whom we are indifferent. Just now a strike is on among a class of workers whose wages have been pitifully low. Their only salvation is to stick together. Without a union such a worker is a nonentity, absolutely helpless. With others I spent some time doing picket duty with these people and studying their problem. The cruelty and unfair attitude of the sluggers, and even policemen, were almost unbelievable to me. I saw two brave, rugged sluggers, with their stars concealed, cruelly beat a frail woman and when some of us tried to take their numbers, that we might take the matter up with the proper authorities, they insultingly refused and called us all manner of insolent names. The attitude of these brutish men is anything but neutral. It is time good people should take a lively interest in the battle for bread waged by these unfortunates. The spirit of brotherhood, which is the spirit of Christ, calls for a square deal for all."

Galesburg, Ill., Church to Dedicate New Sunday-school Building.

Plans for the formal dedication of the Sunday-school and social service department of the new church at Galesburg, Ill., were announced at a recent service by H. A. Denton, pastor of the church. January 9 has been named as the day for the dedication proper and the exercises will continue through the week and over the following Sunday. George H. Combs, pastor of Independence Boulevard church, Kansas City, will be the speaker and will remain throughout the week. The entire Sunday-school room, the pastor's study, the aid society rooms and choir room will be complete and furnished at that time. The ventilating, heating, plumbing, vacuum cleaning and all other conveniences will be installed, and ready. The building to date represents an investment of $40,000 and is about half completed. It is planned to finish the work next season.



Rev. H. A. Denton, whose church at Galesburg, Ill., is rejoicing in a new home.

New Downtown Leader for Kansas City.

First church, Kansas City, has just called John J. Silvester, of Cincinnati, Ohio, as assistant pastor, and he begins his work immediately. Mr. Silvester has had large experience in social service in a great city, and is an expert in work among boys and young men. He is also an acceptable minister of the gospel. W. F. Richardson, pastor at First, writes that the church is anticipating great blessing to come to the work in Kansas City from his consecrated labors. Mr. Silvester will have special oversight of such forms of community service as this church may be able to carry on in the down-town district.

E. B. Barnes Preaches on "Men Who Woke up the World."

On Sunday evenings of November and December, E. B. Barnes, of the Richmond, Ky., church, is preaching on "Men Who Woke Up the World." The several topics are as follows: "John Wyckliffe—The Morning Star of the Reformation." "John Huss—The Martyr of Bohemia." "Martin Luther—The Monk that Shook the World." "Savonarola—The Preacher, Reformer, Martyr of Florence." "John Knox—The Reformer of Scotland." "John Wesley—The Man Who Revived the Spiritual Life of the Churches." "Alexander Campbell—The Man Who Called Attention to the Sins of Division and Sectarianism in the Churches." "Willian Booth—The man Who Discovered Anew the Value of the Human Soul."

Tisdall Meeting at Detroit, Closes.

Wellington M. Logan, of Central church, Detroit, Mich., writes that the meeting held at Central, by J. J. Tisdall, of Columbus, O., was one of the most successful held during the last ten years. George H. Lau led in the singing. Each evening recorded an increased attendance up to the last. Thirty persons came into the church on confession and twenty-five by letter. Within a few weeks previous to the meetings fifteen others united with the church and on the Sunday following six others. Mr. Logan writes that Central church has the best Sunday-school within the knowledge of the oldest members of the church. It is under the able direction of Mr. D. K. Stewart. On a recent Sunday thirty-two men canvassed the membership of the church in connection with the Every Member Canvass. Every department of the church's work is reported to be in the best shape under the helpful and consistent leadership of its pastor, C. J. Tannar, who has been the minister of this congregation for thirteen years.

Appreciation of Chas. H. Swift.

J. P. Rowlison, superintendent of the Northeast Missouri Missionary District, thinks that evangelistic meetings should be reported, not so much for the number of accessions as for the "deposit" the evangelist makes of his own character in the community, and speaks as follows of Chas. H. Swift, of Centralia, Mo., who has just completed a series of meetings for the Vandalia, Mo., church, to which Mr. Rowlison ministers: "The chief result of our Vandalia meeting is the deposit Mr. Swift made of himself. And yet was it himself? All his striving was to set forth Jesus Christ, and the only beautiful thing about this man is that he daily sets before his yearning soul the Lord, and after all the deposit that is left for our happy appreciation is not Swift, but Christ, inwrought in the person of this quiet, scholarly, little man."

BOARD OF MINISTERIAL RELIEF 120 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

The Aged Minister, The Missionary's Orphan
The Preacher's Widow, The Annual Budget
The Christmas Offering.

Plainville, Ind., Loses Effective Leader.

Claris Yeuell is to leave Plainville, Ind., but he has a good record to his credit in this field. During his ministry, for the first time in its history, the church has contributed to all of the regularly organized work, the aggregate offerings amounting to more than the apportionments. At the most this was not so large, but it has started systematic giving and the church launches out into the wider fellowship. The Sunday-school also took up its first offering for home missions.

Decision Meetings at Steubenville, O.

First church, Steubenville, Ohio, has just closed a series of decision meetings in which forty-two took membership with the church. The pastor, E. H. Wray, believes in holding his own meetings. This is the second meeting that he has held for the church since his pastorate began. The first week of the meeting he gave a series of sermons on "The Mysteries of the Kingdom as Set Forth in the Parables of Jesus." This was followed by a series on "Jesus as Center of the Kingdom" and teachings with regard to the seeking love of God for the lost. The meetings were conducted in a quiet dignified manner and with no outside help. The music was under the direction of the regular choir director. This church is planning for its second Every Member Canvass. The purpose of this canvass is: (1) To increase offerings for local and foreign work. (2) To interest all the people in the church. (3) To urge each member to subscribe for one or more of the church papers.

Recital in New Memorial Church at Bethany.

Mrs. Lola Miksch Sutton, of the Bethany College faculty, gave a piano recital in the new Memorial church at Bethany on the evening of Nov. 11. It was a lecture-recital, the program being made up of selections from American composers, and was artistically delivered, and warmly received.

Herbert Yeuell's Work Praised by Cynthiana Pastor.

Joseph D. Armistead, pastor at Cynthiana, Ky., reports the Yeuell revival recently closed, at the Cynthiana church with eighty-eight persons added to the membership. Herbert Yeuell was assisted by T. Earle Yearsley singing. The official board as well as the pastor endorse Mr. Yeuell's work. Mr. Armistead writes as follows: "This was a meeting that got hold of the entire community, doing good and no harm to all the churches of the city. Mr. Yeuell's preaching was of his own original kind, an imitation of no one, but strongly expressive of the intellect, the consecration and the oratorical ability of himself. Herbert Yeuell is unquestionably a brilliant speaker, well read in literature, with such dramatic powers as to make him at once charming as an actor, and moving as a Gospel exhorter. No preacher of his methods and manners had ever been in our city before, and he readily won the attendance of a large audience, and later gathered the fruits of his labors." The Cynthiana Church now has a membership of 935.

WE WILL NOT FORGET.
These Did Not Forget.

1,036 churches, as churches, remembered the Veterans in 1915, with a total of $15,831.60.

140 Bible schools gave $1,243.16. Heretofore these have been listed with the churches. Both in number and amount they more than doubled last year, principally through "White Gifts for the King." 25 Bible schools combined with the churches in remitting, making the total number of contributing schools 165.

Altogether we received 1,185 offerings from churches, Bible schools and societies, totaling $17,132.56, a gain of 10 per cent, in amount and 30 per cent. in number contributing.

Deducting duplications, 1,127 different congregations are represented in these offerings.

Ten individuals and twenty-nine churches reached the Living Link standard, $1000 or more. Columbus, Indiana, Tabernacle church, W. H. Book, Minister, heads the list with $500.66.

318 individuals sent offerings this year amounting to $2,440.95, a gain of 9 givers, but a loss of $14.00 in gifts.

The Atlanta and Los Angeles International Conventions both came within the year. The Communion offering of the former was $495.36, of the latter $506.84, total $1,002.20, against $3,367.07 of the year before in the great Eldred Memorial at Toronto.

Two of those who have gone on before swelled the year's total; John Reed with $1,000, George M. Sivwright with $250.

Six Annuity Bonds ranging from $100 to $4,000, were written in 1915. One was taken by a retired minister and his wife. Their Annuity and Pension together will make them fairly comfortable. At the same time they thus complete the giving of their all to the Kingdom of God.

SPECIAL MESSAGE.
From the Temperance Board.

The new year, 1916, will witness the opening of great battles against the liquor traffic. At least six states and many smaller areas will be engaged in campaigns during the year. The Christian church should have her best men in these fields in the thick of the fight. The board is now seeking the services of such men.

Let the ministers and churches furnish the sinews of war—supply the needed funds—and we will make the whole brotherhood proud of the record of our church in this struggle.

Every church should send an offering for this work during the next year. If a church is on the budget plan, the work of this board should be provided for in the funds for our general interests. If a church is not on the budget plan, by all means, a generous offering should be taken during the next year.

Attention, Sunday-school leaders! Be sure that your school makes room for special temperance instruction. Observe the days, make the temperance lesson a great power in your school; send to this office for anything you want.

Christian Endeavorers! We can help you on your temperance lessons if you will permit us. Write us your needs. We are here to help you.

The temperance board has a splendid ... s of tracts, posters, leaflets, cartoons, postcards and books—in fact everything relating to the temperance movement. Send in your orders. Samples, free.

L. E. Sellers, National Secretary.

CHURCH EXTENSION NEWS.

During the month of October the following churches completed their buildings and received their loans: Second church, Lawrence, Kansas, $300 from the Linwood Blvd. Fund, Kansas City, Mo.; Barbourville, Ky., from the Annuity Fund, $2,000; Colored church, Bristol, Tenn., from the Y. P. S. C. E. Fund, $200.

The following churches were promised loans at the November meeting: Opolis, Kansas, $600; Hamilton, Ohio, High St. church, $1,500, provided the value of the property is $3,000; Bicknell, Ind., $3,000 from the Annuity Fund.

During October and November, Mr. Muckley visited the State Conventions of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi. In addition to addressing these conventions on church extension work, Mr. Muckley gave addresses on the business methods of the church and the Every Member Canvass. During this tour of the South, Mr. Muckley addressed the following churches: Linden St. and McLemore Ave.

churches, Memphis, Tenn.; Rome, Ga.; Charlotte N. Car.; Martinsville, Va.; Danville, Va.; East Point, Ga.; Covington, Ga.; Petersburg, Va.; Portsmouth, Va.; Mobile, Ala., and the three churches of Jackson, Miss.

Addresses were also given at Auburn college and the Southern Christian Institute at Edwards, Miss.

Mr. Booth, the associate secretary, has been with the Men and Millions Movement during November, in the state of Missouri. He also addressed the state convention of Kansas.

The board has recently received annuity gifts as follows: $1,000 from a friend in Missouri who has previously given $11,000; $500 from another friend in Missouri who has previously given $4,5000; $500 from a friend in California who has recently given $2,000.

A bequest of $960 from the Thomas Cavey estate of Longmont, Colo., was received.

The church extension receipts for October were $5,400.86, which is a slight gain of $23. All gains are encouraging during these days.

There are many churches that should have taken the annual offering in September that have not yet reported to the board. We trust these churches will promptly send in their money during December. Remit to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 603 New England Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

AT TRANSYLVANIA COLLEGE.

By defeating the University of Louisville 26 to 0 on Thanksgiving day, the Transylvania foot ball team became champions of Kentucky. The Transylvania team did not lose a game in the Kentucky Association or the Southern Association during the season, and was scored against but once. Coach W. T. Stewart, who has been in charge of Transylvania athletics for three years, is a genuine type of Christian gentleman, and has exerted the finest influence for clean athletics and wholesome conduct in addition to developing a championship team.

In his official notification of the election of Transylvania College to membership in the Southern Association of Colleges, the secretary, Dr. B. E. Young, of Vanderbilt, says: "The new name of College met with special expression of approval from our Executive Committee. Perhaps we all ought to be Colleges in the South."

In the student body of Transylvania and the College of the Bible there are 32 sons and daughters of ministers. Their class standing and deportment are usually satisfactory.

One hundred and twenty-four Kentucky Churches observed Education Day last convention year, and sent offerings amounting to $2,225 to Transylvania and the College of the Bible. This year two hundred Kentucky churches are asked to observe the day and to contribute $3,000.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes wish to study the life of Jesus this year. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

"The Conquest"

A JOURNAL OF CHARACTER BUILDING

It tells of the big things doing in the fields of the Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor society and the Church.

It puts its readers in touch with the ideals of social service, and keeps them informed of the latest achievements in temperance and missions.

It provides the best aids to the study of the International Uniform Sunday-school Lessons, and of the Christian Endeavor topic.

It makes a special feature of brief articles and talks that are certain to build character in young people.

It is filled with spicy science notes and items of current history.

It prints the best poetry it can find, both serious and comic, and abounds with bits of wisdom from great men and women of the world.

It gives delight each week by its apt pictures of the lighter side of life—in "Chuckles."

It prints in each issue attractive and helpful short stories.

It is the ideal weekly paper for adult and young people's Bible classes.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

"The Meaning of Baptism"

BY CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, Editor of "The Christian Century"

"This is probably the most important book in English on the place of baptism in Christianity written since Mogley published his 'Baptismal Regeneration' in 1856."

That is what the New York Christian Advocate says of this remarkable volume.

The Congregationalist: "A daring and splendidly Christian piece of work."

The Homiletic Review: "The spirit of the book is delightful and raises new hopes where none had seemed possible."

The Churchman (Episcopal): "An interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism."

St. Louis Christian Advocate: "Good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents."

Baptist Standard (Dallas, Tex.): "This is a very interesting work, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this year!"

The Baptist Banner: "A new book of more than ordinary interest. It is learned, and is written in excellent spirit and fine style."

The Christian Endeavor World: "A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view but building a bridge toward the affusionist view."

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination): "Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God."

The Advance (Congregationalist): "We believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt."

The Christian Union Quarterly (Disciple): "The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines."

The United Presbyterian: "An unusual book. Written by a Disciple and the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion."

A BOOK THAT IS STIRRING ALL DENOMINATIONS

Note what the leading organs of the various brotherhoods are saying about the book.

PRICE $1.25

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren): "The significance of this work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement."

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist): "A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few."

The Presbyterian Advance: "The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which has often been asked of him by correspondents and readers—'What is the best book on baptism?'"

The Christian Intelligencer (Reformed): "The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal."

Zion's Herald (Methodist): "The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of the leading publication in the Disciples' denomination."

The Continent (Presbyterian): "It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity of immersion, and he writes that 'the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever stands behind the practice of immersion.'"

The Road To Bethlehem

IN THE little town that stands on a hillside six miles south of Jerusalem there is a rocky grotto, above which is built perhaps the oldest church structure in Christendom. It is the Church of the Nativity at Bethlehem.

In the grotto below there are innumerable lighted candles and other costly gifts, and around the disk of a silver star which is set into the floor of this crypt there are the Latin words which mean, "Here was born of the Virgin Mary, Jesus Christ."

To that place there went on the night of his birth a company of shepherds, marveling at a song they had heard and a vision they had seen. They had been told that in the City of David there was born that night a Savior, who was Christ the Lord. And when they saw the little child in the manger-cradle, wrapped in the swaddling bands which spoke of the simple human devotion of his mother, they bowed in reverence at the sight.

Along the road to Bethlehem there came a few days later a company of wise men from the east. Students they were of scattered fragments of Hebrew prophecy dispersed through the regions in which Jewish exiles had made their home. The wise men sought One who was to be called the "King of the Jews," and whose star they had seen in the east. Confucius believed that in the west the true prophet was to arise. Guatama had insisted that the path of wisdom was to be pursued by a later Sage. And Zoroaster had hoped that fresh light might arise upon the pathway of the soul. Had these dreams come true in the rising of the star that stood above the hamlet on the hill?

Along that road to Bethlehem there traveled a pious woman from Rome searching out the sacred cities of Palestine. The mother of Constantine the Great, she was able to command both leisure and fortune in the great adventure. At Jerusalem her workmen had dug around the spot where tradition asserted that Jesus had made his last great sacrifice, and her zeal was rewarded, according to tradition, by the discovery of the true cross deep in the earth. She took the road to Bethlehem to complete there her devotions and to lay the foundations of a church on which successive centuries and rulers have builded in honor of the King.

Along that road to Bethlehem there journeyed the greatest scholar of the early church. Deeply impressed by the simple majesty of the place, he took up his abode in a grotto only a short distance from the holy cave, and there spent thirty years preparing for the world that great version of the Holy Scriptures which has made the name of St. Jerome a precious possession of the universal Church.

Along that road in those early centuries there passed a host of pilgrims. Out of every land beyond the sea they hurried, dressed in pilgrim's garb, girt with ropes of penitence, and bearing scrip and palmer's staff, the symbols of their task. At every holy site they tarried. Over every sacred spot they prayed. But when they came to Bethlehem they felt that the supreme moment in all their self-mortifying journey had been reached. There with fasting and with tears they visited the sacred grotto. They touched with reverence the spot which tradition has validated as the birthplace of the Lord, and there they lifted their eyes to behold the unutterable glory of the Divine Presence, the reward of all their toil.

Along that road to Bethlehem there still go innumerable travelers, some careless and cynical, bent upon the new sensation of seeing one of the oldest of the shrines of earth; some world-weary and jaded, hoping to find some mystery of happiness and renewal in the sacred place; some questioning, yet hopeful, like Pierre Loti, that their doubts may be swept away in some convulsion of divine emotion.

There go the leisurely travelers who drive down from Jerusalem in the morning and return at night. There go the Russian pilgrims, sore of foot but brave in heart, who have tramped the long intolerable ways since their first landing on the holy soil. And along that road there go the long caravans with soft-footed camels bearing merchandise, threading their way through the streets where David played, where Mary bore her infant, and where Crusader and Saracen fought for supremacy.

After all these centuries since Rachel died on that same road, "when there was but a little way to go to Bethlehem," the multitudes of earth have journeyed seeking him of whom the prophet dreamed when he named Bethlehem-Ephratha as the birthplace of the coming king. Still above the hill of Bethlehem in spite of wars and tumults near and far, there hover the influences that are working out a changing and holier world. And still on quiet and starry nights it is possible to imagine the scene of the Nativity, and hear again the angel voices proclaim their song of "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men."

A Ballad of Bethlehem Steel

(See editorial on "The Wages of War," page 8.)

A FORT is taken, the papers say,
Five thousand dead in the murderous deal.
A victory? No, just another grim day.
But—up to five hundred goes Bethlehem Steel.

A whisper, a rumor, one knows not where—
A sigh, a prayer from a torn heart rent—
A murmur of Peace on the death-laden air—
But—Bethlehem Steel drops thirty per cent.

"We'll fight to the death," the diplomats cry.
"We'll fight to the death," sigh the weary men.
As the battle roars to the shuddering sky—
And—Bethlehem Steel has a rise of ten.

What matters the loss of a million men?
What matters the waste of blossoming lands?
The children's cry or the women's pain?
If—Bethlehem Steel at six hundred stands?

And so we must join in the slaughter-mill,
We must arm ourselves for a senseless hate,
We must waste our youths in the murder drill—
That Bethlehem Steel may hold its state.

Interviewing Superintendent Wirt of Gary, Indiana

BY FLORENCE PATTON

A DAY in the Gary schools and a half hour with William A. Wirt, educational wizard, was my privilege recently. The day began at 8 and ended at 5, the regular school period of a Gary child. I came away filled with an almost reverent admiration for this quiet, simple man of accomplishment. I could understand why his revolution of Gary schools had urged his name for superintendent of Chicago schools to succeed Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, and why New York City begged his advice to the tune of $10,000 recently.

I feel also that Gary will have to tussle to hold him against the tugging pleas from other cities. If nobody minds, I'd like to hold my thumbs for his Chicago advent some ripe time.

Often, looking back to school days, I have wondered why my pet aversion was the recurrent person who told me that "these are your happiest days, dear, your school days."

MAKING SCHOOL HOMELIKE.

I wasn't what could be called a vicious child, but that person used to fill me with horrid impulses; black hand stuff, you know. And it wasn't until I came to the Emerson School at Gary that the veil fell away and I knew why I knew that she was all wrong when she said it.

I had never known why I knew before. Standing in the warm family atmosphere of this model place, I knew that I had hated the stereotyped school day; the stiff standing shoulder to shoulder in line to march to class, the everlasting sameness of that morning assembly; the clang of the bell; the depression of that watch upon whispering—I always did have so much to say to Mary or Sadie or Rose—the "sit up, children, straight" (it was so comfy to lounge a bit—I could think better,) and all the rest of it that still endures and irks a child unmercifully.

How can the grade teacher, with her smattering information, expect to compete in interesting a child with the tutor who, through specializing, is thorough, introspective, intuitive and resourceful?

It came over me so suddenly, so refreshingly on the trip, that I confess I was rattled when Mr. Wirt said he was ready for a talk.

"What is it? What is it about this place that fits one like a rocking chair made to order?" I wanted to know.

And the quiet answer came pat: "It's the family spirit."

A PLAIN, DIRECT MAN.

Mr. Wirt's office is on the main floor. He is the quiet strength that is all pervading, and yet keeps its source well hidden in the background. He seems to be more of an observer than the brain back of the whole splendid mechanism.

I thanked my stars upon first meeting him that he wasn't the fogy-fossil type. And I caught myself wondering why, when I had seen the big bulwark he has made, I should be silly enough to expect its creator to be the pale-eyed student type with absent-minded handshake for me.

Mr. Wirt is the plain man type, direct, brief, but not distant. There's a shadowy sweet smile that breaks through the square set of his features as he talks of his work, that is good to see. I caught myself watching for it, resting my eyes in it. It came as he talked in that peculiarly impersonal way of his schools. It was as though he was smiling upon a pet. Which is in all probability how he feels toward the Gary school system, for it is his, his very own, his own mental achievement.

Mr. Wirt is as economical a conversationalist as he is a systematist. As an admirer has said of him, "he doesn't expand or glorify one cent." He clipped through the short interview like a highly intelligent machine, leaving me comprehensive—and dismissed. I never felt quite so dismissed before and yet not one whit offended.

Think of such a man!

Now, as to his school. I mentioned the long period from 8 until 5 o'clock. Let nobody imagine there are overworked children in the Gary schools.

Primarily, the extra two hours from 3 to 5 are meant to keep the boy and girl from the street. It is a crime, according to Mr. Wirt, to let those two hours be wasted, when they can be put in with interesting play in the school.

For there is no work in the Gary schools. It is all play—meant to be so. And by the appearance of the children you know this to be so.

The Emerson school, like the bigger Froebel school, accommodates the high school pupils, the grade children and the kindergartners, all at the same time. Again it is the family idea. The younger ones have constantly before them the example of the older children.

For instance, a kindergarten room may be placed next to the botany room or the physics laboratory. How the big eyes stare into those more dignified quarters! How the little imaginations plan to reach there some day! And I saw a high school pupil racing along a corridor with a little tad in tow when classes changed.

NO SET RULES.

As to changing, there is no set order, nor rule, no stiff lining up. In class and out pupils are not subjected to the constant "Sh!" admonishment. The teacher is more like the mother of the flock or the big sister, and down in the shops the boys appear to be working with father. It is just because there are no set, prison-like rules that there are no noise and no disorder.

And some group is playing all of the time. There are about five acres of playground about the school and a wading pool and garden for the spring and summer. And the auditorium, gymnasiums and swimming pool are seldom empty. Some group is always playing. When one or three groups return for arithmetic or drawing another group goes out to romp or to music in the auditorium or down to the city market. And things are so arranged that, if the parents of a child so desire, a play hour may be put in at the family church for religious instruction. The churches have co-operated with Mr. Wirt in this.

PUPILS PAID FOR WORK.

Peeping into the classrooms, I saw arithmetic pupils sitting about as they pleased, whispering if they choose, handling objects freely. In the shops, in most cases presided over by a union man, by the way, nobody appeared to be instructed by the instructor alone. A boy appeared to be learning forge work, for instance, as much from consulting with a more advanced student as from the teacher.

In a drawing class seventh graders were lined up at easels with fourth graders, and one high school boy was working there with charcoal. This whole room, by the way, had been painted by the painting boys, had been stenciled and filled in by others; a window that offended by its stark oblong had been changed to stained glass, and its casing was made in the shops.

At the Froebel School, by the way, all the tables and chairs, the cupboards and cases were made by the boys. A boy working in the shops gets his time card and is paid sixty cents an hour. At the end of the week he is given a check, which he deposits in the school bank, and when he has saved $80 he has made a credit toward graduation.

I went into the bank, which is run by the pupils, and one of the clerks, a boy of about sixteen, showed me about. He had all the aloof dignity of the teller. He unbent a bit to tell me things, but when I inadvertently wondered whether I could borrow $10 or $15 he froze again. I could monkey in the zoology class, it appeared, but not in the bank.

By the way, there is a real zoo at the school; the tenderer members are inside and the tougher ones outside. Cy De Vry has sent them a pair of hawks, and there are foxes and coyotes and hens and pheasants and ground hogs and there was a bear. But he was sickened and was sent away.

None of the animals show the slightest animosity toward the children. Both pupils and animals have been trained to understanding of each other. The boys may go into the foxes' cage and pet them and the coyotes yowl jealously.

"We teach no sex hygiene here," said the zoology teacher, "but in our classes the approaching motherhood of a guinea pig and the birth of baby rabbits and so forth are taken quite as a matter of course."

BECOME CHILDREN'S PETS.

I'd like to have lingered in the zoo, the inner one particularly, where I became an interested pupil myself. The teacher has a skunk there, deodorized, and in process of taming. She claims that skunks are fast displacing the Angora cat as a pet, and those who have tried them say they are more playful than kittens.

Jim and Jack are there, as well, a couple of crows, who have grown up in the school, play outdoors all year until the cold sets in, and never fly away. A sad-eyed Maltese kitten is there too. She wandered in and has to be imprisoned to keep her out of the cafeteria down stairs. Somebody is finding a home for her.

It is the ambition of E. A. Spaulding, principal of the school, to interest the park board in establishing similar zoos in connection with every school. For adjacent to each Gary school is a park.

Every teacher in the Gary schools is a specialist. Classes visit her room for what she can particularly give them. Thus their interest is stimulated by the expression of a mind skilled in one special subject, instead of dulled by the smattering cut-and-driedness of the grade teacher's imperfect equipment.

The libraries of the Emerson and Froebel Schools are branches of the city public institution. Louis J. Bailey, librarian, has supplied them with books.

The question of lighting reminds me of the evening classes. It is estimated that some 10,000 persons are instructed daily in Gary, for the schools are open to men and women until 9 at night, for any line of work they choose to follow. In the art craft room I saw some of the silver work of a woman who intends making use of the teaching for a livelihood.

This interest of the parents is one of the particularly wise points in the administration of Mr. Wirt. In a mill city like Gary is the children frequently are taken out of school at fourteen and put to work.

PARENTS ALSO ATTEND.

Getting the parents to come to school is stimulating their interest in keeping the children there. And as far as the children's volition is concerned, they are not dashing for the school exit, by any means.

The Emerson school has about 800 pupils. With its careful scattering of class work and playtime, it could accommodate many more. The Froebel has 1,900 pupils and more than that at night. I saw a girl in the cobbler's shop there, mending her shoe under the amused eyes of the instructor.

"She wanted to know how," said the cobbler teacher, "and so I let her. Lots of the girls come to class here."

"But we don't take up plumbing," laughed the child, driving in the last tack on the patch. "That's about the only thing we don't do."

Which is true. The girls even take up printing and what time they and the boys serve is taken off when they enter upon an apprenticeship.

I went to the Jefferson School, too, the first school put up by the steel mills people when they essayed the sand waste and named it Gary.

Mr. Wirt speedily made an attic into a gymnasium, put in his special teachers and equipped his play ground, and, barring the elderly aspect of the place, it is as model as any.

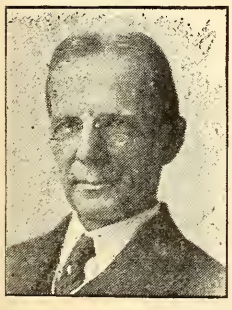
For the model of the Gary schools consists of opportunity, extravagant opportunity for work and play, work made into play. And the running costs no more than in any other city, proportionately, while the "attractions" are far ahead in number and in the method in which they are presented. And they are presented all the year round, by the by.

Yes, I should like to hold my thumbs for Chicago.

Two Christmas Messages

CHRISTMAS CHEER.

By E. L. Powell.



No season could be more suggestive or more inspirational than Christmas. It is the one day when even the most frozen selfishness must thaw. The atmosphere is so sunlike in its warmth and geniality that no Scrooge can breathe it without the recognition of opportunity and privilege. Who can be mean in the presence of innocent childhood? God comes down in the little child on Christmas Day and invites a weary and sinful and selfish world to behold his divine beauty and to be wooed by it out of grouchiness into generosity, out of irritability into gladness, out of self into service. As though written across the face of the sky we may read this invitation of Christmas time.

God seems to say to man, "Let us go together into the grim city and make its tenements to shine and its noisome places to become, for a little while at least, sweet and fragrant. Let us bring Good Tidings of Great Joy to the little ones who never hear the song of bird or see the green grass from year to year. Let us place the babe of Bethlehem on a throne of recognition so high and so radiant that good cheer and happiness shall radiate therefrom to hovel and home."

In a word, the great God invites us to co-operate with him in making everybody glad. We must acknowledge this spirit of Christmas time if it shall be to us anything more than a selfish holiday observed in our family circle and bringing no benediction of the divine gospel. The magic of Christmas consists in giving "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

Santa Claus must take God as his partner and then our Christmas shopping will be done to the accompaniment of a song and our Christmas gifts will put to flight all enemies of the soul. In Christmas giving are we not thinking God's thoughts after him, and repeating in miniature fashion the mighty example brought before us in the immortal words "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son?"

If we shall find happiness let us search for some Zubulun or Naphthali and have it said, "They that sat in darkness saw a great light." Wonderful is the transformation wrought by simple kindness!

CHRISTMAS EVE.

By Burris A. Jenkins.

The same stars are shining tonight that shone nineteen hundred and fifteen years ago over the rough and jagged hills of Judea. Shepherds are among these hills as their fathers were. Much the same hearts beat under the black cloaks now as then; much the same thoughts come and go under the black turbans; similar hopes and fears and loves are theirs. And, as the "inverted bowl" of the sky,—the ebony, spangled bowl,—passes in its great curve, round the world and first and last shadows all the circle, the same sort of hearts and minds, the same loves and hopes and fears fill all the night.

As the power of the Cæsars then poised the sword above the heads of the peoples, as the yoke of the mighty then rested on the necks of the weak, as the babes of Bethlehem bled and Rachaels mourned, so now the sword, the yoke, the blood and the wailing Rachels are under these stars. Peace has not yet come nor good will to men. How long, O Lord, how long!

Even in our peaceful land, where the birthday of our Prince will very soon dawn on so many who are happy, the heel of the strong is still on the neck of the weak; babes like those of Bethlehem are systematically though gradually slain amid the dust and smoke of factories; men and women to whom the great gift of life is as much a boon as ever it has been, die more numerously than on European battle fields, from preventable disease; great cities that should be cities of brotherly love are centers of corruption, exploitation, and the tyranny and bribery and injustice of vested interests.

Did the shepherds ever hear that song at all? was there ever a star of special magnitude that came over the place where the Prince and liberator was born?

"Why are ye anxious!" "O, ye of little faith!" There have been wars before, there has been oppression before, there is preventable disease always, the poor ye have always with you. These are the darkness through which the stars of Christmas eve shine. These summon us to the task of a man! We hear the high call and the angel song! We gather our shepherds' cloaks around us, we draw our girdles a bit closer, we plunge, through the night—the night lighted by the promise of His Star! We go to seek the manger where the young Christ lies!

And look! In the East! The dawn! It is coming! It is Christmas Day!

Listening To God

A SERMON BY L. O. BRICKER

NEVER was there a wider interest in religion than today, nor a more wistful and pathetic longing to know and experience the great spiritual realities. We want to know God for ourselves. For years men and women have read and heard about him, addressed their prayers to him; and now they desire a living, personal contact with him. They want to feel his presence, hear his voice, and establish a personal relation and communion with him. The world is weary of a religion of doctrines and theologies, of sermons and services that cannot give a consciousness of immediate and personal contact with the reality and presence and power of God. The soul of man is thirsting today for God, for the living God.

A THIRST FOR GOD.

This thirst for God, this desire to know him intimately and personally for ourselves, this insistent longing for a more living and vital relation to God has caused us to re-examine the methods of approach to God as those methods are described on the pages of the Bible. And when we do give thought and study to these great words, descriptive of the method of approach to God, and of the way of finding and knowing God for ourselves, we see at once that for the most part we have neglected and ignored the God-appointed way; and the rediscovery of it comes upon us almost with the force of a new revelation.

Listen while I call to mind some of the things that are written in this book: "My soul, be thou silent unto God; from him cometh my salvation." "Keep thou silence at the presence of the Lord God." "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him." "Be still and know that I am God." "Be still before God, and wait patiently for him." "There shall be silence before thee, and praise, O, God in Zion. O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come." "There was silence, and I heard a voice." "I will incline mine ear. I will hear what God the Lord will speak." "Incline your ear and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live."

These passages of scripture, and others like them, set forth the art of listening to God; and the science of knowing God for ourselves. Let us collect the passages into three sections, thus: "Be still." "Keep silence." "Incline your ear."

First: Ps. 37:7: Be still before God, and wait patiently for him. " Ps. 46:40: "Be still and know that I am God." To know God is the highest and holiest quest of the soul. To know God is the sum of human wisdom and knowledge. "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom; let not the rich man glory in his riches; let not the mighty man glory in his might: but let him that glorieth, glory rather in this, that he understandeth and knoweth God."

A DISTINCTION NOTED.

There is a vast difference between knowing about God, and knowing God. Some months ago we had a distinguished guest at a meeting of a club in the city, of which I happen to be a member, viz: Dr. Hugh Black the famous Scotch preacher. The essayest of the evening read a paper on Gladstone; and then, according to our custom, each member present was called upon to express himself and enter into a discussion of the paper. We discovered that we knew a great deal about Mr. Gladstone, and the members consumed a great deal of time in recalling and contributing the many things they all knew about that great man. At last, Dr. Black was called upon for some remarks. His opening sentence hushed and shamed us all. He said that he had known Mr. Gladstone personally and intimately through many years; and then, out of his personal knowledge and first hand experience, he revealed that great soul to us. What was all our babble of the things we knew about Mr.

Rev. L. O. Bricker, Atlanta, Ga.

Gladstone, to the knowledge of the man who knew him personally and intimately?

There was a saying oft upon the lips of Paul—"That I may know him!" What, Paul, do you not know him? After all these years of service and fellowship, do you not know him? And Paul replies, I know him in part, and I love what I know; but I do not yet know him as he is to be known. "O the depth of the riches of the knowledge of Jesus Christ." "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord."

WHAT KNOWING GOD IS.

Said Jesus: "This is life eternal, to know thee the only true God; and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." How shall we know him, then? "Be still, and know that I am God." This knowledge of God is a matter of personal experience. It can come to us only when we are in a still, quiet, receptive mood.

If you are making ready to receive into your house a distinguished and honored guest, whom you have never seen, all that you have read or heard about him will help you in your preparations to receive him; and in the midst of these preparations there will be much dust and bustle and confusion; and it would embarrass both you and your guest if he should arrive in the midst of your preparations. But as the hour of his arrival draws near, with your preparations all complete, you sit down with folded hands and are still and quiet so that you may compose your mind and spirit into a receptive mood. And so, when you are making ready for that high and holy hour of receiving God into the house of your life, all that you know about him, all that you have heard and read about him will aid you in making ready, in sweeping the chambers of your soul, and in lighting the lamps in the holy of holies of your spirit; every obedience you have rendered him, every service and sacrifice, and every prayer you have prayed to him will contribute mightily. But in the end there must be the quiet expectancy, the receptive mood, the still waiting. He knows when you are ready. He cannot and will not come until you are very still. "Be still before God: wait patiently for him." When you are ready, he will come.

"BE SILENT."

In the next place, "Be silent." This part of the method of approach to God applies particularly to the service of worship. It begins with: "The Lord is in his holy temple: let all the earth keep silence before him." Silence must always be the prelude to speech. We cannot praise God, nor think of him, nor pray to him, until we have hushed our lips to silence, have banished intruding thoughts, and have stilled our spirits into silence. Once in the house of God, we should command our souls, as did the saints of old: "My soul, be thou silent unto God. From him cometh my salvation."

We are here to listen to God: to receive from God the gifts that are essential to our present salvation of body, mind and spirit; to lift up our hearts in silent, wordless prayer and communion. But this is not all. Listen: "There shall be silence before thee, and praise, O God in Zion. O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come." I am glad for that word, "and praise." The heart that has found God in the sacred silence would burst with its precious load if it could not pour itself out in praise. When we know that God is listening to and hearing our prayer, who could keep from praying? O, thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come."

We cannot be sufficiently thankful that our divinely given order of worship holds at the heart of it, in the most sacred and hallowed period of it—when the Table of the Lord is uncovered and the emblems of his love and death, the symbols of his life and presence are before us,—that it holds for us then a time of silence, when all the blessings of the soul's silence before God, and the divine way of approach into the presence of the living Christ, are open to us. Brthren, we ought to be the most deeply spiritual and religious people on the earth; for no other people have such an order of worship as we have. On every Lord's day it ought to bring us all into the presence, the conscious presence, of the living Christ.

THE LISTENING ATTITUDE.

And lastly, "Incline your ear." Here in this sacred silence and still waiting is our opportunity to "incline our ear and hear what the Lord, our God will speak." And here we may obey the voice that calls us: "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters. Incline your ear and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live." For after all, the supreme privilege of our religion is not praying to God, it is listening to God. We do not find the deep truths of life. they find us. The supreme facts are not told to us by men, they are whispered to us by God. "Blessed are thou, Simon," said Jesus to Peter, on his discovery of the greatest thing ever revealed to men, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father in heaven." Our part is to incline the ear, open the heart and listen. This listening attitude is the preparation for all true worship and all true activity, and the condition of all spiritual growth. We become by attending, by inclining ear and heart, and by being open to the great formative influences.

You remember Wordsworth's lines, of how the influence of the art of listening to nature, enters into the maiden's heart and leaves its sweet mark upon her features:

> "She shall lean her ear
> In many a place.
> Where rivulets dance their waryward round;
> And beauty, born of murmuring sound
> Shall pass into her face."

"Beholding his image," says the Apostle, "we are changed from glory to glory." Let us cultivate the art of listening to God. As we go about our duties, let us get into the habit of looking up, of lifting our hearts and listening and communing; then we shall be able to take hold of our tasks with firmer grasp and with sweeter spirits. "Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live."

Man's Dreams Will Yet Come True

BY BRAND WHITLOCK

The return of Ambassador Brand Whitlock from Belgium to America, after over a year of strenuous toil in caring for the distressed of that country and looking after the interests there of the United States, has called forth much favorable comment concerning his work. The following "dream" of his is reprinted from a 1914 issue of The Christian Century.

NOTWITHSTANDING all the ignorance and all the woe in the world tonight, never before has there been such widespread opportunity for enlightenment, never such widespread comfort, never so much kindness, so much pity for animals, for children, and, above all, never have women been shown such consideration. It needs no very powerful imagination, peering into the shadowy background of human history, to appreciate the tremendous implication of this fact. Indeed, the great feminist movement of our time, a movement which in the histories of mankind centuries hence will be given the sectional mark of the beginning of a new age, is in itself the proof of a great advance, in which the ballot will be the very least important of all the liberties to be won.

With all the complications of this vast and confusing interplay of the forces of this age, the city is inextricably bound by its awful responsibility for so much that is bad, for so much that is good, in our time. And in the cities, now as always, the struggle for liberty will go on. The old leaders will pass, and the new will pass, and pass swiftly, for they are quickly consumed in the stress and heat of the passionate and savage struggle. To them must ever come the fatigue of long drawn opposition, of the repeated and unavailing assaults on the cold, solid and impregnable walls of institutions. In this fatigue they may grow conservative after a while, and they should pray to be spared the acquiescence of the middle years, the base capitulation of age.

TOWARD THE LIGHT.

But always the people remain, pressing onward in a great stream up the slopes, and always somehow toward the light. For the great dream beckons, leads them on, the dream of social harmony always prefigured in human thought as the city. This radiant vision of the city is the oldest dream in the world. All literature is saturated with it. It has been the ideal of human achievement since the day when the men on the plains of Shinar sought to build a city whose towers should reach unto heaven. It was the angelic vision of the mystic on Patmos, the city descending out of heaven and lying foursquare, the city where there was to be no more sorrow nor crying. It has been the goal of civilization down to this hour of the night, when, however vaguely and dimly, the ideal stirs the thousands in this feverish town going about their strange and various businesses, pleasures. devotions, sacrifices, sins. It has been the everlasting dream of humanity. And humanity will continue to struggle for it. to struggle toward it. And some day, somewhere, to the sons of men the dream will come true.

The Three Duties of Civilization

BY DAVID STARR JORDAN

THERE are three duties before the civilized world today more important and more pressing than any other. These are, first, to keep the United States out of this war, this hideous "brawl in the dark," and to hold it steadily on the basis of law. To be neutral is to be law-abiding, while nations at war, whatever the merits of the original cause, are lawless and insane.

The second duty is to stop the killing whenever we can. The nations are bleeding to death. The curse of victory can come to none of them, while the curse of defeat is already on them all. It is not clear how we can stop the killing, but the call of duty to America is to leave no stone unturned in the hope to accomplish this result.

The final duty of all good men is to unite to see that, whatever the result, the catastrophe cannot happen again. To this end all students have agreed on the main feature—the end of preparedness for war; the limitation of control by autocracies and aristocracies of the means declaring war; the limitation of exploitation; the curbing of empire; the freedom of the seas; the abolition of rights of conquest and of indemnities; the opening of the channels of trade, leaving none as private property of king or nation. Some or all of these must come in time.

Meanwhile the armaments of Europe will be limited by their people's abject poverty, and the placing of moderate obstacles in the way of declarations of war would give the peace-loving world the time to impose its certain veto.

The next fifty years will mark the most intense struggle in Europe—bloodless, we hope—since the Reformation. It will appear as a conflict for supremacy between force and law, between militarism and civilism. At bottom it is, however, the age-long strife between privilege and freedom, between tradition, inheritance, and divine right, and the still older and more divine right of manhood to be free.

As to the final issue there can be no doubt. God is not mocked forever. But in the present issue freedom has need of all its friends. Its Pyms and Hampdens, its Washingtons and Franklins, are not wanted on the field of battle, but in the larger and intenser conflict waged with the freeman's weapon—the ballot, not the sword.

A PRAYER

Thou, O my Father, knowest I always delight to commune with Thee in my lone and silent heart; I am never full of Thee; I am always desiring Thee. I hunger with strong hope and affection for Thee, and I thirst for Thy grace and Thy spirit. . . . Thou visitest me in my work, and I can lift up my desires to Thee, and Thou dost not steal my time by foolishness. I always ask in my heart, where can I find Thee?—Quoted by Ralph Waldo Emerson.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

HOW MUCH PREPAREDNESS?

WE ARE all believers in preparedness. No one wishes the nation weak and defenceless, save those who are absolute followers of the Tolstoian doctrine of complete non-resistance. We believe in a police force, in fire departments, and in such other precautions as are needed for public safety.

Therefore, in a certain degree we all believe in military and naval preparation for such emergencies as are likely to arise. The only question one needs to raise is as to the degree of preparedness which is desirable, and on this point there is an anarchy of discordant opinion. Apparently no two individuals hold the same views as to what constitutes suitable national preparation.

There are those who tell us that only an enormously increased army and navy can save us from the direful perils of possible invasion. The insistent agitation in behalf of this policy is winning large numbers of people to the militarist view. A few months ago President Wilson expressed the opinion that our traditional policy of army and navy efficiency was adequate, and that he did not favor large extension of outlay for military and naval programs. Now it is apparent that he has changed his mind, either through conviction or pressure. His recent recommendations are far in excess of anything ever proposed before. Similar has been the conversion of the secretaries of war and the navy. One wonders how much the violent campaign of abuse and ridicule carried on against them has aided in bringing about this result.

The vital question, however, still remains unanswered, How much preparedness do the friends of the new movement wish? It must be remembered that men always think in terms of a sliding scale, which is constantly pushed upward as the question is agitated. In the minds of many advocates of "adequate national defense" any program thus far considered is too limited to be other than absurd. The President's scheme, which looks astonishing and portentous when viewed in the light of our history and former needs, is now pronounced niggardly and conservative by a large party in Congress and throughout the country.

THE WAGES OF WAR

MUCH is being said in these days regarding the large profit reaped by concerns that are engaged in the manufacture of munitions and other war supplies. The current of business created by these activities is by some regarded as an indication of returning prosperity in all lines of trade. By others it is considered only a spasm which is not likely to have any helpful effect upon business in general.

Whatever may be true as to the relations between these "war brides," as the profitable forms of business induced by the war have been named, and the permanent prosperity of the country, there is a deeper consideration which people of conscience cannot decline to face. That is the inquiry as to the ethical propriety of this war industry on the part of a peaceful and supposedly neutral nation.

If a manufacturer is convinced that the national policy of Germany is entirely wrong, and wishes to use the forces at his command to assist in the overthrow of German military power, we can understand that he has good reasons for manufacturing and selling arms to the allied nations, provided such action is not regarded as incompatible with our national neutrality.

But we are convinced that very few Americans are in the munition business from these motives. In most cases it is purely a question of industrial and commercial opportunity. These men say they know that the business of war is evil and only evil, but somebody is going to manufacture this stuff and sell it to those who want it, and why not they?

Of course, this is exactly the plea which is made by the brewer, the saloonkeeper, the proprietor of a gambling house or the manager of a brothel. The business is bad because it helps to keep up an inhuman and unsocial situation. If the supplies were cut off, of course the evil results would have to stop. In so far as the manufacturer and dealer are promoting the work of slaughter in Europe, they are, of course, as much combatants as anyone, only they are active for the purely sordid and selfish purposes of actual gain.

Is there not ground for cynical comment on the Christmas story in the fact that the most conspicuous center of munitions manufacture in America is a town called Bethlehem? It is a far cry from that scene in the little town where the Lord was born and over which the angels sang their song of peace and good will, to the rush and noise of the munition plants where devices for expeditious destruction of human life are now being turned out in enormous quantities.

We call the attention of our readers to "The Ballad of Bethlehem Steel," which we print in another column. The peaceable and devout men and women who founded Bethlehem, Pa., had little thought that that sacred name would become grimy with the stain of a type of modern commercialism which is both sordid and barbarous.

NEW TEMPERANCE FORCES

THE FIGHT against the saloon goes on with increasing urgency and promise of ultimate success.

In this city interesting things are happening. The closing of the saloons on Sunday was thought by some people to be only a temporary bid for the approval of the temperance forces on the part of Mayor Thompson; but he has followed up the attack by drastic treatment of offenders against the closing law, and it seems probable that he proposes to carry the measure through in spite of all saloon opposition as long as the law remains on the statute books.

The great parade organized by the wets was a striking demonstration of the forces which are opposed to temperance. No doubt there was coercion in the swelling of the ranks of that procession. None the less it was an impressive spectacle, and proved that the victory of the dry citizenship of this city will not be won without a tremendous struggle.

At the present time a most interesting and effective campaign is under way under the auspices of "The Dry Chicago Federation," for the purpose of securing some sixty-five thousand signatures to a petition requesting a vote at the spring election on the question as to whether the saloon shall be put out of business completely in Chicago.

In promoting this object a debate has been staged in many different parts of the city during the past few days. Two admirable speakers, Messrs. Hall and Summers, discuss the saloon question in an animated, humorous and convincing way, and are in increasing demand before churches and other organizations.

If the temperance forces can work together, Anti-Saloon people, Dry Chicago Federationists, and Prohibitionists, the prospects are bright for success. But absolute unity of sentiment and action is essential to this end.

AN IMMEDIATE DUTY

THE able-bodied Englishman cannot go about the streets these days without having to explain at every corner why he has not enlisted.

There are other relations that bring obligations that cannot be ignored without reproach. The sense of these duties spreads from man to man and from day to day like a divine contagion.

Twenty years ago some of the noblest spirits among the Disciples became suddenly and poignantly aware that our aged and disabled ministers were being literally turned out to die, after devoting all their years, their strength and their means to the brotherhood.

At once the Board of Ministerial Relief was organized and a systematic effort commenced to bring up the arrears of the church's appreciation of its heroes. But we were, apparently, a fat-hearted people, and the progress of the movement was slow.

Four years ago a man who asked that his name be not mentioned in this connection gave us a fillip with his "Twenty Per Cent Proposition." In three years we more than doubled our offerings.

This year will bring his total gift up to $27,325, of which $19,000 will have gone into the permanent fund and $8,325 into immediate payment of pensions. This bare fact asks each of us, "What have you done?"

And 7,000 churches of us, out of 8,000 that should be counted, have to answer, "Nothing."

It is bad enough when some of the members of a church persistently neglect such a vital duty. But something is radically wrong when the whole congregation goes through four years of such striking challenge as this good man has kept before us, and does nothing.

Several things have been wrong which are now being set right, and others that will be corrected in the course of time. But meanwhile the war of God against sin goes on, and men who have led the fight are in the hospital or superannuated. Neither the Church's honor nor the conditions of the "Twenty Per Cent Proposition" will wait for our "more convenient season."

There is not a church in the brotherhood that will not do something at once, if it has a chance. Nobody but the preacher can give it the chance. The Sunday before Christmas is the day.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

IT IS evident that one of the most useful organizations in the field of united Christian effort is the Federated Council of Churches in America. With a plan of operation that permits perfect freedom of individual action, the Council binds together in co-operative effort the churches of local districts, towns and cities.

In quiet and unobtrusive ways this nation-wide organization is promoting the best causes. Temperance, Sunday observance, religion in the home, missions in America and abroad, social service, international conciliation, and other interests are quietly and efficiently advanced by committees and commissions that are not merely formal, but actually do an important work.

In this city the Federated Council holds a quarterly meeting of the ministers of all Protestant denominations, at which matters of moment related to interdenominational effort are discussed. These meetings promote co-operation and good will. Moreover, they impress the community with the actual union sentiment already existing in the various churches, and they are prepared to bring a large amount of pressure to bear upon questions of importance in the city life.

The Federal Council of Churches is a practical clearing house for public matters which have a moral and religious aspect. It offers its good offices in many cases where no other organization is prepared to render such service. Its endorsements of calls upon public assistance in behalf of charitable organizations are increasingly demanded by public-spirited givers.

In any community the Federal Council of Churches as a perfectly voluntary association of the different religious bodies is a most valuable aid in promoting the interests of the kingdom of God.

MR. LINDSAY IN CHICAGO

IT IS a matter of satisfaction to Disciples that Mr. Vachel Lindsay has found so substantial a place in the regard of literary people. His volumes of verse are a necessity in libraries and cultured homes. In the estimation of competent critics he is one of the vital forces in present-day American poetry.

Recently he visited this city and was accorded high honor by the circle of writers present at a social function which was largely in his honor. Still more recently he read a number of his poems at the Hyde Park church to a deeply interested group of listeners.

Mr. Lindsay's poetry lies in a new field and is unique in its interpretation of various types of character. It is not dialect poetry, but it describes races and forms of human activity with an insight which is a mark of genius.

Perhaps for this reason it is not easy to read in public, save when the author himself presents it in his own unapproachable way. Then it takes on a life and persuasiveness which surprises even those who have been delighted by the printed form of the poem.

We believe that Mr. Lindsay is just beginning a career of great significance in the field of poetry. We have not always understood or appreciated him, but that is frequently the fate of gifted people. We shall watch his future offerings with anticipation of pleasure and profit.

LOVE

If you love your friend better than your friend loves you,
Do not grieve with the pain of pride!
Know yourself fortunate.
You are the happier of the two.
For it is good to be loved:
It is better to love,
It is sad to be hated:
It is sadder to hate.
Hate is a costly thing and not worth the price.
Resolve it to nothing!
You are as strong as your love is strong.
Let it take in the whole world,
Some as your heart's dearest,
Many as your brothers and sisters,
All as worthy a kind thought, a salute and a comradely touch of the hand.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

President Wilson on the Rural Church

From His Address Before the National Conference on Church and Country Life, at Columbus, Ohio.

THERE was a time when America was characteristically rural, when practically all her strength was drawn from quiet countrysides, where life ran upon established lines and where men and women and children were familiar with each other in a long-established neighborliness; but our rural districts are not now just what they used to be and have partaken in recent years of something of the fluidity that has characterized our general life. So that we have again and again been called upon from one point of view or another to study the revitalization of the countryside. After all, the most vitalizing thing in the world is Christianity. The world has advanced, advanced in what we regard as real civilization, not by material but by spiritual means, and one nation is distinguished from another nation by its ideals, not by its possessions; by what it believes in, by what it lives by, by what it intends, by the visions which its young men dream and the achievement which its men of maturity attempt. So that each nation exalts, when it writes its poetry or writes its memoirs, the character of its people and of those who spring from the loins of its people.

THE MOST VITALIZING THING IN THE WORLD IS CHRISTIANITY

There is an old antithesis upon which I do not care to dwell, because there is not a great deal to be got from dwelling on it. Between life and doctrine there is no real antithesis. A man lives as he believes he ought to live or as he believes it is to his advantage to live. He lives upon a doctrine, upon a principle, upon an ideal—sometimes a very low principle, sometimes a very exalted principle.

I used to be told when I was a youth that some of the old casuists reduced all sin to egotism, and I have thought as I watched the career of some individuals that the analysis had some vital point to it. An egotist is a man who has got the whole perspective of life wrong. He conceives himself as the center of affairs even as affects the providence of God. He has not related himself to the great forces which dominate him with the rest of us, and therefore has set up a little kingdom all his own in which he reigns with unhonored sovereignty. So there are some men who set up the principles of individual advantage as the principle, the doctrine, of their life, and live by that and live generally a life that leads to all kinds of shipwreck. Whatever our doctrine be, our life is conformed to it.

When I think of the rural church I wonder how far the rural church is vitalizing the lives of the communities in which it exists. We have had a great deal to say recently, and it has been very profitably said, about the school as a social center, by which is meant the school-house as a social center; about making the house which in the daytime is used for the children a place which their parents may use in the evenings and the other disengaged times for the meetings of the community, where they are privileged to come together and talk about anything that is of community interest and talk about it with the utmost freedom. Some people have been opposed to it because there are some things that they do not want talked about. Some boards of education have been opposed to it because they realized that it might not be well for the board of education to be talked about. Talk is a very dangerous thing, community comparison of views is a very dangerous thing to the men who are doing the wrong thing, but I for my part believe in making the school the social center.

But I believe that where the schoolhouse is inadequate, and even where it is adequate, that the most vital social center should be the church itself.

LEGISLATION CANNOT SAVE SOCIETY.

The church has too much depended upon individual example. "So let your light shine before men" has been interpreted to mean "Put your individual self on a candlestick and shine." Now, the trouble is that they are a very poor candle and the light is very dim. It doesn't dispel much of the darkness for me individually to sit on top of a candlestick, but if I can lend such little contribution of spiritual force as I have to my neighbor and to my comrade and to my friend, and we can draw a circle of friends together and unite our spiritual forces, then we have something more than example—we have co-operation.

Legislation cannot save society. Legislation cannot even rectify society. The law that will work is merely the summing up in legislative form of the moral judgment that the community has reached.

There are a great many arguments about Christianity. There are a great many things which we spiritually assert which we cannot prove, in the ordinary, scientific sense of the word "prove," but there are some things which we can show. The proof of Christianity is written in the biography of the saints. I do not mean the technical saints, those whom the church or the world have picked out to label saints, for they are not very numerable; but the people whose lives, whose individual lives, have been transformed by Christianity.

It is the only force in the world that I have ever heard of that does actually transform the life, and the proof of that transformation is to be found all over the Christian world, and is multiplied and repeated as Christianity gains fresh territory in the heathen world. Men begin suddenly to erect great spiritual standards over the little personal standards which they theretofore professed, and will walk smilingly to the stake in order that their souls may be true to themselves. There is nothing else that does that. There is something that is analogous to it, and that is patriotism. Men will go into the fire of battle and freely give their lives for something greater than themselves—their duty to their country—and there is a pretty fine analogy between patriotism and Christianity. It is the devotion of the spirit to something greater and nobler than itself.

America is great in the world, not as she is a successful government merely but as she is the successful embodiment of a great ideal or unselfish citizenship. That is what makes the world feel America draw it like a lodestone; that is the reason that the ships that cross the sea have so many hopeful eyes lifted from their humbler quarters toward the shores of the new world.

Dr. Lyman Abbott on the Future Life

Dr. Lyman Abbott was 80 years old last Saturday. When a man has attained such distinction he surely is entitled to speak for himself, especially when remarkably well qualified to do so. The following is taken from Dr. Abbott's recently published "Reminiscences," being a part of the heartening final chapter, entitled "Looking Forward."

"On the 18th of December I shall be 80 years of age. I cannot believe it. I seem to myself to be in better health than I was at 18. My interest in present problems and my hopes for my country are as great as they ever were.

"In one respect my life succeeded beyond the dreams of my youth. I have never cared for money, nor for reputation, nor for power. But I have desired friends; and it sometimes seems to me that no man ever had more friends than I have.

"I believe that death and resurrection are synonymous, that death is a dropping of the body from the spirit, that resurrection is the up-springing of the spirit from the body; and I think of my invisible friends and companions not as lying in the grave waiting for a future resurrection, nor as living in some distant land singing hymns in loveless forgetfulness of those they loved on earth. I think of them as a great cloud of witnesses looking on to see how we run the race that is set before us, grieved in our failures, glad in our triumphs.

"I believe that I have learned one secret of happiness. We live in the past and in the future. We live, therefore, in our memory and in our anticipation. * * * I allow myself only to anticipate evil that I may avoid it if it is avoidable or, if it is unavoidable, may meet it with wisdom and courage.

"And I look forward to the Great Adventure, which now cannot be far off, with awe, but not apprehension. I enjoy my work, my home, my friends, my life. I shall be sorry to part with them. But always I have stood in the bow looking forward with hopeful anticipation to the life before me. When the time comes for my embarkation and the ropes are cast off and I put out to sea, I think I shall still be standing in the bow and still looking forward with eager curiosity and glad hopefulness to the new world which the unknown voyage will bring me."

Disciples Table Talk

How the Lincoln, Neb., First Church Brotherhood Works.

The Berean Brotherhood, of First church, Lincoln, Neb., announces a splendid program of that organization for the year. The plans include a monthly supper for the men, after which each evening there will be an address on some vital topic by a good speaker. The series as so far arranged is as follows: The December meeting will occur this week, at which time N. Z. Snell will address the Brotherhood on the subject: "The Community's Responsibility to the Poor." Mr. Snell is president of the Charity Organization of Lincoln. The January meeting will be addressed by Superintendent Fred Hunter of Lincoln's schools, on the subject: "The Public Schools of Lincoln." There will be lantern slides at this lecture illustrating the school system of the city. At the February meeting the address will be on the subject: "The Student and the Down Town Church," and it is expected that the speaker will be C. H. Combs, pastor of Independence Boulevard church, Kansas City. F. M. Coffey, State Labor Commissioner, will address the March meeting on "Labor Problems." In April the meeting will be addressed by Sarka Hrbkova, head of the Slavic Department of the State University, and the subject will be: "The Contribution of the Immigrant." Mayor C. W. Bryan and others will address the May meeting on the subject: "The Prohibitory Amendment."

Earle Wilfley in Notable Success at Washington, D. C.

Earle Wilfley has just completed his fifth year as pastor of Vermont Ave. church, Washington, D. C. By request, he preached on the anniversary Sunday from the texts of the sermons he delivered five years ago. During his leadership the church membership has grown, the Sunday-school house has been refurnished, 80 per cent of the church mortgage has been paid, and the Sunday-school has increased so that more room is being sought for it. Mr. Wilfley has begun a series of lectures in conjunction with the weekly prayer-meeting, the first dealing with "The Bible and Criticism." During the winter he will deliver a course of lectures at the Y. M. C. A. on the Passion Play, Yellowstone Park, and various European countries.

Kansas City Church Has Young Men's Prayer Circle.

R. H. Heicke, new pastor at Grandview church, Kansas City, Kan., writes that a prayer circle of young men is one of the inspirational features of the work there. Mr. Heicke came to Grandview from Quindaro Blvd. church, Kansas City, and on his first Sunday in the new field eighteen persons took membership with the church. A revival is now in progress. A membership attendance campaign was promoted last week. The Bible-school has increased 25 per cent.

More Every Member Canvass Results.

The North Tonawanda, N. Y., church of which Geo. H. Brown is pastor, promoted an every member canvass recently, and increased the number of givers 66 2-3 per cent. The men are enthusiastic. This church and Sunday-school sent 100 cans of fruit and jelly and four bushels of apples to Haven's Home for the aged on Thanksgiving Day.

Cleveland Pastor Goes to New York City.

O. L. Hull, has closed a five-year pastorate with the Glenville church, Cleveland, to take charge of the work of Second church, New York City. During his ministry at Glenville the church became a living link in the Foreign Society and increased all missionary offerings. Over $2,500 was spent on improvements, a debt of $260 cared for, and all organizations left with money in the treasuries. Over 350 were received into the church. Four meetings were held elsewhere. Mr. Hull served the Twentieth District of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society as secretary and president; the Ministerial association as secretary and vice-president; and the Cuyahoga Sunday-school Association as Superintendent of Evangelism for two years. Glenville Bible-school was completely organized and all missionary gifts more than trebled, the average attendance more than doubled. Mr. Hull's resignation as pastor was rejected and an effort was made to induce him to accept a call to remain, but Mr. Hull felt that it was his duty to accept the opportunities which the New York field affords.

Sunday-school Classes Build Community Houses.

A community house has been erected by each of the classes of young ladies of North Tonawanda Sunday-school, the Community Circle and Hope Circle. Frank A. Higgins, pastor, is closing the sixth year of his work there, and writes that a lot has recently been purchased for $1,000 looking to a future enlargement of the church home. The building has been redecorated and otherwise improved.

Forward Steps at Central, Peoria, Ill.

Miss Allena Grafton, general secretary for the C. W. B. M., gave a splendid address Sunday morning, Dec. 5, in Peoria, Ill., Central church. Besides a good offering for the work, six persons became life members of the C. W. B. M. at this service. Work in Peoria is reported to be flourishing in all departments, with additions at nearly all of the regular services. Eighty-eight persons have been added since February. Work on the new $65,500 building is progressing rapidly, and will be completed by May 1.

Mr. Scoville's Work at Jefferson City, Mo.

Since the beginning of the Scoville union evangelistic campaign at Jefferson City, Mo., the membership of the Christian church and Sunday-school has increased by several hundred. This increase has been due in a great measure to the efforts of the pastor, A. R. Liverett, who has labored heroically to make the revival a success. He has spared neither time nor energy. The feature of this

C.S. Medbury Again on "Preparedness"

In a recent sermon on "National Exaltation" at University Church, Des Moines, C.S. Medbury again asserted the propaganda of national preparedness as now being conducted from Washington and throughout the nation, not from a basis of peace at any price, but from the standpoint of a preparedness for a greater life, for world power through righteousness, for the manly struggle with problems that are mighty rather than for the "meaningless and indecisive childishness of war."

In voicing his opposition to what he conceived to be an unfair manner of presenting the issue of national defense to the American people, the speaker quoted the Lincoln declaration that our dangers were from within and not without. The warning of Washington against entangling alliances was also repeated in the course of the address.

Land of Opportunity.

"Emerson," said Mr. Medbury, "once called America the land of opportunity. In a wonderful way that is true today. Israel of old was hardly more the repository of the will of God than America today. It is surely patriotic—splendidly patriotic—to call the home land to discharge its obligation."

"What is the preparedness for which appeal is being made?" the speaker asked. "No shrewder choice of word was ever made. No one is pleading for unpreparedness. The issue is not fairly stated. In fact it is between these two positions of the men who want a tremendous increase of our military establishment and those who believe that our present expenditure of a quarter billion dollars is sufficient. No one anywhere, so far as I know, is now urging disarmament, though multitudes believe that disarmament is a possibility of not far distant years. On the one hand is a committal to a military policy. On the other is a protest against such a policy. This is the real issue. It is an issue for the future as to the fundamental dependence of this Christian nation.

"On the other hand is an effort to stampede our patriotism into war measures, taking advantage of the world's unrest to make men feel there is a special peril. On the other hand is the effort to steady our citizenship to remember that if we ever need or should need more military establishment that need is certainly not now when war has already laid its devastating and desolating hand upon every nation of Europe.

"But the unfairness of the common statement of the issue may be made even more apparent. The advocates of 'preparedness for defense' are really looking far beyond that. But 'defense' is a word to conjure with."

Assails Defense Day.

Advancing to the front of the platform with printed appeals for Belgium in each hand, Mr. Medbury continued: "Yet we are asked to display our flags on the day of the opening of congress—not for 'Military America day,' not for the 'greatest of armies or navies,' but for the 'Defense day!' The call to the flag to which we should respond is a nation exalted in righteousness."

"America's outstanding opportunity—her possible exaltation—is not in an army and navy sufficient to cope with all the world powers, but in unselfishness, in purity of motive, the command of character; not in maintenance of rights, with lines jealously drawn, but in constant advocacy of right; not in dependence upon machinery of war, the tragic failure of which is the big lesson of today, but in dependence upon greatness of life wrought out in the fear of God."

TARBELL'S COMMENTARY
On the 1916 Sunday-school Lessons.

DR. J. H. JOWETT SAYS:
"Exceedingly well done. It must be of very great service to Sunday-school teachers."

MARION LAWRANCE SAYS:
"The best, most complete, most practical and most satisfactory volume on the Sunday-school lessons."

BISHOP JOHN H. VINCENT SAYS:
"Exceedingly wise in its adaptation to the variety of grades and extremely practical."

MARGARET SLATTERY SAYS:
"As an aid to the teacher in the preparation of her own lessons I know of nothing better."

DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN SAYS:
"Covers the whole year's work more admirably, in my judgment, than any other book I have seen. Could not be better."

series of meetings, which are being held in a huge tabernacle, has been the large number of prominent men, including state officials, who have come into the churches. Among these are Chief Justice A. M. Woodson, Judge Charles G. Revelle, of the supreme court, State Auditor John P. Gordon, Attorney General John T. Barker and Elliott W. Major, Jr., son of the governor. The evangelist has practically revolutionized the capital city socially, and St. Louis and Kansas City papers alike have commented editorially on the "reformation" of "Jeff City." Mr. Scoville's next campaign starts this month at Emporia, Kansas.

Christian Endeavor and Foreign Missions.

Of the amounts contributed to the Foreign Society by the Christian Endeavor Societies last year, Ohio gave $899.31, and Illinois $766.81. For the past five years Ohio has held first place and Illinois second. California comes in third and will give Ohio and Illinois a hard race this year The Foreign Society has prepared a very interesting exercise for Endeavor Day, the first Sunday in February, entitled, "The Least of These." It emphasizes the Boys' Orphanage at Damoh, India, the especial work of the Endeavor Societies on the Foreign Field. Orders are already being received by the society for the exercise, which is sent free to all societies observing the day in the interest of the orphanage.

Unique Series of Sermon Talks in Pittsburgh Church.

John R. Ewers, pastor at East End church, Pittsburgh, is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons on the following interesting themes: "The Impossible is Possible." "Martin Luther—Then and Now." "The Fascinating Story of the Missions of Southern California." "The Cowboy's Epitaph." "A Real Superman in Europe." "The Passion Play," illustrated.

W. M. Baker to Leave Keokuk, Iowa.

W. M. Baker presented his resignation to the official board of First Church, Keokuk, Iowa, on Dec. 5, and is preparing to conclude his work there December 31. On January 1, he will take charge of First Church, Marshalltown, Iowa, to succeed C. H. Morris, who has been called to Central, Denver. J. O. Boyd superintendent of the Keokuk Sunday School writes of Mr. Baker, as follows: "Mr Baker has demonstrated his ability as an organizer in a marked way while he has been with the Keokuk church. Every department of the church is excelling its records for the preceding years. The church is maintaining its living-link missionary, Miss Gretchen Garst, at Akita, Japan. Within the last year additional property has been acquired and added facilities provided for the Sunday-school work. Adequate provisions have been made for the boy scout work and other lines of activities. Mr. and Mrs. Baker have won their way into the hearts of the citizens as well as the congregation."

Chinese Missionary in Chicago.

Alexander Paul of Wuhu, China, was in Chicago recently, and spoke at Memorial church at the morning service. He is on his way back to China, after a period of service with the Men and Millions Team. He is one of the most useful missionaries in that country, illustrating as he does the practical application of the gospel to the social and industrial needs of the people. His visit has been a blessing to the churches in America.

Care for the Veteran Pastors.

On the eve of the annual Ministerial Relief Day, which is the Sunday before Christmas, Dec. 19, the Board at Indianapolis, reports prospects bright for another good advance. Twice as many Sunday-schools as last year have ordered supplies for the "White Gifts for the King" Christmas service, more ministers than ever before are preaching on the subject and more churches are giving the veterans a fair place in their missionary budgets. In fact, practically all that adopt budgets recognize the primary claim of the retired minister. This is the last year of the "Twenty Per Cent Proposition," and our people seem resolved to win by a wide margin.

Constructive Evangelism at West Union, W. Va.

The constructive character of the work being done in many current evangelistic campaigns is a cheering sign of the times. The following note from West Union, W. Va., is typical of many reports that come to this office. The note is from W. Vernon Lytle, pastor at West Union: "We begin a constructive evangelistic meeting here next week. The month has been given over to spiritual preparation for this meeting. Cottage prayer meetings have been held in various parts of the city, and on the night before the meeting begins a special meeting will be held at the church for all the personal workers. The Every Member Canvass, recently taken, has done much to enlist the membership in both the local and benevolent work of the church, and in addition to this, it has assisted materially in bringing about a renewed spiritual life in the church. C. A. Hanna, of Kipton, Ohio, will assist the pastor during the meeting, and W. D. Van Voorhis, of Parkersburg, will deliver a series of constructive sermons the first week of the meeting, on the general theme 'The Building of the Church.' The latter will also conduct a number of afternoon conferences for the church workers of our city. With this preparation for Mr. Hanna's coming we are hoping for a strengthening of all the Christian work in the community."

Notes From Georgia

Georgia's state convention recently met in Winder. The attendance was the best in several years. The visiting secretaries were: F. M. Rains, Geo. W. Muckley, and Grant K. Lewis. One session was held at the Auburn Christian college.

President John H. Wood, of Auburn, will be pastor of the Winder church for the ensuing year. He has resigned as state secretary, his resignation to take effect at the close of the year.

A. McLean, A. F. Hensey and C. E. Robinson have recently held missionary rallies in Atlanta, Savannah and Augusta. The First and West End churches of Atlanta, and the First church of Macon are engaged in an every member canvass for missions and current expenses. Other churches in the state will make similar efforts during the winter.

Allen R. Moore is filling the position of president, and Sam J. White as secretary of the Savannah Ministerial Association.

Herbert Yuell dedicated a new forty-thousand dollar building for the church at Athens, the service being held Dec. 10. Stanley R. Grubb has, after a work of ten years' duration, added another monument to his record as a church builder.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement will hold a convention in Atlanta the first week in February. Each church in the state is interested, and a notable occasion is promised.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, Ph. D.

In Two Volumes at $1.00 each

A thrilling and luminous interpretation of the Old Testament prophets, setting forth the historical situation within which each prophet lived and toward which his message was directed, and reconstructing for the modern reader the biographical story of each one of the immortal preachers of righteousness in ancient Israel. These two volumes have a tremendous value for the time in which we live—a time of war and fear of war. Dr. Willett makes each prophet live anew. No Bible student can understand the full message of the Bible who does not have a vivid grasp of the messages of Israel's prophets. There is no writer or teacher in America or Europe who has come nearer weaving the messages of these ancient moral leaders into the warp and woof of his own soul than has Professor Willett. His treatment in these two volumes will be not only a standard among scholars but an inspiration to the rank and file of Christian people for years to come.

Men and Millions at Canton, Mo.

Henry G. Burgess, pastor at Canton, Mo., writes under date of November 29, concerning the visit of the Men and Millions leaders at Canton, Mo.: "The Men and Millions team has just visited Canton. It was a visit invaluable to this church. The visit of that team brought a spiritual power and vision absolutely unprecedented in the history of our church. They have given us a program big enough to last for years. They have also created in the hearts of our people a desire to carry out that program. While this is the second year of the Every Member Canvass in this church, yet the second year will be far more efficient than it ever could have been without the instruction of these men. We commence our preparation for the Every Member Canvass at once. Nine of our young people volunteered for the Foreign Field."

Eureka College News Notes

President H. O. Pritchard has returned to Eureka after a three-weeks' campaign with the Men and Millions team in Missouri. He reports excellent progress and an optimistic outlook for success in this field.

Eureka College students have been fortunate in having the opportunity to hear Dr. Winfield Scott Hall, of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., deliver four addresses. The visit of Dr. Hall was obtained under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

Prof. J. Lawrence Erb, of the University of Illinois, gave a lecture at Eureka on "Hymnology." In November, Prof. Clarence Eidam, of Eureka College, gave a piano recital at Urbana. Arrangements are being made to secure the University orchestra for the spring festival.

The Eureka football team closed the football season by defeating the Canton Christian University eleven, at Canton. The game was witnessed by members of the Men and Millions Team.

On Dec. 7, Dr. Charles R. Brown, Dean of the Yale School of Religion, visited Eureka, and made an address to the students at chapel. Dr. Brown and members of the Eureka faculty were entertained at breakfast at the home of President Pritchard. Dr. Brown is especially interested in Eureka because of the strong men that school has sent to Yale.

The opening of the new $30,000 gymnasium will probably take place the first week in January. An excellent program has been arranged, which will consist of a band concert, play, basketball game and a contest among the literary societies. The dedication services will probably be conducted Thursday night of that week by members of the Men and Millions Team.

Disciples Go Forward in New York

New York is rightly called the Empire State. It is an empire with a population of ten millions, which is increasing at the rate of 300,000 a year.

It is the Empire State as the open gate to Europe, receiving immigrants more than twice the number of all other ports combined.

In this vast empire the Disciples of Christ have fifty-seven churches; one out of each 1,100 of its population is a member of one of our churches.

There are forty counties in which we have no church; thirty-four cities of more than 10,000 without a church of Christ. In the large centers of Albany, Schenectady, Utica, Binghamton we are not represented.

When one leaves the last one of our churches in New York City he rides 150 miles before he passes the door of another church. In this Empire of opportunities the New York Christian Missionary Society has just completed a State Campaign, visiting each and every church. Mrs. Laura Gerould Craig, C. W. B. M. Secretary and C. A. Brady, State Secretary with the assistance of several pastors carried on this work. The visit has stimulated interest and co-operation on the part of the churches and their members in the State work. The New York Christian Missionary Society owes a great debt of gratitude to the American Christian Missionary Society and to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, who during the past years have made generous apportionments for the work of the Empire State. The Disciples of New York will endeavor in a larger way, by their own efforts and sacrifices, manifest to these organizations their appreciation of the assistance that has been given.

The State Board plans: First, a State wide financial campaign for the purpose of enlarging the work and entering Albany, the State capitol.

Secondly: An annual campaign of state interests visiting each and every church.

Third: The gathering together in the 1916 State Convention at Wellsville, the largest numbers and representatives of our churches the state has ever had. This convention is to be followed by the School of Methods under the auspices of the Bible department, of the American Christian Missionary Society.

NOTES FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

Miss Kate V. Johnson of Tokyo, Japan, says: "I have just returned from an evangelistic trip of three weeks, and the progress of the work has strengthened my faith and opened my eyes. An old farmer up in Sakata walked ten miles to attend our meetings. That old farmer and all his family are Christians. He told of the meeting he had attended 27 years ago. It was held in the theatre building in Sakata, and C. E. Garst and his wife and another were the speakers. The farmer had forgotten the speaker but he remembered the speech and repeated much of it to me! Imagine, if you can, how my heart leaped when I listened to the message which I had given that man twenty-seven years before."

Dr. Frymire of Lotumbe, Africa, writes that he gave 1,209 treatments during August, and that he is busily engaged in making bricks and getting other material ready for the hospital. Lotumbe is a remote station, and the natives have been taught to make bricks, a perfectly new process for them. The timber for the hospital must be secured from the forest and sawn by hand. Most of the wood is of mahogany. It is the most durable and cheapest timber to be found.

E. A. Johnston of Longa, Africa, writes of their 60 miles journey in a dugout canoe with their small baby, a month old, as they traveled from Lotumbe, where the baby was born, back to their mission station at Longa. He writes that a white baby is a real event in Congo land and causes no small stir among the people. This was the first white baby ever born on the Momboyo River.

A letter from W. R. Holder indicates that there were twenty-one missionaries on board his steamer from England to the Congo. These were all Protestant workers, sent out by English and Scandinavian Societies. The sacrifices of the war are a challenge to the Christian people in England to do even greater things for missions than before. In spite of the terrific cost in men and money in the world conflict, few of the missionary societies have gone behind with their receipts. The appeals have been heroic and the response no less so.

H. C. Hobgood and A. F. Hensey, of Africa, and C. E. Robinson and M. B. Madden of Japan, who are home on furlough, are helping in the missionary rallies. A deep interest is already manifest and the team leaders report a larger attendance than in former years.

Secretary F. M. Rains recently attended a series of seven State missionary conventions in the Southland. He reports appreciative audiences and a growing interest on all missionary lines.

—S. J. Corey, Sec'y.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes wish to study the life of Jesus this year. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y.M.C.A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity —several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

"The Meaning of Baptism"

BY CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, Editor of "The Christian Century"

"This is probably the most important book in English on the place of baptism in Christianity written since Mozley published his 'Baptismal Regeneration' in 1856."

That is what the New York Christian Advocate says of this remarkable volume.

The Congregationalist: "A daring and splendidly Christian piece of work."

The Homiletic Review: "The spirit of the book is delightful and raises new hopes where none had seemed possible."

The Churchman (Episcopal): "An interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism."

St. Louis Christian Advocate: "Good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents."

Baptist Standard (Dallas, Tex.): "This is a very interesting work, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this year!"

The Baptist Banner: "A new book of more than ordinary interest. It is learned, and is written in excellent spirit and fine style."

The Christian Endeavor World: "A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view but building a bridge toward the affusionist view."

Herald of Gospel Liberty (Christian Denomination): "Mr. Morrison is leading a movement for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God."

The Advance (Congregationalist): "We believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt."

The Christian Union Quarterly (Disciple): "The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines."

The United Presbyterian: "An unusual book. Written by a Disciple and the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion."

The Religious Telescope (United Brethren): "The significance of this work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement."

Central Christian Advocate (Methodist): "A profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few."

The Presbyterian Advance: "The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which has often been asked of him by correspondents and readers—'What is the best book on baptism?'"

The Christian Intelligencer (Reformed): "The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal."

Zion's Herald (Methodist): "The work is of universal significance as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of the leading publication in the Disciples' denomination."

The Continent (Presbyterian): "It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciples' church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity of immersion, and he writes that 'the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever stands behind the practice of immersion.'"

The Increasing Years

MY, HOW FAST THIS YEAR HAS GONE!

That is the startled sigh with which most of us contemplate another New Year's day. And the most thoughtless of us are compelled to sit down with the serious minded and count the increasing years with trembling thoughts.

Christmas is the day for celebrating childhood.

New Year's day should be a reminder of the meaning with which Christianity has filled old age.

For not the least among the gifts bestowed by the Saviour is the enrichment and sweetening of the last years of life. Around those years gathers life's bitterest pathos. The flesh is weak, and with the ebbing strength has gone one's self-dependence. No more the strong grip upon the task—no more the task at all! No more the tang and sting of untried problems. No more the sustaining hope of conquest. Instead of bearing others' burdens, one must now submit and be carried as a burden oneself. The swift procession of workers goes by, and age can only stand and wait.

Keenest of all, perhaps, is the fateful sense that life no longer holds alternatives for the will. To youth each New Year is a new chance, a clean slate, a provision of God by which the soul may begin all over again. But to old age the New Year adds yet one more seal to life already fixed beyond all change.

If the heart is shut up to such reflections as these it is inevitable that a certain touch of cynicism, of disillusionment, will betray itself in the tone and temper of the aged. To old age the pessimists have ever come for their strongest arguments. Battling against pessimism Marcus Aurelius gave this beautiful advice to the aged: "When you go to your death, go cheerfully, and like a ripe nut when you drop out of the husk, be sure to speak well of the season and make your acknowledgments to the tree that bore you."

Such an attitude of chivalry toward a universe in the very act of defeating the soul's dearest purpose, is admirable. But the deepest motives and satisfactions of human nature are not stirred by it.

Only Christ of all the teachers of men has planted a principle in the soul by which old age is robbed of its gloom.

Only Christ teaches the fine art of growing old.

The soul that follows him secures itself against disillusionment at the end of the day when the zest of action has departed and the pulse is weak. The way he points leads ever into deeper satisfaction.

The Christian life is the ever ascending life. Eternal, it nowhere reaches its zenith. Its golden age is never in the past. No true interpreter of the Christian life harks back wistfully to some experience along the way, but like Paul, aged, battle-scarred and bound, forgetting the things behind, he reaches forward to his future crown. And like Rabbi Ben Ezra, each soul that has found Christ's secret, sings:

"Grow old along with me,
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which
The first was planned."

There are, broadly speaking, three stages through which each life normally passes, and each of these stages contains its characteristic and proper satisfaction.

The proper satisfaction of childhood is sheer gladness. The child is care-free, innocent, abounding with vitality and satisfied just to be in action. He is easily pleased. His spirit is akin to the birds and flowers and needs no cause, nothing save a chance, to express the gladness that is in him.

The proper satisfaction of a grown man is happiness. His life is a net-work of conscious purposes. His satisfaction is found in the accomplishment of these purposes. He is ever setting up goals and striving for them—in business, in love, in social relations, in personal morality, in human service. The feeling of worth which his life will have for him depends mainly upon his success in reaching these goals. If he fails in love, or in business, or in service, he is unhappy. If he succeeds he is happy.

But to old age these conditions and their satisfactions are denied. The bounding pulse of youth is gone and with it the thirst for play. Lacking strength and time age has no heart to undertake new ventures in the realm of deeds.

What satisfaction, then, has age? Must the soul live henceforth in memory only, the memory of past deeds done or foiled?

Not if somewhere on the way of life the soul hath chanced to meet with Christ!

For Christ has that to give which transforms the natural joys of gladness and happiness into blessedness, and blessedness is a satisfaction the world cannot give and the world cannot take away.

Now blessedness is the inalienable and proper satisfaction of old age. Bare, indeed, and full of pathos is the aged soul in whom this flower has not yet begun to grow. The gladness that ripples on the surface of youth soon passes. The happiness that attends the success of life's enterprises will fade when the currents of energy cease to flow. But if, in the still depths of experience, the soul hath found blessedness it possesseth a peace that passeth understanding.

This blessedness is the gift of Christ to young and old. All the testimony of Christian experience in the Bible and out of it declares that Christ gives that which no vicissitude can destroy. There is no breakdown in the satisfaction of the Christian life, no disenchantment.

Instead, the soul passes from glory to glory. In the Revelation Christ says he gives the morning star to his disciples, which means that the Christian life is ever on the ascendant. Its symbol is not the evening star, declining, but the morning star, ever rising. Its zenith is never reached. It is a crescendo life, waxing stronger and deeper while the physical energies wane.

Christ spoke his beatitudes to the broken and stricken souls of earth. In the spirit of them all he might have added one more:

Blessed are ye aged, for though youth is gone and its merriment, and though strength is gone and its happiness, there remain yet for you the everlasting arms of the Father. In their embrace ye may find the deepest revelation and the fullest comfort life can give.

The Soul's Need of Silence

BY EDGAR DE WITT JONES

LIKE all immortal poems, the Psalms were not written to order. The authors did not produce them by first deciding that it would be a splendid performance to embalm Israel's hopes and fears in verse and then with little thought dash them off, straightway. The Psalms of Israel are the irrepressible songs of her great singers. They could not be written until their writers had passed through certain experiences, then they had to be written. David, in the thirty-ninth Psalm, gives some hint of their method of writing when he exclaims: "While I was musing the fire burned." Quite naturally it came about that the Psalms are fraught with religious experiences either personal or national. The forty-sixth Psalm has a background of uncommon interest, for it was likely written in commemoration of the destruction of Sennacherib's host in the days of King Hezekiah. The overwhelming tragedy which is recorded in II Kings 19:35-37, occurred during the night time when the angel of the Lord smote one hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrians, both horses and riders. The famous lines of Byron, in his Hebrew Melody, will be recalled, especially the last stanza:

"And the widows of Ashur are loud in their wail.
And the idols are broken in the temples of Baal,
And the might of the Gentiles unsmote by the sword
Hath melted like snow in the glance of the Lord."

It is this destruction of the Assyrian host by the hand of the Lord that is in the Psalmist's mind. In imagination he beholds the devastating power of God descending in awful destruction upon Israel's enemy. He beholds the earth heaped and strewn with debris, broken bows, splintered spears, path-charred chariots, the rigid bodies of men and horses and thus viewing the host laid low forever he realizes how feeble and futile are the devices of man as compared with the power of Almighty God. Indeed, that sight of wreck and ruin seems to have a voice out of which the Almighty speaks and the Psalmist seems to hear him say: "Be still, and know that I am God."

A FEVERISH AGE.

"Be still!" That is the most difficult of all commands for us moderns. Perhaps it never was easy to be still, but it is particularly difficult now. Ours is a fussy age, a "fast and furious" time, a vociferous period. All the irons that we possess are in the fire. Our activities are manifold. There are organizations for every day and night in the week, and half a dozen for the Lord's day. A mad haste characterizes our daily life, speed is at a premium. When Mr. G. Lowes Dickinson, the famous publicist, made his first visit to America his conclusion was that the dominant American passion was the desire for wealth. On his second visit he revised that judgment and decided that our great ambition was not for wealth so much as for power. On his third visit, however, he decided that the ruling passion of America was for neither one of these, but the demand for acceleration. Of the same tenor is the remark of a noted American architect, who, in a conversation with the Italian historian, Ferrero, said: "My fellow countrymen would willingly spend a hundred million dollars to build a church as beautiful as St. Mark's in Venice. But they would command me, as a condition of my undertaking the work, to finish it within eighteen months."

"Be still, and know that I am God."—Psalm 46:10.

The word "feverish" describes better than any other word our modern life. Our home life is feverish, our business life is feverish, our social life is feverish, even our religious life is feverish, and the average church with its round of rallies and contests aggravates rather than rests its nerve-worn members. Our days are shortened by anxiety, worry and concern. We lack poise, balance, and quiet reserve power. "Be still!" That is a hard command for us to obey. Rather bid us to "buy," to "sell," to "speak," to "sing," to "play." Command us to do anything but "be still," ask of us the reasonable, not impossible.

NOT A MEDITATIVE AGE.

In a very large way meditation is a lost art with us. Meditation is difficult, if not impossible in the round of hurly-burly distractions of our way of living. Many of us do not want to think, we prefer to be entertained. We are not given to musing, but we have a passion to be amused. Our most popular form of diversion, the moving pictures, is not an aid to meditation. Such words as "contemplation," "reflection," and "meditation," are not of our vocabulary. We dote on "efficiency." The word "strenuous" is popular with us, and if the spirit of our times has any word of command for us it is "speed up!"

"Be still!" There is a ministry in silence. Not silence for silence's sake, to be sure, for that might denote the quintessence of selfishness. Some of us would like to be silent that we might be the noisier bye and bye. Silence with some would be welcomed merely as a shock-absorber. I recall reading some years ago the story of a business man who was worn to the point of collapse by a heavy round of official responsibility. One day he happened to be in the office of a physician where there was an odd-looking machine. The physician pointed to it and explained: "That machine can make you deaf. If you would like to have your hearing deadened all you will need to do is to sit down in this chair, look steadily at that disc and in five minutes you will be deaf to all ordinary noises. This same machine can restore your hearing whenever you wish it. Would you like to try the experiment?" For answer the weary business man sat down in the chair and directed the physician to set the machine to going. Immediately, the disc began to revolve rapidly, producing a peculiar, purring kind of sound, not at all unpleasant to the ear. In a few minutes the man in the chair, who was intently watching the disc, could distinguish no sound at all. The experiment over, the physician reminded his patient to return when he desired his hearing to be rendered acute again. The man went out on the street where a hush had fallen over all. He heard neither the noise of traffic, nor the cries of the newsboys, but picked his way through the crowded streets now gratefully silent for him. Everywhere he went, sweet silence reigned, soothing and resting his worn nerves; and the outcome of the story was that the tired business man refused to permit the doctor to restore his hearing, preferring deafness and silence to the clamor and din of the world.

"BE STILL AND KNOW."

I recall that at the time I read of this incident I thought the cure a selfish one, but silence for the sake of silence is not that which the Psalmist has in mind. Instead, he commands silence for a more spiritual purpose. The word of the Psalmist is not simply: "Be still!" but "Be still, and know that I am God." The ministry of silence is that of being still that we may come to know God.

There is only one way that we can know God, and that is spiritually. In Jesus' conversation with the woman of Samaria he declared that "God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." We know one another in our human relationships by the physical senses, by joining hand to hand, eye looking into eye, or as words passed from mouth to ear. But God can neither be seen, nor heard, nor touched, as we see, know, and touch one another. He can be approached only spiritually; he can be apprehended only as our spirit experiences contact with his spirit. And this approach to God is not accidental, but a matter of thought and power of the will, and fixed habits of life. Our minds will have to be staid on him if we are to be kept in perfect peace; we shall have to be still, to know that he is God. Jesus gave wise counsel when in his sermon on the mount he said: "Thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet."

THE POTENCY OF PRAYER.

It is this "closet experience" that we are needing. We must be alone with God, and most of us seldom are. Herein is where we fail. We make little or no provision for increasing our knowledge of God by deliberately choosing to be with him and with him alone. All the great souls who have known God have come to know him by this manner of approach. The biographies of the great preachers, missionaries, every devout Christian, all bear witness to the potency of prayer. The lives of the outstanding characters in the Holy Scriptures bear eloquent testimony to the same source of power. The secret of their strength is found in those closet experiences where alone with God they came to know him and his purposes for them, and their lives became channels through which his spirit wrought wondrous things.

Jacob is the classic illustration of the Old Testament. The early life of Jacob is not pleasant reading, and the wrong he did his brother is hard to forget. The young man leaves his home and starts out to make a place for himself in the world. And that first night away from home he lays himself down to sleep beneath the Syrian stars and moon, and whilst it is night he has a vision of God and his angels. The experience makes a deep impression on Jacob, who vows a vow, dedicates his life to God in a larger and more intimate way, sets up a pillar there, and calls it "Bethel." The years pass on, and Jacob's life is a curious mixture of good will and evil. Seemingly he has forgotten Bethel; then comes his separation from his father-in-law, Laban; his journeying back toward his old home, and lo! the warning of Esau's approach with four hundred men. Again, Jacob is left alone with God, and that night came the crisis of his life. Jacob confessing his dependence upon God, is born again, he becomes a new creature, and Jehovah gives him a new name. Instead of "Jacob," which means "a supplanter," he is called "Israel," which signifies "a prince with God."

BIBLE MEN NEAR TO GOD.

And, as with Jacob, so with all other great characters of the Bible; they found power in, and by close communion with God. Abraham on the mountain; Moses in the wilderness of Midian; Gideon on the threshing floor; Samuel in the house of Eli; David in the cave; Elijah in the mountain fastness; Isaiah in the temple; Daniel in his own room with the windows open toward Jerusalem; John the Baptist in the wilderness; Paul in Arabia; John on the Island of Patmos—the great company of patriarchs, prophets, priests, apostles, martyrs, missionaries, were all made strong through the ministry of silence.

Mr. Stewart Edward White wrote a book a few years ago called "The Silent Places," describing some of the great silent stretches of God's out-of-doors. Every life should have its "silent places," its "closet experiences" where God and man meet and commune. These places may vary in location though alike in aloneness with God. As Isaac of old went out to meditate in the field at eventide, so God's out-of-doors may serve as an oratory for many a soul who is seeking him.

Never shall I forget a day, when all alone I stood on the rim of the Grand Canyon of Arizona and looked down into that Titan of Chasms, piled with mountains, furrowed with valleys, and jeweled with "purple peaks remote." A great silence came upon me and I heard God's voice speaking in the majesty and awful grandeur of that wonder of the world. Sometimes in open field, sometimes along the seashore, sometimes in the depth of a great forest, alone with God we may experience the ministry of silence, and thereby enrich our knowledge of the Almighty.

THE QUIET HOUR.

But, oftenest, and perhaps best and wisest, is the silent period in the seclusion of one's room. Not all of us can go to mountain, or seashore, not all of us can walk every day in quiet country fields; we are a busy people, families are dependent upon us, we have much to do, but there is not one of us who may not keep the quiet hour if we choose to have it so. Fifteen minutes every day, either in the morning or the evening, (the morning is perhaps the better time) in quiet meditation and devotional reading of a brief Scriptural passage, is the best possible preparation for a busy day of work. Yet, how few keep the hour, or provide for the silent places. Perhaps not one in a thousand who wears the Christian name makes this provision for the soul's need for silence. And because we neglect this our lives may be powerless; defeat comes instead of victory; discouragement enters where hope and expectancy should abide. "Be still, and know that I am God." The soul needs silence, our lives hunger for the bread of heaven, and we know not where to find supply. Behold! a storehouse at our right hand.

Of all who have ever lived, none knew God as Jesus Christ knew him. How came it so? Be sure, it was not an accident. No busier man ever walked the earth than Jesus during those days when he journeyed through Galilee, Judea, Perea, healing, teaching, and blessing the multitudes. But busy as Jesus was, his life was never feverish, he never was ruffled, he never was caught off his guard; his poise was perfect. And there is a reason for it. Busy as he was, thronged by the multitude sometimes too busy to rest or eat, Jesus kept inviolate his times of retirement when, alone with his Father, he found strength for his unwearied ministry. Such sentences as these from the gospel narrative reveal the open secret of his well poised life: "He went out into the solitary place and there he prayed"; "he withdrew himself into the wilderness and there he prayed"; "he rose up a great while before day and departed into a solitary place to pray"; "and it came to pass in these days, that he went out into the mountain to pray, and he continued all night in prayer to God." In the silent places Jesus Christ came to know God as no one before nor since has known him. Think of Gethsemane!

"'Tis midnight, and on Olive's brow
The star is dim that lately shone.
'Tis midnight—in the Garden now
The suffering Saviour prays alone."

THE VICTORY IN THE GARDEN.

It was in the garden and not on Calvary that Jesus won the great victory. He was alone in that experience, parted a stone's cast from James and John and Peter, his three intimates. And alone in the garden with God, Jesus learned the Father's will completely. And from that silent place with the light of victory bathing his brow in beauty he suffered himself to be led away to his triumphant victory.

"Be still, and know that I am God." Aye, it is hard to learn to be still. It is as hard for us to be still when God bids us as it is for our children when we bid them to be quiet. And yet, the soul has need of silence if we grow in knowledge of God, and whether or not we choose to be still, bye and bye, the experience must come when we shall perforce have to be still. Some great and bitter disappointment will come like a bolt from the blue, our hopes will be blasted into nothingness, our castles in the air will dissolve, for us the heavens will become as brass, our strength shall be turned into weakness, our manifold activities and boundless energies suddenly paralyzed. We shall have no heart to go about our wonted occupations, life will have palled upon us and all the world will wear the weeds of widowhood.

THE MINISTRY OF DEATH.

Or, it may be that stillness will come by way of death in the household. A voice will be stilled that made music all the day, the laughter of a little child heard no more on stairway or through hall, wife or husband, mother or father, may be gathered into the "vasty halls of death" and over the household there will come such a stillness as can almost be felt. And then, oh miracle of miracles, out of that great silence there may be vouchsafed unto us such a vision of God as will satisfy our soul's deepest longings. Scales will fall from our eyes, and like Jacob of old we shall gain a new victory and win for ourselves a new name.

"I walk down the Valley of Silence,—
Down the dim, voiceless valley—alone!
And I hear not the fall of a footstep
Around me, save God's and my own;
And the hush of my heart is as holy
As hovers where angels have flown!

Do you ask me the place of the Valley,
Ye hearts that are harrowed with care?
It lieth far between mountains,
And God and His angels are there;
And one is the dark mount of sorrow,
And one the bright mountain of prayer."

THOU GOOD AND WISE FATHER, TEACH US TO BE QUIET, HELP US TO BE STILL. HUSH THOU OUR CLAMOROUS OUTCRIES. STAY OUR FOOLISH STRIFE. CALM OUR FEVERISH LIVES. STABLISH OUR SOULS IN SILENCE THAT OUR KNOWLEDGE OF THEE MAY GROW, AND "MORE OF REVERENCE IN US DWELL."

THE CHURCH COLLEGE.

The Lutheran Herald states that eight of the nine justices of the Supreme Court of the United States are college men; seven of the eight are from denominational colleges. Eighteen out of the twenty-six presidents of the United States were college men; sixteen of the eighteen were from denominational colleges. Eighteen of the recognized masters in American letters are college bred; seventeen of the eighteen are from denominational colleges. Of the members of Congress of 1905 receiving college education, who were prominent enough to be mentioned in "Who's Who?" two-thirds were graduates of denominational colleges.

If you pass by the least considerable man, you pass by all the humanities and the divinities and set your heart on what is transient and cheap. There is a wide ocean of difference between taking in the last man and leaving him out. It is not a question of one man, but of humanity. —Charles Ferguson.

The soul hungers and thirsts after happiness; and it is in vain that everything deserts it—it will never submit to its abandonment.—Amiel.

Christmas Logic

BY J. T. STOCKING

"Glory to God in the highest,
On earth peace, good will among men."

THAT is, "peace" THROUGH "good will among men." This song is not merely a bit of lilting sentiment; it is irrefragible logic. Jesus was the "Prince of Peace" in the Kingdom of God. His method of bringing peace was through creating "good will among men." And that is the only method that has yet been found that will bring peace and preserve it—whether it be industrial peace, economic peace, or international peace. The Prince of Peace found a cruel industrial order. Society was suffering from the very ills that plague this era of "big business." He purposed no "set of regulations," but he said: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye so unto them." He found society caked, seamed, and stratified. He advocated no particular statutes, but he "taught them, saying": "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." He was not a soap-box, pulpit, or platform agitator for any special legislation which should speedily change things. He knew that society could not be quieted like a crying child by a spoonful of legislation. He did not put his trust in "measures," but in a great principle, and that principle was GOOD WILL.

"GOOD WILL AMONG MEN."

There is no problem that grows out of the relations between men that would not be solved without delay if there were "good will among men." And there is not one of these problems that ever will be solved until there is good will among men. All the laws and regulations that Congress and legislatures can put upon the books will not bring peace into our economic world unless people have a real concern for each other's welfare. All the military measures that army and navy leagues can conjure into existence, can frighten people into accepting, and compel Congressmen, through "pressure," to "come across" and support, all the courts for arbitration and conciliation and mediation, that those who put their reliance still on reason can assemble, will not of themselves bring peace. That will come only when there is a love for humanity and an interest in humanity that transcends national boundaries, and makes of patriotism something more and something nobler than local pride. Laws may bring about a "cessation of hostilities" for a time, but hostilities will not cease until HOSTILITY ceases. An armed truce is not peace. That comes only through "good will among men."

A NEW CONSCIENCE NEEDED.

There is nothing spectacular about this method of bringing peace. There is nothing that tickles the ears of those who follow a sonorous, high-sounding phrase. There is nothing dashing or dazzling about this program. There is no crusading here to force or "enforce" anything. The method does not thrill with promise or prophecy of INSTANT action or speedy transformation. It is the old, slow, undramatic method which has been followed in every step that civilization has ever taken from the time when Cain murdered his brother.

There must be a new social conscience to right social wrongs, and there must be a new international conscience to right international wrongs. A writer in the "Forum" a few years ago said: "An employer is under no more financial obligation to his workmen after he has paid their current wages than they are to him or to a passer-by on the street whom they never saw." Another man of much the same school writes: "Every man and woman in society has one big duty: that is, to take care of his or her own self." He tries to relieve this teaching of something of its crassness by adding: "This is a social duty, . . . and the latter [social duty] is accomplished when the former is done." It is plain to all but the dullest and blindest today that such an attitude as these two men represent is the greatest enemy of industrial peace. Such an attitude has to go before we have any permanent guarantee of peace in the social order. These men are industrial pirates.

We are rapidly rising above such a creed in social ethics. But in national ethics we are slower in rising. Prevailing patriotism does not rise much above the idea that "every [nation] has one big duty to take care of her own self." This conception of our big duty to look out for No. 1—to be "for America, right or wrong," to have regard only for America's selfish interests—is a constant menace to peace. It is the creed of a national pirate. It is the kind of creed that tears up treaties into scraps and steps on the neck of the weak in the name of "Unser Gott." Such an idea of patriotism breeds distrust and suspicion. It is always arming for "defense." It is hypersensitive in the matter of "national honor." It lists at length the things in which "America could never submit to arbitration." There is no safety for any nation so long as it clings to this outlaw idea of patriotism. If this war teaches us anything, it should teach us that the fortunes of the nations are inseparably intertwined, and that no nation looks out for its own welfare who looks out only for its own welfare. Good will distributes our interests and guarantees peace.

ARE PEACE ADVOCATES CRAZY?

There are loud and raucous voices saying that this philosophy won't work. It is all right to sing about "good will" at Christmas time, but it is too refined a sentiment for use in practical affairs. People who advocate it are "impractical." "dreamers," "silly," "spineless pacifists," and a "peril to the nation." It is easy to call names. It always has been. Hard-headed "practical" people of affairs called the Prince of Peace "crazy," a "blasphemer," and a peril to the throne of Cæsar. No one should be intimidated by a name. This brutal and lustful war, which has sickened the earth with smell and taste of blood, has struck faith and reason a blow which has made them blink. In the face of this orgy of hate it sometimes has seemed futile to preach the power of love and good will. But this shameful conflict will end some day soon. The bloody God of War will shut his dripping jaws, his disgusting maw distended with the bodies of too many men, because the chords in the hearts of the nations will be touched by the "angel of [their] better natures." and they will see that they ought to live together as comrades, not as foes.

We advocate the gospel of good will, not because it is a pretty sentiment, but because it is the only adequate gospel. Good will is the only "insurance" that nations can rely upon. No other foundation can be laid for peace than that which was laid over nineteen centuries ago. Christmas logic is the only logic for the situation.

A Christmas Word

BY JOHN M. ALEXANDER

"It is more blessed to give than to receive."

THE text of this Christmas word is a staccato note. To the casual New Testament reader it is apparently out of place. We marvel that so implicative a phrase should have been omitted from the partial biographies of our Master's life. This teaching is a blood relative of that other thrilling word, "freely we have received, freely give."

The call is social. To answer is to meet the great human need. It is a call to divine exercise. It works both ways, affecting both giver and receiver. It is the Father entreating his children to make an exegesis of his own loving, giving life. Life's summits are reached in such activities. Life's transfigurations are achieved when we share our blessings with others. The poet's heart was moved by the same sentiment when he wrote:

"Others, Lord, yes others,
Let this my motto be,
Help me to live for others,
That I may live like Thee."

Here is a challenge to divine contemplation. God's love for us is measured by what he gives to us—"He so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." The call in its fulness began in the manger at Bethlehem. It was the voice of a little child. It was also the voice of hallowed parental love. These are the blended chimes which continue to refresh our souls with their melody and sweetness especially at the glad Christmas time. This is the season of love's prodigalities. We live, truly live, only as we give. The more we give the more we are transformed into his likeness. The doors of the divine hostelry stand ajar, the elect enter and live. They pay the price of a wholly surrendered life. For it, there are no substitutes. Neither dogma nor doctrine, as such, will avail.

True, we can pour our spiritual grist into the religious polemic, but we grind out premises, conclusions and law, not life. True, we do measure prosperity by the statistics of income, but the text reverses the worldly calculation.

This text of the Master is for the open receptive soul who desires to stand on hallowed ground. For such the Father's resources are infinite and inexhaustible. Their availability only awaits the capacity for recognition and reception. The aged mystic was right, when he wrote, "the soul can never rest on things that are beneath itself." Our world of serenity and joy, happiness and contentment, is entirely spiritual and satisfaction cannot be found other where. It is the life "hid with Christ in God." What a pity, then, that the Christmas Season should find any soul stalking abroad, seeking satisfaction in a prehistoric animalism. God cannot allow his children to live on such a level. His Christmas Carol is a call to the Highest. It is a re-opening of the Grand Lodge of life. We must re-invest the passwords with new and deeper meaning. Love, temperance, chastity and charity are growing terms. "It is more blessed to give than to receive," is a hard sermon for the world to understand. To incarnate this truth is to reveal the Christ life. To live aright is to give our all to those for whom Christ died. The "joy that was set before him" was found in this service. We can learn the way from him who began to be the light of the world in the lowly manger at Bethlehem.

South Bend, Ind.

Lansing and Wilson Men of Prayer

MR. ROBERT Lansing, the new secretary of state, is a most versatile man. In the first place, he has an enormous capacity for work; but he is a worker of whom the saying is true, "The busiest men, those who accomplish most, are generally those who seem the least busy."

But the secretary also knows how to play, writes a contributor to the Christian Endeavor World. He is an enthusiastic fisherman, and he enjoys a game of golf. He finds time to watch the Nationals play ball in the American League Park, and on the walls of his room at home hang landscapes and sketches which have come from his brush and pencil. Mr. Lansing is not only a great reader; but he has been known to write verses, and he says that dining out in the evening rests him.

But there is still another side to the personality of the secretary of state, which is well known in Watertown, his native city, and which a sketch of his life in "The World's Work" refers to in this striking paragraph:

"Not long ago he was invited on the same Thursday evening to dine with a member of the cabinet and with a foreign ambassador—two invitations. To each his response was the same—his inability to attend because that was his night at church. The ambassador was incredulous, but his colleague remembered that a sound Presbyterian had always kept that engagement and as a matter of course had always attended church once, and sometimes twice, on Sundays."

One cannot help feeling a little more secure as to our foreign relations when he knows that the man who has charge of them is not only an experienced diplomat, but a man who so feels his responsibility to God that the prayer meeting is a previous engagement when dinner invitations come in for Thursday evening; a man, moreover, "whose Bible might be the illuminated text of monastic breviary, so filled are its margins from beginning to end with closely written annotations."

And if the secretary of state in the midst of a multitude of the heaviest responsibilities, and with all the distractions of public life in Washington, can find time for the prayer meeting, what reasonable excuse can any other man offer for staying away?

Bishop W. F. Anderson, of the Methodist Episcopal Conference in Indianapolis, told the following story in regard to President Wilson, which came from a Cabinet member, through a Senator. Said Bishop Anderson:

"When the President arrived at the Cabinet meeting, his face wore a solemn look. It was evident that serious affairs of the nation were on his mind. He said to the Cabinet members: 'I do not know whether you men believe in prayer or not. I do. Let us pray and ask the help of God.' And right there the President of the United States fell upon his knees, and the members of the Cabinet did the same, and the President offered a prayer to God. While the war rages in Europe, we in this country should thank God that in this crisis of the world we have a chief executive who is a servant of God, who stands with his hand in the hand of God."

President Wilson is human, and therefore makes mistakes; but the man who so depends on God, and so trusts his wisdom and power, is safe, rightly comments one of our exchanges. The men of the presidency who have led the way when the nation was passing through great crises—Washington, Lincoln, McKinley, and Wilson—were all praying men, men who believed in God and were not ashamed to confess it. The sight of the heavens and the experiences of great conflict and peril reveal the greatness of God and the littleness of men, and these things move men to seek help from heaven. The experience of ease, indulgence, and luxury, and looking earthward, shut out God and exalt men, and fill the soul with distrust, fear, and unbelief. Thank God, we have a praying President.

Common Sense Talk About Ford

BY CARL LAEMMLE

President Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

HENRY FORD has been called a jackass and a clown because he hired a ship and sailed across the sea to stop the most frightful slaughter in the history of the world.

Maybe he can't stop the war. Few expect that he will. Nimble-witted critics are having piles of fun with him because they don't believe he can deliver the goods. To me the big thing in his action is not whether he will or will not stop the war, but the fact that he is willing to try. It was by trying that he got where he is. And still he keeps on trying!

In the face of overwhelming odds, in spite of world-wide criticism, he is willing to tackle the greatest job that ever fell to the lot of a human being in the world's history. He brushes aside the thousands of columns of newspaper criticism, he ignores the public utterances of so-called statesmen, he sets his face toward the most glorious goal that any man ever hoped to achieve—and goes on his way trying!

They say he is doing it to advertise his automobile. But still he goes on trying! They say his riches have turned his head. But still he tries! They say he never did anything but promote a good automobile engine and they ask what right he has to undertake the work of diplomats! The present war is the result of a most gigantic failure of diplomacy, and the fact that Henry Ford is willing to try a thing in which the great diplomats of the world have failed only adds to the bigness of his trying!

JOKES OUT OF PLACE.

So far as I know he is the only person who has taken a definite step toward ending the war. True, it may not be the right step. But how are we ever going to find the right step until we try? The men who sit in swivel chairs and sneer and make funny jokes about that man Ford are not taking steps of any kind to end the war. The job looks too big and too hopeless to them.

It looks big to Ford. And maybe looks hopeless to him. But he's got the nerve to try and spend his own money at it.

Ye gods! what a nation this would be if each industry could be headed by a Ford who was willing to try. What chance would any other nation under the sun have in competition with us?

In my business career I've met hundreds of men who could tell me what I could not do. But I've met only a few who are anxious to try. I've let the former class out as quickly, but as gently, as possible. But I've hung onto the other class with all my might. I want the man who can or the man who will try, but the man who can't or the man who thinks "it is useless to try" can't have any of my time.

If any young man happens to read this, I wish he'd let this one piece of advice soak into his brain of brains: There's a word in the dictionary called "can't." Leave it there! Never use it! Instead, say "I'll try," or, better still, "I'll henry-ford!"

Henry Ford and His Adventure

WHAT shall we think of Henry Ford and his voluntary peace commission recently landed on the shores of Europe?

Shall we take him seriously?

Shall we laugh at him?

Shall we condemn him as a meddler?

Or shall we just cynically charge it all to the advertising account and let it go?

Opinion is divided. There are many laughable aspects of the adventure. And it is remotely conceivable that certain consequences might flow from his party's activities in Europe that might embarrass the government of the United States. As for the advertising interpretation that may be dismissed as unworthy of any mind that conceives it.

On the whole, The Christian Century is disposed to take the enterprise seriously, very seriously. Our reason is not that we expect substantial results to be gained by it, for we do not. Europe will not listen to Mr. Ford or to any member of his party or to the united voice of his party—provided they are able to speak in a united voice.

Why, then, do we regard the expedition sympathetically?

Because we believe that it is a foretoken of the method by which war is to be abolished.

So long as the voice of neutral nations is smothered under the conventions of diplomatic procedure nothing will be done to banish war from the earth.

Somebody's got to make a fuss about war!

Governmental neutrality resolves itself into national complacency. We in America have come to take the war in Europe for granted. Our first horror has worn off. The attitude of our government—the conventional and traditional attitude a disinterested government is supposed to take—has created in the minds of our citizens a notion that the war has a valid moral status, that there is nothing we can do, and if there were it would not be very important for us to do it.

Mr. Ford's volunteer expedition represents the protest of the human soul against the restrictions of diplomatic tradition and red-tape. We believe it is a sane and valid impulse that drives him and his associates to do what little they can to voice the deep horror of onlooking humanity at the thing Europe now is doing.

What America Will Do

IF ALL Americans felt as Henry Ford feels, and if other men of vast wealth, instead of capitalizing the war for their own profit, should pour out their wealth to aid their fellow-Americans in giving voice to their protest against the savage relapse of their European brothers, America could stop the war.

If America had had imagination, and had dared to act outside of the routine of diplomatic precedent, and had found means of speaking a human word to the war crazed nations, we dare to believe that America could have prevented the war, or at least stopped it near its beginning.

But America uttered no voice, took no action. We simply fell back into the traditional attitude always hitherto adopted by nations that had no stake in such international conflicts.

Our attitude was technically proper, but humanly dastardly.

Mr. Ford and Miss Jane Addams are serving the cause of humanity by suggesting courses of action lying quite outside the formalities of unimaginative diplomatic procedure, and however fatuous and futile their endeavors may be in the present struggle the lesson they are teaching will not be lost.

Secretary Muckley's Anniversary

GEORGE W. MUCKLEY has served the cause of Church Extension among the Disciples of Christ for twenty-five years. When he became secretary there was a fund of $35,000 in the treasury. There is now $1,165,000 in the treasury. During these twenty-five years 1,783 churches have been assisted to build by loans from this fund.

One of the most satisfying reflections of this anniversary is to measure the growth of the secretary himself as well as that of his great work. It is easy for a secretary to become mechanical and metallic. He is in constant danger of thinking in terms of dollars. His mind may unawarely grow sordid for the Church's sake.

Against this tendency Secretary Muckley has fought a good fight. His brethren have rejoiced to observe in him a growing spiritual life. He is not only a gatherer of dollars and a builder of church houses, but an interpreter of the finer things of the soul. G. W. Muckley is a very positive spiritual force among his brethren, and is growing into greater spiritual power as the years bring mellowness and wisdom.

Here is the kind of man of whom you instinctively pray that he may live a thousand years!

Completing Our First Hospital

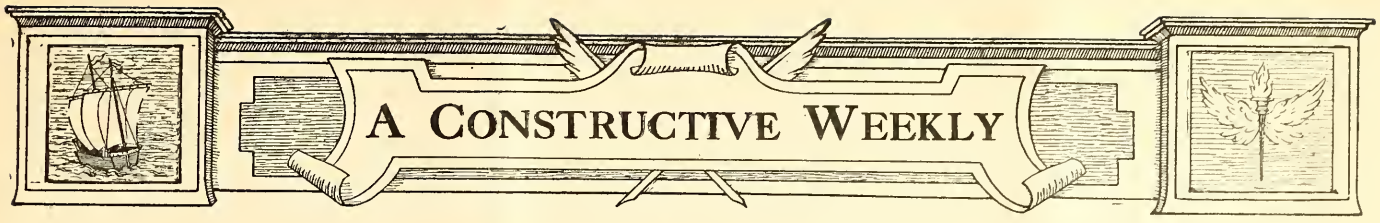
AFTER five years of money-raising, contract-letting and actual building the Christian Church Hospital at Kansas City is now practically ready to be opened and occupied. On another page we show a picture of the new building. Dr. John B. Murphy, of Chicago, declares it is one of the best appointed hospital buildings in the country.

Ground and building cost something like $20,000, which amount was the gift of Mr. R. A. Long, of Kansas City. Other citizens of Kansas City contributed $150,000 as an endowment fund with which to enable the hospital to render free service to those unable to pay.

The public is now advised that the only thing waiting to be done before opening is to equip the building with $50,000 worth of furnishings. This amount the general brotherhood outside of Kansas City is being asked to contribute, although in addition to their previous benefactions of $350,000 Kansas City people will no doubt wish to share in the fund for furnishings.

The whole enterprise has been carried to completion by a local association of Kansas City churchmen, under the auspices and direction of the National Benevolent Association. Mr. J. W. Perry, president of the Bank of Commerce and president of the National Benevolent Association has been indefatigable in his devotion to the work of building this the first hospital erected by the Disciples of Christ.

It is a work for which every member of our fellowship in the land may well be grateful and whose gracious ministry to human need many will be prompted to support with generous gifts.



Friendly Falsehoods About Jesus

QUOTING from an editorial in The Christian Century in which we described the purpose of the Disciples to get back to the real Jesus of history, Rev. Frank G. Tyrrell writes to the editor as follows:

"We have tried to approach Jesus as if we were meeting him for the first time, with virgin minds uncorrupted by the friendly falsehoods his followers have told about him?" Can you give us a bill of particulars? What falsehoods, and what followers? If they lied about him, were they "followers" or traitors?

The list of friendly falsehoods which his followers have told about Jesus in the past nineteen centuries is too long to set down here. But we can name two are three that will serve to start our correspondent's informed mind working in the direction our own mind was looking when that sentence was conceived.

We would begin with the highly abstract and conventionalized picture of Jesus which theologians and artists began to draw shortly after the days of the primitive Church. He was described in language so highly metaphysical that the reality of his human nature was lost. The Byzantine art made him a figure remote, forbidding, awful. This treatment of Jesus was false, though amiably conceived in a spirit of adoration.

Some followers of Jesus have taught that he is a lawgiver, and they go on to interpret the Christian religion as a keeping of rules and precepts, with fast days and feast days and rites and forms and such things. But this we know is a false way of regarding him who conceived himself and whom the New Testament writers conceived as a life-giver. Jesus was neither the founder of an institution nor the author of a code of laws nor did he assume any sort of legal authority over the souls of men. He opened men's eyes, he gave them insight into his Father's character, and enabled them by his life and his death to become like his Father, even as he himself was like his Father.

Some followers of Jesus have made out that he established an official order of men called bishops, through whom grace is to be conveyed to the Church and the world for all time, and that divine grace is limited to the channel of this succession. This is none other than a friendly falsehood. It is not meant to be false; it is believed to be true by those who teach it. But our correspondent agrees with The Century in holding it to be false.

These are but samples of a long bill of particulars. We might use many pages in extending the list. We might refer to certain teachings of the millennial cults of today, to the Tolstoyan doctrine of non-resistance, to the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, to the doctrine that puts the authority of Jesus behind a particular mode of baptism, to certain teachings of Christian Science attributed to Jesus —all of these are friendly falsehoods held honestly by those who take Jesus Christ as their guide and Saviour.

What Disciples of Christ have set themselves to do is to get back again to the actual Christ who walked our earth, to understand his life, to catch his vision and to strive to realize it.

Community Training Schools

LAST winter the experiment was made of conducting a community Bible training school in one of the suburbs of Chicago. The churches combined and planned a course of study in two terms running from October to April.

The work was so successful that this season it has been undertaken in nearly a dozen parts of Chicago, and the Cook County Sunday-school Association has made haste to indorse and promote the plan, and is now offering certificates for those who graduate in the courses.

It is perhaps the first time in the history of modern Sunday-school work that all classes in the community have rallied to an educational experiment, with the sense of meeting upon common ground. The services of men representing the various theological seminaries and divinity schools of the city have been secured.

The result is that in at least a dozen places churches are being crowded with groups of Sunday-school teachers and other Christian workers, who devote an hour a week, not to the preparation of some fragment of the Bible as a lesson for the coming Sunday, but to scientific and comprehensive study of the various subjects which enter into an efficient teacher-training program.

The sessions last an hour and a half. After brief devotional exercises a general lecture is given by some competent teacher of Old or New Testament, who delivers a series of lectures running through the term.

The second forty-five minutes are given to class work under instructors who are prepared to discuss the problems relating to the various grades of Sunday-school work into which the registered students of the training school are divided. A fee of two dollars provides for the expenses of the school, and secures regularity of attendance on the part of the members. It is a plan which can be adopted in any community, and with the happiest results.

The Disciples' Journalism

A Shop-Talk Editorial Appropriate to the Christmas Time

WITH the appearance of a new name in the editorial department of the Christian Evangelist it seems to The Christian Century that the time has come to begin to hope that some positive and overt steps may be taken toward attaining a basis of friendly co-operation among the newspapers and publishing houses of the Disciples.

For many years the spirit animating certain of our publishing activities has been such as to create a widespread doubt as to the net value of these activities to the essential life of the brotherhood.

This, manifestly, ought not so to be.

Chief among the forces making for the formation of our people's ideals ought to be our journalistic and publication enterprises and these enterprises ought—with whatever differences of editorial opinion obtains among them—so to be conducted in their mutual relations that they will reflect honor upon the cause and promote peace and goodwill among those whose business it is to preach and practice Christian unity.

For several years it has been our very particular regret that between the Christian Evangelist and The Christian Century there should obtain any lack of co-operation, in view of the mutual and friendly emulation which we enjoyed with that estimable paper while Dr. Garrison was its editor. It is our belief that at this time it is due to the brotherhood that all hindrances to the fullest co-operation of the two papers be frankly discussed in order that they may be overcome or set aside. And we cherish the belief that the attitude of Mr. Kershner, the new editor, is such as to respond to a candid setting forth of those things wherein the Christian Evangelist has not only created ill will among Disciples' journals but has offended the ethical sensibilities of the brotherhood itself.

So long as there seemed no hope that its policies could be modified we have forborne to give expression to the widespread resentment which those policies have engendered, but from our deep desire that a spirit of mutual trust and co-operation may obtain in our Disciples' journalism we are prompted to take occasion of the change of editorship of the Christian Evangelist to set forth those policies which ought to be condemned and which, we dare to hope, may now be changed.

The policies to which we refer relate themselves to the new regime of the Christian Evangelist, together with its publishing house, dating from the time it was purchased by Mr. R. A. Long and put on a basis of public ownership. At once the claim was put forward that the churches and Sunday-schools of the Disciples ought to patronize this house because its profits were to go to the cause of missions. With unimaginative monotony this claim has been urged for the past five years, the management seeking evidently to create a sort of conscience among the Sunday-schools toward the St. Louis institution.

We believe we speak as from a totally disinterested point of view when we say that that claim has been deeply resented, not alone by other publishers, but by the discriminating rank and file of our ministers and laymen. The atrocious ethics implied in it are too obvious to need elaboration. We do not believe the claim has made money for the St. Louis house. We are certain it has not withdrawn patronage from the other two publishing houses. Its chief effect has been to make bad feeling among our journalistic workers, a feeling that has found repetitious and persistent expression in one of our papers to the disgust of every sensitive soul among us.

The Christian Century, with the Disciples Publication Society, is also a brotherhood institution, owned not by private interests, but by the churches and Sunday-schools of the Disciples, and all profits are to be appropriated, by the terms of its charter, to the cause of religious education. But that fact has never been used by us as a reason why this house should be given the patronage of the churches and Sunday-schools. The organizers of the Disciples Publication Society simply preferred not to make commercial profits out of an enterprise of this sort. It was more for the sake of their own feelings than as a bid for patronage that they chose this form of organization.

A Sunday-school and a church ought to be encouraged to purchase the best literature and supplies they can find, at the best price, whether the publisher is a private or a brotherhood concern.

In close connection with this policy of demanding patronage on the ground of its non-private ownership the St. Louis house has created much ill-feeling by its open policy of subsidizing certain field workers in the employ of the Sunday-school department of the American Missionary Society. When the implications of this scheme are discerned one wonders that a publishing house would have the face to flaunt it as it has been flaunted in the pages of the Christian Evangelist. But the wonder grows that the American Society could be persuaded to lend itself to a scheme so manifestly compromising and unethical as this.

The spirit of co-operation and mutual respect can be reinstated in our Disciples' journalism only when this species of bribery is disavowed by the American Society and discontinued by the Christian Board of Publication. No one would suggest any objection, of course, to the American Society receiving gifts from the Christian Board, but we believe every one with clear ethical insight can see the evil tendency of the use to which this money is put when it is divided into small amounts as subsidies for the field workers who come into first-hand contact with the purchasers of Sunday-school supplies.

A third policy which we earnestly hope Mr. Kershner may be disposed to change is one about which nothing has ever been said in public, of which even the leaders of the brotherhood are not, many of them, as yet aware. But this policy of the Christian Evangelist and the Christian Board of Publication has been, perhaps more than any other single thing, the explanation of the deplorable controversy over the General Convention which has been waged in the Christian Standard for the past five years. We refer now to the purpose of the Christian Board of Publication to identify itself officially with the General Convention as in some sense the official publishing house of the Disciples of Christ.

To those who are in a position to observe recent Disciples' history from the point of view of the editor's chair or the publishers' office it is plain that the Christian Standard's course with reference to the General Convention has been mainly due to the extremely irritating policy of the Christian Evangelist and the Christian Board of Publication. By means that were intended to be subtle but which proved to be very obvious and crude, the Christian Board has sought to represent itself as in a position of official precedence. The Christian Century has not taken the presumption of the St. Louis house seriously, believing that once its designs were made known to the brotherhood they would be indignantly repudiated by the General Convention itself. The Christian Standard has not been so sure, and has therefore found in the scheming of the Christian Board an additional reason for keeping up its attack upon the General Convention.

It is not our purpose to cite specific evidences of this arrogant design of the Christian Board, it is enough to call attention to it as a breeder of dissension, as a disturber of the peace of the churches and as a hindrance to the hearty acceptance of the General Convention by the churches.

We believe the Christian Board should disavow having any such design, and if it does not do so the General Convention itself could do nothing that would clear the air so quickly as to pass a resolution declaring that it had absolutely no connection with or jurisdiction over any publishing house whatever and intended to have none.

We have written very frankly of these things. Thousands of Disciples are praying that the scandal that has characterized our journalism in recent years may be cleared up. We hold that the best way to clear up such a scandal is by bringing it out into the light. That we have long been willing to do, but would not until there appeared some reason to hope good would be accomplished thereby. As we say at the beginning of this article, it is the new editor's appearance on the Christian Evangelist's staff that gives us what seems an adequate ground for hope that something may be done.

We ask Mr. Kershner's earnest consideration of these matters and we believe that by righting them he will render a great service not only to the Disciples of Christ, but to the paper whose honorable history he is to carry forward into what we hope may be many successful years.

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Methodists Establish University Center.

The Methodists of Wisconsin have united to establish a church in connection with the University of Wisconsin at Madison. They are raising $250,000 to put into equipment and they will erect a building which will at once be the home of a church, a school of the Bible and a social center for the Methodist students of the university. During the campaign for funds in Madison, the students of journalism conducted the publicity in the local papers as practice work and were able to further the cause very materially.

A Pastor for the City Temple.

The Rev. Hugh Black has been for nine years a professor of practical theology in the Union Theological Seminary. He is known to the reading public by his volumes of sermons and his ethical studies in "Culture and Restraint." He has recently been called to the City Temple in London to succeed Rev. R. J. Campbell who recently resigned to become an Anglican. Dr. Black is a Scotchman of great ability and the City Temple will continue to be foremost among the nonconformist churches of England.

Dr. Abbott Speaks Out on Prohibition.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, the gifted editor of the Outlook, has for many years advocated regulation of the liquor traffic rather than prohibition. During the recent Ohio campaign, the liquor people wrote him a letter asking to use his name in behalf of their proposition. After charging the liquor forces with having violated every law made for the regulation of the traffic, Dr. Abbott strikes right out in this fashion: "But if the people are compelled to choose between an unregulated and lawless liquor traffic and the prohibition of the liquor traffic, I do not doubt that they will choose prohibition. If we cannot reform the saloons, we shall abolish them. And if we can find no other way to abolish them, we shall abolish the distillery, the brewery, the winery, and the importation of liquor from abroad."

Will Do Welfare Work in Ford Factory.

The Ford automobile works in Detroit have a welfare department which has been widely discussed throughout the country. This department has recently secured the services of a well-known Episcopalian divine to direct its activities for the coming year. The Very Rev. S. S. Marquis, D. D., dean of St. Paul's Cathedral of Detroit, had applied for a leave of absence for a year, thinking that a change of employment might improve his health. He was immediately given the offer by Mr. Ford to take charge of the sociological department of the great factory and accepted.

Dr. Grenfall Goes to War Zone.

Rumor had it that Dr. W. G. Grenfell of Labrador fame was to become a passenger on the Henry Ford peace ship. This proves to be erroneous. Dr. Grenfell is joining a unit of surgeons who are going to France to do service behind the lines of the British army. He sailed on Dec. 14, and will be a member of the Harvard unit of physicians.

Investigates Church Journalism.

Some one has been investigating church journalism and finds rather an astonishingly small percentage of Protestants are reading their own denominational journals. The figures are given separately for north and south, since many of the denominations are divided over the sectional line. In the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention there are sixty-nine Catholic weekly papers with a combined circulation of 944,462 copies. In the same territory are twelve Baptist papers with a circulation of 75,569; four Congregational papers, circulation 38,500; four Disciple, 59,750; seventeen Methodist, 350,553, and five Presbyterian, 92,607. These five denominations have forty-two papers with a circulation of 616,979 copies, less than two-thirds the weekly reading matter of the Catholics. In the southern states there are four Baptist weeklies with a circulation of 185,067; no Congregational; seven Disciple, 65,750; eighteen Methodist, 180,529, and five Presbyterian, 55,241; an aggregate of fifty-four papers with a circulation of 486,587. In this territory the Catholics have fourteen papers with a circulation of 137,898. The totals show that in the entire country the Catholics have sixty-nine weeklies with a circulation of 1,082,360, and the five denominations ninety-six weeklies with a circulation of 1,103,566. Exclusive of Negro members the aggregate membership of these denominations is about equal to that of the Catholics.

University of Chicago to Celebrate Quarter Centennial.

Next June the University of Chicago will celebrate a quarter centennial of its history. At the same time, the Divinity school will celebrate fifty years of history. The Divinity school was an important factor in the founding of the university so it will be given a prominent place in the celebration.

World Sunday School Association Locates.

The world's center for Sunday-school work will be in New York. The organization recently took up its abode in the Metropolitan Tower. To celebrate this event, 150 Sunday-school workers sat down to dinner together recently at the Hotel Astor. Among them were John Wanamaker, the Rev. Dr. A. F. Schauffler and Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer of Cairo, Egypt, editor of the Moslem World. The speakers of the evening were: Col. E. W. Halford, toast-master, Mr. H. J. Heinz, of Pittsburgh, president, Dr. John R. Mott, Bishop Hartzell and Dr. Zwemer. The annual meeting of the executive committee preceded the banquet.

Episcopalians Will Call Bishops Together.

It is announced that there is to be a meeting of the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopalian church soon. The call is issued for the selection of a missionary Bishop for South Dakota, but it is well known that this matter is not urgent enough to demand attention before the next regular meeting. The bishops are doubtless going to consider the matter of the relation of the denomination to the Panama Congress which has produced the most serious controversy among the Episcopalians of anything in recent years. The Churchman interprets the situation editorially in this fashion: "The church has been accustomed to aggressiveness on the part of those who differentiate themselves as 'Catholics.' For the most part their activities have been met in the past with good-natured indifference by those who are satisfied to call themselves 'Protestants.' But it is not so now. There is to-day among those who call themselves Protestants a strong feeling—stronger, perhaps, than is recognized—that the endeavor to impart 'Catholic' kultur to those who do not desire it must be opposed. The situation is one that should give pause to our leaders. It is useless to hide from the fact that the church has on its hands a controversy that may easily result in lasting injury. It is a time that calls for calm, dispassionate judgment and deliberation. In the present mood of the church this would be difficult to secure."

Knights of Columbus Go Dry.

There are many signs of increasing interest among Roman Catholics in the cause of prohibition. The Knights of Columbus is the principal secret order maintained by the church for laymen and this organization recently went on record as forbidding the use of any liquor whatever in any meeting or banquet connected with a local or general lodge.

Methodists Secure Noted Mission Worker.

Rescue missions are to be established in Chicago by the City Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal church. The Rev. Dan Batey, superintendent of the Dan Batey mission at 712 North Wells street, has been elected organizer of the missions. Mr. Batey will begin his duties Dec. 15, when he and the superintendent of the City Missionary society, the Rev. John Thompson, will visit available sites for the location of the missions. It is expected several will be established.

Rev. Dan Batey has been an independent mission worker and his joining forces with the Methodists will doubtless be mutually advantageous.

Churches Will Pray for Peace.

"Peace and Unity" will be the theme for the week of prayer, Jan. 2 to 9, in churches which are represented by the federal council of the churches of Christ in America. The daily program is: Jan. 2, sermons on reconciliation; Jan. 3, prayers for peace, international and national; Jan. 4, peace through Christian service for Jews and Gentiles; Jan. 5, unity in the church throughout the world; Jan. 6, peace by education in schools, colleges, and universities; Jan. 7, the family and youth; spiritual training; Jan. 8, peace through brotherhood, reform, and social service; Jan. 9, sermon: "The Prince of Peace in Victory and Glory."

Disciples Table Talk

Central, Des Moines, Seeks Stephen E. Fisher as Pastor.

Stephen E. Fisher, pastor of the University Church of Christ, Champaign, Ill., the seat of Illinois State university, was in Des Moines last week in conference with the official board of Central church in regard to the possibilities of his accepting a call to that field, which Finis Idleman is relinquishing for New York work. It is probable a call will be extended to him in case he can make satisfactory arrangements to leave his present congregation. Mr. Fisher has a church of 1,200 members and has been their pastor constantly for the last thirteen years. He has seen all but fifty of his congregation join his church under his pastorate.

Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Has New Birth.

In the city of Minneapolis, Minn., with its 350,000 population, Disciples are very thinly scattered, and work in this field is almost of the pioneer sort. S. G. Fisher, pastor at Portland Ave. church, writes that this church recently enjoyed its first extended evangelistic effort. Crayton S. Brooks did the preaching and Theophilus Fitz led in the singing. Although the meetings were begun with many misgivings, Mr. Fisher reports that great satisfaction is felt over the results of the four weeks' series of services. Forty-six persons were added to the membership, and in many ways it is felt that the work in Minneapolis has had a "new birth."

Cleveland Church Contributes to "Life."

W. F. Rothenburger, pastor of Franklin Circle church, Cleveland, O., believes that with the exhibits of cash funds raised should be placed the important report of a church's contributions to "Life," and with a statement that during the last ten years the Franklin Circle church has contributed to current expenses and benevolences about $125,000, he presents also a report of preachers, missionaries, etc., sent out from the church during these years. Here is his list: "1905—Harry Knowles—Minister. 1906—Edna Kurtz Settlemeyer—Missionary, China. 1907—Charles Wilson—Minister. 1910—Earl Brown—Minister. 1911—Marion Bradshaw—Minister. 1912—Cora Hofrichter—Y. W. C. A. Secretary. 1914—John Bradshaw—Y. M. C. A. Secretary. 1915—Frank Brown—Minister." Mr. Rothenburger reports that another member of the congregation is awaiting parents' consent to go into the foreign field.

J. T. Boone Makes Fine Record at Jacksonville, Fla.

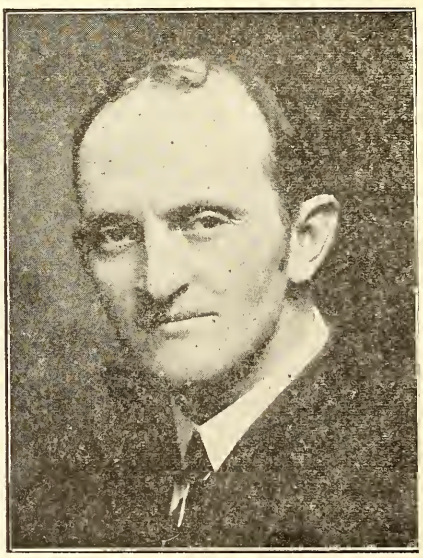
Seventeen years ago, on Saturday, December 1, 1898, J. T. Boone came to Jacksonville, Fla., and took charge of First church, the congregation at that time worshipping in a little frame edifice. In celebration of his beginning the eighteenth year of his pastorate a reception was tendered Mr. Boone on Nov. 30 by the members of his congregation. From 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 10 o'clock at night there were callers many. Not only the members of the congregation were present, but also pastors of other churches and their families as also many citizens who are not members of this church. Under Mr. Boone's charge the congregation has grown from a small one to one of great proportions. The church has also grown in power and importance and in practical work in the community. Those who called to greet the pastor and extend their good wishes and felicitations registered and also entered their names in a beautifully bound gift book presented by the Women's Bible-class of the church. This book also carries, opposite each signature, a wish or an expression of good will and cheer and will become, day by day, a more highly prized volume with the church members.

Central Church, New York, Expectantly Awaits Coming of Dr. Idleman.

Central church, New York City, is eagerly looking forward to the coming of Dr. Finis Idleman, from Des Moines, Ia., to assume his new pastorate Jan. 1. Dr. Philputt who has been supplying the pulpit during the past four years is greatly beloved by all the people. He is guiding their minds and hearts with admirable tact and graciousness into a right attitude toward the work their new pastor may be expected to do. Dr. Idleman will begin his work with a perfectly united congregation, zealous, prayerful and expectant with respect to their new leader.

Vincennes, Ind., Pastor Delivers Addresses in Commemoration of City's Centennial.

Vincennes, Ind., celebrated its centennial on Dec. 9, 10 and 11, and E. F. Daugherty, pastor of the Christian church in the Indiana city, is delivering Sunday evening addresses during December and the first Sunday in January on the general theme, "Vincennes—and Indiana's—Centennial." Topics for discussion on the several evenings are as follows: "The Old Post of the Past," "Our Town of the Present," "Our City of the Future," "The Making of a Greater Vincennes," and "The Heart of Our Community." This series of addresses has been builded on the opinions of citizens of Vincennes, who gave expression to their ideas regarding "The New Vincennes," upon request of Mr. Daugherty. It is a fact of general knowledge that the pastor of First church, Vincennes, is considered by his fellow-citizens as a community asset, as well as a most useful leader in the work of the church to which he ministers.



Rev. E. F. Daugherty, pastor at Vincennes, Ind.

Franklin Circle, Church, Cleveland, Entering New Era.

In January the new Bible-school and Community House of Franklin Circle church, Cleveland, will be dedicated, and one week after dedication L. N. D. Wells, pastor of High Street church, Akron, will assist in a soul winning campaign. Mr. Montgomery, assistant to J. Paul Jones in the city schools, will direct the music during the week and the regular choir will furnish the music on Sunday.

Indianapolis Community House Materializing.

Cash and pledges amounting to approximately $1,000 were reported to the building committee of Seventh church, Indianapolis, when team captains in the campaign for funds to build a community house for northwestern Indianapolis, got together at their first meeting since the campaign began two weeks ago. The most encouraging report was made by Wallace O. Lee, who has organized the campaign teams. He submitted a check for $300 signed by one of the best known downtown business men and said the donor made a promise of further support if another contribution was needed. The man asked that his name be withheld. Other big donations are in line, Mr. Lee said. Business men throughout the city are appreciating the worth of the community house plan and have agreed to help. The meeting was one of enthusiasm and hope. Jan. 1 was picked as the date for the close of the campaign and building will begin immediately afterward.

Central, Peoria, Looks Up Backsliding Members in Autos.

Committees of the Central church, Peoria, recently conducted a house to house canvass of the members of the church who had drifted away from the fold. Twelve teams in automobiles visited over 150 families in all parts of the city. Requests were made for personal attendance and for financial aid and very enthusiastic responses were made. H. E. Sala ministers to the Peoria church.

Men's Class Debates "Preparedness."

The Men's Bible Class of the church at Coshocton, O., recently enjoyed an interesting debate on the subject, "Should we as a Christian nation increase our Army and Navy?" The affirmative won. The decision was followed by a discussion of the question and it was found that the consensus of opinion was that Wilson's plan of preparedness was wise. A social hour and banquet was later enjoyed at which toasts were responded to by E. D. Patterson, superintendent of the Sunday school, C. H. Hood, pastor of the church, and W. H. Daniels.

"Billy" Sunday Anniversary at Des Moines.

The members of Central church, Des Moines, Ia., led by its minister, Finis Idleman, arranged a Billy Sunday anniversary at the church last week. This was planned especially for all members who have come in from Nov. 1, 1914, to March 1, 1915, totaling 450. During the last year there have been 682 persons added to Central church.

Stereopticon a Gift to Kansas City Benevolent Work.

Mrs. Haak, Miss Irene Craney and Mrs. Barker of Independence Boulevard church, Kansas City, have secured a first-rate stereopticon and a fine set of slides of the Association's work for use in Greater Kansas City and vicinity. They are awakening much enthusiasm for the children in the Homes.

Pasadena Pastor Discusses Newspaper Men.

Nov. 29 was designated by Frank G. Tyrrell, pastor of First church, Pasadena, Calif., as a time for services to be held especially for newspaper men, who are generally reputed to be more familiar with the outside of a church than the inside. The local newspaper fraternity served as a target for Mr. Tyrrell's remarks. Besides his sermon there were addresses by two local newspaper men.

Terre Haute Pastor Preaches Series of Funeral Sermons.

During January, J. Boyd Jones, pastor at Central, Terre Haute, Ind., will deliver a series of funeral sermons. He thinks that many people would like to hear their funeral sermon preached while they are alive, so he will preach four funeral sermons on Sunday nights in January. The first Sunday night the moralist will hear his funeral and on the second Sunday night the unbeliever will hear what God and man think about him. The backslider will get the preacher's opinion of him if he attends the third Sunday evening, and the Christian will get his "dues" on the fourth Sunday night. Mr. Jones said that people often wanted the preacher to say a lot of things that would not sound well at a funeral, especially when the corpse was present, but he thinks that all can be given their just deserts if the funeral oration is delivered so the individual can hear his own funeral. The preacher says that every man will fall under one of these four heads and will therefore know what the preacher, at least, thinks of him.

Kansas City Pastors to Meet Next Monday.

The Christian Ministers' Alliance of Kansas City and Vicinity will meet in monthly session at 10:30 a. m., Monday, Dec. 27, in First church, Kansas City, Mo. Dr. W. H. Black, president of Missouri Valley College at Marshall, Mo., will deliver an address on "Christian Union." Dr. Black is one of the most prominent Presbyterian scholars of the state and this address to the ministers is certain to be very full of interest. All ministers in reach of Kansas City are urged to attend. These alliance meetings are proving to be very successful and helpful, it is reported. The secretary, Wm. M. Mayfield, 4019 Mercier, Kansas City, Mo., would like the names and addresses of all Christian ministers recently located in this region. This alliance follows the plan of pooling the railroad expenses of members who attend, a fifty mile limit being observed.

A Word from Dr. Ainslie.

Dr. Peter Ainslie writes that the Council on Christian Union (using the word "Council" instead of "Commission") was able to pay the full six hundred dollars to the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, which was the amount apportioned the Disciples. Henceforth he states, an endeavor will be made to keep this paid up regularly. He writes further: "The fact that we have lined up definitely for this work makes it easier for us to work along the delicate and vital task of Christian union. All these minor points, such as paying our obligation to the Federal Council, etc., must be cleared to make the way easier for dealing with the vital matters of the union of the Church of God. If we are not willing to do the minor things the Lord will not entrust to us the great things."

Definite Aims at Wellington, Kansas.

H. W. Hunter, pastor at Wellington, Kan., First, writes that this church is working toward focusing all organizations of the church to certain definite ends and insisting that through all there be a system of education. Mr. Hunter recently held a home force meeting with a Bible-school tendency: David H. Owen, state superintendent of Bible schools, was present at the beginning of the series and held some conferences and gave several addresses. Through these meetings and one other series, together with a union meeting, 275 persons have been added to the church membership during the year. The East Side Mission at Wellington has outgrown its quarters, and a contract has been let for the addition of another room, at a cost of $500. All members at this mission hold membership at First church. Mr. Hunter's efficient work is genuinely appreciated, as is evidenced by the fact that the congregation has recently voted him an increase in salary.

Ft. Wayne Pastor Has Leave of Absence.

Edward H. Clifford, pastor of East Creighton Avenue church, Ft. Wayne, Ind., has been given a leave of absence of from three to four weeks, owing to his nervous condition from injuries received when he was run down by a jitney bus several months ago.

R. T. Nooe Makes Record at Frankfort, Ky.

In four years of service at Frankfort, Ky., R. T. Nooe has preached 334 home sermons, inducted 322 persons into the church, officiated at 89 funerals, solemnized 51 weddings, and made 3,066 calls. Some of the achievements of the congregation during this time are: the redecoration of the auditorium, purchase of new hymn books, recent adoption of the duplex envelope, for three years the making of the every-member canvass, the maintenance of all missionary interests, and the adoption of the following causes to which offerings have been made: Board of Education, Ministerial Relief, American Temperance Board, Commission on Christian Union. Other achievements are: The organization of a Mission Sunday-school, where there has been an average attendance of something like fifty, the promotion of plans for new Sunday-school room to which a splendid subscription has already been made, calling of an assistant, the publication of a weekly Bulletin. During this time the average attendance of the Sunday-school has increased from 288 in 1911 to 372 in 1914, the offering from $10.37 to $13.11, the enrollment of the Men's Bible Class from 40 to 150. An auxiliary of Christian Woman's Board of Missions has been made, and plans have been made for a young woman's missionary circle.

The Call For Christian Workers

Will Be Worth While Only If We Train These Christian Workers For Their Task

Twenty-five educational institutions whose executive heads constitute the Board of Education, call for the Young People in your church.

They will help these young people to choose fields of Christian service. They will give them good foundational training. They will prepare them for service as Ministers, Missionaries, Directors of Religious Education, Social Workers, or for lay service as Elders, Deacons, Superintendents, Teachers.

Those who enter lay service, these institutions will train for Christian work, and by broad liberal courses build under their special vocational training a well proportioned foundation.

Pledge the young people to attend our Christian colleges. Pledge them to Christian service in whatever fields God and their talents call. Help college faculties to bring them to final decision on the field, ministerial, missionary or lay service.

Call for money to equip our colleges for larger service to these young people. Take offerings or plan budget. In any plan, present earnest call for men and money on EDUCATION DAY, JANUARY 16, 1916.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST

CHARLES E. UNDERWOOD, Treas.

70 LAYMAN AVENUE INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Dr. Willett at Two State Universities.

Last week Dr. H. L. Willett addressed the All-University Service at Champaign, Ill. These services are held once a month under the auspices of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations of the University of Illinois, and are co-operated in by the churches of the town. Dr. Willett's theme was "The Bible and Modern Life." The week preceding, Dr. Willett delivered three addresses at Purdue University, at La Fayette, Ind., considering the following themes: "Problems of Belief," "Problems of Conduct" and "The Bible and the Student." On last Sunday Dr. Willett addressed the Sunday Evening Club of Wilmette, a suburb of Chicago, on the strike situation in Chicago. At the close of the address an offering was received for the relief of the poor among the strikers.

Membership and Attendance Campaign at Ft. Collins, Colo.

Lin D. Cartright is doing efficient service at Ft. Collins, Colo. A three-months' membership and attendance campaign in the Bible-school recently closed, with an attendance on Dec. 5 of 610. During this period 21 persons have been added to the church membership. Over 90 have come in since Mr. Cartright entered upon this work, in April of this year. On a recent Sunday evening Mr. Cartright preached a sermon based upon Alfred Soord's painting, "The Lost Sheep." A large print of the painting was placed on the platform, and ninety-nine children from the school sang "The Ninety and Nine."

Los Angeles Church Enlists Japanese Members.

An impressive baptismal service took place at Broadway Church, Los Angeles, Calif., on the evening of November 28, when Pastor Charles F. Hutslar took the confession of two young Japanese men. They made the decision only after they had diligently and carefully studied Christianity, as compared with other religions, and they have come out boldly for Christianity. Mr. Hutslar writes that a number of Japanese friends had gathered to lend their encouragement to these new Christians, and to them and the rest of the congregation, Dr. Katsuji Kato spoke words of vital interest, giving a vivid picture of the vast amount of work to be done, and commenting on the few there were to accomplish it. Dr. Kato is the Traveling Secretary for the Y. M. C. A., and has had much influence in directing the study of the two young men who were baptized, as well as many other young Japanese men. One of the young men referred to is a student in the University of Southern California, and both young men are great powers for good among their associates.

Birmingham Preachers Discuss Christian Unity.

First Church, Birmingham, Ala., Henry Pearce Atkins pastor, has just made a series of sermons on Christian unity the special feature of its Five O'clock services. Well known preachers of the city were asked to present the programs of their respective denominations, and a prominent business man was invited to present the question from a layman's standpoint. The representative of the Episcopal Church was the only one who presented a definite program for organic union, writes Mr. Atkins. The other pastors, however, emphasized the need of closer co-operation in all social and missionary enterprises, intimating that a solution of the problem of union would be found as the churches gave themselves to the larger interests of the kingdom. In commenting on the special series in its announcement of the last service the Birmingham News made the following reference to its educational value to the community: "The interest has grown with each of the three previous services, and it is hoped that the fourth and last will surpass any of the others in attendance. Through its pastor, Dr. H. P. Atkins, the First Christian Church is in every way encouraging the spirit of Christian unity in Birmingham, and the four vesper services were planned to bring the denominations together."

"The Religion of the Modern Man."

Frank Waller Allen's series of sermons on "The Religion of the Modern Man" is furnishing material for much talk among the citizens and in the newspapers of Springfield, Ill., where Mr. Allen serves First church as pastor. Recent issues of the Illinois State Register prints some of these sermons almost entire. Mr. Allen discussed in one of the latest talks "The Modern Man's Faith," and summed up his thought in the following words: "The final test of the faith of a modern man is, what effect does it have upon human life? The thing you believe is of importance only as it may be wrought into life, and as making it into life makes for human welfare. It was John, the mystic, who rebuked a man doing good in the name of Jesus, but who was not of their partienlar group. Upon reporting this, doubtless with a self-righteous mien, the Nazarene rebuked him by saying, 'It does not particularly matter whether he is of our group or not. If he is doing good he is for us. That is the paramount thing.' So that faith is not the mere acceptance of a proposition. Faith is an attitude toward life. 'I would rather,' said Phillips Brooks, 'a man should believe that Jesus was not God and live as though he were, than have him believe that Jesus was God and live as though he were not.'"

Hiram College Notes

Hiram has long held honorable rank among Ohio colleges for its ideals of scholarship and social service. Last year, in all five of the intercollegiate literary contests in which Hiram participated, her students won first place. This year a still more distinguished honor comes to the "College on the Hill." Miner Searle Bates, a Hiram senior and son of President Miner Lee Bates, has just won the Rhodes Scholarship.

This scholarship carries with it admission to Oxford University with an income of £300, approximately $1,500, per year for the three years of residence at Oxford. The scholarship is based on scholarship in Greek, Latin and Mathematics; participation in student activities in college, especially debate and athletics, and all-round standing in the student body. This year six Ohio college students took the examination at Columbus. The questions are sent out from Oxford. Only two of the six ranked high enough in scholarship to make them eligible candidates. In former years two Hiram students passed successfully the scholarship test but lacked in athletic activities. Hiram has faith in Searle that he will profit to the full by his well-earned opportunity.

Every week a goodly company of our young men go out to serve near-by churches and their communities. They are giving excellent account of themselves. I recently accompanied Reed J. Downs to his preaching places at Solon and Glen Willow. The first is an old church and community where the Haydens, Garfield and Hinsdale used to preach. Like so many of our country churches the church had declined greatly in recent years, but has been greatly revived by Brother Downs. Glen Willow, three miles from Solon, is a new village created by the Austin Powder Company. A year ago there was neither church nor Sunday-school there. Within the year, in addition to his work at Solon Brother Downs has planted a church of 60 members there and built up a Sunday-school of over 100. Brother Downs has been won to our cause since entering Hiram. He is an exceedingly modest young man and talks little of his work, but his work speaks for itself and he is greatly beloved by his people.

Last spring the college board adopted a five year program looking to the doubling of the enrollment, the equipment and the endowment by 1920. The college is making good on the first item of the program, by 20 per cent increase in the enrollment the first year. The freshman class numbers 108. Students past public school age without high school preparation are not debarred, but enrolled as "specials" and suitable classes are provided for them. Some of our most promising young people are "specials" though the bulk of the students are in regular college classes.

The Disciples' Club has struck out in a new and unique field this year. Instead of following the historical thread of our movement as in former years it has taken up Mr. Campbell's great debate with Mr. Rice. The discussions have been led by Dean Stauffer, Professor Peckham and the writer. The study is proving to be illuminating and profitable to our young men and women.

The inter-society oratorical contest and debate have recently occurred with victory for the Hesperians in the oratorical and for the Delphics in the debate. Meredith McCluer of Dayton will represent the college in the inter-collegiate oratorical contest while both debating teams will engage in inter-collegiate debates.

We are always glad to have the routine of college life broken by visits from workers in other fields. Among those who have looked in on us recently are Miss Rose Armbruster, so long in India; J. Frank Green, State Evangelist of Michigan; A. F. Hensey from his epoch-making work in Bolenge, Africa, a former student at Hiram; and President Paul of the College of Missions, Indianapolis. These all brought messages that warmed our hearts and heartened us in the work we are striving to do in the preparation of young men and women for the world's wide fields. President Paul was so long an efficient and beloved co-worker at Hiram that his visits are always a veritable family reunion, both to him and to us. He is one of the biggest little men among us and is growing every year. B. S. Dean.

Will Lift Mortgage on Walla Walla Home.

A movement has been started in the northwest to secure one hundred men who will give $100 apiece for the purpose of raising $10,000 with which to lift the mortgage of $8,000 from the home at Walla Walla and make some needed repairs. Those who can help may write E. S. Muckley, 724 Board of Trade Bldg., Portland, Oregon.

H. H. Peters Lectures in Indiana Town.

H. H. Peters of Paris, Ill., delivered his lecture, "Is the Sun Rising or Setting?" as a number in the lecture course of Cayuga, Ind., Tuesday evening, Nov. 30. The Christian Church in Cayuga is a very substantial church and is doing good work.

Pioneer Japan Missionary Married.

Miss Mary Rioch of Tokyo, Japan, was married on November 9 to George Miller of Penn Grove, Calif. Miss Rioch has been a missionary of the Foreign Society in Japan for twenty-two years, and was supported by the women of Canada. The Canadian sisters have provided buildings as well as support for her work. Miss Rose Armbruster, who is home on furlough, will return to Tokyo to take up the work Miss Rioch has left. Few missionaries have ever served more faithfully or effectively than Miss Mary Rioch in Japan.

Felowship Bible Class, First, Springfield, Ill., Discusses City Betterment.

The Fellowship class of First church, Springfield, Illinois, under the leadership of Frank Waller Allen has inaugurated a plan by which every person in Springfield can join the class and write essays on the theme, "How to Make Springfield a Better Place in Which to Live." Prizes which will be given for the best themes will be awarded on Sunday evening, January 23. The first prize will be $5 in gold, second $3, and third, $2, fourth and fifth a book each. Mr. Allen plans a Forum whereby big public questions may be brought for discussion. The first meeting of the Forum was held on a recent Sunday at 6:30, when Mr. Allen spoke on the subject, "A Prison Farm for Sangamon County." Explaining this novel plan of class work, the Springfield pastor says: "Too often public questions have been decided in bar back-room conferences. It is time we reached our conclusions in the church environment. Too many issues pertaining to welfare are decided by commercial standards. It is time we decided moral issues on the basis of Christianity. We have preached Jesus, prayed Jesus, worshiped Jesus, we have done everything but live Jesus. It will be the purpose of the Fellowship Forum to give every public issue of any importance a hearing, a discussion, and then the acid test: Does it draw men together in the brotherly spirit taught by Jesus? If so, we are for it; if not, against it. This would be the test of Jesus for any custom, law or institution: Does it draw men together or divide them? At intervals, as circumstances demand, it is my purpose to conduct this Forum as a part of the Fellowship movement connected with the First Christian church. On such occasions anything that pertains to the improvement of life will get a hearing. Moreover after hearing the audience will be permitted to ask questions and discuss the subject." Mr. Allen's unique plan has called forth an appreciative editorial from one of the Springfield newspapers.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid guide."

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.: "This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text."

How You May Use "The Training of Church Members in Your Work

(1) As a book of study in your mid-week or Endeavor prayer-meeting.
(2) As a text-book in your young people's Sunday school classes.
(3) As a text for study in a special "Pastor's class" organized for training of young Christians and meeting either through the week or on Sunday.
(4) As a teacher-training course.

The New Year is at hand. Make it count for something in genuine, substantial training in religion.

The Pacific Northwest Parliament.

The Pacific Northwest Parliament of the Disciples of Christ will convene at Walla Walla, Washington, December 27-30. The Walla Walla church, which is the leading Protestant church in the city, is anxious that not only all the preachers of the northwest, but as many of the church officers as possible attend the parliament. The preachers pool their traveling expenses at the clergy rate; thus those near Walla Walla will help pay the expense of those farther away. The program is full of excellent things and there is much promise for an excellent meeting. The officers are as follows: President, W. W. Burks, Walla Walla; vice-president, A. L. Chapman, Bozeman, Mont.; secretary-treasurer, R. C. Harding, Waitsburg, Wash.; chairman of Program Committee, J. A. Lord.

A Forward Look at Horton, Kan.

B. H. Smith, pastor at Horton, Kan., writes that a building fund has been started at Horton, an Every Member Canvass is planned for the first Sunday of January and an Each-One-Win-One campaign is scheduled for the six weeks previous to Easter. The spiritual life of the church has been awakened by a ten-day series of meetings recently held by Jesse Bader, of Atchison, Kan. Hundreds of people were turned away from the meetings. Fifty-six persons were added to the membership of the church.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

—W. E. Crabtree has built up the Central church, San Diego, till it now numbers thirteen hundred members and is a power for good in that city. He has spoken to hundreds of exposition visitors during this year.

—"The Los Angeles Daily Examiner," is authority for the statement that W. F. Holt has bought 900 acres in the San Fernando Valley on which he proposes to erect a handsome home and establish a model stock farm.

—George H. Brown who went from Taylorville, Ill., to North Tonawanda, N. Y., has received seventy new members into the church there since beginning his work. He was recently granted an increase in salary.

—Two sons of O. L. Cook, pastor of the church at Topeka, Kans., are taking up evangelistic work, following in the footsteps of their father. One son, Howard Lee Cook, is engaging in work as an evangelistic singer and chorister. Another is pastor of a church at Livingston, Tenn.

—Editor C. C. Morrison spent several weeks recently in visiting a number of the churches of the East. He preached at Seventh St. church, Richmond, Va., for H. D. C. Maclachlan on Nov. 28; at the Christian Temple, Baltimore, for Peter Ainslie on the morning of Dec. 5, and at Harlem Avenue church, Baltimore, for H. C. Armstrong in the evening; at East Orange, N. J., for W. M. Haushalter, on the morning of Dec. 12 and at Borough Park, Brooklyn, for Guy L. Carter in the evening. Mr. Morrison also visited other cities of the Atlantic seaboard, among them New York City, Philadelphia and Washington in conference with ministers and laymen concerning the work of their churches and with a view of increasing the usefulness of The Christian Century in the eastern portion of the country where the paper has long had a substantial and influential circulation. His observations convinced him that the cause of the Disciples is much more vigorous and promising in the East than many in the West understand. The churches, while not so numerous as in the West, are deeply spiritual, loyal to the ideals of the Disciples, actuated by a truly catholic spirit and shepherded by pastors whose strength of character and culture are not excelled in any part of the land.

—The congregation at Winfield, Kan., under the efficient leadership of Richard W. Gentry, has paid off an indebtedness of $5,500 in the last three years, leaving but $4,500 yet to be cancelled.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes wish to study the life of Jesus this year. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Volume XXXII DECEMBER 30, 1915 Number 52

Proselyting by Wholesale

RELIGION IS CERTAINLY HAVING A HIGH OLD TIME IN PHILADELPHIA.

The hallelujahs of the Billy Sunday revival of a year ago were gradually dying away and the church groups settling down into the steady-going routine for which Philadelphia churches are noted, when the Episcopalians pulled the trap-door of a scheme which evidently was intended to land a good one hundred thousand Christian men, representing all the Protestant churches of the city, fairly in the Episcopal fold.

No such scheme of wholesale proselyting has ever before been projected. How successful it will prove to be remains yet to be seen. Meanwhile every bystander will be interested to get possession of the facts in what seems to be the order of their development.

The Episcopalian churches did not participate in the Billy Sunday revival. But the leaders of their high church party were by no means idle. While the revival was going on the rector of one of the churches, Rev. H. C. Stone, gave particular attention to the development of a men's club in his parish called the "Stonemen."

Following the revival the growth of the club was so remarkable that the rector, in consultation with the Bishop of Pennsylvania and Mr. George Wharton Pepper, a lawyer, and one of the most active laymen in the American Church, conceived the plan of making the "Stonemen" a great interdenominational organization of men. Mr. Pepper himself prepared a ritual of three degrees for the use of the club.

Through the neighborhood Bible classes that are always left in the wake of a Sunday revival, the "Stonemen" got into touch with thousands of leading laymen of the various evangelical churches and persuaded them to join the club. On the assurance of the club's bona fide interdenominational character, backed by the entire community's confidence in Mr. Pepper as a leader of interdenominational enterprises, these men unsuspectingly took the first degree, and the club thus thrust its roots into the soil of practically every Protestant church in the city.

The element of secrecy lent a fascination to the organization. No man was admitted unless he had a card of membership. This rule was applied without favor to pastors and office-bearers of churches as well as to the rank and file.

The object of the club was vaguely declared to be to promote pro-Protestant interests. In Philadelphia there is a considerable body of anti-Catholic sentiment. With the approach of the election last November this sentiment was greatly intensified and it was capitalized by the "Stonemen" in face of mild protestations by their leaders that pro-Protestant did not mean anti-Catholic. These denials were interpreted as disingenuous.

As a result the entire anti-Catholic prejudice was turned to the account of the "Stonemen," and men flocked to the club by thousands. It is now claimed that 110,000 men of Philadelphia are members of the club.

All was going merry as a marriage bell.

The main body of Protestant clergymen were encouraging their men to unite with the club.

The disillusionment came in connection with the conferring of the degrees. In preparation for the taking of the degrees a catechism of belief was taught under well-traind drill masters. The first degree had aroused no suspicion whatever. It simply committed the candidate to a God-centered life.

But as candidates began to be prepared in increasing numbers for the second degree some of the more informed among them thought they detected a certain Episcopalian turn to the instruction. Gradually this suspicion spread until an investigation revealed the fact that the second and third degrees were identical with the doctrines and practice of the Episcopal church. So complete was the identity found to be that Bishop Rhinelander in an interview admitted that a third degree "Stoneman" would not need to be re-confirmed, should he apply for membership in the Protestant Episcopal church.

This was the way the clever trick was done:

The rite of the second degree was baptism for the unbaptized and renewal of the baptismal vows for those previously baptized.

The rite of the third degree was confirmation by the laying on of hands.

The full significance of the series of degrees did not appear until the conferment of the third. In the second the unbaptized candidate was advised to be baptized by the minister of some church of his own choosing, in which case this degree consisted simply of a reaffirmation of his baptismal vows.

But in the third degree he was not advised to seek confirmation at the hands of the pastor who baptized him—far from that! This degree could be conferred only by the honorary chaplain of the "Stonemen's" club, who, it was provided in advance, should be none other than his grace, the Bishop of Pennsylvania!

In interviews, Mr. Stone and Bishop Rhinelander both declare that no other man in Philadelphia could confer this third degree unless it be the Roman Catholic bishop, for the reason that no other is in the "apostolic succession," but the Catholic bishop "would not be appointed."

The purpose behind this amazing piece of audacity is obvious, of course. But as if to leave no room for question, Mr. Stone has frankly declared, with a tone of challenge, that he now had the laymen of the Protestant churches practically under the Episcopal system and these laymen would compel their churches to unite under this system. In a signed article published in the daily press, Mr. Stone and Mr. Pepper say: "If all men are willing to add to their existing professions a recognition of the fact of episcopacy, a way to corporate communion is opened without discussion of denominational differences."

All religious circles of the city of Philadelphia are astir with the situation which has thus been brought about. Protestant ministers are demanding that their men choose between the "Stonemen's" club and their churches.

It remains to be seen what the men will do.

Meanwhile it will be difficult to persuade the Protestant bodies of the Christian world to listen unsuspectingly to overtures for Christian unity which may emanate from the Episcopal church.

A Letter From the Trenches

Note: The name of the author of this authentic letter has not been made public. It is enough to say that he is a major in the English army. This is a typical letter, and pictures quite vividly some of the terrible conditions under which the men in the trenches are living.

WE ARE now at the edge of the world, so to speak, right up against that big town that Mister Hun would give his eyes to get. We are living the life of moles or rabbits. Halsall and I share a dugout about 14x6x1-6, rather back-breaking, and the beams are very hard when in contact with one's head.

We have, as usual, a lot of work to do. In addition to having to work at night in the trenches, we have a pontoon bridge to maintain and certain roads to keep clear for traffic.

BEFORE THE BOMBARDMENT.

You may remember that I came up to this city on a joy ride some seven or eight weeks ago. Well, that was before the second bombardment. The city then was full of shops, open and doing a fair trade with the troops and a good many civilians who still remained in the neighborhood; now the place is one vast charnel-house; hardly a sound house throughout the length and breadth of it. The stench is awful, for there must be hundreds of dead never collected, and the houses are not safe to enter.

In the center of the city is the Grand Place; on the left, as you enter the square, is the ruin of what was once one of the finest public halls in the world, and it stood for five hundred years or more. Now it is a thing of pathos; not a whole window or wall; hardly any of the once magnificent tower standing; the skeleton of the clock still looks over the Grand Place, with fingers showing five and twenty minutes to five. All is charred; fires are burning still, and have been for the last five weeks. In the right-hand corner lie the remains of what was once a cart and pair horse team. Everything burnt, as it was impossible to remove them.

In the center of tre square are the remains of a forage cart, one wheel gone, the contents lying beside it, and an ominous hole where the shafts and horse had been. Both sides of the square are heaps of rubble and twisted iron girders, remnants of what were once busy shops and offices. Going on is the narrow thoroughfare leading to one of the gates through the ramparts and causeway across the moat. On the left-hand side of this narrow street is a heap of evil-smelling ashes, the carcass of a horse, burnt for health's sake, and the twisted barrel of a rifle; heaven only knows what has happened to the owner. Across the causeway is a broad road once lined by what were once happy homes. On the right is a mass of ruins and a hole 60 inches in diameter and 30x40 inches deep made by one shell. On the left has stood a handsome wall, enclosing what was God's acre, which now shows the handiwork of the devil. Beautiful crosses and monuments overthrown and broken to fragments. I have not explored it, as once again one meets the smell of death and decay from bodies exhumed by high explosives. Twenty or thirty yards on we turn to the right on our way to our sector of the line.

Again on our left is a beautiful cemetery. The mark of the beast is not so evident here to the eye, but one's other senses tell you what has occured on the other side of that green and beautiful hill. Down that, go reliefs and rations to a certain place where everything has to be off, loaded, and carried by hand the remaining 13 or 14 hundred yards to the actual trenches. The enemy constantly shell this corner, and many times the transports have a gallop back.

SIX DAYS WITHOUT FOOD.

The trench area is amidst growing crops, in which lie many victims of man's hate, unburied and unnoticed save for the odor of decay. The patrols out in front of the firing line are even now bringing in and burying dead from the attack of six days ago, and in some cases even wounded men who have been out all the time. Some have been so scared when our patrols have passed that they could not make up their minds as to whether our men were Germans or no. Think of it—six days wounded and without food or water!

To return to the town: it is exceedingly interesting to see some of the houses; one I know of has had the entire front stripped; how I do not know, but the first floor over the shop shows a toilet table and other toilet requisites just hanging on the edge of the gulf, and will be in the street if anything big drops near, simply from the concussion.

2nd of June: I was not able to finish last night, so the letter may be late for the 5th. To describe everything would require the pen of a Dante. Would to heaven it were possible to show to the whole population of England what the enemy is capable of doing and would do to our fair cities at home, at one glance, and we would have no hanging back or strikes of munition workers. I have been on the borderland of hell and seen things which it is impossible to repeat.

Only the other night, when out looking for a site for a strong point, we were sighted by the Huns and fired on. We crawled on our stomachs down a shallow trench. I was leading, and ran into something wearing a great coat. My nose told me what it was, and, bullets or no bullets, I had to get out of that trench rather than crawl over a man long dead.

WATCHING THE ZEPPELINS.

Last night I saw my second Zep. The first was towards dawn, and was very indistinct. Last night it was just about sunset, and I got a good look at the baby-killing machine. We get shells over us from right to left and in front, so you see our waking hours are one constant whine of shell and shrapnel. Our sleep is not disturbed, as we are too dog tired to stir for anything, save a shell actually in the dugout.

For the last three days I have not been able to walk much, owing to having rubbed my feet sore with wet boots and thick socks in hot weather, in boots intended for thin ones only. Shrapnel is even now knocking at the roof.

Tell me what is going to end it all!

The Germans have about four times as many machine guns per battery as we. It is great sport carrying one's muzzle about with you, I can tell you. The mood for writing is not on me tonight. I keep telling the boys to keep their hearts up and their heads down, but it is hard to live up to it.

At a luncheon in New York City last month, a campaign for $200,000 was started for a budget for the Boy Scouts of America, for three years.

Letters From Belgian Children

From "The New Republic."

THE gratitude of the Belgians for America's help has been shown in many picturesque ways. Belgian women have embroidered countless flour sacks, made cushions, portfolios, clothes-bags, lamp-shades, and even little aprons, all charmingly decorated with "Thanks to America" or "Homage to America;" or with crossed flags, the Belgian and the American; or with the seals of the two countries—indeed, with every sort of design which an artistic eye and a thankful heart can plan.

Some of the most touching souvenirs come from the children. The following charming letters, just arrived from the little Belgian town of Tamise, in the province of East Flanders, are touching witnesses to the feelings of the little Belgians. The original letters are in Flemish, for Tamise is in the Flemish part of Belgium. This one is by a boy about nine years old:

Good people of America, if I had a flying-machine I would fly to America to thank the splendid people there. I haven't one, so I write a little letter, and I tell you that I shall pray very much for you and never forget you.

Josef Segleras.

This is from a boy of ten:

To Our Friends in America:

How glad I am that I can thank you out of my whole heart, fine people of America, for all the things to eat and the warm clothing that you sent us, for without it we would certainly have died of hunger and cold. I want to come to America myself to thank all the fine people.

Gerard Van Landeghem.

This is from a still younger child:

Dear America:

I thank you because you sent great big boats over the great sea—eat-boats—rice, corn, bacon, stockings, clothing and shoes. I know that you like the little Belgians, and I like you, too. Achiel Maes.

The letters are always specific. A boy of ten or eleven writes:

Dear Americans:

It is war here. We have known hunger and need, we have been fugitives, but, thank God, America helped us out of need by sending us clothing, beans, bacon and bread. We thank America and the Americans also, and every day we pray our Father for brave America. Alfons Janssens.

This is from another boy:

Brave People of America:

It is now war with us, and starvation has stood before the door. Our friends of America sent us meal, flour, bacon and clothing, and we were freed from hunger and cold. Brave people of America, be therefore a thousand times thanked.

Frans Reyniers.

The little girls' letters are equally charming. A ten-year-old writes:

Oh, dear Americans, I am still small. My words cannot tell you very well how I want to thank you, but, dear Americans, you must feel my heart. I pray every day to the good God that he shall bless your lives and that he shall spare you from war, hunger and all other horrors. Take, then, loving and noble people, with my deepest feelings, the thanksgiving of my eldest brothers and sisters. A thankful heart.

Gerardina Van Der Voordt.

One girl of twelve has decorated her letter with an attractive border done in the Belgian colors, black, yellow and red. "Ik ben de Kleinste van ons huis," she writes, "en kan de meeste boterhammen eaten." That means, with some more added:

I am the littlest one of our house and can eat the most slices of bread! And now that our bread is made of such good flour I can hardly leave a piece of it alone. It is thanks to you that I can eat so well, for your flour is delicious; and in order to thank you I pray the Giver of All Good that he will bless you. Your faithful

Philothee Speelman.

One little girl of ten says:

I often saw my mother weep when we came downstairs in the morning because she could not give us the bread that we asked for because there was no flour, yet you have dried her tears with the good flour which you have sent.

Drying the tears with flour may be a bit amusing, but Julia Soeveniers, the writer of that letter, was expressing a very serious feeling.

Another letter also bordered with a design in the Belgian colors, reads:

Never before in my life have I written a letter to the far-away America, but now that our great benefactors and best friends live there I do it so gladly. I thank you with all my heart for the good little beans that you have sent. Oh, how I like to eat them! I am always happy when I see that mother is preparing something with American beans and bacon.

Irene Van Lemmens.

The letter of Jennie Ketels speaks of the method by which food imported by the Commission for Relief in Belgium is sold to those able to pay for it. Of course the poor get it in return for "bons" instead of money. The better-to-do pay cash, and so help the Commission to give food free to those who have nothing.

It was so sad here. There was almost nothing more to eat, but dear America has come to our help. You sent us flour, rice, corn and clothing, and in Tamise now there is also a little shop where you can buy things to eat at the usual prices, and that also is thanks to you, oh good Americans. What should have become of our dear Belgian land without you!

This refers to the same little shop:

Business lies quite still here, and so father, too, is without work, and we should certainly have had to eat up the very last penny we had if it were not that gracious America came to our help. Thanks, good people, for the shop opened up here in Tamise, where we can buy our things at the usual prices. I shall pray the Lord that he will bless you. Your thankful

Caroline Bummeghem.

Another letter gives a highly imaginative picture of us:

I have often heard a little girl friend of mine speak of an uncle who sent her many things from America, and I was jealous, but now I have more than one uncle and they send me more than my friend's uncle did, for it is thanks to you, dear uncles, than I can have a good slice of bread every day and a good little cup of coffee.

Marie Meersman.

And here is a letter intended for President Wilson:

Highly Honored Mr. President:

Although I am still very young I feel already that feeling of thankfulness which we as Belgians owe to you, highly honored Mr. President, because you have come to our help in these dreary times. Without your help there would certainly have been thousands of war victims, and so, noble sir, I pray that God will bless you and all the noble American people.

That is the wish of all the Belgian folk.

Congregationalists and Disciples Should Unite

So says Dr. Francis E. Clark, Founder of the Christian Endeavor Society, in an article in the Advance.

IF THE bans are to be proclaimed between any two denominations in America in the near future, it would seem that the Disciples of Christ and the Congregationalists are the two which should join forces. I was much disappointed that the union once proposed with the United Brethren and the Methodist Protestants did not go through, for I feel that they would have added some very much needed elements to our Congregationalism. But the Disciples of Christ would add these same elements of evangelical and evangelistic earnestness, and, being Congregational in form of government, the union could more easily be brought about.

SAVED FROM AN ERROR.

The union with Unitarians, advocated in some quarters (a very few, I am glad to know), would, I am confident, rend our denomination in two, and repeat the sad experiences of a hundred years ago. Union with the Episcopalians, so earnestly urged at New Haven, seems to me grotesque and unthinkable with Kikuyu and the Panama Conference in mind. Some of my best and dearest friends are among the Episcopalians, and I have frequently been asked to make an "address" from their "platforms," but never to preach from their pulpits, for a platform meeting is as far as my most intimate Episcopalian friend would be allowed by the "higher up" authorities to invite me. Even a very low church rector in Australia, who had a banner for his young people, whose chief emblem was a big C. E., and who declared that C. E. stood on church occasions for Church of England, and on Christian Endeavor occasions for Christian Endeavor, could not, without breaking the rules of his church, invite me, or any other unapostolically ordained Congregationalist, to his pulpit. His bishop, when invited to a great Christian Endeavor convention, sent word that he could not attend, as he was to be out of town, and then gratuitously added that he felt obliged to say that even were he in town he would not go, since he could do "nothing that would encourage schism." While such bishops are in power, and there are many of them, how can a mere schismatic Congregationalist be recognized?

Dr. F. E. Clark, a prophet of Christian Unity.

I hope it will not be considered egotistical if I say that, owing to the cause I represent, I have been invited to preach in some of the most important state church cathedrals in the world; in the Glasgow Cathedral, for instance, of the State Church of Scotland, the Cathedral of St. Pierre in Geneva, the very pulpit from which Calvin thundered, and in many Lutheran cathedrals, like the famous Trondjejem Cathedral, where all the kings of Norway have been crowned, and the almost equally famous cathedrals of Bergen, Norway, Abo and Helsingfors in Finland, and many other state churches in Germany and France. In all these churches there have been no restrictions of any kind, but the heartiest kind of a welcome, while I could not preach from the pulpit of my dearest Episcopal friend in the smallest church of America or Great Britain.

Of course I am not complaining of this, far from it, but simply relating these experiences to show some of the practical difficulties in the way of such a union. Whereas between the Disciples of Christ and the Congregationalists there seem to be the slightest possible barriers, and the largest advantage from the union.

As The Christian Century very aptly puts it, "Congregationalists emphasize culture; Disciples emphasize evangelism. The Disciples are by instinct propagandists. Every pastor is an evangelist. The ingathering impulse is fundamental. Here again Disciples and Congregationalists need each other. One needs the dynamic of evangelistic passion to keep its culture religious; the other needs trained insight both to refine its evangelistic methods and to conserve and perfect its evangelistic results."

"The Cry for Justice"

A new volume called by Jack London a "Holy Book," in which is gathered together "the literature and art of the humanist thinkers of the world."*

MANY of the metropolitan newspapers of the country are agreed that by far the most important book issued in 1915 is the collection of humanist literature edited by Upton Sinclair, author of "The Jungle," and called "The Cry for Justice." "An Anthology of the Literature of Social Protest," is the secondary title given the work by Mr. Sinclair.

By some critics this work is called "a new Bible," a gospel of the new hope of the race; "a book to cheer the discouraged and console the wounded in humanity's last war for liberation."

The editor of "The Cry for Justice" has culled from the writings of the hundreds of authors quoted, those excerpts in which are voiced mankind's protest against the vast mass of unfairness, cruelty and suffering through injustice that is in the world. Of these writers Jack London in his introduction says:

"One has but to read the names of the men and women whose words burn in these pages, and to recall that by far more than average intelligence have they won to their place in the world's eye and in the world's brain long after the dust of them has vanished, to realize that due credence must be placed in their report of the world herein recorded. . . ."

The most difficult task, perhaps, in a review of this book is to give a tangible idea of its inclusiveness. Among dramatists, for example, we find quotations from Bjornson, Brieux, Euripides, Hauptmann, Ibsen, Shakespeare, Shaw, Sophocles and Strindberg. Among philosophers, Aristotle, Cato, Fichte, Nietzsche and Spencer. Among poets, Browning, Dante, Goethe, Masefield, Homer, Kipling, Vachel Lindsay, Milton, Verhaeren and Walt Whitman. Among social idealists, Bellamy, Sir Thomas More and Ruskin. Among statesmen, Bismarck, Franklin, Gladstone, Jefferson, Li Hung Chang, Lincoln, Mazzini, Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson. Among religious teachers, Buddha, Confucius, Jesus, Luther, Saint Paul and Savonarola. Among essayists, Bacon, Carlyle, Emerson, Maeterlinck, and Thoreau. Among novelists, Cervantes, Dickens, Hugo, Tolstoy, Zola Among feminists, Sylvia Pankhurst and Olive Schreiner. Among economists, John Stuart Mill and Henry George. Among modern radicals, Eugene V. Debs, Max Eastman and Kropotkin. Among contemporary writers, Winston Churchill, Will Levington Comfort, Albert Edwards, Galsworthy, Gorky, Anatole France, Herrick, Howells, Kauffmann, Lippmann, London, Patrick MacGill, Ernest Poole, Wells, Edith Wharton, Zangwill, and Rauschenbusch.

Jack London, noted novelist, who believes that "The Cry for Justice" is a book introducing a new epoch in the world's life.

The book is divided into sections, in each of which are gathered together the choicest writings on the section topic. These topics are: I, Toil. II, The Chasm. III, The Outcast. IV, Out of the Depths. V, The Revolt. VI, Martyrdom. VII, Jesus. VIII, The Church. IX, The Voice of Ages. X, Mammon. XI, War. XII, Country. XIII, Children. XIV, Humor. XV, The Poet.

The Religion of a Modern Man--His Bible

Synopsis of a recent sermon by Frank Waller Allen.

RELIGION is the search for and the discovery of God in life. The unfolding years will give us more Truth, a greater experience with God. Because the Bible is associated with the idea of religion we must answer the question: what is the Bible?

The Bible is not a scientific work. Science confused the religionist of a generation ago because the terms in which it described the creation of the universe were not compatible with those in Genesis. For this reason men turned away from the book. Yet the whole matter comes to an easy solution when the modern man remembers that the writers of the Bible were speaking solely in the language of religion.

The Bible is not a book of dead levels. Every book in it is not equally as representative of Truth as others. The letter of the Bible is insignificant compared with its spirit. Its inspiration does not lie in the letter. The word "inspiration" is taken from two Latin words which mean "to breathe into"; and when we speak of an inspired document, we mean that the breath of divinity has been breathed into it. It is the Truth, self-evident, to be found in the Bible which makes it the living Word of the living God.

The Bible is a collection of books, historical and literary, telling of the search for, and the progressive discovery of God. The Old Testament is expressed in the terms of a particular race's search for and experience with God. And we find in some instances that their discovery of Him is very imperfect, very crude.

The New Testament is the experience of a Man's searching for, discovery, and revelation of God. The gospels are biographies of Jesus. What he was like, what he had to say for himself, what he had to say to men; what his immediate followers believed him to be and what they considered his message to society.

Now comes the modern man in the push and pull of new conditions; his personal difficulties, weaknesses, sorrows; with all of his aspirations, his potentialities for good! He sees great forces outside of himself at work in human life and the universe. He asks himself what is the source of these forces? "I want to know! I want to know how to live!" that is his cry.

To him the Bible is valuable because it interprets life in the terms of Truth and of God. There are many things in it that are irrelevant to the great issue. Wherein the Bible is helpful in forming character, in assisting in the discovery of the things that are worth while, especially in revealing to him a Jesus-like God, he finds it of unparalleled value.

While for him the Bible is no longer a source of absolute authority, he reads it because in it he finds wisdom, and the solution for human problems. Here he discovers the central figure and force of modern thought: our Brother of Galilee, come to give him life.

Prayer, therefore, is its own answer. Communion with God about anything whatsoever, from our daily bread to the forgiveness of sins and the kingdom of heaven, always brings results, for it is in prayer that there is disclosed to us the divine point of view regarding the things for which we pray.

An Old Poem That is Up-to-date

I heard the bells on Christmas Day
Their old familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of peace on earth, goodwill to men!

And thought how, as the day had come,
The belfries of all Christendom
Had rolled along
The unbroken song
Of peace on earth, goodwill to men!

Till, ringing, singing on its way,
The world revolved from night to day,
A voice, a chime,
A chant sublime
Of peace on earth, goodwill to men!

Then from each black, accursed mouth
The cannon thundered in the South,
And with the sound
The carols drowned
Of peace on earth, goodwill to men!

The hearth stones of a continent,
It was as if an earthquake rent
And made forlorn
The household born
Of peace on earth, goodwill to men!

And in despair I bowed my head;
"There is no peace on earth," I said:
"For hate is strong
And mocks the song
Of peace on earth, goodwill to men!"

Then pealed the bells more loud and deep:
"God is not dead; nor doth he sleep!
The wrong shall fail,
And right prevail,
With peace on earth, goodwill to men!"

Our Readers' Opinions

CHRIST OR TOLSTOY?

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

The leading editorial of Dec. 2, "The Disciples and Militarism," is a strange medley of ideas good and bad. To know the mind of Christ and practice it is the radiant ideal that inspires every true Disciple; but the editor takes it for granted that Christ would not sanction a policy of military preparedness in the present world crisis. He does not seek to ascertain the mind of the Master,—he assumes it, and seems to assume likewise that the great body of Disciples are in accord with him.

If The Christian Century has accepted the Tolstoyan dogma of non-resistance its position can be understood. But this cannot be; we have read nothing in its pages demanding the abolition of courts of law, etc. By what process of reasoning does the editor reach the conclusion that the "proposed national policy of preparation for war" is "plump against a conscience that war is essentially anti-Christian?" The statement is hardly fair; it is not a policy of "preparation for war," but of preparation for defense. And besides, is all war anti-Christian? I deny it.

Surely Americans are not so lacking in self-control that being prepared adequately to resist invasion or oppression, they will be stampeded by jingoes or militarists, into offensive warfare. We are abundantly able to equip and fortify ourselves against attack, and then steadfastly maintain an attitude of defense.

The logic of the editorial and of Dr. Medbury's sermon requires that all internal measures for the defense and protection of life and property be abandoned; that we dispense with burglar alarms, bolts and bars; that we not only disarm but dismiss our police force. And yet while precisely that is the logic of their position, I have not read any such absurd demand from the most clamorous and vociferous pacifist,—except Tolstoy.

Ties of kinship among crowned heads, the strong bonds of commercial intercourse and financial dependence, and long cemented historic friendships, to say nothing of two millenniums of Christian teaching, did not suffice to prevent this horrid war. In the light of such an outburst, who can say when and where war will next break out? Is any nation safe from burglarious attack?

An adequate army and navy and a defensive policy of preparedness are merely the policing of the nation. And until there is an international court of arbitration established, with an international navy and army to back up its decrees, it is necessary for each nation to do its own policing.

But the policy of non-resistance or unpreparedness, so far from promoting peace, will invite spoliation and war. The man who went down the Jericho road carrying his purse with him, but without a bodyguard, invited the villains who attacked him. Modern commerce is a Jericho road, and the nation that travels it unguarded and unfortified, invites the very war the mild-mannered pacifist would prevent.

SINCERITY AND THE DISCIPLES. MINISTRY.

Editor The Christian Century: I have been following your articles on the sincerity of the Disciples in regard to their position on some of the "Fundamentals." I believe that you are correct in your statement that there is a large number of our ministers who have advanced beyond the position taken by the pioneers: that immersion and baptism are equivalent terms. This is especially true of the younger men who have had the advantage of training in non-sectarian schools. But what are these men to do? Already they are under suspicion for having come from "unsound" schools, and the older brethren of the churches have their ears to the ground to hear the first rumbles of unorthodoxy. One sermon on baptism preached from the heart would result in a board meeting and the command to seek other fields of service. And this new field might prove hard to find owing to the activity of the "guardians of the faith."

Then here is the dilemma that we face: We must either preach the doctrines of the Disciples as they were stated by Campbell, or avoid them altogether or move on. Is your sincerity worth more to you than your job? Shall you smother your conviction and keep your job, or preach from the bottom of the heart and lose it? Is it not better to move into some church where this legalism does not hold true?

I speak from a rather bitter personal experience. I lost my first pastorate, after a training in the East, on the excuse that I did not understand the Disciples and their position because I did not believe and preach that all men who are not immersed are eternally lost. Then double branded as unsafe, was it any wonder that I found many doors locked against me? Or that having at last secured a pastorate I am timid on the subject of "fundamentals," or that so far I have completely side-stepped the question of baptism and immersion. I realize that it will not be long before some of the good brethren in all faith will be coming to me to find out about the omission, and what then? Must I tell them the truth and run the risk of losing my pastorate or shall I try to deceive them and myself with words? If I do not speak the truth I keep silent at the expense of truth and sincerity and peace of mind, and part of my value as a minister of Him who is Truth.

Either position seems to be fraught with peril. Either we are to have a bridled ministry, or we are to have a church divided, or a ministry that will seek other fields for work. I wonder if I voice the fears and the sentiments of other young ministers of our church. May we all pray for the coming of that day when men will be willing to be led by the Spirit of Truth into all truth that is in Christ Jesus, for that day when men will be more concerned about their lives than about their doctrines; when the creed of the churches of the Disciples will be interpreted by the wideness of God's mercy, and not by the narrowness of the mind of one man working under the conditions of controversy and strife.

I am glad that we have one paper in the brotherhood that is in the lead, calling to the church to follow into a better, broader life. Whether or not you succeed it is pleasant to go on to the end fighting for the best.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

Nine miles from here is a village whose population is nearly all Catholic as is also the surrounding country. There has never been a Protestant church there, although there have been efforts made to maintain worship, especially by Lutherans.

In June I began visiting there on Sunday afternoons, and created quite an interest among the non-Catholics. Those who claimed to be Christians are German Lutherans, Presbyterians, and Methodist. One Sunday I suggested to them that they organize themselves into an association for maintaining preaching and worship. They took kindly to the proposition, and on the day of organization, I found that quite a number of people who were not church members wanted to enter into the movement.

I felt puzzled at first, but on reflection I wrote out this covenant: "We whose names are hereto appended, citizens of Uniontown and vicinity, believing that religious service and worship are necessary to the highest good of the community, do pledge to each other our support in maintaining a church life, calling upon God to guide and inspire us."

Forty signed the covenant, and chose a superintendent of religious education, a superintendent of finance, a treasurer, and one to look after the meeting place, and these constitute the board of managers. They immediately raised $400 to pay me for preaching them one sermon each two weeks and superintending their work for a year. They had 65 in Bible school last Sunday.

I think you publish the most helpful religious paper in the country, therefore ought to know more than ordinary people so I write to know whether or not this is a church.

Indeed it is a church, and judging from the implications of our correspondent's description it is a true church of Christ. We would, however, have made its CHRISTIAN character explicit instead of leaving it to be inferred. The covenant drawn up contains no reference to Christ or the allegiance of the covenanters to him. The fact, that a Bible school was organized discloses the Christian character of the new organization. But the words of the covenant would suit a Buddhist or Mohammedan or Mormon church as well as a church of Christ. We strongly hold that the day has not yet arrived when it is unnecessary to wear the name of the Master whose example such a group desire to imitate and whose will such a group resolves to obey. This is the only suggestion we would make.

A DOCTRINAL REVIVAL

IN CERTAIN quarters much is being made of a so-called "doctrinal revival." The project ie based upon the presumption that the forms of statement of Christian truth which distinguished Disciples' preaching of an earlier period have fallen into disuse and need to be revived.

The subjects outlined for discussion are such as might have been outlined fifty years ago. Apparently no account is taken of the movement of the stream of religious thinking in the past half century. That the world's point of view has changed, that new principles and interests have emerged, that old problems have defined themselves in new ways—none of this is suggested by what one finds in the prospectus of the discussion to which, it is announced, the year 1916 will be given. Prof. B. S. Dean, of Hiram College, writing to The Christian Century, well expresses the feeling of more thoughtful modern men when he says:

> Hiram College believes in the proposed "doctrinal revival" and would like to see it broadened so as to include (1) The great fundamental truths common to all Christian communions; (2) those distinctive principles that have constituted our distinctive message and mission; (3) the great practical doctrines of the Christian life, godliness, daily prayer, business integrity, Christian sympathy and helpfulness, the charity that is kind and thinketh no evil, the sense of stewardship of our time, talents and money, our duty to world-wide evangelization—to go, let go or help go, a grace of giving commensurate with our abundance and with the world's need.
> Yes, let us have a doctrinal revival so appealing and heart-searching as to startle us out of our smug complacency, bring us to our knees before God, silence our petty discords, fuse us into a truer unity with Christ and our brethren than we have ever known and usher in a pentecost at home and abroad.

The effect of such a doctrinal emphasis as Professor Dean suggests would be to broaden the minds and sympathies of those who participated in it and to relate them vitally to the great thought movements of the new age in which they live.

The effect of the doctrinal revival that throws into high relief the peculiar twists of thought characteristic of any religious group will be to narrow and parochialize the minds of those who participate in it and render them less co-operative in the great living tasks to which men and women of the new day are consecrating themselves.

Intellectual clannishness lies at the base of sectarianism. It is not likely that there is any hope for Christian unity in any large and vital way until the free living thought currents flow into the thought forms of the various sects and burst them.

The particularly pathetic aspect of it is that the Disciples of Christ, of all Christian groups, should be interpreted to the Christian world as having a sort of patent on a set of unchanging ideas which they insist upon keeping high and dry from contact with the growing knowledge of mankind.

CONDITIONS IN SYRIA

IT IS difficult to secure accurate information regarding the state of affairs in Palestine and the rest of Syria. The fact that the Turkish expeditionary force against Egypt has been recruited largely from Palestine, and after its first abortive effort last summer is now pushing in that direction again, makes Palestine an important section of the war map of the nearer East.

Astonishing changes have been wrought in conditions among all classes of people. The Jewish colonists and pensioners who have made up so large a part of the city population of Palestine have been driven from the country, and the Zionist's enterprises almost completely ruined. Similar has been the fate of the Greek, Latin and other Christian custodians of the holy shrines.

It is difficult to think of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher at Jerusalem and the Church of the Nativity at Bethlehem, so frequently the scenes of fierce rivalries between opposing factions of oriental Christians, now entirely in the hands of Moslem guards who have expelled the monks from the entire region. Even such monasteries as Mar Saba, St. John's and St. George's in the ravines of the Jordan valley are deserted and the cherished shrine of St. Catherine's, the reputed Mt. Sinai of the exodus, has been converted into a Turkish fort.

In order to facilitate military operation southward from Jerusalem toward Egypt the railroad line from Haifa to the Jordan has been taken up, and its materials used in the extension of the line southward from Jerusalem to Hebron and Beersheba. Considering the fact that there is a railroad from Constantinople across Asia Minor to Aleppo and thence southward to Hama, Homs, Rayak and Damascus, it is now seen that military operations may be carried on through this whole region and as far south as Beersheba with railroad facilities. The latest reports indicate that the Turkish authorities under German leadership are extending this railroad southward from Beersheba toward the Egyptian frontier, and that water is being piped along the route to obviate the difficulties of desert traffic. One can travel thus from Dan to Beersheba today by military railroad.

In spite of the disadvantages under which all missionary work is being prosecuted in Syria, reports indicate a highly successful year at Roberts College on the Bosphorus near Constantinople and the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut. The latter opened in September after the long vacation with an enrollment of 650 students, and its work has been little interrupted by the unfavorable conditions prevailing in Syria.

A SECOND CHANCE FOR THE SOLDIER

ONE OF the nicest illustrations of the way our practical needs and interests operate to determine our religious beliefs is afforded by the attitude of British orthodox churchmen toward the non-Christian soldier who has given his life for his country in the present war.

Many ministers and religious teachers are now avowing their belief in a probation after death for the unsaved. Rev. J. D. Jones, perhaps the leading preacher of British Congregationalism, in a recent address quoted by the Christian World, says frankly that the war has compelled him to face the fact of the future life from a new point of view. This stout leader of evangelical orthodoxy now declares that he cannot conceive of the door of hope being shut eternally against those souls who gave themselves a willing sacrifice to the call of duty, laying down their lives on behalf of others and for the sake of the high human ideals that actuate the soldier in this war.

Other ministers followed Dr. Jones on the same platform, and affirmed their faith that such heroic sacrifice constituted a primary claim upon the mercy of God. He declared that it was unthinkable that such souls who have passed beyond the reach of the gospel as revealed this side of death would have no chance to accept it on the other side of the grave.

The British Weekly, most orthodox of British nonconformist papers, several months ago in veiled words took much the same position.

The Advance, of Chicago, the more conservative of the two Congregational national newspapers of this country, records the utterances of its English brethren without protest, indeed its comment is quite tolerant. It quotes with singular appositeness, as illustrating the new attitude, the declaration of faith which John Hay made concerning Jim Bludsoe:

> "He seen his duty, a dead sure thing,
> And went for it thar and then.
> And Christ ain't a-going to be too hard
> On a man that died for men."

Theology while a nation is at war is practically compelled to invent some such doctrine as this of a post-mortem gospel. The issue can be ignored in the ordinary run of life and death. But when enlistment in war is idealized and glorified, as it must be in order to gain recruits, there is bound to go with it some assurance that death in battle shall not fling the heroic non-Christian soldier into an eternity of separation from God—that is, into hell. If his devotion to country is not of itself sufficient to win the rewards of grace it must at least be sufficient to guarantee another chance either to accept or reject the divine mercy.

The war is having and will have a profound influence upon religious thought. Its influence upon the problems of the future life are by no means the least interesting and significant.

THE LEAVEN WORKING

THE leaven of the larger fellowship is working silently in hundreds of churches of Disciples in all parts of the land. A letter from a pastor of one of our largest and oldest churches describes the situation in his congregation thus:

> We have a board of officers numbering thirty-five. Every man of them save three is actively in favor of practicing Christian union with all Christians. There are probably not more than five persons outside the board [in a membership of some 700] who would regard the action with anything but favor. We are not pressing the issue. It is my belief that we need but little more patience with these few and they will be won over. The majority of our leaders believe that our church will take a place of greatly increased significance in this city when we give our plea for unity the background of a consistent practice.

In the past two weeks or so, either through personal touch or correspondence, we have had occasion without any initiative on our part, to know the attitude of over a score of the most prominent and substantial congregations of our fellowship, and without exception their sentiment is described as overwhelmingly favorable to a broader and more consistent policy.

It is a safe estimate to say that if a vote were taken this week in one thousand of the leading congregations of our people on the question of receiving into fellowship all, whether immersed or not, whom Christ has already received into his Church, nine hundred of them would show a majority favorable to doing so.

The rank and file of our people see no reason why they should not have fellowship with any person with whom Christ has fellowship. But they see great positive reason why they ought heartily to receive such into the membership of their churches.

The fact is that it is a very small minority in our churches which is responsible for perpetuating in this generation a practice as repugnant to the temper of this generation as it is to the essential ideals of the Disciples.

It is impossible to indoctrinate the men and women of today with the conviction that the physical act of immersion is so important as to justify the practice of schism in the Church on account of it.

Time and an educated ministry are carrying the Disciples forward to the goal they originally set out to attain.

PREPARATIONS FOR PEACE—OR WAR

THE Convocation address delivered last week at the University of Chicago by Mr. Walter L. Fisher, formerly Secretary of the Interior, was a thoughtful and impressive statement in regard to present efforts toward preparedness.

Mr. Fisher is not a pacifist in any extreme sense. He believes apparently in a certain degree of military and naval preparation for emergencies. But he made clear the point that there is a marked difference between preparations for peace and for war.

The present estimates proposed both by the President and the naval board provide for a very large expenditure of money for dreadnaughts and other highly expensive and formidable battleships. Mr. Fisher points to the fact that ships of this character are the most vulnerable in the world to torpedo attack, and are quickly obsolete in design and equipment. They are chiefly valuable to a navy that is professedly aggressive, and is intended for attack rather than defense.

Far more effective and of fractional cost comparatively would be a fleet of submarines, useless to be sure in the attack upon a foreign country, but completely adequate for the defense of our own shores and harbors. It is the affirmation of all friends of preparedness that we have no desire to foster an aggressive or hostile policy toward our neighbors. Rather our sole purpose is one of defense.

But who is to provide against a change of sentiment if once the country were furnished with such a huge instrument of warfare as the proposed naval estimates suggest? England and Germany have both insisted for years that their military and naval equipments were merely defensive. Yet no one doubts that the present war is the direct result of the rapid and extravagant enlargement of land and sea fighting forces on the part of these nations.

If once the United States were to create such an instrument of offense, no matter how pacific the primary motive might have been, who is to insure us against a total subversion of our peace-loving mood, and the embarkation of our government upon a career of conquest as the direct result of the new born sense of supremacy? That is precisely the condition which has betrayed Germany into the present tragedy.

Are we really preparing for defense and for peace,—or for offense and war?

The Larger Christian World

A DEPARTMENT OF INTERDENOMINATIONAL ACQUAINTANCE — By Orvis F. Jordan

Evangelism for Chicago.

The Federation Council of Churches of Chicago is promoting a period of evangelism in Protestant churches for the coming Lenten season. Each congregation will make its own plans and carry on its own work simultaneously with all the rest. The plan has been operated successfully in Rochester, N. Y., and in Indianapolis. Several of the denominational groups of ministers have voted their endorsement of the project and some of these groups have already made considerable headway with their plans.

Methodists Have Changes Among Editors.

The Christian Advocate, of New York, the parent Methodist paper of America, recently called as assistant editor, Rev. H. E. Woolever, editor of the Northern Christian Advocate, and the latter paper then secured as their new editor, Dr. Gideon L. Powell, who was pastor of a Methodist church in Herkimer, N. Y., when he was elected. Most of the Methidist papers are Christian Advocates with a local designation. Still another editorial change is the securing of a new editor for the Methodist Quarterly Review. Dr. H. M. DuBose has been called to this position. He has had some editorial experience as editor of the Pacific Christian Advocate, published by the southern branch of the church. He has been secretary of the Epworth League of the southern church and served as editor of the Epworth Era, published by that organization.

Dr. Hugh Black Refuses Call.

Dr. Hugh Black has refused the call to the pulpit of the Christian Temple in London to succeed Dr. R. J. Campbell, who recently went over to Anglicanism. He was in London last summer and assisted in the work of the church and it was doubtless as a result of the work done during this visit that the call was issued.

Dr. R. J. Campbell Endorses Prayers for the Dead.

The question of prayers for the dead has agitated the Anglican communion greatly in recent years and the practice is in vogue in certain sections of that fellowship. Dr. R. J. Campbell, who was recently received into the fellowship of the church from nonconformity, has spoken his mind upon this subject, his first doctrinal utterance since he changed his fellowship. He endorses the idea of praying for the dead and expresses the opinion that Protestant churches have needlessly withheld consolation from their people by discountenancing this practice. He thinks that departed souls need this kind of communion which some of the High Church leaders call "the communion of the saints."

Northern Presbyterians Plan Advances for Sunday-schools.

The Sabbath-school Board of the northern Presbyterians has planned a big advance in that department of Presbyterian work for the coming year. There are almost ten thousand schools in the denomination and it is proposed that the schools shall increase their enrolment this year by 200,000. It is also a part of the plan to receive 100,000 of the pupils into church membership. There are various minor aims related to the various phases of the Sunday-school work. It is significant that the great denominations are looking to the Sunday-schools largely for their evangelism.

More Methodist Reunion.

Following the announcement of the joining of the two Methodist preachers' meetings into one at St. Louis (of the northern and southern branches of the denomination) there now comes word of the union of Methodist ministers in St. Joseph, Mo. Here there is still a wider reach to the fellowship, and Free Methodists, African Methodists and Evangelicals are included so that in a small city there are about thirty Methodist ministers in one union. The purpose of these mergers among the ministers is to work for the coming of corporate union of the denominations involved.

New Sort of Go-to-Church Movement.

At Reading, Pa., the churches have been co-operating in a Go-to-Church Movement which has extended throughout a whole month. The churches have pooled their advertising interests and great increases in the attendance at the various churches are reported. Placards and picture show ads helped to further the campaign. Leading business men wrote articles for the papers on "Why I Go to Church." Attendance cards were distributed all over the city on which the record of each individual was kept. The increase of attendance in the churches for the month ranged from twenty to fifty per cent.

A Nation-Wide Preaching Campaign for England.

The nation-wide preaching mission of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America is to have a counterpart in England if the proposal of the Archbishop of Canterbury is carried out. There has been some opposition to the plan, but there is a developing interest among the laymen. There seems to be no doubt that the result of this interest will be the realization of the desires of the archbishop.

Well-Known Writer Dies.

It has not been known by everybody that Dr. Sylvanus Stahl, who has written the well-known series of books on sex themes ranging from "What a Boy Ought to Know," to "What a Man of Forty-five Ought to Know," was a minister of the gospel. These books have been translated into nearly all the leading languages of the world and have had a phenomenal sale. He died recently and was buried at Gettysburg, where he was a student of theology shortly after the war.

A Boston Prison Missionary.

The diocese and city Boards of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Boston have arranged recently to engage a missionary worker for the prisons of the city. Rev. Albert Crabtree has been called for this position. He has been vicar of the Church of the Redeemer in South Boston and was in charge of the mission in the state prison in Charlestown for a number of years.

Dr. McComb Makes Change.

Dr. McComb, who is known throughout the country on account of his connection with the Emanuel Movement, has changed his place of residence from Boston to Baltimore. He has accepted a call to become the Canon of the Cathedral of SS. Barnabas and George and will enter upon his new duties in January. The work in psychotherapy which made him so well known, will be continued in the city of his adoption, though his chief work will be that of preaching. Dr. McComb was formerly a Presbyterian minister and lived in Londonderry, Ireland. He came to this country and was ordained to the Episcopal priesthood. For the past nine years he has been associated with Dr. Worcester in the Emanuel church of Boston. The effort of the Emanuel movement has been to relate psychotherapy with the regular work of the physician.

College Presidents Coming to Chicago.

Last year an organization was formed of the presidents of the Christian colleges of the country. A meeting will be held of this organization from January 19 to 22 in Chicago. The matter of comity between Christian colleges will be considered. That the whole problem of Christian education will be faced is indicated by the fact that the use of the Bible in the public school curriculum will be among the topics considered.

Committee on High Schools Meets.

A committee of Sunday-school experts of the International Sunday-school Association met in Chicago recently at the Hotel La Salle to consider removing the difficulties in the way of inducing high schools to grant credit for Bible courses given in the churches. As soon as a practical plan can be worked out a permanent commission will be formed to execute the plan.

Mormon Attacks Mormon.

Senator Smoot is to be attacked anew in the United States senate and an effort will be made again to unseat him. This time the attack comes from a Mormon source and practically all the charges that were originally made against him have been repeated. C. G. Patterson, a Mormon of Salt Lake City, a deputy clerk of the county court, is the one bringing the charges. He asserts that the Mormon church brings about the election of Senator Smoot and his election is regarded in the light of sending an envoy to an alien government. The senator is accused of being a stockholder and a protector of the beet sugar corporation of his state which is an exclusively Mormon organization. The latter charge the senator has denied, but the other charges remain unanswered. The fate of his assailant will make an interesting sequel to the story.

Lesson for January 16.

PETER'S SERMON AT PENTECOST.

Golden Text: Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved. Acts 2:21.

Lesson Acts 2:14-47: verses 22-24, 29-41 printed. Memorize verses 38-39.

(22) Ye men of Israel, hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God unto you by mighty works and wonders and signs which God did by him in the midst of you, even as ye yourselves know: (23) him, being delivered up by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye by the hand of lawless men did crucify and slay (24) whom God raised up, having loosed the pangs of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. . . . (29) Brethren, I may say unto you freely of the patriarch David, that he both died and was buried, and his tomb is with us unto this day. (30) Being therefore a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins he would set one upon his throne; (31) he foreseeing this spake of the resurrection of the Christ, that neither was he left unto Hades, nor did his flesh see corruption. (32) This Jesus did God raise up, whereof we all are witnesses. (33) Being therefore by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath poured forth this, which ye see and hear. (34) For David ascended not into the heavens: but he saith himself,

> The Lord said unto my Lord,
> Sit thou on my right hand,

(35) Till I make thine enemies the footstool of thy feet.

(36) Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified.

(37) Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Brethren, what shall we do? (38) And Peter said unto them, Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins: and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. (39) For to you is the promise, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call unto him. (40) And with many other words he testified, and exhorted them, saying, Save yourselves from this crooked generation. (41) They then that received his word were baptized: and there were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls.

VERSE BY VERSE.

22. Ye men of Israel. The Jews mentioned in our last lesson. We would say, "Fellow Jews."—Hear these words. Consider what these words mean to you.—Jesus of Nazareth. They despised him because he was from Nazareth.—A man. The sermon begins with the human side of the life of Jesus and it closes with Jesus as Lord and Christ.—Mighty works, and wonders and signs. Words used to describe extraordinary events in the New Testament.—Which God did by him. Jesus gave God the glory.

23. Being delivered up by the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God. This was the will of God. See Luke 22:22; John 3:16 and Gal. 4:45.—By the hand of lawless men. By the members of the Sanhedrin who acted contrary to the law, and the Romans who disregarded the law, refusing to be governed by it.—Ye did crucify. At the trial the people cried, Crucify him. Peter charges them with the crime.

24. Having loosed the pangs of death. See Psalm 18:4 for this expression which is used to indicate their hope in a Messiah.

25-28. This is a quotation from the 16th Psalm, 8th to 11th verses.

29. His tomb is with us unto this day. David was buried on Mount Zion. See 1 Kings. 2:10 and Neh. 3:16. According to Jerome, the tomb was known in the fourth century.

30. Knowing that God had sworn with an oath. A strong affirmation and it is recorded in 2 Sam. 7:12-16.—He would set one upon his throne. This promise primarily refers to Solomon.

31. He foreseeing this spake of the resurrection of Christ. The prophecy of David was not wholly fulfilled in his own experience but partially in the experience of Jesus.—Hades. The place of the dead.

33. By the right hand of God exalted. This expression means that the Lord is on the throne of power.

34. David ascended not. Since David did ascend the quotation could not refer to him.—The Lord. . . . feet. The quotation is from Psalm 110. In it the author is thinking of the coming Messiah. Peter uses the quotation to prove that Jesus is "both Lord and Christ" see verse 36.—The Lord said unto my Lord. Two different words for Lord are used in the Hebrew, and their meaning here would be, Jehovah said unto my Messiah.—On my right hand. The expression signifies the possession of power. Jesus is made partaker of the divine glory and dominion.

36. Therefore. Because of the above facts the following is true.—Lord and Christ. Sovereign and Messiah. This is the climax of Peter's sermon.

37. They. See verses 5 and 6.—Pricked in their heart. The Greek word is intensive, meaning "to prick with a sharp point." "The heart" is their expression for moral nature, conscience. This conviction was followed by action. It finds its value in conduct.

38. Repent ye. Turn from the state of mind which caused you to crucify him to the attitude of loving him.—Be baptized. It is the outward symbol of an inner change of heart. In it the old life is symbolically buried and the new life raised.—In the name of Christ. It may be that a short time after Pentecost the only name mentioned at baptism was the name of Jesus Christ; but we also know that very soon it was expanded to what we have in Matthew's Gospel.—The remission of your sins. Your sins are forgiven and you are welcomed back into the family of God.—Spirit. By following Christ we believe we receive his spirit.

40. Save yourselves from. From sharing in guilt, and punishment of.—Crooked. The meaning here is perverse.

41. They that received his word. Those who accepted his words as true and ordered their lives accordingly.

Peter's Sermon

The Lesson in Today's Life.

By Asa McDaniel.

Peter was speaking to Jews. His aim was to prove to them that Jesus was the long looked for Messiah. This he sought to do out of their own experience and the experience of their fathers. This is the court of final appeal. We shape our lives by experience. The Bible is a book of experience, it tells how heroic souls reacted to the thought of God in varied environments of the past. By it Jehovah encourages men through his spirit, to still greater achievements in the eternal now.

The sermon was delivered to "every nation under heaven." It removed the prejudice by addressing the company as fellow-Jews, and assuring them that the things which astonished them most were in fulfillment of their own scriptures. It was a chapter out of their life, and they were willing to give attention to the message. It was the language of love. This is a language all can speak, through eye, and hand-grasp and tone of voice, if not in word. We need to speak to the nations coming to our shores this universal language. If we are to win them to the higher life we must treat them as brethren. Our message must be introduced to them by the word "brother," not "Dago" nor "Sheeny," nor "Hunky." We need to study their life so that our message will find them. Their experience with us must be the message of convincing power. It is this kind of thing that will attract them to the higher ideals of life, in a way that no amount of preaching can, when divorced from the spirit of brotherhood.

The people before whom Peter preached had crucified Christ and were doubtless excusing themselves in various ways for the awful crime, until the direct words of the sermon brought conviction to them. This world of ours is full of the same class today. To be sure, we do not crucify him in the same way; but it is being done no less surely. How about the man who openly rejects Jesus as the real guide of his life? Is not that just what Jesus asked of the men of his day? Not all the people about the cross could have the experience of driving the nails in his hands and feet, and yet we feel that they were guilty. So today, we may be guilty of crucifying Jesus by standing passively by and seeing others do it. To this class the message of Peter comes with more force than ever because the world has moved on since that day. The light is very much brighter and we will be required to see farther.

They obeyed their convictions at once. They did not wait until the next day or some more convenient season to ask the all-important question, "What must we do?" The answer of Peter was direct and they obeyed without delay. We need to learn this lesson. It is very dangerous to put the matter of our highest life processes off. The moments that pass are gone and can never be recalled.

Our religion should be positive. It should produce a change in the life. Men should know the difference in the changed life. The same is true of our churches. The attitude of many of our churches is too much that of apology. Of what possible use is a religion that needs apology, that lays an humble hand on your sleeve and begs pardon for taking even a moment of your valuable time. You should beg pardon of your Heavenly Father for taking so much time that belongs to him for your own interests.

The glory of our religion is that it is positive and significant in our present life, for it takes us along the upward way, and gives us ever wider horizons and continual surprises of joy. One finds in no other realm so many transfigured faces. Christianity opens a window in the meanest hut and shows the dweller the Alpine ranges of God's eternal love and purpose. If there be found one life in the slums that lifts itself like a lily out of the mire, it will invariably be found to be due to the attraction of the Sun of righteousness.

Disciples Table Talk

Des Moines Pastor Praises Dr. Idleman.

Pastors of other communions of Des Moines, Ia., appreciate Finis Idleman, pastor until recently at Central, but now in New York. This is seen in the following word from Charles P. Proudfit, of the First United Presbyterian church: "It is a pleasure for me to say of Mr. Idleman that his name is a misnomer, for I have always found him a busy man. In fact preachers who would go under the name of Idle-man are to me rare. His has been a life of intense activity for his Master and his church. I think the outstanding characteristic of his life as I have gotten to know it pretty intimately has been his charity and kindness. The quest for a kindly motive has been an ascendant ideal with him and one often left out of rugged lives. It has always been his highest pleasure to speak kind words of others and to omit the controversial. In a day which is so busy as hardly to take time for exalting motives we need these incarnations of that love which according to First Corinthians thirteen and seven 'hopeth all things." A point of admiration for him on my part has always been his diction and out of the rut vocabulary. There has always been an expressiveness about his way of putting things which has gripped me. In the six years I have known Dr. Idleman there has developed a comradeship which makes me sincere as a United Presbyterian in bidding him the deepest blessing it is mine to command from God's throne in his work in the metropolis where ebb and flow the human tides."

Drake University Gains Rhodes Scholarship.

Drake University again will have a representative at Oxford enjoying the benefits or a scholarship provided for by the late Cecil Rhodes. Norman Scott, son of Dr. E. C. Scott, Des Moines, has been chosen to represent Iowa at Oxford. He is a young man of whom Drake people are very proud.

Twenty Young People Added to Arcola, Ill., Church on Pre-Christmas Sunday.

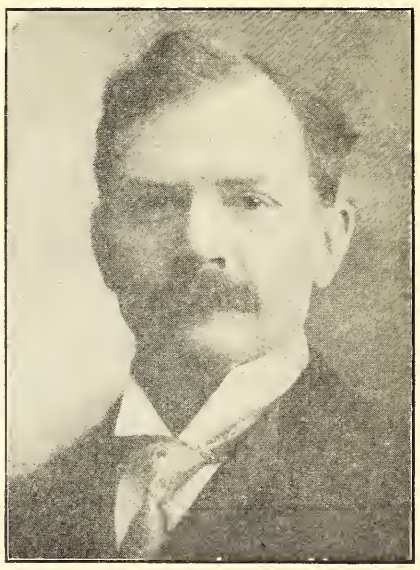
The church at Arcola, Ill., B. H. Bruner, pastor, observed a giving Christmas on Sunday evening, Dec. 19. The service, "White Gifts for the King," was used. A cash offering for the Board of Ministerial Relief was received, and two barrels of toys and provisions were gathered for the orphans' home at St. Louis. At the close of the service a short address was given by the pastor on "The White Gift of Self." Twenty boys and girls and young people confessed their faith in Jesus Christ at the close of the service.

Paris, Mo., Church Complimented.

E. B. Shively, pastor at Paris, Mo., is justifiably proud of the following tribute from a Baptist editor to the Disciples, and particularly to the organization at Paris, of which Mr. Shively is leader: "You've got to give it to the Christian Church when it comes to doing something all the time. It is organized in every department and surcharged with denominational enthusiasm at every pore. By giving more attention to the matter of making the church a social center for its members it makes all who are in want to stay in and a lot who are out wish they were in. And thus it happens that young folks who have no particular sectarian preference most generally gravitate to the Christian Church. It looks good to them because it is occasionally the scene of something else than sermons and prayers. At Paris, for instance, the number of sons and daughters of members of other denominations who have gone into the Christian Church would make a long list. There's a reason. It is the one we have mentioned."

Preparing for National Convention, at Des Moines, October, 1916.

The committee having in charge the National Convention next October, under the leadership of President Hill M. Bell, of Drake, is holding frequent sessions. It is remarkable, writes one of the members, what enthusiasm is manifested on the part of the officers and committee chairmen.



REV. JAMES M. PHILPUTT, D. D.

Dr. Philputt has been actively preparing Central church, New York City, for the coming of his successor, Dr. Finis Idleman, who began his work last Sunday. Dr. Philputt has given twenty-five years of service as leader of two churches in New York City —Lenox Ave. Union church which he founded, and Central church, the latter being the result of a merger of Union Ave. and the old First church. His New York ministry was interrupted for a period of six years by his acceptance of the pastorate of Union Avenue church, St. Louis.

With scarcely an exception every member of this large body is present at every meeting. At a recent gathering W. F. Richardson of Kansas City, president, and Graham Frank, secretary of the National Convention, were in attendance.

Every-Member Canvass at Hot Springs, Ark.

First church, Hot Springs, Ark., put on the Every-Member Canvass, Sunday afternoon, Dec. 19, after six weeks of preparation. Twenty-two men were sent out, two-by-two, every one who had promised appearing to do his part in the work. After the return, the men were served by the ladies and the reports given by each pair. The men were very enthusiastic, reports G. D. Serrill, pastor at Hot Springs; even some who had been doubtful of the success of the undertaking are anxious to go out again on a visiting campaign. The church representatives interested people who had been away from the church for years, stimulated the spiritual life of the membership, and brought back returns in pledges for current expenses and missions for the new year far in excess of what has been given in the past; and there are a good many more yet to be seen. On December 26 the Hot Springs church had its annual roll call and election of church officers, and the following Sunday the annual report, covering all departments of the church for the past year. Mrs. Clio Harper, of Little Rock, former president of the State Christian Women's Board of Missions, was a recent speaker in the Hot Springs pulpit.

Central Avenue, Topeka, "Revives" at Sunday Services.

Central church, Topeka, Kan., does not need to depend upon special evangelistic efforts for its growth. I. H. Beckholt, pastor, writes that nine persons came forward at the morning service on December 19, and two at the evening service of the same day. Eight of the eleven came to make the confession and to be baptized on Christmas day. Mr. Beckholt reports genuine progress in all departments, and states that there is a congenial, aggressive congregation in Central Avenue church.

Church Attendance Campaign at Orrville, O.

W. W. Johnson, pastor at Orrville, Ohio, reports that the church there will begin a church attendance campaign on Jan. 2. The themes of the sermons during this period will be, "Great Teachings from a Great Teacher." The most successful meeting ever held in the Orrville church, conducted by C. A. Macdonald, state evangelist, closed on Dec. 17, with 71 persons added to the membership. H. S. Sexton and wife led the singing.

"The Iron Cross" Reviewed by Beaver Falls, Pa., Pastor.

Hiram N. Van Voorhis, pastor at East Palestine, O., sends word that C. E. Smail, pastor at Beaver Falls, Pa., was present at a recent meeting of the East Palestine Brotherhood and gave a review of the striking peace story, "The Iron Cross," which was presented a few weeks ago in this publication. This remarkable tale won the $100 prize offered by the Christian Woman's Peace Movement for the best story of peace.

Sunday-school Has Charge of Morning Church Service.

On Sunday morning, December 26, the Des Moines, Central, Sunday-school had charge of the morning church service. There was a large chorus from the school, which sang the old Christmas carols. Then all joined in a great communion service and scripture reading. The entire morning was a service of glad tidings and praise, good will and peace.

Teaching Missions at Wellington, Kan.

One of the interesting plans put into operation in the Bible-school at Wellington, Kansas, where H. W. Hunter ministers, is a "Missionary Tour," a plan suggested by State Superintendent D. H. Owen. It has been arranged to cover a period of about three months' in time, during this period visiting all the principal stations of work under the care and oversight of the national organizations. Mr. Hunter writes that the best feature of this scheme is the missionary information imparted to the school. The Wellington pastor thus describes the plan: "We have the walls of the church covered with the route that we are taking. Each place is represented with a big map that can be seen all over the building and each map connected by a line of route, such as can be procured from any supply house. We have flags of all nations hung around and the whole appearance makes the church look like there was really 'something doing.' The pastor takes about ten minutes at the close of the lesson period and gives some up to the minute news from each field visited. For instance, the day we were at Porto Rico we had a letter read from V. C. Carpenter, the man supported by the church at that point, this letter having come just the day before. Then we made arrangements with the Missionary Education Movement people to send us a box of costumes and curios for each country and these, which are very fine, are creating much interest. If you want to teach missions here is the plan that will arouse the finest kind of interest, the kind that sticks in the long run. We have had many examples already of the good that it is doing. One little girl went home and told her mother, who had not been attending the school sessions, that she must come and see the things that were being shown; the result was that the mother is a regular attendant now."

B. A. Jenkins on "Preparedness."

Taking as his text, "Be ye also ready," B. A. Jenkins recently preached a sermon in advocacy of reasonable preparedness. "Preparedness," said Doctor Jenkins, "has become a slogan. Personally, I think the Nation has come to feel the necessity for preparedness in view of the troubled conditions of the world and in view of the ideas and ideals held by many of the nations. It is not because of fear, but as a precaution for peace; and a most adequate degree of preparedness should be ours. The objection is frequently made that any nation which is prepared with an adequate army and navy is likely to be tempted to use it, but the one nation in Europe today whose neutrality has never been questioned is the one most adequately prepared—the Swiss Republic. There seems to be no temptation to use their army, which consists of every man in the republic. The answer, of course, will come quickly that the Swiss people are not an aggressive people and are satisfied with their domains. Then the question follows immediately: 'Is the American people an aggressive people or not?' The answer must come from Cuba, Porto Rico, the Panama Canal, Hawaii, the Philippines and the Monroe Doctrine. If we are to continue our attitude of patronage over other peoples and protection of the Western Hemisphere, we shall need to be ready to make our word good. We should do one of two things, either give up our insular possessions or else prepare to take care of them. This is the path of peace and the lesson of history is clear and plain."

Laymen's Work Promoted at Cleveland, O.

At the close of the meetings of the Laymen's Missionary Movement at Cleveland, O., a "Disciples Conservation Committee" was appointed to conserve the results gained by the movement through its Cleveland gatherings. On this committee were named the following: F. A. Henry, chairman; J. H. Goldner, W. F. Rothenburger, Miner Lee Bates, I. J. Cahill, D. W. Teachout and Howard Spangler. The committee submits a report of its work, with brief articles on the following topics by committee members: "The Church and Her Laymen," by J. H. Goldner; "The Every-Member Canvass," by W. F. Rothenburger; "The Men and Millions Movement," by Miner Lee Bates, and "Expansion and Reclamation," by I. J. Cahill.

HOW YOU CAN FILL YOUR PRAYER MEETINGS

Order a sufficient number of copies to supply every home in your church with one copy of

The Training of Church Members

By Orvis F. Jordan and Charles Clayton Morrison

Distribute them at Sunday services and mail copies to every home not represented at the Sunday services. Announce that this booklet will be used for the next thirteen weeks (or twenty-six weeks, spending two weeks with each lesson) and you will find that there will be the largest attendance and the most eager interest you ever had at your midweek services.

This little manual is just off the press and the prompt and widespread demand for it from pastors and teachers of young people's classes and adult classes shows how eagerly something of this sort has been desired.

Cost? Only $12.50 per hundred copies. Other quantities in proportion.

If you have not seen it send today for a free copy.

B. H. Bruner Reports Advances at Arcola, Ill.

B. H. Bruner, pastor at Arcola, Ill., reports that the Ministerial Association of Arcola has planned a series of Union Conferences to be held during the year, each conference to deal with some special phase of the church work and life. The first one was a Special Stewardship Campaign which was conducted during the last week in November. Dr. Harvey Reeves Calkins, who is at the head of the Stewardship Work of the Methodist Episcopal church in America, conducted this campaign. Dr. Calkins is a master in this field, writes Mr. Bruner, and his interpretation of the great subject of stewardship is wonderful. In his addresses he followed very closely the line of thought developed in his book, "A Man and His Money." His distinction between the pagan and Christian idea of property, and its implications in the practical life of Christianity, are notes to be sounded in every church today. The Arcola pastor thinks that every minister ought to read "A Man and His Money." Arcola is a community of retired farmers and self-satisfied folk, and many of them were shocked to discover that while in their church attendance and worship they are Christian, in the administration of their wealth they are essentially pagan. It is reported that the campaign has done all the churches good, and has given ministers and people a vision of the wonderful things which could be accomplished if all should give God a square deal in the distribution of possessions. Following this campaign the Every Member Canvass was made in the Christian church for the local budget, with the result that more money is pledged to date than in any previous year, and that several of the best men of the church doubled their pledges. For the first time in several years the Arcola church closed the year with money to pay all bills, and enough in sight for current expenses for 1916.

Des Moines Pastor Says War Should be Fought Out.

"The present war will and should go on until the nations engaged are utterly exhausted," declared Thomas F. Paris to his congregation at the Capitol Hill church, Des Moines, in a recent sermon. "Any peace negotiated at this time," continued the minister, "would be an unsteady, snappy, snarlish and unstable peace. They should fight it out until they are sick of war and anxious for peace. The United States should lead the world in a better way," advised the speaker. "Not since Abraham was called and God began his work of nation building has any nation of earth had the opportunity for leadership our nation has today. America should be God's land of promise, leading the war wasted world into the realities of peace. There is a better way than war, and we should prepare that way. We should contend for a new nationalism that would embrace the nations of the earth; for the oneness of humanity that would swallow up all races of men; for the supremacy of reason that would settle all national disputes in an international court of arbitration; for an international army that would police the world; for the open markets of the world so that every man could enjoy the fruits of honest labor; for a new democracy that would give all the people a voice in the affairs of all the people; for a brotherhood of all men; for a parliament of man."

Heroic Giving at Brooklyn, N. Y. Church.

The problem of promoting the work of the Disciples in New York is so extremely difficult that a story of real achievement in that state is always an inspiring one. Chas. J. Pardee, pastor at Greenpoint church, Brooklyn, writes that during the summer this congregation, consisting of one hundred members, mostly of the working class, mortgaged their property to remodel the building, which was badly in need of repairs. Marvelous things have been accomplished and the little chapel now presents a most attractive and home-like appearance, states Mr. Pardee. It is easy to place a mortgage and rebuild but the great test of Christian loyalty comes in paying off the debt. Sunday, November 28, was set for rededication day and Frederick M. Gordon, of the Flatbush church, was called to rededicate. More heroic giving was never witnessed, it is reported. At the three services $1,800 was pledged, which not only makes it possible to lift the mortgage, but also to have folding doors between the two main rooms. After the money was pledged, Mr. Gordon preached an evangelistic sermon, after which six persons came forward, four to make the good confession and two coming into fellowship with the congregation from other churches. Mr. Pardee speaks highly of the work of Mr. Gordon on this eventful day.

"The Church for the Age."

R. J. Bennett, recently coming to Sharon, Pa., from Wilmington, O., created much comment in the Pennsylvania city by a recent sermon on "The Sort of Church the Age Demands." Mr. Bennett closed his sermon with these words:

"Our age demands a church with a vision of service. She must be abreast of the times in all efforts to better the social and industrial conditions of the community. She must be the foster mother of all educational campaigns in temperance, missions and social betterment. The church willing to embrace every opportunity of service must be in sympathetic relation with all civic organizations, labor organizations and must keep in close touch with the poor in social service. Religious education must serve the physical, intellectual, political and social

IS IT TRUE?

The following quotation is taken from an editorial in the Youth's Companion. If it is true, it states a serious fact. This editorial, it should be stated, indicates further some reasons why young men should enter the ministry, in spite of its unattractive phases. Here is the quotation we wish you to read:

"YOUNG MEN AND THE MINISTRY."

"One hundred years ago the ministry was the noblest career a young man could choose. It meant dignity, authority, leadership, high standing in the state, and the respect and esteem of all. In the ministry centered learning, intelligence, and judgment.

"It is not so now, and everyone admits the change. The minister no longer leads the general thought of the community. He is treated with consideration, but too often with patronage, by the active, wealthy members even of his own parish. And because the office commands less respect, it is less sought by men of first-rate energy and ability."

'THE CONQUEST'

Our attractive weekly for adult and young people's classes, is planning a symposium of pastors on the question:

"Would you advise a young man to enter the ministry today?"

We want to hear from every pastor-reader of this paper. Send us something if possible, in defense of your noble calling.

natures of man as well as the moral and spiritual. The church which more adequately meets the needs of the community will soon make a host of friends among the laboring and commercial classes. Charles Stelzle and Jane Addams are modern prophets of the church. They, with others, are studying the needs of all classes and then with courage they are enlisting the cooperation of the churches in supplying the needs with the gospel. They are preaching a social as well as an individual gospel. It was said of Christ that he went about 'doing good.' He himself said: 'I came not to be ministered unto but to minister.' Our age demands a church with a world-wide vision of service, like that possessed by Christ."

Iowa State Ministerial Association at Des Moines.

The State Ministerial Association of Iowa will be held in connection with the Drake University Lectureship, by invitation of President Bell. The date is Jan. 31-Feb. 2.

Prof. W. S. Athearn will be chief lecturer before the Iowa State Ministerial Association to meet January 31.

Prof. Walter Athearn will be the lecturer. The general theme will be Religious Education. The lectures will be ten in number, two each day, at 4 and 7:30 p. m. They begin on Monday afternoon. The program as planned will be intensely practical and will deal entirely with actual problems with which the ministers are grappling on their local fields. Each session will have but one general subject, to be introduced by a carefully prepared address or paper, presented by a practical minister, with an hour and a half left for men to discuss the subject in all its various phases. This discussion will be open and more or less informal. The themes to be discussed are: I. "Using the Forces," such as—1. The Church Officers, Elders, Deacons, Deaconesses, Clerk, Treasurer, etc. 2. The Rest of the Men. 3. The Women of the Church. 4. The Young People. 5. The Children. II. "The Problem of Church Attendance." 1. The "Backbone" of the Church. 2. The Indifferent Members. 3. The Young People. 4. The Children. 5. The Outsiders. III. "Financing the Kingdom." I. The Budget—What Is It? 2. Proportion for Ourselves and Others. 3. Every Member Canvass. 4. How Give: (a) With regularity or occasionally and in lumps; (b) As worship; (c) God's plan. Chas. E. Earley of Oskaloosa is President of the Association.

A. B. Philputt on "The Empty Heart."

"Many, surfeited with the comforts of life, find the heart empty, the old simplicities no longer suffice and they want more excitement out of life than life has in it," said A. B. Philputt at the Central church, Indianapolis, recently in a sermon on "The Peril of an Empty Heart." "There is an undercurrent of pessimism today that spells disaster sooner or later to the most cherished moral ideals of our race and our religion. Some persons become too analytical. They would dissect the rose instead of enjoying its perfume. Many are preparing themselves for an unhappy old age by not keeping the heart clean and pure in the days of life's prime.

"References in the Bible to the heart refer not to the heart but rather to the affections, the aspirations, the sentiment that moves us to action because we are molded into the likeness of that which we love."

The speaker said there is danger for the empty heart, the heart which nothing seems to satisfy and which causes men to plunge deeper into indulgences.

Christian Missions and the Spirit of Internationalism.

A plea for an ascendant democracy and a broader humanitarianism was the keynote of the sermon delivered recently by the Rev. Charles S. Medbury, of the University Church of Christ, Des Moines. The minister selected as his subject "The Call to World Life," and condemned the attitude of the preacher who urges his people to send the message of peace to the four corners of the earth and as a citizen indorses an increase in the military establishment. "By such an attitude our prayers are made ridiculous and our faith mockery," he said.

Dr. Medbury declared the call to internationalism and for a "United States of the World" through all the years had been the spirit to actuate Christian missions, though the fact frequently was overlooked by ministers of the gospel and members of the church.

"This is a day of talk concerning world relationship," began Dr. Medbury. "Men speak easily of the 'new internationalism.'

Lights and Shadows From Foreign Fields

Last week a friend in Missouri sent $500 on the Annuity Plan. This friend expects to send an additional $500. This is the season when many people will be planning to change the forms of their investments. We hope a large number will remember the Foreign Society with annuity gifts, or with direct personal gifts.

Word comes of the death of little Stewart Eicher, son of our missionaries, H. A. Eicher and wife, at Harda, India.

"The people here (Mungeli) are quite different from the people in Harda and do not observe caste so strongly. They are easier to work among, and we feel that this and Bilaspur are our most hopeful fields. There have been eight baptisms since I came—a man and his wife from a village, and six from the Leper Asylum."—H. A. Eicher.

One of the missionaries of the Foreign Society recently asked that one month's full salary be retained by the society in this time of great need. This is in addition to last June. All of the missionaries have shown the same spirit in this time of need.

The Foreign Society has received and expended $6,163,333 in forty years, or since its organization in 1875. A vast work has been accomplished with a comparatively small amount. This would not pay the expense of the war for one day.

In the future the church at Palestine, Texas, will support Dr. G. L. Hagman at Nantungchow, China. It will be remembered that this splendid congregation assumed the support of F. E. Meigs, who soon afterward passed to his reward.

Mr. Sherwood Eddy says that there are 100 men in China today because of heroic death of Horace Pitkin. When the report of Hennington's murder reached Oxford, 200 undergraduates volunteered to take his place. When Dr. Loftis died in Tibet, Dr. W. M. Hardy resolved at once to take his place, and so he is on the field.

It is a remarkable fact that despite the European war the issues of the American and Foreign Bible Societies have increased, both in the United States and in foreign lands.

The Foreign Society has taken a new step in missionary education among the Sunday-schools. A series of brief, simple lessons, one for each Sunday, has been prepared, and they will run through six months, beginning with January 1. The title is "Little Journeys to Distant Lands," and the plan is to take the pupils on a tour around the world, visiting the mission stations of Japan, China, the Philippines, Tibet, India and Africa, in a very interesting way. These lessons will take from five to ten minutes each Sunday and special work will be given the pupils to do. Besides the pamphlet on "Little Journeys," a booklet of missionary stories, a series of missionary pictures and maps, and other supplementary helps will be provided.

TARBELL'S COMMENTARY

On the 1916 Sunday-school Lessons.

DR. J. H. JOWETT SAYS:
"Exceedingly well done. It must be of very great service to Sunday-school teachers."

MARION LAWRANCE SAYS:
"The best, most complete, most practical and most satisfactory volume on the Sunday-school lessons."

BISHOP JOHN H. VINCENT SAYS:
"Exceedingly wise in its adaptation to the variety of grades and extremely practical."

MARGARET SLATTERY SAYS:
"As an aid to the teacher in the preparation of her own lessons I know of nothing better."

DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN SAYS:
"Covers the whole year's work more admirably, in my judgment, than any other book I have seen. Could not be better."

Reference is made to a possible 'United States of Europe.' Still bolder spirits think we will one day see the 'United States of the World,' when nations will be related to each other as the states of our American union. Beyond all these suggestions is the talk of royalty's lessened grip upon the world and of the increased power of democratic ideals. And still beyond is the constant appeal for a broad humanitarianism as basic in all our relationships.

"The most significant thing is that, to the multitude, the thought is new, while in reality it is as old as the plan of God. Not all Christians realize it, not even all preachers of the gospel sense the situation clearly; but the fact is that the call to world life, the call to internationalism, the call to the 'United States of the World,' the call to a broad humanitarianism in all our relations, the call to an ascendant democracy is only in current speech the call for which the oft despised plea of Christian missions has stood through all the years."

Christmas Joy for National Benevolent Association.

The National Benevolent Association has just received two legacies, one of $3,500 from Missouri and another of $5,000 from Texas. The one that came from Missouri was for especial benefit of the Christian Orphans' Home of St. Louis and its great family of two hundred widows and orphans. It came at a time of great need. The other was for the new building for the children of the Juliette Fowler Home, Dallas, Texeas. These two homes and their wards had a great abundance of Christmas joy. The Thanksgiving season brought to the Association an unusual number of good donations. One of the best, a car load lot, came from Moberly, Missouri. The First Church played an important part in this generous contribution to the children. An interesting fact reported by the Association is that, the Primary Class of the Roanoke Church of Kansas City, under the leadership of their teacher, Mrs. Otis Calvin, is undertaking the support of a little three year old girl in the Christian Orphans' Home, St. Louis.

The Call of New England and the Eastern States.

"The Northeast District has a vast population of nearly 25,000,000. In this great territory with its immense population we have less than 200 Bible Schools. In all New England we have but twenty-two Bible Schools and the most of them are small in number and are handicapped and unable to cope with the religious conditions. In the great state of New York we have but fifty-seven Bible schools, a large per cent of which are small and need mission help. In the metropolis, our greatest foreign center as well, we have an opportunity the like of which is to be found nowhere else. In Albany, the state capital and in many other large cities of the East our people are not represented. In Eastern Pennsylvania we have but sixty schools. In the fine states of New Jersey and Deleware we have but two Bible Schools. In Maryland we have but thirty-four Bible Schools and several of them are small mission schools. The people here are at our very doors What are we going to do for them?" Miss Katherine E Staub, Northeastern Bible School Superintendent.

A Revival That Revived.

I. J. Cahill tells what a sane revival did for a dying Ohio church—that at Marietta, O. State Evangelist C. A. MacDonald held the meeting. A year and a half ago Mr. Cahill writes, the condition of the church was precarious. The state secretary held a consultation with the officers of the church relative to the policy for the future. It was determined to make the strongest possible effort to turn the tide. The church secured B. E. Hanes, as minister. The state society promised the services of state evangelist, C. A. MacDonald, for a meeting in November, 1914, which resulted in twenty-seven additions. Because of this the church at once took on new courage. Under the wise and tactful leadership of B. M. Hanes the zeal did not abate throughout the year. Upon the urgent request of the church the services of Mr. MacDonald were granted for a return meeting, which was held in November of this year, and resulted in the addition of forty-seven people to the church and the raising of almost $1,200 on the church debt.

Jeffersonville Pastor in Debate.

J. M. Yawter, pastor of First church, Jeffersonville, Ind., and Frank E. Andrews, an ordained elder and member of Mr. Yawter's congregation, took the affirmative and negative, respectively, at a public debate, arranged by the two local lodges of Knights of Pythias, on the following proposition: "Resolved: that it is possible for a Christian man to engage in politics and maintain his Christian integrity." No vote was taken or decision given at the close of the debate.

A Busy Hoosier Preacher.

John D. Hull, minister at Portland, Ind., read a paper on "The Book Wonderful" at the November meeting of the Jay County Union Ministerial Association; delivered the annual address to the Salamonia Odd Fellows Lodge on Thanksgiving eve., gave four missionary addresses in Ohio and three in Indiana recently for the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and preached four sermons on third Sunday in November, twice in the Presbyterian church and at the Church of Christ. Mr. and Mrs. Hull banqueted the church officers and their wives on December 8, and the teachers and Sunday-school officers on December 15.

K. F. Nance to Leave Hutchinson, Kan., Work.

K. F. Nance, for three and a half years pastor of First church, Hutchinson, Kan., has tendered his resignation to the official board of the church. Mr. Nance has been suffering from ill health for some time.

A Notable Success

The welcome that has been given by the leaders in the churches and Sunday schools to the little book just issued by the Disciples Publication Society:

"The Training of Church Members"

is evidence that this text has come to meet a very definite need in the churches.

The following are typical letters received from leaders concerning the book:

FROM REV. H. CLAY TRUSTY, Seventh Street Church, Indianapolis: "I have examined thoroughly the manual, "The Training of Church Members," and think it a very fine thing. We need to spend some time with young Christians on the fundamentals of our Christian religion and church life. This affords a splendid gnide."

FROM REV. IRVING BROWN, Sac City, Ia.: "I am much impressed with it. Shall introduce it either at the C. E. or mid-week prayer-meetings. We all need the training it supplies."

FROM REV. L. J. MARSHALL, Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.: "This is a timely piece of work. Its clear and simple presentations of the lessons to be taught should make it popular among Christian workers."

FROM REV. L. C. MOORE, Waterloo, Ia.: "This book is filling a long known need in our mid-week service. I am more than pleased with it. The attendance was doubled in four weeks by the use of the text."

How You May Use "The Training of Church Members in Your Work

(1) As a book of study in your mid-week or Endeavor prayer-meeting.
(2) As a text-book in your young people's Sunday school classes.
(3) As a text for study in a special "Pastor's class" organized for training of young Christians and meeting either through the week or on Sunday.
(4) As a teacher-training course.

The New Year is at hand. Make it count for something in genuine, substantial training in religion.

OHIO BIBLE SCHOOL NOTES.

Recent reports to the state office show that Ohio has 8 schools which enroll upward of 1,000 each, and 20 which enroll upward of 700 each.

The responses to the offering for missions show considerable increase over the receipts for the same period last month. Akron High Street bids fair to be the largest giver to this cause in the whole nation again this year. Glen Willow, a village school only two years old, sent $11.81.

During the month just past, institutes were conducted at Felicity, Clermont County; Cadiz and Portsmouth. At Felicity the state superintendent was assisted by Mrs. Grace Boteler Sanders of Jamestown, and at Portsmouth by Mrs. John Asbury of Louisville, Ky. At each institute there was a gradual increase in attendance each session. Mr. Robt. M. Hopkins spent one day at Felicity.

In the month of January Miss Hazel Lewis of the American Society will assist the state superintendent in institutes as follows: Ashland, Jan. 9, 10, 11; Bucyrus, Jan. 12; Dayton Central, Jan. 13, 14; Springfield, Jan. 15, 16. Mrs. John S. Asbury will assist at Newark Central, Jan. 27, 28 and 29. There will be afternoon and evening sessions in each case.

A school of inspiration and instruction for Bible-school folk will be conducted in the Church of Christ, Marion, Jan. 17-22. The faculty are: Mrs. Phebe Curtis of the Ohio State Sunday-school Association, Columbus; Mr. E. W. Thornton, Cincinnati; Mr. J. J. Tisdall, Columbus, Mr. W. S. Goode, Youngstown, and the state superintendent. Sessions afternoon and evening.

At our State Convention at Mt. Vernon in May we are to have an exhibit of the work being done by our Bible-schools. Pupils' handwork books, honor rolls, pictures, records of regular attendance of teachers or pupils, etc., are in order. Write the state office if you desire information.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes wish to study the life of Jesus this year. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies, and in Y. M. C. A. classes. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

It Isn't Your Class, It's YOU!

If you want to work in the kind of a class
Like the kind of a class you like,
You need not pack your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.

You'll only find what you left behind,
For there's nothing that's really new;
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your class;
It isn't your class, it's you.

Good classes aren't made by members afraid
Lest somebody else goes ahead;
When everyone works and nobody shirks,
You can raise a class from the dead.

This little message is sent to you by
